AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII | Saturday, January 9, 1982 | No. 1

Stiff Sanctions Pressed Over Polish Crackdown

RED AND WHITE BANNER of the Polish labor union, Solidarity, is draped from the AFL-CIO headquarters building as Federation President Lane Kirkland pledges the American labor movement's solid support for the Polish workers.

Soviet Role Condemned By Kirkland

By James M. Shevis

The AFL-CIO welcomed President Reagan's decision to apply economic sanctions against the Soviet Union for its role in the suppression of freedom in Poland as a "step in the right direction," and called for their full support by the Western alliance of nations.

While they do not go as far as those recommended earlier by the federation, the Administration's measures serve to document the overwhelming sympathy of the American people for the Polish workers and their independent labor unions, and place the blame for last month's martial law crackdown in Poland squarely on the Kremlin.

"THE PEOPLE of Poland are waging a brave struggle of passive resistance," Federation President Lane Kirkland observed. "They must know that they have our support. We look forward to the announcement of additional sanctions."

In setting forth a seven-step program of curtailed trade and scientific exchange with the USSR, Reagan charged that the Soviet Union "bears a heavy and direct responsibility for the repression in Poland." He called upon the Soviets to recognize "the clear desire" of the Polish people "for a process of national reconciliation, renewal, and reform."

Symbolized by the Solidarity trade union federation created 16 months ago following a wave of strikes across Poland, the Polish reform drive fell victim to a military putsch that all but stamped out the free labor movement.

IN COORDINATED raids in major cities Dec. 13, Polish police and security forces closed union offices, detained Solidarity leaders, including Chairman Lech

(Continued on Page 3)

New Offers Quicken Pace Of Oil Talks

Denver—The Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers responded to a last-minute, revised offer from the Gulf Oil Corp. with a counter-proposal as the union's current agreements with the nation's oil and petrochemical industries expired.

The new Gulf offer of an 8 percent wage increase in the first year of a two-year pact, followed by a 6 percent hike in the second year, plus additional hospital insurance improvements, came after the union rejected a proposal for increases of 7 and 5 percent.

OCAW REPORTED that its National Oil Bargaining Policy Committee then submitted a counterproposal seeking a 13.5-percent wage boost in each year of a two-year contract. The union said it had also modified its request for no layoffs or plant closures during the term of the agreement.

Meanwhile, at the request of federal mediators, both sides agreed to extend current contracts past their scheduled expiration at midnight Jan. 7, and to give 48 hours' notice before taking any action to break off the talks.

Along with the initial Gulf offer, the union had turned down similar contract terms proposed by Texaco, Shell, and Amoco as "ridiculous." Under contracts negotiated two years ago, oil workers received pay increases of about 10 percent in the first year and 10.5 percent in the second.

"IT'S INSULTING that U.S. oil companies would offer pay increases totaling only 12 percent for two years, while at the same time their Canadian subsidiaries have agreed to increase wages for their employees by 13.5 percent for the year 1982," OCAW President Robert F. Goss said at the time. He called on the industry to begin "bargaining realistically, and address the issues the tunion has placed on the bargaining table."

The union's current round of talks with the oil companies involves approximately 55,000 workers covered by about 400 contracts and employed by nearly 100 companies, including all the major oil firms and a large number of independents. The workers are engaged in oil refining, marketing of petroleum products on pipelines, and at petrochemical plants, with a limited number involved in the production of crude oil. The talks represent the first major round of negotiations in 1982.

GOSS POINTED out that wages are not responsible for today's high price of gasoline, home heating oil, and other petroleum products.

"Even though gasoline is selling for around $1.40 per gallon, the refinery wage cost is only 1.3 cents," he observed. The wage cost is not much more than when gasoline was selling for 80 cents a gallon, he noted. Even a substantial wage increase won by the union should not affect the price at the retail level, he added.

Labor Endorses Appeal Of ERA Court Setback

By Susan Dunlop

The AFL-CIO and the Coalition of Labor Union Women have put their full support behind efforts to win a speedy reversal of the Idaho federal court decision threatening to derail ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment.

Larry Gold, special counsel for the federation, said the AFL-CIO strongly endorses the National Organization for Women's appeal of the decision to the higher courts. NOW is seeking an expedited ruling on the Idaho decision, which would nullify the proposed amendment by declaring the ratification period ended.

CLUW PRESIDENT Joyce Miller said that organization will back the appeal "all the way" and will submit supporting briefs to the courts.

Miller, an AFL-CIO vice president and a vice president of the Clothing & Textile Workers, said ratification of ERA is important to trade unionists as both an economic issue and a human rights issue.

"We know one of the toughest problems women workers face today is the kind of discrimination that confines them to 'job ghettos' and to earning only 59 cents on every dollar earned by men. Ending this discrimination is the root of ERA," she said.

At issue is a ruling by Chief Judge Marion J. Callister of the U.S. District Court for Idaho in a case brought by the states of Idaho and Arizona that Congress did not have the power under Article V of the Constitution to extend its original deadline for ratification of proposed amendments by state legislatures.

CALLISTER ALSO held that rescission, or reversal, of a state's approval of a proposed amendment was permissible any time before the amendment is made valid by the necessary three-fourths majority of the states.

(Continued on Page 8)

Union Publications Jolted By Sharp Postage Boost

Union journals and other non-profit publications face a staggering increase in costs Jan. 10 when a Postal Service decision forced by the Reagan Administration's demands for stiff budget cuts will nearly double their postage rates.

At a special meeting, the USPS Board of Governors voted to bring nearly all "preferred" rates immediately up to levels that would not otherwise have taken effect until 1987.

RATES WOULD have been increased in a series of steps over that period under a phased rate schedule set up under the Postal Reorganization Act as a way of easing the impact of rate hikes on non-profit organizations.

The Board of Governors said it was forced to act "as a result of congressional cuts in Postal Service appropriations."

In the continuing budget resolution approved Dec. 15 and signed by the President, Congress cut the Postal Service appropriations from $800 million to $614 million, including funds that would have reimbursed USPS for the "revenue foregone" by the agency for handling non-profit mailings at rates below its actual costs.

THE NEW RATES substantially increase those announced by the Board of Governors as recently as Nov. 1, 1981. The only exceptions allowed for by Congress in appropriating funds were for fourth-class library rates and second-class in-county rates. These rates were increased to levels originally due in 1984.

The International Labor Press Association of the AFL-CIO, which had been fighting to maintain the phased-rate schedule, is urging labor publications to step up efforts to use the pre-sortation discounts now available to non-profit mailers as a

(Continued on Page 3)

Economic Index Continues Slide For 4th Month

The government's barometer of future economic activity fell for the fourth consecutive month in November, but the decline — three-tenths of 1 percent — was much smaller than the previous two months.

The composite index of leading economic indicators had fallen 2.1 percent in September and 1.6 percent in October. The Commerce Dept., which released the report, said four of the 10 indicators available for November increased.

BUT COMMERCE Sec. Malcolm Baldrige stressed that the index showed continued weakness in industry, suggesting further declines in production and increases in unemployment. The nation's jobless

(Continued on Page 8)

CHALLENGES FACING the American labor movement at home and abroad are also opportunities for spreading free trade unionism and its benefits, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland told a meeting of the Industrial Relations Research Association in Washington. Seated is AFL-CIO Research Director Rudy Oswald, the out-going president of the IRRA.

Kirkland Cites Challenge

Problems Facing Labor Viewed as Opportunities

The problems of inevitable change present the American labor movement with opportunities as well as challenges at home and abroad, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland declared in a speech to the industrial Relations Research Association.

"On the domestic scene, our fundamental challenge comes from the profund economic and technological changes that are reshaping our society," Kirkland said at the IRRA's annual meeting in Washington. "These changes generate pressures not only on the labor movement but on all of our major institutions—the family, the university, religion, the press, the community and government at every level."

IF THE DECLINE in manufacturing jobs has contributed to the decline of union membership as a percentage of the work force, it is not only the labor movement that has a problem, Kirkland observed. All of society needs to be alerted to the dangers inherent in the erosion of the nation's industrial base.

"If the population shift to the Southeast and Southwest poses problems for us, it also poses problems for the Northeast and the Great Lakes region, where central cities are rotting, unemployment mounting, communities decaying and social problems proliferating," he said.

But these challenges also offer opportunities, Kirkland noted. The increased participation of women and minorities in the workforce is an opportunity for the labor movement to reach out to these workers and to address their special concerns, thigns which the AFL-CIO is doing, he observed.

"THE SHIFT in population offers an opportunity for us to join in coalitions with groups in the Northeast which are adversely affected, and at the same time to accelerate our organizing efforts in the Southeast and Southwest," Kirkland said. "We are doing just that in Houston where some 40 international unions are now cooperating in a coordinated organizing drive."

On the international scene, one of the main challenges facing labor in the Eighties is a shrinking and increasingly interdependent world in which there are no longer any internal affairs, and which will require more active and skillful trade union involvement in international affairs, Kirkland said. The AFL-CIO's re-entry into the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions is recognition of this fact of present and future life, he said.

SO IS THE federation's renewed participation in the International Labor Organization and the Trade Union Advisory Committee to the Organization for Economic Cooperation & Development, the participation of AFL-CIO unions in various international trade secretariats, bilateral relations with other national labor centers around the world, and the maintenance of an active trade union foreign service through the federation's three institutes for Asia, Africa, and Latin America, he said.

Surveying recent trends in the American labor movement, Kirkland noted that in the two decades leading up to 1978 union membership in the public sector tripled, a development which he said will probably continue in the Eighties. Since 1978, there has been a notable increase in the number of mergers among AFL-CIO unions, which has improved their efficiency and organizing ability.

HE ALSO CITED the federation's efforts toward a major modernization of the labor movement's technical capacities for internal and external communication that will enable it to mobilize its forces more effectively around legislative issues and in political campaigns.

"We cannot control or direct all of the social and economic trends, at home and abroad, that bear on labor's prospects in the Eighties," Kirkland observed.

"What we can do is what each generation of trade unionists has always had to do—to face up to the problems of change, to be vigilant for the new opportunities they present, to be diligent in representing the interests of the members, and to reach out to all who share our commitment to democratic values and to social and economic justice."

New PATCO Chief Stresses 'Logic' in Rehiring Controllers

Gary Eads, the new president of the Air Traffic Controllers, said "orderly reinstatement" of thousands of PATCO members may yet be possible.

"I believe that someone in the not too distant future is going to try to be logical about this, and bring it to an end and have the orderly reinstatement of the dismissed controllers," Eads said in an ABC-TV interview. Some 11,500 controllers were discharged by the Reagan Administration following the union's Aug. 3 strike against the Federal Aviation Administration.

EADS, 37, was elected by PATCO's executive board New Year's Day to succeed Robert Poli as president of the union. A regional vice president for PATCO in Kansas City, Eads was jailed in the early days of the strike because of his refusal to order members back to work.

Poli, a 44-year-old Pittsburgh native, announced his resignation Dec. 31, saying he believed his action would "remove a stumbling block" and prompt President Reagan "to restore all the fired controllers to their positions."

The union was decertified in October by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. A month later, it filed for protection under federal bankruptcy law.

MEANWHILE, Gerald W. McEntee, the new president of the State, County & Municipal Employees, joined with the heads of other unions and several consumer advocacy organizations in litigation attacking the Administration's refusal to rehire the fired controllers.

"The current blacklisting of air traffic controllers serves no useful purpose," said McEntee, elected last month to succeed the late Jerry Wurf as head of AFSCME.

"President Reagan's statement earlier that fired controllers could return to work in the federal sector, but not in the jobs for which they are best qualified, underscores the obvious bias and capriciousness of the government's position," McEntee said.

In a related development, the U.S. District Court for Colorado ruled that criminal indictments against PATCO leaders in Denver must be dismissed because the government had selected them for prosecution not only before the strike began but during a period when it was supposed to be conducting good-faith bargaining.

EVIDENCE showed that the Justice Dept. developed—before the Aug. 3 strike began—a list of persons who would be prosecuted if the controllers' walkout occurred. The list was based, in part, upon information supplied by the Federal Aviation Administration. Selection of "prosecutive targets" had been under consideration as early as February 1981, the evidence showed.

"The selection of targets under these circumstances, culminating in an ultimate hit list containing many top-level union representatives, is instinct with invidious motivations," District Judge John L. Kane, Jr., said.

Democrats Name Watts, Joyce to Head Labor Panel

Glenn E. Watts, president of the Communications Workers, and John T. Joyce, president of the Bricklayers, have been named co-chairmen of the Democratic National Committee's newly formed Labor Council.

At its first meeting, the council was briefed on the party's activities and strategies for the 1982 election campaigns. It also explored proposed programs dealing with various national, state and local issues.

Participants adopted a statement assailing the Reagan Administration for causing added hardships to American workers through its economic policies.

"The supply-side tax giveaway, which was to bring us trickle-down prosperity, has instead touched off a wave of corporate merger, monopoly and acquisition," the statement charged. "While industrial, service and construction jobs decline, unemployment rises, and whole sections of our country are condemned to obsolescence and poverty."

DNC labor council members attending the session included union presidents Charles H. Pillard of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Richard I. Kilroy, Railway & Airline Clerks; J. C. Turner, Operating Engineers; Frank Drozak, Seafarers; John DeConcini, Bakery, Confectionery & Tobacco Workers; John H. Lyons, Iron Workers; John Rowland, Amalgamated Transit Union; John J. Sweeney, Service Employees; Gerald McEntee, State, County & Municipal Employees; William W. Winpisinger, Machinists, and Kenneth T. Blaylock, Government Employees.

Seeger Succeeds Miller As Director of Information

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland has announced the appointment of Murray Seeger as director of the federation's Dept. of Information, succeeding Saul Miller who is retiring Jan. 15.

Seeger, 52, is a writer and reporter specializing in economic and labor affairs on both the national and international scenes. Since 1972, he has worked in Europe for the Los Angeles Times as bureau chief in Brussels, Bonn and Moscow.

AS AN INTERNATIONAL economics writer, Seeger covered activities of the International Labor Organization in Europe and the August 1980 events surrounding the emergence of Poland's independent trade union movement, Solidarity.

After receiving his BA degree from the University of Iowa in 1951, Seeger began newspaper work with the Buffalo Evening News, where he first became a member of the Newspaper Guild. He subsequently worked for the Cleveland Plain Dealer, the Westinghouse Broadcasting Co., the New York Times and Newsweek magazine.

He joined the staff of the L.A. Times in 1967 as Washington economic correspondent, covering national economic issues, federal agencies and the AFL-CIO.

He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard in 1961-62 and has won several awards for distinguished reporting on economics.

BESIDES THE Newspaper Guild, Seeger belonged to the Steelworkers when he worked summers for Bethlehem Steel while attending college, and the Television & Radio Artists when he worked for Westinghouse Broadcasting.

Miller, 63, is retiring after nearly three decades of service to the federation. He has been director of the Dept. of Information since January 1980, when it was created by merger of the Departments of Publications and Public Relations. Before that he had been publications director, editor of the AFL-CIO News and executive editor of the American Federationist since 1958.

A native of New York City, Miller graduated from New York University and was a reporter and editor on a number of daily newspapers, including the York, Pa., Gazette and Daily, the Richmond, Va., Times Dispatch and the Jamestown, N.Y., Sun.

HE JOINED the staff of the AFL News Reporter in January 1955 and was named managing editor of the AFL-CIO News upon merger of the two federations.

Miller is a long-time member of the Newspaper Guild and has served on the executive council of the International Labor Press Association since 1958.

Retired Staff Member Clinton Fair Dies at 72

St. Ignace, Mich.—Clinton M. Fair, a former legislative representative for the AFL-CIO, died here Jan. 6 following a brief hospitalization. He was 72.

Fair, who retired in 1974, underwent surgery for brain tumors two years ago. He joined the AFL-CIO in 1957 as an assistant director of the Dept. of Social Security.

He became a member of the Dept. of Legislation's staff three years later, specializing in the areas of workers' compensation, social security, education, and health.

Fair began his working career as a high school history teacher here, and was a lifelong member of the American Federation of Teachers. He also belonged to the Newspaper Guild. From 1949-51, he was legislative secretary to former Michigan Gov. G. Mennen Williams.

Survivors include a sister-in-law, Mildred Fair, of St. Ignace, a niece and a nephew. Following cremation, a memorial service was held in St. Ignace.

Union Papers Hit by Sharp Postage Boost

(Continued from Page 1)

way of offsetting the impact of the increases.

The discounts, won for the non-profit press largely through ILPA's participation in cases before the Postal Rate Commission, permit mailers to pay lower rates in return for sorting and bundling mail to several zip code levels and, in some cases, to USPS carrier route levels.

THE ILPA pointed out that while the failure of Congress to resist the budget-cutting demands left the Board of Governors little choice, there is a slim chance that Congress may still restore at least part of the phasing when it acts on the final budget bills. Both the Senate and House versions of those bills contain funding for the revenue foregone appropriations.

Heaviest impact will be felt in the second-class outside county per piece rates which will go from the current 3.5 cents to 7.1 cents. Rates for mailers that presort to three and five zip code digits will go from 1.9 cents to 5.5 cents, and mail sorted to carrier route will go from 0.9 cents per piece to 4.5 cents.

Third class non-profit bulk rates will jump from 3.8 cents to 5.9 cents at the required sorting level, from 2.9 cents to 5.0 cents at the three and five digit sorting level, and from 1.9 cents to 4.0 cents for those mailers able to take advantage of carrier route sorting.

Al Heaps Recovering From Blast Injuries

New York—President Alvin E. Heaps of the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union is recovering from injuries he suffered in an explosion in his office on Dec. 30.

The blast occurred when Heaps was opening a package in Christmas wrappings that had been delivered by a messenger. Police described the explosive as a pipe bomb.

Heaps sustained lacerations and bruises to the face and body. However, there will be no permanent disfigurement. Also injured in the blast was Pat Evans, managing editor of the union's newspaper, the RWDSU Record. She was treated for a bruised shoulder.

Heaps has been president of the RWDSU since 1976 after serving 18 years as secretary-treasurer. He has been on the AFL-CIO Executive Council since 1977.

RWDSU Sec.-Treas. Lenore Miller said no motive for the attack could be established. "He is a person with no enemies in the 24 years I have known him," she said.

TWENTY-FOUR-FOOT BANNER proclaims American support for Polish workers and their unions. The banner was hung outside the headquarters building of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, directly across the street from the Soviet embassy in Washington. Soviet pressure on Warsaw is seen at the root of the crackdown on Solidarnosc.

Stiff Sanctions Pressed to Counter Soviet Role in Polish Crackdown

(Continued from Page 1)

Walesa, and imposed martial law on the Polish people. The chief of the Polish government, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, has since eased certain restrictions, but all trade union activity and the right to hold public gatherings other than religious services remain suspended.

At a Dec. 23 hearing of the joint congressional Commission on Security & Cooperation in Europe (CSCE), the panel charged with monitoring international compliance with the 1975 Helsinki Final Act, the AFL-CIO's Tom Kahn spelled out the federation's views on the recent events in Poland and urged the U.S. government to impose a series of strong economic and political sanctions against the Polish military regime and its Soviet backers.

KAHN, AN assistant to Kirkland with responsibility for the AFL-CIO Polish Workers' Aid Fund, proposed calling in the balance of the Polish debt to the United States, refusing to extend further credit to the Soviet Union or Eastern Europe, reinstituting the grain embargo against the USSR, stopping participation by U.S. firms in construction of the gas pipeline across Siberia, severely restricting Soviet access to U.S. technology, beefing up U.S. radio broadcasts into Poland, publicizing the junta's acts of repression, and denying Soviet vessels easy access to U.S. ports.

"These actions should be coordinated insofar as possible with our European allies," Kahn said. "In this spirit, the AFL-CIO has been cooperating closely with the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions. . . .

"WE MUST make it clear to our European allies that we expect them to share the burden. We should be prepared, if necessary, to place restrictions on trade with any of our allies who enter commercial relations with the Soviets that would mitigate the impact of our actions."

Kahn stressed that the U.S. objective should be the release of Walesa and all others detained by the military regime, an end to martial law, and the resumption of negotiations between Solidarity and the government.

A member of the CSCE, Rep. Don Ritter (R-Pa.), called Kahn's proposed sanctions "the best package of ideas" he had yet seen as an appropriate American response to the communist crackdown on Solidarity.

OTHERS TESTIFYING at the CSCE hearing included Zdzislaw Rurarz, the former Polish ambassador to Japan, who defected to the United States to protest the martial law imposed in his homeland, and Ambassador Max M. Kampelman, chief U.S. delegate to the conference in Madrid charged with reviewing the progress of the Helsinki Final Act accords.

Kampelman called the Polish crackdown a "blatant violation" of the Final Act's human rights provisions, and warned that it could mean the death knell for the agreement.

Several of the sanctions proposed by the AFL-CIO were among those announced by the Administration, including restricted access to American ports by Soviet ships, suspension of export licenses for technology transfers, and a ban on new licenses for equipment for the Siberian gas line.

IN ADDITION, Reagan postponed talks on a new long-term grain agreement to replace an accord expiring next Sept. 30; suspended landing rights in the United States for the Soviet government airline, Aeroflot; closed the Soviet Purchasing Commission, a New York agency accounting for roughly one-third of the Soviet orders for American nonfarm products, and declared his intention not to renew exchange agreements in energy, science, and technology pending a review of all such accords, including cultural exchanges.

While immediate support for the U.S. sanctions was not forthcoming from other members of the North Atlantic alliance, the 10-nation European Economic Community (EEC) denounced the Soviet Union for its "pressure" on Poland, and said it would maintain "close and positive consultations" with the United States to avoid undermining the American sanctions already declared against the Soviet Union.

In assessing the developments within Poland at a special meeting of EEC foreign ministers in Brussels, the European allies said:

"THE INABILITY of the system in Eastern Europe to accept the modifications necessary to meet the legitimate aspirations of the people is such as to endanger public confidence in the possibility of cooperative links with the East, and thus seriously to affect international relations.

"In this context, the Ten note with concern and disapproval the serious external pressure and the campaign directed by the USSR and other Eastern European countries against the efforts for renewal in Poland."

TOM KAHN

Petitions Call on Poland to Restore Rights

The AFL-CIO has launched a nationwide petition campaign calling on the Jaruzelski regime in Poland to lift the martial law it imposed on Dec. 13, and to free members and officers of the Solidarity labor federation detained since the crackdown.

The petitions, which AFL-CIO unions are being asked to circulate among their members and others in the community, also call on the Polish government to resume good-faith negotiations with Solidarity based on the principles of the August 1980 Gdansk agreement between the labor federation and the government.

THE GDANSK accord gave Polish workers the right to form free trade unions, to strike, and other freedoms never before achieved in a communist country.

The petitions are to be forwarded to the Embassy of Poland, 2640-16th St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20008, or to AFL-CIO national headquarters, which will pass them along to embassy officials.

The petition campaign is but the latest expression of support for the Polish workers and their unions demonstrated by the American labor movement. From the beginning of Solidarity, the AFL-CIO has been the independent trade union federation's strongest supporter in the West.

The Polish Workers' Aid Fund, started 16 months ago to help Solidarity survive, has raised over a quarter-million dollars for the purchase of needed equipment and supplies. Proceeds have come from plant-gate contributions and the sale of Solidarity T-shirts, bumper stickers, and buttons.

OVER THE holidays, the AFL-CIO displayed a huge, five-story red-and-white banner from the front of its headquarters building in Washington. The colors are those of the Polish labor federation.

Earlier, the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, whose offices in Washington directly face the Soviet embassy on 16th St., displayed a 24-foot banner bearing the Polish name of the trade union federation, Solidarnosc, on the outside of its headquarters building.

Tom Kahn, director of the Polish Workers' Aid Fund and an assistant to Federation President Lane Kirkland, said the AFL-CIO also is producing large Solidarity flags that will be flown from union headquarters around the country. The flags are expected to be available to affiliates later this month.

The federation also has joined national church leaders and officials of CARE and the National Farmers Union in urging President Reagan to release federally owned food stocks for distribution to the people of Poland by international food assistance movements and the Catholic Relief Service of Poland.

IN A JOINT statement urging that initial supplies be airlifted to neighboring neutral nations, the participating organizations pointed out that the Administration's economic sanctions against the Polish military regime "may tend to weigh more heavily upon the Polish people than upon the ruling government unless measures are taken at the same time to channel emergency food supplies to the general populace."

"The Polish nation, now a thousand years old, has survived many a period of crisis and oppression," the message said. "As it faces today's challenge, our nation, which has the food which can help maintain the health and vitality of the Polish people, must not let them down."

The Deserving Rich

THINK HARD. What do Chase Manhattan Bank which deals in money, Squibb which makes toothpaste and other things, and Monsanto which is big in chemicals, have in common?

Give up? None of them paid taxes on their 1980 U.S. domestic income. Well, you might say, maybe they didn't have any domestic earnings. As a matter of fact they did. Chase Manhattan earned $207 million, Squibb $78 million, Monsanto $204 million.

These findings stem from a study by Richard Kaplan, a law professor at the University of Illinois. The three mentioned above, and many other companies, were able to pay little or no tax through the use of legal escape hatches like the investment tax credit, which lets a company subtract from the taxes it owes part of the cost of most new equipment; or from the foreign tax credit, which lets firms subtract from their U.S. tax obligation income taxes that they pay abroad.

THE FIGURES above are for 1980, and do not include further substantial tax breaks for business in the Reagan tax program enacted last year.

The study shows:

- The average tax rate paid by the 20 largest commercial banks was minus 0.9 percent (negative liability can be used to get refunds for past or future years in which taxes are owed).
- The nine largest regulated utilities paid an average effective tax rate of 7.9 percent.
- While the average rate for the 30 top oil companies was 21.9 percent, Exxon—according to Kaplan's study—paid only 1.3 percent on domestic earnings of $2.5 billion, while Conoco paid only 9.7 percent and Mobil 12.1 percent.

Presumably, under the new tax giveaways to business conferred by the Reagan Administration, many of these percentages will shrink when 1981 taxes are paid. By contrast, following are 1981 actual taxes that will be paid by—and the effective rate for—a wage-earner with a family of four using standard deductions.

Actual Wage	Tax Liability	Effective Rate
$15,000	$1,233	8.2%
$20,000	$2,013	10.1%
$25,000	$2,901	11.6%

—Memo from COPE

Free Press for Whom?

SUPPLY-SIDE ECONOMICS has struck the labor press with a vengeance. The new postage rate increases for non-profit publications will nearly double the mailing costs of most union journals and force many of them into further retrenchments in distribution, content and frequency of publication.

While the rate increases were directed by the Postal Service Board of Governors, they are actually another product of the Reagan Administration's budget-cutting drive which denied further funds to permit continued phasing of the increases.

Preferred postage rates for non-profit groups—churches, charities, veterans' organizations, along with unions—were designed to encourage the free flow of information and the unhampered expression of divergent views throughout society.

Now, the Reagan Administration's actions seem to say, freedom of information is to be another preserve of the wealthy.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
LANE KIRKLAND, President
THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer
Executive Council

John H. Lyons, Jerry Wurf*, Murray H. Finley, Sol C. Chaikin, Charles H. Pillard, David J. Fitzmaurice, Wm. W. Winpisinger, John DeConcini, William Konyha, Douglas A. Fraser, Barbara Hutchinson
Thomas W. Gleason, S. Frank Raftery, Albert Shanker, Edward T. Hanley, J. C. Turner, Kenneth T. Blaylock, William H. Wynn, Wayne E. Glenn, Joyce D. Miller, Frank Drozak, Richard I. Kilroy
Frederick O'Neal, Martin J. Ward, Glenn E. Watts, Angelo Fosco, Lloyd McBride, Alvin E. Heaps, John J. O'Donnell, Robert F. Goss, John J. Sweeney, James E. Hatfield, Vincent R. Sombrotto

*Deceased

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman, James M. Shevis

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W. Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, January 9, 1982 No. 1

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

International Labor Press AFL-CIO/CLC Association

'Enjoy!'

A Self-Inflicted Blow

Suppression of Polish Workers Shakes Communist Structure

By Gus Tyler

WHATEVER HAPPENS to Poland, the great victim of recent events in that country will be world communism.

In Poland, the Communists have invoked military might to suppress the Polish people. For the moment, the "party" is victorious. But neither the Communists nor any other government has ever been able to base its power on the sword alone. In the long run, the people must see their government, whatever its fleeting faults, as their friend and father, or the people will be ungovernable.

THIS IS particularly true of communism because its strength was drawn from the preachment, the faith, that the "party" was the embodiment of the will of the working classes: the proletariat and the peasantry. Where necessary, the Communists—mainly Russia—threw in their infantry to back up an ideology. But its basic strength—like the long lasting grip of Judaism, Christianity, or Islam—was in its body of beliefs.

In Poland, those beliefs have been so starkly betrayed that Communists throughout the world are shaken. The powerful Italian Communist Party issued a public protest; the Polish Ambassador to the United States defected. After all, here is the "dictatorship of the proletariat and peasantry" demonstrating brutally that it is nothing more than a "dictatorship over the proletariat and peasantry."

THIS IS NOT the first time that the Communists have betrayed their ideals. It started early, when Lenin suppressed the Anarchists, the Social Revolutionaries, and the Mensheviks—all of whom were revolutionary parties—but who committed the unforgiveable sin of wanting a separate life. But that was small stuff lost in the tumultuous days of the great revolution.

The Communists betrayed democracy when they made an alliance with the Nazis to divide up Europe. But that was forgiven or forgotten when Russia later became an American ally against Hitler.

The suppression of the Hungarian uprising was a betrayal of national integrity and the rights of a people to a bit of democracy. But, disillusioning as that event was to many Communists around the world, Hungary appeared to many to be the protest of intellectual malcontents.

THE INVASION of Afghanistan was an act of naked imperialism. But it affected a thinly populated land, composed of rural mountain communities that seemed to be mired in some past century. So, while some Communists in Europe protested, most thought the incident was not worth much wailing.

But Poland is a clear case. Solidarity is a working class movement: it is the proletariat. It has a farm contingent, a student legion, a professional corps. It is "the people."

It is rooted in Poland's proud tradition as a separate nation, raped repeatedly, but still insistent on its dignity.

It is backed by the Catholic Church in the most Catholic country in the world.

THE SUPPRESSION of Solidarity is not the silencing of a sect, a faction, a party. It is the attempted strangulation of the working class, the peasantry; it is the garroting of a nation; it is the desecration of a people's faith.

For the moment, what happened in Poland looks like the end of Solidarity; in the long run, it is the beginning of the end for world communism, the liberator turned dictator, the Messiah turned monster.

Punishing Conduct That Threatens Peace

We will be told that curtailing the transfer of technology or halting U.S. participation in the Siberian gas line will only hurt U.S. corporations, and that the Soviets will be able to acquire this help from other nations.

Even if these arguments had merit—and I do not concede that they do—the time may be at hand for the United States to demonstrate to the Soviets that we are prepared to hurt ourselves, if necessary, to punish them for conduct that threatens world peace and human rights.

—Tom Kahn, assistant to AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, at congressional hearing.

Challenges Bring Opportunities

Problems Facing Labor in '80s Confront All Sectors of Society

The following is excerpted from an address by AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland to the Industrial Relations Research Association in Washington, Dec. 28, 1981.

LATE IN THE Carter years, after the Administration had wasted much precious time with academic nostrums such as tax-incentive pay-restraint schemes, jawboning and guidelines divined and enunciated by various emigres from Brookings Institution, the AFL-CIO negotiated with the President and his agents an understanding that was entitled a "National Accord."

That accord set forth the premises on the basis of which labor committed itself to participate fully in the common national effort to combat inflation, to distribute austerity and sacrifice equitably, and to resume the path of economic growth and revival, looking toward full employment. It proved that the American trade union movement, when reasonably approached and afforded the means and opportunity for full and effective participation, is prepared to share fully, in step with the rest of the national community, all the burdens of our times.

The Reagan Administration has taken all of the premises of that accord, turned them upside down and stood them on their heads. Nevertheless, they remain sound and valid and represent the only approach to our national economic and social problems that holds any real promise of long-term success. Labor remains ready, willing and able to work with any Administration that will accept those principles and that approach. We shall, however, submit willingly to nothing that contravenes them.

IT HAS BECOME fashionable to speak of labors' "declining clout" in politics, or of labor's inability to "deliver" the workers' vote. Here again, we are haunted by the '30s notion that there is a monolithic working class vote which can be delivered by a vanguard labor movement. Presumably, if we are doing our job right, Jimmy Carter would be in the White House today and the Congress would be in Democratic hands.

The fact is that even our very good political machinery could not compensate for the deep divisions in the Democratic liberal camp or for the political climate that brought Ronald Reagan to power.

This thread of reasoning—which exaggerates our power in order to deflate our egos—distorts the basic challenges confronting labor in this decade. It trivializes our problems—which are real and difficult—by reducing them to subjective or ideological issues, and downplays society's stake in them.

If the decline in manufacturing jobs has contributed to the decline of union memberships as a percentage of the workforce, it is not only the labor movement that has a problem. All of society needs to be alerted to the dangers inherent in the erosion of the nation's industrial base.

If the population shift to the Southeast and Southwest poses problems for us, it also poses problems for the Northeast and the Great Lakes region, where central cities are rotting, unemployment mounting, communities decaying and social problems proliferating.

THE CHALLENGES we face are also opportunities. The increased participation of women and minorities in the workforce is an opportunity for the labor movement to reach out to these workers and to address their special concerns. We are doing that.

The shift in population offers an opportunity for us to join in coalitions with groups in the Northeast which are adversely affected, and at the same time to accelerate our organizing efforts in the Southeast and Southwest. We are doing just that in Houston where some 40 international unions are now cooperating in a coordinated organizing drive.

In the two decades leading up to 1978, union membership in the public sector tripled, and I expect to see this trend continue in the '80s.

Since 1978 there has been a sharp increase in the number of mergers among our affiliates, improving their efficiency and organizing capability. I expect that this trend, too, will continue, with the encouragement of the AFL-CIO.

THE 1980s WILL see a major modernization of the labor movement's technical capacities for internal and external communication, enabling us to mobilize our forces more effectively around legislative issues and in political campaigns.

This year we will set up a labor institute for public affairs to provide our affiliates with expertise in telecommunication and other media skills, enabling us to mobilize our forces more effectively around public issues and in legislative, political and organizing campaigns.

We cannot control or direct all of the social and economic trends, at home and abroad, that bear on labor's prospects in the '80s.

What we can do is what each generation of trade unionists has always had to do—to face up to the problems of inevitable change, to be vigilant for the new opportunities they present, to be diligent in representing the interests of the members, and to reach out to all who share our commitment to democratic values and to social and economic justice.

That's what we'll do in the 1980s, and I am confident we'll do it well.

To Boost Profits

OSHA's Regulatory Retreat Undercuts Worker Protections

JOB HEALTH and safety have been subordinated to employer profits under the Reagan Administration, AFL-CIO Industrial Hygienist Margaret Seminario charged on Labor News Conference.

Seminario said Assistant Labor Sec. Thorne G. Auchter, who heads OSHA, has lost sight of the "fact that the worker is his client." She said that Auchter has shaped a series of attacks on "worker protections in the area of regulation and enforcement," and is trying to effectively end "the right of workers to participate fully" in the implementation of the law.

"Auchter's program for OSHA is the Chamber of Commerce's wish list," she asserted on the network radio broadcast.

Seminario said that the Administration is spending most of its time and resources "reviewing existing standards," instead of "dealing with the many thousands of toxic substances to which workers are exposed in the workplace and the many safety hazards that are still inadequately regulated." She cited the agency's heavy concentration on the review of the cotton dust standard, which was set in 1978 and has been upheld by both the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court.

She said OSHA is looking for ways to wipe out or water down standards on lead and access to medical records. The agency also has undertaken a review of cancer policy—"all of which have been on the books protecting people," she stressed.

And although the labor movement has filed three petitions for emergency regulation of cancer-causing chemicals to which many thousands of workers are exposed, she said, "we've seen no action by this Administration on those petitions that has resulted or will result in any short-term action to protect one single worker."

Reporters questioning Seminario on the AFL-CIO produced public affairs program were Curtis Riddle of the Baltimore Sun and Robert Cohen of the Newark Star-Ledger. Labor News Conference is broadcast weekly by the Mutual radio network.

By Press Associates, Inc.

AGAINST THE BACKDROP of a deepening recession and rising unemployment, it is worth taking a closer look at the Reagan Administration's pending proposal to deal with the problem of millions of illegal aliens now in this country.

Undocumented workers are easily exploited by unscrupulous employers, their use undermines decent standards and they may take scarce jobs from U.S. citizens. An effective and humane policy is needed to prevent worker from being pitted against worker.

The Administration has proposed these steps:

- "Employer sanctions," which would impose civil fines ranging from $500 to $1,000 on employers of four or more workers for each undocumented worker "knowingly hired," and injunctions against employers who follow a "pattern or practice" of hiring undocumented workers.

- A one-time amnesty program to legalize the estimated three million to six million or more illegal aliens residing in the United States. The conditions of amnesty would include a 10-year period of residence, except for Cubans and Haitians, who would have a five-year waiting period. During this time, aliens could not bring in spouses or children under 18. While waiting for citizenship, aliens working and paying taxes would not be eligible for such programs as welfare or food stamps.

- An experimental guest worker program which would admit 50,000 Mexicans into the country each year for two years to work in areas certified by the Labor Dept. as short of American workers.

Organized labor has called employer sanctions a "step in the right direction," but argues the Administration's proposed sanctions are not stiff enough to deter employers from using undocumented workers. Labor also argues that employer sanctions are meaningless unless some type of counterfeit-proof identification is adopted for employers to check, such as counterfeit-proof social security cards based on laser technology now used for military and White House security identification.

It is also argued that illegal aliens would be discouraged from applying for amnesty due to the long waiting requirements and the denial of reunification of family contained in the Administration proposals. Those who do apply would make up a subclass of workers paying taxes but denied the rights of citizens.

AT A TIME when nine million American workers are unemployed, it is difficult to justify the importation of an additional 50,000 workers a year under a guest-worker program.

The guest-worker proposal is seen by many, including former Labor Sec. Ray Marshall, as a throwback to the "bracero program" of 1942-1964, in which Mexicans were admitted to work in agriculture.

Witnesses before Congress have testified on the real results of the "bracero program": workers treated as cattle, "herded from area to area" with little regard to their working or living conditions; encouragement of illegal immigration as relatives joined imported workers, and strained bilateral relations with Mexico due to the treatment of its citizens.

Any effort to get illegal immigration under control hinges on the ability of the Immigration & Naturalization Service to enforce immigration policy effectively.

THE AMERICAN Federation of Governmtnt Employees, which represents INS workers, has said INS administrative and enforcement personnel are grossly overworked and hampered by the lack of modern technology, such as computerization, in the processing and enforcement areas.

But instead of beefing up INS capability, the Administration requested cuts in the INS budget, which Congress granted.

It is clear that the Administration's proposals on immigration policy fall far short of an effective and compassionate solution.

WORKER HEALTH and safety have taken a back seat to employer profits under the Reagan Administration, AFL-CIO Industrial Hygienist Margaret Seminario charged on Labor News Conference. Questioning her were Robert Cohen, left, of the Newark Star-Ledger and Curtis Riddle of the Baltimore Sun. The AFL-CIO produced public affairs interview is aired weekly on the Mutual radio network.

AFL-CIO

SOLIDARITY DAY

WASHINGTON, D.C. SEPTEMBER 19, 1981

On this historic day we marched together – 400,000 Americans from all walks of life – in behalf of jobs and justice and a more humane America. Whatever the challenge, whatever the adversity, these shall remain our goals.

Lane Kirkland, President

Thomas R. Donahue, Secretary-Treasurer

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

SOLIDARITY DAY MEMENTO, an individually inscribed certificate, will be sent to participants in the historic Washington, D.C., march organized by the AFL-CIO last Sept. 19. Marchers who have returned participation cards and those who write for the souvenir will receive a packet that includes a letter from AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland urging them to protest the Reagan Administration's cuts in social programs and continue to make their voices heard to prevent Administration slashes in the social security program.

Social Security Fight Enlists Solidarity Day Participants

The AFL-CIO is mailing individually inscribed certificates to participants in last September's Solidarity Day march as a souvenir of the historic occasion and as the start of a new grass-roots campaign to save social security.

Persons who signed and returned the Solidarity Day cards distributed by bus captains and union marshals will receive their certificates later this month in a packet that includes a letter from AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland urging them to continue to make their voices heard.

THE 400,000 concerned Americans who came to Washington on Sept. 19 made Solidarity Day "a smashing success," Kirkland wrote, and helped strengthen resistance to destructive Reagan Administration policies.

"We must move forward now," Kirkland urged. The immediate focus, he said, should be the attempt by Reagan and Administration budget-cutters "to take away social security benefits you have worked hard for and earned."

Included in the packet are postcards that recipients are asked to sign and mail to their senators and representatives in Congress, along with a return card to the AFL-CIO.

THE SOLIDARITY DAY certificate, made out in the name of the marcher and signed by Kirkland and AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue, seads: "On this historic day we marched together—400,000 Americans from all walks of life—in behalf of jobs and justice and a more humane America. Whatever the challenge, whatever the adversity, these shall remain our goals."

Participants who did not return Solidarity Day cards or who do not receive the certificate, which is to be mailed out on Jan. 18, can have the packet sent to them by writing to: Solidarity Day, Room 309, AFL-CIO, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

NLRB Caseload Rises 4.5 Percent To Record High

The National Labor Relations Board reported a record number of cases filed with it during the fiscal year ended Sept. 30, 1980, a 4.5 percent increase over the previous year bringing the total to 57,381.

The total included 44,063 charges of unfair labor practices and 12,701 petitions to conduct representation elections. The intake of unfair labor practice charges represented a 7 percent increase over fiscal 1979 when 41,259 charges were filed.

CHARGES FILED against employers reflected a sharp, 8-percent rise over the preceding fiscal year while charges eagainst unions increased 4 percent. Some 36 percent of the unfair labor practice charges were found to have merit.

In reporting the record caseload, the 20th year in a row that it has exceeded the previous year, the NLRB noted that for the 10-year period from 1970 to 1980 the agency's case intake climbed 71 percent.

The board's annual report said that unions won 45.7 percent of the 8,198 conclusive representation elections conducted by the agency during the 1980 fiscal year. During the preceding fiscal year, workers voted in favor of union representation in 45 percent of the elections.

ACCORDING TO the NLRB, unions won 3,744 representation elections in fiscal 1980, and thereby gained bargaining rights or continued as employee representatives for 196,515 workers.

The board's annual report also shows a record $32.4 million in backpay was awarded to 15,566 workers who were illegally discharged or otherwise discriminated against in violation of their rights under the National Labor Relations Act. The agency obtained 10,033 offers of job reinstatement, 89 percent of which were accepted. Unions were required to pay workers some $300,000 for unlawfully exacted dues, fees, and fines.

Plant Contamination Charged

Strikers Push Demand For Radiation Controls

Jonesboro, Tenn.—Since last May 1, about 100 employees of TNS, Inc. have been striking to persuade management to eliminate high levels of radioactive uranium dust that they say are contaminating the plant.

So far, the company has refused to budge from its hard-line stand against efforts of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers to negotiate effective health and safety provisions in a new contract. The old OCAW agreement expired last Apr. 30.

BUT MEMBERS of OCAW Local 3-974 are just as determined to secure the protections—because in a single day on the job they are sometimes bombarded with more radiation than most people receive in a year, the union has charged.

Overexposure to radioactive materials such as uranium injures body cells and can lead to numerous illnesses, including cancer and genetic damage. High doses of radiation can cause immediate death.

TNS, a subsidiary of Aerojet General, makes anti-tank ammunition from depleted uranium, a waste product of nuclear fuel processing. Although still radioactive, the ammunition is not considered a nuclear weapon. The uranium is used for its extreme density—nearly twice as heavy as lead—which enables it to pierce armor.

LONG BEFORE the TNS workers went on strike, the company refused to respond to their requests to implement controls for uranium-contaminated dust, radiation exposure, smoke and excessive noise, the union said.

Much of the dust is generated from furnaces and grinding operations. According to Nuclear Regulatory Commission guidelines, 53 percent of TNS workers have ingested enough uranium to risk permanent damage, the union said.

Rather than clean up the operations, TNS issued respirators that workers are required to wear even in parts of the plant where temperatures reach 117 degrees, OCAW reported. And even with the respirators, workers were overexposed to radioactive dust, according to company records that OCAW obtained under federal law.

Tennessee's occupational safety agency, TOSHA, was of little help. While citing TNS for uranium dust levels 13 times over standard, TOSHA termed the violations "nonserious" because workers were wearing respirators, and it issued no fine.

Tennessee is among two dozen states that operate their own occupational safety programs with the approval of federal OSHA.

In recent testimony before a House subcommittee on science and technology, OCAW Legislative Director Nolan W. Hancock charged that the company's respirators were ill-fitting and improperly maintained.

Hancock said the respirators at TNS were cleaned by dipping them in a bucket of water located near a furnace in a contaminated area. According to employees, he said, the water was not changed daily "and there was about one-half inch of slime in the bottom."

FILTERS ON the respirators were changed only every few weeks, he added, a practice that not only disregards commonly accepted industry procedures, but also violates federal regulations.

In an appearance on the CBS network television show, Sixty Minutes, Dr. Mark Nelson of the OCAW health and safety department charged that TNS workers were exposed to extremely high levels of radiation even during periods which the workers described as being "low-level" workweeks.

On a particular day during the "low-level" week, Dr. Nelson said, one worker received 104 millirems—the equivalent of five chest x-rays over the entire body.

IN ANOTHER study by Nelson that Hancock cited before the House subcommittee, TNS workers were found to have excessive levels of uranimum in their urine, which could lead to kidney damage.

Meanwhile, TNS has shifted a part of its operations to a plant in California and has hired 53 non-union workers to replace the OCAW members at Jonesboro.

Price Decontrol, Cut in Aid Mean More Utility Shutoffs

A national coalition of more than 200 labor, senior citizens and community organizations warned that 1.5 million American households will have had their gas or electric utility service disconnected this year.

The Citizen/Labor Energy Coalition, whose estimate is based on a 22-state survey of utility disconnections, urged members of Congress while on holiday recess to investigate the scope of the problem in their own communities, and on their return to Washington to oppose both natural gas decontrol and further cuts in energy assistance and weatherization programs.

William R. Hutton, secretary-treasurer of the coalition and executive director of the National Council of Senior Citizens, estimated that more than 150,000 households in the country will be cut off from their gas heating source through utility disconnections this winter.

"Additional hundreds of thousands of families will barely make it through the winter, only to have their utility service disconnected in the spring. And it will be even worse next winter if President Reagan and the oil companies succeed in raising our gas bills through natural gas decontrol."

Hutton said the utility shutoff problem presents an especially tragic situation for children and elderly Americans who risk serious illness or death by accidental hypothermia if their heat is cut off.

THE COALITION'S study, titled "Cold and Dark: Utility Disconnections in the United States," showed that between Oct. 1, 1980, and Sept. 30, 1981, at least 1.5 million households had their utilities disconnected for non-payment of bills. The figure is an extrapolation from the sample to the national population.

In the 1981-82 year, utility disconnections will equal or exceed the sample's total as utility bills rise faster than household income, energy assistance programs are cut, and unemployment grows, the coalition warned.

Grain Plant Explosion Spurs New Call for Safety Standard

Milwaukee—A fire and explosion at an Illinois grain and soybean processing plant last month that injured 16 workers underlines the need for prompt federal action to set effective safety standards for the grain industry, the Allied Industrial Workers said.

AIW President Dominick D'Ambrosio charged that although the Occupational Safety & Health Administration has been pressed for several years to establish the regulations, "OSHA has only dragged its feet."

The 16 workers injured at the Lauhoff Grain Co. explosion in Danville, Ill., on Dec. 16 are represented by AIW Local 972.

SINCE THE MID-1970s, AFL-CIO unions have repeatedly called for effective controls to reduce the risk of explosions at grain elevators and processing plants. During the past five years, grain dust explosions have killed more than 100 workers and injured hundreds of others.

Despite the continuing efforts of labor to initiate federal action, D'Ambrosio noted that Assistant Labor Sec. Thorne G. Auchter told a Senate committee last year that OSHA does not expect to issue a grain standard until 1984.

Although grain workers encounter unusual and serious hazards on the job, the industry is covered by few regulations or standards, D'Ambrosio said. He pointed out that accumulated grain dust poses a serious threat of explosions and that chemicals used in the plants can lead to cancer and other health problems.

'81 Proves Year of Renewal for Labor

It was a roller coaster of a year for America's unions and the workers they represent.

On the up side, the AFL-CIO's centennial observance reaffirmed and renewed the ideals and goals of the labor movement and drew strong grass-roots participation throughout the country. A series of regional conferences led to the immensely successful Solidarity Day. An ambitious Houston organizing drive was launched with active cooperation of 30 unions. Reaffiliation of the Auto Workers was a giant step in strengthening labor unity.

On the down side, Reagonomics threw an already sagging economy into a tailspin. Programs labor helped enact and nurture have been devastated by a right-wing Administration and a compliant Congress.

Across the ocean, Poland's Solidarity labor federation was a beacon of freedom that guns and tanks haven't been able to extinguish.

The following is a month-by-month review of the major labor events of the year recorded by the AFL-CIO News.

JANUARY

Centennial year of America's trade union movement opens with call by AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland for regional conferences to stimulate "a free flow of ideas" throughout the federation . . . 97th Congress convenes with Republicans in control of Senate for the first time in a quarter-century . . . President Reagan's inaugural address sets the tone for his Administration. "Government is the problem," he proclaims, "not the solution . . ." AFL-CIO building decked in yellow ribbons to welcome home the Americans held hostage in Iran . . . At Senate hearings, AFL-CIO urges emergency relief for the import-battered auto industry and broadening of trade adjustment assistance to workers.

People: Terrorists in El Salvador murder two representatives of the AFL-CIO's American Institute for Free Labor Development, Michael D. Hammer and Mark D. Pearlman, and Jose Rodolfo Viera, the union leader who headed his nation's land reform program . . . Ruben Levin, much-honored editor of the railroad union newspaper, Labor, dies at 78.

FEBRUARY

Raymond J. Donovan's first action as Secretary of Labor is withdrawal or postponement of regulations initiated under the Carter Administration involving occupational health and safety, overtime pay requirements and prevailing wage rules . . . AFL-CIO Executive Council proposes alternatives to the "high-risk gamble" of Reagan's economic program. It urges a social security tax credit instead of income tax reductions tilted to the rich, and business tax reductions targeted to job-creating investments instead of new windfalls for hugely profitable oil companies . . . Aid to Poland endorsed only if conditioned on the continued survival of the free trade union federation, Solidarity.

People: Entertainer Danny Thomas chosen for Murray-Green-Meany Award for his dedication to St. Jude's Children's Research Hospital.

MARCH

AFL-CIO brings together 157 organizations in a Budget Coalition to lobby against destruction of social programs . . . Kirkland joins Mine Workers President Sam Church, Jr., in march to White House by miners protesting cuts in black lung funding . . . Union witnesses at Senate hearings assail proposals for a subminimum youth wage . . . Consumer price index jumps in aftermath of decontrol of oil prices . . . New Mexico Gov. Bruce King vetoes a "right-to-work" bill outlawing the union shop . . . Executive board of Auto Workers unanimously endorses reaffiliation with AFL-CIO and schedules special regional conventions to vote on issue. "It is time for solidarity," UAW President Douglas A. Fraser declares . . . President Reagan shot as he leaves a Washington hotel after a speech to the Building & Construction Trades Dept. Political differences put aside as labor and nation react with shock, outrage, prayers.

People: Harry R. Poole, who had been president of the Meat Cutters before the union's merger into the Food & Commercial Workers, retires as UFCW executive vice president and is succeeded by Stephen Coyle.

APRIL

The 10th anniversary of the Occupational Safety & Health Act finds the Administration scuttling worker protections in the name of cost effectiveness and deregulation. AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue charges that "the federal government has switched sides." . . . AFL-CIO is honored by the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights with its Hubert H. Humphrey Award for "unswerving support of equal rights" . . . 20,000 angry railroad workers march to the Capitol to protest drastic cuts in Amtrak and Conrail funding . . . "Right-to-work" defeated in New Hampshire legislature . . . Delegates to regional conventions authorize UAW's executive board to bring the union back into the AFL-CIO . . . Executive boards of the Service Employees and the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union endorse a merger plan.

People: Joseph T. Power, president of the Plasterers, dies at 61; Melvin H. Roots subsequently chosen to succeed him.

MAY

Congress adopts Reagan budget figures as 63 House Democrats bolt to support the Republican bill . . . AFL-CIO Executive Council charges proposal by Labor Sec. Donovan to end a 40-year ban against industrial homework in apparel-related industries would resurrect "kitchen sweatshops." . . . Kirkland tells Cabinet task force headed by Vice President George Bush that unions want enforcement, not "relief" from regulations to protect workers, consumers and the environment. . . . Drastic social security cutbacks proposed by the Administration send shockwaves through nation. Biggest slash would fall on workers retiring at age 62. Save Our Security coalition launches counterattack. . . . Youth subminimum wage strongly opposed by blue-ribbon Minimum Wage Study Commission . . . Illinois legislature defeats "right-to-work."

People: Teamsters President Frank Fitzsimmons dies at 73.

JUNE

Davis-Bacon Act and other prevailing wage laws defended at Senate hearings. Government contracts shouldn't be prizes to employers paying the lowest wages, the AFL-CIO insists . . . OSHA revokes its walkaround pay rule for safety inspections . . . Senate drastically cuts food stamp benefits and bars aid to families of strikers, regardless of need . . . 37 organizations endorse letter by Kirkland protesting Labor Dept. proposals to weaken affirmative action obligations for government contractors . . . In a major victory for labor's position, Supreme Court upholds Carter Administration standard limiting worker exposure to cotton dust and says safeguarding of workers' health is not subordinate to cost considerations . . . AFL-CIO Executive Council unanimously approves reaffiliation of the Auto Workers . . . The call goes out for a Solidarity Day demonstration on Sept. 19. A showing of grass-roots, rank-and-file support for labor's program "will be the most effective response to the Administration's claim that it speaks for the working people of America," Kirkland says.

People: Sal B. Hoffman, president of Upholsterers for 44 years, dies at 82.

JULY

NAACP convention endorses Solidarity Day, calls on its local branches to participate . . . At congressional hearings, AFL-CIO charges Administration with exaggerating social security funding problems to pave the way for cutbacks; Kirkland challenges Administration's "survival of the fittest" trade doctrine . . . Five former Secretaries of Labor oppose lifting of curbs on industrial homework as proposed by Donovan . . . A marathon 30-hour bargaining session brings agreement on a new three-year contract covering 500,000 workers represented by the Postal Workers and the Letter Carriers . . . Thousands of elderly demonstrators led by the National Council of Senior Citizens gather on the steps of the Capitol in 90-degree heat to protest Administration efforts to cut back social security.

People: Fred J. Kroll, president of the Railway & Airline Clerks and an AFL-CIO vice president, dies at 45 after a five-year struggle with leukemia. Richard I. Kilroy elected his successor.

AUGUST

AFL-CIO General Board calls on affiliates and central bodies to give "top priority" to making Solidarity Day "an effective, powerful expression of protest against the policies of the Reagan Administration" . . . Strike by the nation's air controllers and Administration response that Kirkland termed "brutal" dominates the month's news. Mass dismissals of strikers, jail terms, union-busting fines against PATCO arouse union members across the country. AFL-CIO launches a special fund to help the families of the dismissed controllers.

People: Auto Workers President Douglas A. Fraser elected to AFL-CIO Executive Council. Deaths include retired union presidents Albert J. Hayes of the Machinists and Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union.

SEPTEMBER

Labor Day in New York is a rehearsal for Solidarity Day as 150,000 union members march up Fifth Ave. . . . Encyclical by Pope John Paul II terms unions "indispensable" to the struggle for social justice and "the just rights of working people" . . . And on Solidarity Day, Sept. 19, caravans of buses, special trains and car pools bring 400,000 union members and their allies to the nation's capital. Their ranks stretch from the Capitol to the Washington Monument. "As far as the eye can see," Kirkland says from the speakers' platform. Placards, T-shirts and banners proclaim "We Are One" and "My Union Speaks for Me." . . . Across the Atlantic, Poland's Solidarity labor federation is meeting in convention in Gdansk, but the AFL-CIO delegation invited by Lech Walesa has been denied visas by the Communist government . . . At Senate hearings, Sec.-Treas. Donahue urges rejection of John R. Van de Water's appointment to head the National Labor Relations Board because of his "partisan role" as a management consultant in union representation campaigns.

People: Deaths include Dean K. Clowes of the Steelworkers staff, who carried out major international and political assignments, and Roy Wilkins, the civil rights leader.

OCTOBER

Unemployment jumps to 7.5 percent, 8 million out of work . . . Labor-supported extension and strengthening of Voting Rights Act passes House, 389-24 . . . Houston organizing project launched by the AFL-CIO in cooperative effort by 30 international unions and the area's labor movement . . . Consumer price rise pushes real earnings of workers down 1.1 percent over the month, 4.4 percent below year ago . . . Labor Dept.'s proposal to revise CPI housing component is branded by AFL-CIO as a political move.

People: Rubber Workers elect Milan Stone president as Peter Bommarito steps down. John Perkins designated COPE director on retirement of Alexander E. Barkan. Deaths include Albert J. Zack, retired AFL-CIO public relations director, and Stove Workers President George E. Pierson.

NOVEMBER

Unemployment jumps to 8 percent as recession deepens . . . AFL-CIO endorses bill to toughen penalties against corrupt union officials as good for nation and in labor's "best interests" . . . Centennial convention charts program to carry American labor forward as federation enters its second century . . . Election Day 1982 proclaimed as labor's next Solidarity Day . . . Convention actions include per capita tax increase to support new and expanded activities, such as reaffiliation with International Confederation of Free Trade Unions and creation of an Institute for Public Affairs . . . Crisis in Poland prevents Lech Walesa from accepting in person the George Meany International Human Rights Award on behalf of Solidarity . . . Kirkland, Donahue, 28 vice presidents re-elected.

People: New AFL-CIO vice presidents are Frank Drozak, Seafarers; James E. Hatfield, Glass Bottle Blowers; Barbara B. Hutchinson, Government Employees; Richard I. Kilroy, Railway & Airline Clerks, and Vincent R. Sombrotto, Letter Carriers.

DECEMBER

AFL-CIO leaders meet with Reagan at White House, express "deep, principled differences" with his economic policies but welcome promise that labor will be consulted in shaping of Administration policies . . . Reagan refuses to reinstate fired air traffic controllers, says they won't be barred from other government employment. Kirkland expresses disappointment at decision . . . At congressional hearings, AFL-CIO assails attempt to amend Hobbs Act to make picket line misconduct a federal felony . . . Jobless rate soars to 8.4 percent, highest in six years . . . AFL-CIO denounces suppression of Poland's Solidarity and helps organize nationwide demonstrations against the Soviet-dictated military rule . . . The government's index of leading economic indicators points to deeper recession . . . Congress votes an additional $4 billion slash in social programs at the insistence of Reagan.

People: AFL-CIO Information Director Saul Miller, editor of the News and executive editor of the Federationist, announces his retirement in mid-January. Jerry Wurf, president of the State, County & Municipal Employees for 17 years, dies; the AFSCME executive board elects Gerald W. McEntee to fill the vacancy.

Fresh Canvas

Idaho Ruling Fought

ERA Supporters Seek Quick Action on Appeal

(Continued from Page 1)

The proposed amendment was approved by Congress in 1972 and 35 states had voted for ratification by 1977, three short of the necessary 38 needed for ERA to become part of the Constitution. Five states, however, subsequently voted to rescind their votes. They are Idaho, Nebraska, Tennessee, Kentucky and South Dakota.

The AFL-CIO had joined with the National Organization for Women and other organizations in successfully persuading Congress to extend the deadline for ratification from March 29, 1979, to June 30, 1982. The federation has given strong and active support to the campaign to achieve ratification of the ERA, reaffirming that support as recently as the 1981 convention last November.

THE FEDERAL court ruling, if upheld, would immediately nullify the ERA fight by requiring that the 1979 deadline stand. It would also set back to only 30 the number of states recorded by the General Services Administration as favoring ratification.

The National Organization for Women announced that it would appeal the Idaho ruling to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit and to the Supreme Court. Federal law allows direct appeals to the high court in civil cases involving the government where a district court has invalidated an act of Congress.

NOW President Eleanor Smeal said the organization will seek a speedy decision in the case because of the approaching June 30 final deadline.

THE JUSTICE DEPT. announced Jan. 4 that it would also appeal the ruling, but in a qualification issued the next day, the department said it would oppose NOW's efforts to expedite the appeal "since the entire matter may be rendered moot in the months ahead."

The Reagan Administration has expressed opposition to the proposed amendment.

NOW also pointed out that the ruling complicates its efforts to achieve ratification in three more states by June 30 since many state legislatures complete their business as early as February and March. The decision is likely to be tied up in the appeals process during that period. The case was originally filed in the spring of 1979.

SMEAL, IN A statement on the decision, stressed that NOW and other ERA supporters will not slacken their efforts to achieve ratification in the face of the court ruling.

NOW will continue to focus on ERA as an economic issue, she said, charging that opponents of the amendment had distracted attention from the "bread and butter" issues by raising "scare" arguments against ERA.

THE TACTICS of distraction "make it permissible" for state legislators to vote against ERA, Smeal charged, pointing out that they "can't vote 'no' because they are against paying women more as workers." The "scare issues" give legislators the excuse to vote "no," Smeal said.

In the original court case in which the U.S. Government was the defendant, later joined by NOW and others, the government said the extension should be upheld on the grounds that the Constitution gives Congress, not the states, the power to set the procedures for ratifying constitutional amendments.

ARTICLE V of the Constitution does not set any time limits on ratification of proposed amendments, but calls for "the mode of ratification" by at least three-fourths of the states to be determined by Congress.

NOW attorneys also point out that there are serious questions about the actions taken by the states to rescind their votes favoring ratification. In two states the rescission votes were vetoed by governors. In another state, rescission was permitted by a one-vote majority even though a two-thirds margin was required for ratification, and in a fourth state the legislature voted to "annul" its vote when there were not enough votes to rescind.

MONTANA GOV. Ted Schwinden (D) buys a $1 Solidarnosc button from Executive Sec. James W. Murry of the Montana AFL-CIO, left, in a show of support for the Polish trade union movement—now the target of a military crackdown by Poland's Communist regime.

Finley Cites Industry's Stake In Fair U.S. Trade Policy

Chicago—President Murray H. Finley of the Clothing & Textile Workers told an international trade group here that labor "cannot and will not accept" a trade policy that leads to the closing of U.S. plants and the loss of U.S. jobs.

"Trade policy must be fair; it must deal equitably with all sectors of the economy and equitably with all factors of production," Finley declared in an address to the Chicago World Trade Council.

LABOR IS "particularly distressed," he said, by recent government actions reducing benefits for workers who lose their jobs due to imports.

Finley noted that there was a "tacit agreement when the Trade Act of 1974 was going through Congress that the labor movement would accept reduced domestic trade barriers in return for help in retraining and relocating workers unemployed as a consequence of increased imports."

"That covenant has now been broken," he said, and this poses a problem for both workers and industry.

"Whether your industry is export-oriented or produces essentially for the domestic market, the interest of all of us is in a fair trade policy, one that will preserve the industrial base of this country," he stressed.

FINLEY POINTED OUT that his own industry—textile and apparel—had been more fortunate than others in dealing with the import problem by means of a Multifiber Arrangement (MFA). He said the latest extension of the MFA until mid-1986 will allow the transfer of some textile and apparel imports from well-established exporting countries—such as Hong Kong, Korea and Taiwan—to newer and less-developed countries that need industrialization and higher standards of living.

This would benefit the Reagan Administration policy in regard to the Caribbean countries, where political, economic and social stability "are so important to the security and economic well-being of our own country," he observed.

"If the Caribbean policy is successful, it will help the free trade movement in that area, which in itself will contribute mightily to the democratic process."

HE ALSO discussed labor's attitude toward cost reductions in manufacturing.

"It is clear to us," he said, "that all industries, and particularly labor-intensive industries, must strive to become more competitive and, by doing so, they will help ultimately to create a healthier U.S. industrial structure."

Elderly Face Double Hike In Medicare Payments in '82

The nation's elderly covered by Medicare insurance will pay a greater share of their health costs in 1982 as a result of higher deductibles and premiums announced by the Health & Human Resources Dept.

Fueled by soaring health costs, premiums for the nearly 29 million enrollees in Medicare's supplementary medical insurance program—known as Medicare Part B—will rise by 11.2 percent, or $1.20, to $12.20 a month in July. Medicare Part B covers doctors' bills, outpatient services, diagnostic tests, medical equipment, home health services, and other out-of-hospital costs.

About 28.8 million persons will be enrolled under Medicare Part B in the next fiscal year, 26 million of them over the age of 65 and the rest disabled under 65, HHS said.

The increase in the monthly premium comes on top of a $15 increase in the calendar year deductible, to $75 effective Jan. 1, that Congress passed as part of last summer's budget-cutting legislation.

The premium increase is smaller than last year's jump of nearly 15 percent, from $9.60 the year before. Premiums have gone up steadily since the program began in 1966.

The government also announced that Medicare's hospital (Part A) deductible will increase more than originally anticipated. Effective Jan. 1, the hospital insurance deductible became $260. It was $204 in 1981. This means that when a Medicare patient enters the hospital and begins a new "benefit period" in 1982 he or she will have to pay for the first $260 of covered hospital services.

THE HOSPITAL insurance deductible has increased almost every year since Medicare began. The Part B medical insurance deductible increase is the first in eight years.

HHS said the cost of benefits under Part B is expected to increase to $17.3 billion in fiscal 1983, from fiscal 1982's $14.7 billion. The agency blamed increases in the program's cost on doctors' fees and the number of services furnished, a trend toward more expensive services, and an increase in the cost and use of outpatient services.

Fireman & Oilers Reach Rail Accord

A ninth union representing railway workers, the Firemen & Oilers, reached agreement with the nation's major railroads on a new 39-month contract providing substantial wage and fringe benefit improvements.

Seven other unions already have signed new agreements with the National Railway Labor Conference, the industry's bargaining arm, and the Signalmen are in the process of voting on the pact. That leaves only four other unions still bargaining with the carriers — the United Transportation Union, Train Dispatchers, Yardmasters, and the unaffiliated Locomotive Engineers.

Generally, the new contracts provide a maximum average hourly increase of $3.33 over the 39-month term, plus improvements in vacations, holidays, and health and accident insurance.

Economic Index Continues Slide For 4th Month

(Continued from Page 1)

rate in November was 8.4 percent, and most analysts expect that to rise.

Six components contributed to the November decline in the index of economic indicators. The chief culprit, however, was the change in liquid assets. Other declining indicators were the average workweek, layoff rate, new orders, vendor performance, and change in sensitive crude materials prices. The four rising components were plant and equipment orders, stock prices, building permits, and the money supply.

In a separate report, the Bureau of Labor Statistics said the layoff rate among factory workers rose by one-tenth of 1 percent to 2.3 percent in November, the highest level since the 1980 recession.

DURABLE GOODS manufacturers registered a bigger increase in layoffs than nondurable goods firms, with the largest increases in furniture and fixtures; stone, clay, and glass products; primary metal industries, fabricated metal products, and miscellaneous manufacturing industries.

Other economic reports showed:

- The United States ran a foreign merchandise trade deficit of $4.41 billion in November. That pushed the cumulative U.S. trade deficit for the first 11 months of the year to $38.4 billion, the Commerce Dept. said. This was more than the 1980 full-year total of $36.4 billion.
- A modest late-year gain in sales of new single-family homes in November. The Commerce Dept. said total sales of such homes rose 11.3 percent to a seasonally adjusted rate of 403,000 units, the best since July but still at a depressed level.

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

1/9/82

Congress Pressed by Kirkland To Reverse 'Reagan Recession'

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII | Saturday, January 16, 1982 | No. 2

Job-Creating 'Alternatives' Spelled Out

By David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland called for a quick change of direction in the new session of Congress to halt the "Reagan recession" and relieve the suffering of millions of jobless Americans.

In a stinging assessment of the first year of the Reagan presidency and in a follow-up interview with reporters, Kirkland blamed near-record unemployment on the Administration's failed "experiments with voodoo economics."

HE ADVANCED a comprehensive labor-drafted program to get the economy back on course, but saw "no realistic hope" that the Reagan White House will take effective action. Congress has the obligation to shape "responsible alternatives" to Administration inaction, he urged.

"The White House has no plan, no ideas, and apparently no interest in trying to reverse the economy's downward plunge," Kirkland charged.

Text of Kirkland statement on Page 4; excerpts from interview on Page 6.

As unemployment soars toward a post-war high, "the Administration has reduced unemployment insurance benefits, training programs and welfare programs." Not in half a century has there been "such a heartless official reaction" to the hardships of unemployment, he said.

Slashing the budget for employment services at a time of rising joblessness, laying off trained job counsellors, is "madness," Kirkland said.

"WE MUST strengthen social welfare programs, not destroy them," Kirkland urged.

He called for "direct government action" to create jobs, "instead of waiting for the mirage of trickle-down policies to take hold." Interest rates must be lowered, Kirkland insisted, "and credit allocated to productive, job-producing uses."

Kirkland urged Congress to rescind "the unfair giveaways" of the tax bill enacted last year and require corporations and the wealthy "to share the fiscal burden which has been shifted to working people and the poor."

(Continued on Page 7)

Oil Industry Pattern Seen In Gulf Pact

Denver—The Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers have won a new two-year contract with the Gulf Oil Corp., that the union said will set the pattern for agreements covering 55,000 workers in the nation's oil and petrochemical industries.

The settlement, approved by the OCAW National Oil Bargaining Policy Committee, is subject to rank-and-file ratification. Gulf's 260 employees at Santa Fe Springs, Calif., already have voted favorably on the pact. OCAW members at the company's largest refinery in Port Arthur, Tex., and in Cleves, Ohio, still were balloting on the agreement.

This year's oil industry talks represent the first major round of negotiations in any industry this year, and involve all the major oil companies and a large number of independent firms.

THE CONTRACT, covering a total of 3,000 Gulf employees, provides for a 9 percent pay boost this year and 90 cents an hour more, or about 7 percent, in 1983. In addition, the pact raises company contributions to family health coverage by $17.50 a month, retroactive to Jan. 1, and $13.50 on Jan. 1, 1983, to a total of $151.50.

Contributions for single coverage rise by $6 and $4 to a total of $53. Life insurance coverage increases from $10,000 to $20,000, and accidental death and dismemberment coverage for on-the-job injuries goes from $25,000 to $50,000.

OCAW President Robert F. Goss described the Gulf agreement as "the best we could negotiate without a strike." Goss, who is vested with the sole authority to implement the national strike authority granted by the union's membership, said he was not "willing to call a strike under the current economic situation."

(Continued on Page 3)

CENTRAL LABOR COUNCIL in Sacramento, Calif., joined other community groups in picketing a shipment of wheat on a Russian freighter to the Soviet Union and protesting suppression of Poland's Solidarity trade union federation.

World-Wide Protest Set On Polish Suppression

By James M. Shevis

The AFL-CIO will join other free trade union organizations all over the world Jan. 30 in a day of international protest over Poland's martial law and repression of that country's independent unions and workers' rights.

Details of the federation's participation have yet to be worked out fully, but plans call for demonstrations in major U.S. cities in support of the Solidarity union federation that the Jaruzelski regime moved to suppress last month and the launching of additional fund-raising campaigns for humanitarian assistance to the Polish people.

The worldwide demonstrations, coordinated by the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, was sought by a group of Solidarity activists meeting Jan. 8 and 9 in Brussels where the ICFTU is headquartered. ICFTU Gen.-Sec. Otto Kersten responded with messages to all 130 affiliates throughout the world urging their full cooperation.

Meanwhile, the International Labor Organization asked the Polish government to allow an ILO mission to come to Poland to help in the "restoration of social peace" there. ILO Director-Gen. Francis Blanchard, replying to a cable from Polish Minister of Labor Antoni Rajkiewicz, noted that under the terms of ILO Convention No. 87—which he stressed had been ratified by Poland—unions "are bound to respect the law of the land." But Blanchard pointed out that the same convention "likewise requires that the law of the land and its application shall not be such as to impair the guarantees of independence and freedom which this convention provides for trade unions."

IN HIS CABLE to Blanchard, Rajkiewicz attempted to assure the ILO that Poland's military rulers eventually will allow "truly independent" trade unions to renew their activities once "the causes which motivated their suspension have disappeared." The labor minister said union activities were temporarily suspended "to prevent civil war and to counteract signs of anarchy and economic chaos."

In an interview with reporters at AFL-CIO headquarters, however, Federation President Lane Kirkland charged that the Polish government's move to suppress Solidarity "had been on the drawing boards

(Continued on Page 2)

Administration Denounced For Retreat on Civil Rights

Atlanta—The Reagan Administration has moved "from indifference to civil rights to active support of racial discrimination," AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland charged.

Kirkland sharply criticized both the White House backtracking on the right to negotiate an affirmative action program and the Administration's decision to grant tax-exempt status to private schools that practice and promote racial segregation.

HIS CHALLENGE to the Administration's civil rights role was scheduled for delivery Jan. 14 by AFL-CIO Vice President Kenneth Blaylock at an observance in Atlanta of the 53rd birthday anniversary of Martin Luther King, Jr., the murdered civil rights leader. Blaylock was to accept on Kirkland's behalf an award from the Martin Luther King, Jr., Center for Nonviolent Social Change.

Kirkland said the AFL-CIO was initially "pleased and encouraged" by Reagan's reply to a televised news conference question involving a Justice Dept. contention that the Supreme Court had wrongly decided the so-called Weber case. That was the landmark 1979 decision that held, as the AFL-CIO had urged, that a union and an employer could negotiate a job training plan to overcome racial imbalance even if neither party had been guilty of racial discrimination.

Reagan's press conference reply was that he could "see no fault" in providing more training opportunities, as the plan set up by the Steelworkers and Kaiser

(Continued on Page 3)

Supreme Court Urged to Rectify Setback to ERA

By Susan Dunlop

Constitutional amendments and how they are ratified are the business of Congress, not the courts, the AFL-CIO said in a brief urging the Supreme Court to overturn the ruling of an Idaho federal judge that could halt progress toward ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment.

The AFL-CIO brief, supporting an appeal by the National Organization for Women, also urges the Supreme Court to take speedy action on the case so that the ERA ratification process can continue to June 30, 1982, as intended by Congress.

DELAY WILL dampen the ratification process in the states still considering action on the amendment, the AFL-CIO said, and would permit one lower court judge's ruling to undo the work of the entire legislative process.

(Continued on Page 7)

RETIRING DIRECTOR Saul Miller of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Information receives the best wishes of Federation President Lane Kirkland and Murray Seeger, right, Miller's successor. Miller has headed the restructured information department the past two years and was director of publications since 1958.

World Labor Joins Protest Over Crackdown in Poland

(Continued from Page 1)

for months," and was "a well planned and long planned undertaking. The execution of it was done suddenly, swiftly, and efficiently."

But Kirkland added that "it's becoming ever more clear that the purposes of the coup are not being obtained. The spirit of the people has not been broken. They have not been shocked into total submission. The regrouping of the workers' movement is taking place under extremely difficult circumstances."

KIRKLAND criticized the Reagan Administration for its hesitation in taking firm action to persuade Polish authorities to end martial law, release all political detainees, and resume talks with Solidarity and the Roman Catholic Church. He said "there seems to be a little drifting away" from what he understood to be the Administration's intent when it announced a set of economic and political sanctions against the Soviet Union on Dec. 29.

"They're saying now that they'll consider steps to the extent that members of the (Western) alliance will go along with them, or the criteria for invoking them might be something else other than the failure of the Jaruzelski regime to accede" to the demands for lifting martial law and freeing the detainees, Kirkland observed.

MEMBERS OF the North Atlantic Treaty Organization moved closer to the American position at a special foreign ministers' meeting in Brussels Jan. 11, condemning the Soviet Union for its active support of "the systematic suppression" in Poland, and calling on the Polish military government "to live up to its declared intention to re-establish civil liberties and the process of reform."

"The Soviet Union has no right to determine the political and social development of Poland," the NATO allies said in a statement. Notwithstanding the harder tack taken by the alliance, the United States still stands alone in its imposition of sanctions against the USSR.

Thomas Kemme Elected To Head Stove Union

St. Louis—Thomas B. Kemme has been elected president of the Stove, Furnace & Allied Appliance Workers by the union's executive board. He succeeds George E. Pierson, who died Oct. 27 following a heart attack.

Kemme, 46, had been a vice president of the union since 1974. Before that he served as president of the union's Local 105 in Effingham, Ill.

Kemme will complete the term of office that ends Oct. 1, 1983. The union will hold its next election in July 1983 at its convention.

Wage Cuts No Remedy

Solution to Inflation Tied To Curbing Its Sources

Inflation will not be solved by recession, nor by forcing even further declines in workers' real purchasing power, AFL-CIO Research Director Rudy Oswald declared in his presidential address to the 34th annual meeting of the Industrial Relations Research Association.

"The only program with any chance to succeed is one that recognizes and attacks the many structural factors underlying the inflationary process," Oswald said. High costs of energy, food, health, and medical care, along with tight money and high interest rates are the real causes of today's inflation, he stressed.

THE BIGGEST and most obvious sources of inflation are energy price increases—the result of the cartel policies of the major oil-exporting nations—and the decontrol policies and extraordinary profits of U.S. oil and gas producers, Oswald said.

He charged that the tight-money and high-interest-rate policies of the Reagan Administration and the nation's central bank, the Federal Reserve Board, have been another key source of inflation. These policies, he said, have pushed up the cost of housing, construction, consumer credit, private investment, and public investment in basic economic infrastructure.

Recent food price surges have been tied to unpredictable weather and international markets, and health and medical care costs rose at extraordinary rates because of the lack of a rational health care system, Oswald observed.

"THE BASIC POINT is that inflation was produced by problems in basic sectors of the economy and by misguided monetary policy aimed at restricting aggregate demand," he said. "Instead, this monetary policy pushed prices up throughout the economy while pushing the nation into a recession."

Oswald charged that the Reagan anti-inflation program is a thinly disguised attack on the jobs and wages of American workers. The Administration's tax cuts benefit mainly the wealthy, he noted. For most families with incomes up to about $30,000, there is no real tax reduction, even by 1984, he pointed out.

Oswald said that the economic policies advocated by the AFL-CIO are based on three simple principles:

- Economic progress and social justice go together. Fairness and compassion are not in conflict with efficiency.
- Full employment is a moral, social, political, and economic imperative.
- The attack against inflation must focus on the true causes of inflation.

IN ANOTHER area, workers' unemployment compensation, the AFL-CIO scored the Reagan Administration for proposing budget cutbacks that would further weaken the already inadequate system. In a paper prepared by Assistant Director Arleen Gilliam of the federation's Dept. of Social Security, the federation charged that attempts to deny benefits to large numbers of jobless workers and to reduce the duration of payments for many others "erode the inherent social insurance principles of the unemployment insurance program."

The paper, presented by AFL-CIO Social Security Director Bert Seidman due to Gilliam's illness, pointed out that with the persistence of high levels of unemployment and projections that joblessness will continue to increase this year, an effective and sound unemployment insurance system is critical to the economy.

Gilliam described the Administration's attacks on the present system as "unprecedented." In addition, as a result of congressional action over the past two years, harsh provisions have forced states to slash existing unemployment insurance protections, she noted.

ELLIOT BREDHOFF, counsel to the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. and the Steelworkers, said in a workshop discussion of union pension investment strategy that federation policy aims at directing investments into areas beneficial to union members, such as home mortgages, health maintenance organizations, and day-care centers.

Investments also would be made for construction, new technology industries, and other programs to create jobs, he said. The funds would go to firms with labor policies approved by organized labor and away from companies considered anti-union.

Also addressing the meeting or participating in its workshops were Richard M. Prosten, IUD research director; Government Employees President Kenneth T. Blaylock; Charles McDonald, executive assistant to the director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization & Field Services; Winn Newman, general counsel of the State, County & Municipal Employees, and John F. Leyden, executive director of the AFL-CIO Public Employee Dept.

Oswald completed a one-year term as president of the IRRA at the annual meeting. Milton Derber, professor of industrial relations at the University of Illinois, was installed as the new president of the association.

Court Upholds Multiemployer Bargaining Rules

A 5-4 majority of the Supreme Court upheld the judgment of the National Labor Relations Board that a company can't unilaterally withdraw from a multiemployer bargaining association because of an impasse in negotiations, and must comply with the terms of a contract that is subsequently negotiated.

Under NLRB guidelines, an employer may withdraw from a multiemployer unit before the start of negotiations by giving appropriate notice. But once negotiations have begun, withdrawal is allowed only by "mutual consent" or in "unusual circumstances."

THE CASE that reached the Supreme Court involved a Massachusetts linen supply company that was part of a 10-firm multiemployer association that bargained with a local of the Teamsters. During a strike-lockout that followed a negotiating deadlock, the company fired and replaced its union drivers and declared its withdrawal from the employer group. The NLRB held that the firm remained bound by the terms of the contract the union and the employer association subsequently negotiated.

While the 1st Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals upheld the NLRB, other appellate courts had ruled otherwise in similar circumstances.

The majority decision, by Justice Byron R. White, finds that the position taken by the NLRB is not inconsistent with federal labor law. It concludes that courts should normally defer to the NLRB's expertise as to the policy that best furthers the legislated goals of "labor peace through effective collective bargaining."

JOINING IN the conclusion were Justices William J. Brennan, Jr., Thurgood Marshall, Harry A. Blackmun and John Paul Stevens.

Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, in a dissent joined by Justice William H. Rehnquist, contended the NLRB policy gave unions an edge because they could negotiate an interim agreement with one or more employers while continuing economic pressure on other firms in the multiemployer association.

A separate dissent by Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, joined by Justice Lewis F. Powell, Jr., did not dispute the NLRB's general policy, but contended that the particular circumstances of the case before the Supreme Court justified the employer's unilateral withdrawal from the association.

The Supreme Court declined to review and thus made final decisions of three appellate courts in cases of interest to labor.

It let stand a ruling that makes it easier for shipyard workers to file personal injury suits based on illnesses resulting from on-the-job exposure to asbestos.

Because respiratory problems caused by asbestos often don't show up for many years, lawsuits have sometimes been blocked by the statute of limitations in the state where the suit is brought. But the 4th Circuit appellate court held that product liability suits could be brought by shipyard workers against manufacturers of asbestos products designed for maritime use under the "admiralty jurisdiction" of federal courts and thus were not foreclosed by time limits of state laws.

IN ANOTHER case, the Supreme Court denied the request of the Newspaper Guild and printing trades unions for a review of a 3rd Circuit Court of Appeals decision involving a suit brought by a struck newspaper publisher claiming compensatory and punitive damages from the unions, which published a community newspaper in competition with the struck publication.

A federal judge had dismissed the suit brought by the publisher of the Wilkes-Barre Times-Leader, who contended that the unions "wrongfully" induced employees to violate contract commitments that continued despite the labor dispute by working for a competing publication.

THE APPELLATE court decision, which now stands, does not deal with the merits of the case but allows the suit to go to trial.

By its refusal to review, the Supreme Court left final the 9th Circuit appellate court's dismissal of a suit brought by the Machinists in an attempt to bar OPEC nations from fixing the price of oil in violation of U.S. antitrust laws. The appellate court said OPEC's actions couldn't be challenged in U.S. courts.

The Supreme Court did agree to review a decision by the 9th Circuit court that allowed a local of the Carpenters to sue an employer association which sponsors management seminars promoting open shop and "double-breasted" operations in the construction industry. The union claims antitrust damages based on what it terms a conspiracy by association members to boycott subcontractors who have collective bargaining agreements with unions.

Pullback on Protection

OSHA Moves to Link Cancer Policy to Cost

The Reagan Administration is proposing to overhaul the Occupational Safety & Health Administration's policy on cancer-causing substances "to improve the cost-effectiveness of regulation."

In calling for a public comment period, OSHA Administrator Thorne G. Auchter contended that policy modifications are needed to take into account recent scientific developments and Supreme Court decisions on benzene, cotton dust and lead.

BUT UNION occupational health specialists charged that the proposal fits a pattern of reducing worker protections by allowing employers to use the cheapest possible safeguards while ignoring the long-term cost impact on workers who fall victim to occupational diseases and hazards.

"This is just another step in the Administration's approach toward the relaxation of regulations," AFL-CIO Industrial Hygienist Margaret Seminario said. She warned that the new policy would lead to a trade-off of more effective engineering controls for less effective personal protective equipment, such as respirators.

Seminario also questioned the Administration's contention that new scientific developments warrant the policy overhaul. She said there have been no significant developments since the original carcinogen policy was issued by the Carter Administration in January 1980.

THE POLICY shaped by the Carter Administration was bitterly opposed by industry groups as being too strict, while unions contended it did not go far enough to provide adequate protections for workers against cancer-causing agents. Both labor and industry have challenged the old policy in the courts.

In addition to proposing policy overhaul, Auchter proposed to stay publication of lists of cancer-causing substances workers encounter on the job.

The deadline for comments on the stay is Feb. 19; the deadline for comments on the policy overhaul is Apr. 5.

MORE THAN 250 substances used in workplaces have been identified as having cancer-causing potential. But since the carcinogen policy has been put in place, no standards have been developed on any of the suspected carcinogens.

The original OSHA cancer policy was first proposed in 1977 and generated more than 250,000 pages of public comment, as well as extensive opposition from employer groups.

When the policy was issued in 1980, former OSHA Administrator Eula Bingham pointed out that cancer claims the lives of some 400,000 Americans every year—or about 1,000 victims per day.

A primary concern of labor is the prospect that any future carcinogen policy will be tied closely to President Reagan's Executive Order 12291, which requires all federal agencies to clear proposed regulations with David Stockman's Office of Management & Budget. Unions have criticized the Executive Order as a "bargain basement approach" to workplace health and safety protections.

UNDER THE existing OSHA policy, substances are regarded as carcinogenic for humans if they cause cancer in laboratory test animals.

In preparing comments on the proposed overhaul, AFL-CIO Job Safety Director George H. R. Taylor warned that the federation will "certainly oppose any method by which animal studies are eliminated" from OSHA's carcinogen policy.

"You don't wait until you count bodies," Taylor stressed, alluding to epidemiological studies which count only proven human cancer. Cancer symptoms are usually not detected until 20 years after initial exposure to a carcinogen. Company doctors and industry-funded scientists have welcomed the proposed policy overhaul.

SEMINARIO SAID unions are especially concerned that any future carcinogen policy might incorporate the Supreme Court's decision on benzene, which generally favored the arguments of employers, rather than the court's cotton dust ruling, which reinforced the arguments of labor for engineering controls.

In the 5-3 decision on cotton dust, the majority of justices held that "Congress itself defined the basic relationship between costs and benefits by placing the 'benefit' of worker health above all other considerations, save those making attainment of this 'benefit' unachieveable."

But in citing the high court's benzene decision, Auchter said that OSHA was ordered "to consider all relevant evidence in demonstrating the significance of a risk prior to issuing a carcinogen standard."

The eventual carcinogen policy that OSHA comes up with, will likely have an impact not only on the job safety agency's regulations, but also those of the Environmental Protection Agency, the Consumer Product Safety Commission and the Food & Drug Administration.

FOREST RESTORATION resolution drafted at the International Labor Organization's timber industry conference is reviewed by President Keith W. Johnson, right, of the Woodworkers and John F. Simonds of the ILO Workers' Relations Service. The resolution stressed that reforestation is essential for the preservation and creation of jobs.

ILO Timber Industry Parley Calls Replanting Vital to Jobs

Geneva—Worker delegates at a timber industry conference of the International Labor Organization here won recognition that the replanting of forests is a "crucial factor" in assuring continued employment and the creation of new jobs.

Government and employer representatives at the 24-nation conference gave unanimous support to a worker-proposed resolution calling on the ILO Governing Body to include reforestation among the questions to be dealt with by the standing Woods Industries Committee it has decided to establish.

KEITH W. JOHNSON, president of the Woodworkers, and the worker members of the U.S. delegation hailed as a "promising development" the action of the ILO in giving this committee responsibility of activities previously divided between woodworking and timber industry bodies.

Addressing the conference's closing meeting, Johnson said the promise will be fulfilled if the Governing Body accepts the recommendation to include the renewal of forests in the new committee's terms of reference.

The head of the Woodworkers was speaking as the conference's worker vice chairman, a post that went with his election by his fellow trade unionists as the spokesman of their group.

THE 11-DAY timber industry meeting heard repeated expressions of "deep concern about accelerating forest depletion," Johnson recalled.

"This trend must be reversed," he emphasized. "The multinational corporations that move in to exploit forest resources" must remember along with everyone else that "we don't inherit the forest from our parents, we borrow it from our children."

Expressing the workers' satisfaction with the unanimous conclusions on safety and health problems and on employment and training in the timber industry, Johnson assured that "we on the workers' side are leaving Geneva with the firm intention of using the negotiated texts as a tool for social progress."

"We shall put them forward to support our claims in collective bargaining and in pressing for new social legislation," he stressed.

BECAUSE THE conclusions represented compromises reached with the employer and government delegates, Johnson told the conference that the workers were "looking forward to the cooperation of our bargaining partners when it comes to implementing policies at home."

Among the measures urged by the conference was the creation of councils to bring together trade unionists, government and employer representatives at national and local levels, to deal with occupational safety, health and training.

With forestry second only to mining as the most dangerous occupation, the conference stressed that one of the most effective ways to prevent accidents is to "remove or reduce hazards at source." It attached particular importance to the designing of safety devices into the multipurpose harvesting machinery and other equipment used in forestry.

Administration Denounced For Retreat on Civil Rights

(Continued from Page 1)

Aluminum provided. "I'm for that," he said.

But the President's statement was subsequently retracted by a White House press aide who said Reagan now agrees with the Justice Dept. contention that the 5-2 Supreme Court decision was wrong and that such plans could be invalidated.

Kirkland described the turnabout as "a slap in the face" to the Supreme Court, to minorities, and to all who hold that unions and employers can use collective bargaining to "accelerate elimination of the vestigies of centuries of racial injustice."

The decision to deny tax exemption privileges to groups that practice discrimination was adopted 11 years ago by former President Nixon, Kirkland noted, and its reversal by President Reagan is an "affront to racial justice." It will encourage further establishment of schools set up to perpetuate racial inequality, Kirkland charged.

AFTER THE outcry raised by the President's position, the White House said the Administration will seek congressional authority to deny tax exempt status to racially segregated private schools and colleges.

"The belated excuse that further congressional action is needed to authorize the denial of tax exemption to segregationist institutions is nonsense," Kirkland said. He noted that the Justice Dept. as recently as last September argued otherwise and court precedents make clear that "under present law, the United States cannot legally grant tax exemption to racially segregated private schools."

By opening up a new tax loophole for racist schools and those who contribute to them, the Administration is flouting both Congress and the courts, Kirkland charged.

HE LINKED these positions to "the Reagan Administration's efforts to water down the Voting Rights Act, its refusal to seek or enforce federal court orders for busing to desegregate schools, and its failure to oppose a pending bill to strip the Supreme Court of jurisdiction in such cases."

Taken together, Kirkland concluded, "these actions reflect contempt for racial equality and active approval and promotion of discrimination."

James Brownlow Dies Headed Metal Trades

James A. Brownlow, who retired in 1962 as president of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept., died Dec. 22 at his home in Washington. He was 84 and had been in poor health since suffering a severe stroke three years ago.

Brownlow began his trade union career in 1926 as business manager of Plumbers & Pipe Fitters Local 3 in Denver. He also served as president of the Denver Building Trades Council and from 1937 to 1945 as secretary-treasurer of the Colorado AFL.

He was first elected president of the AFL Metal Trades Dept. in 1950 and continued to head the department after the 1955 merger with the CIO.

Survivors include his wife Louise, one son and five grandchildren. Services were held Dec. 24 and burial was at Cedar Hill Cemetery in Suitland, Md.

Gulf Settlement Sets Pattern in Oil Bargaining

(Continued from Page 1)

Oil and chemical contracts are negotiated locally and ratified in Denver.

DURING THE last bargaining round two years ago, the union struck the oil industry for the first time in 11 years. Even though the pattern settlement, again with Gulf, was reached 10 weeks later, the strike lasted an average of four months.

About 400 OCAW contracts with 98 oil refiners expired last week, but nearly all workers stayed on the job under an agreement with the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service to work on a day-by-day basis. The OCAW local representing 3,500 workers at Texaco's main plant group in Port Arthur, Tex., was the only unit granted strike authorization by Goss. The key issue at Port Arthur is the company's pension policies.

MEANWHILE, workers at Cities Service's big refinery and petrochemical complex in Lake Charles, La., were in the process of ratifying an agreement similar to the Gulf settlement. Other companies, including Shell, Amoco, Arco, Ashland, and Texaco, have made similar offers but local issues have proved obstacles to agreement.

A Real Reagan Recession

IN THE YEAR since taking office, the Reagan Administration has produced the highest rate of unemployment among adult breadwinners in the entire postwar period. We are headed toward an absolute record for postwar unemployment with a White House team that offers no realistic hope for reversing this tragic trend.

The Administration's experiments with voodoo economics are a failure. It is too late now to blame the deepening recession on mistakes made by a previous Administration—we now have a real Reagan recession.

THE CHARACTERISTIC of this recession, which sets it apart from all others in modern history, is that the White House has no plan, no ideas, and apparently no interest, in trying to reverse the economy's downward plunge.

Instead, the Administration has reduced unemployment insurance benefits, training programs, and welfare programs at the same time it has put more people on the streets in search of such help. One has to look back 50 years to see such a heartless official reaction to the hardship and suffering of millions of unemployed Americans.

Now is the time to reverse directions. We must strengthen social welfare programs, not destroy them; create jobs with direct government action instead of waiting for the mirage of trickle-down policies to take hold; the Federal Reserve's fetish for money supply targets must be ended, interest rates lowered, and credit allocated to productive, job-producing uses.

THE UNFAIR GIVEAWAYS of the 1981 tax bill must be rescinded and corporations and rich individuals required to share the fiscal burden which has been shifted to working people and the poor.

The suggestion that needed revenue be raised through higher sales and excise taxes, which are unfairly weighted against workers and the poor, should be squelched. Any idea that the budget can be saved through some kind of value-added tax, which is nothing but another regressive sales tax, must be rejected. Instead, Congress should overturn the inequitable Reagan tax bill to restore fairness to the tax system and provide a revenue base adequate for the country's national security and general welfare needs.

—AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, Jan. 12, 1982.

Tax-Exempt Hate

THE REAGAN Administration is picking the pocket of every American taxpayer to subsidize racism in education.

Its new decision to confer tax-exempt status on schools and colleges that discriminate against blacks is no shift into neutral. It's a biased interpretation of the longstanding federal law that gives tax breaks to worthy charities and their contributors. The new Reagan rule is that a school with a racist admission policy is just as worthy a charity as a school that admits all races.

It mocks American charitable instincts, not to mention the Administration's calls for more voluntary, less coercive school desegregation.

—From a New York Times editorial, Jan. 12, 1982.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
LANE KIRKLAND, President
THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer
Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
Jerry Wurf*	S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward
Murray H. Finley	Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts
Sol C. Chaikin	Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco
Charles H. Pillard	J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride
David J. Fitzmaurice	Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps
Wm. W. Winpisinger	William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell
John DeConcini	Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss
William Konyha	Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney
Douglas A. Fraser	Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield
Barbara Hutchinson	Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto

*Deceased

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop, John R. Oravec
David L. Perlman, James M. Shevis

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, January 16, 1982 No. 2

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

International Labor Press AFL-CIO/CLC Association

Wind-Chill Factor

Resources to Meet Needs

Trillions in Hidden Assets Give Solid Support to National Debt

By Gus Tyler

IF YOU OWED someone $1,000 and you had $1,000 on hand, would you consider yourself bankrupt?

If you owed a trillion dollars and had assets worth seven trillion, would you feel poor?

These seemingly idle questions are suggested to set some thinking in motion about how "poor" or "bankrupt" Uncle Sam is at the moment. The queries are prompted by a piece of legislation backed by Sen. Charles Percy (R-Ill.) who would like Uncle Sam to give some thought to selling off some of his properties to raise some needed cash.

IN THE COURSE of discussing his proposal, Percy said that the value of all federal property "is likely to be much, much more than a trillion dollars; $7 trillion, at least, in my judgment."

If that is true then Uncle Sam can relax. The present total debt is about a trillion; the assets are seven times that amount.

Most of the assets are held in the form of land. According to a report from the General Accounting Office the government owns 744.1 million acres, which is about one-third of all the land in the country. In addition, Uncle Sam owns buildings, some 400,000 of them.

THE EXACT value of the land is not really known because it is customary for Uncle Sam to keep his accounts in accordance with the original purchase price of the property. Thus, 50 million acres in California are listed at the value of $21 an acre.

The Percy proposal seems to have the favor of the White House; the Office of Management & Budget is making a study. With Reagan and Congress looking for ways to balance the budget, don't be surprised if some of that precious land is sold.

In the rush to balance the budget, however, we ought not to lose sight of some of America's long time objectives: to conserve forests, to hold on to minerals we may need badly in the years ahead, to have a reservoir of farm land for the future as highways and cities pave over fertile soil.

THIS DOES not mean that Uncle Sam should never release present holdings. Indeed, in our search for alternate sources of energy, in the establishment of new towns and cities in places where such energy-creating facilities arise, Uncle Sam can play an epic role, making land available strategically and inexpensively to help America become energy independent, to hold down real estate costs, and to make new and affordable housing available to middle-class America.

We have the wealth, trillions of dollars worth of it. Let's not waste it; let's not sell it for a song to some private profiteer; let's use it to balance our budget and—more important—to balance the budgets of families going bankrupt under the cost of fuel and housing.

Copyright 1982, Gus Tyler Columns

A Solid Foundation For Building the News

With this issue of the AFL-CIO News, a new editor assumes the responsibility borne for so long, so ably, by Saul Miller. The transition has been made as easy as could be imagined by the grace of Saul and the warm assistance of the fine staff he assembled during his tenure.

My 30 years' experience as a reporter and foreign correspondent have taught me that all newspapers, large and small, have personalities. This newspaper has long been appreciated for upholding high professional standards of integrity and veracity while fulfilling its mission as the journal for organized labor.

With the continuing demise of general circulation newspapers, the responsibility of special publications like the News grows. We intend to build an even better newspaper on the strong foundation left for us by our predecessor.

We aim to publish an honest, good-looking and interesting newspaper that will serve the entire labor movement and a wider, interested readership. We invite our friends and critics to give our efforts their best attention. With the help of our writers and editors, we hope to make the News too important, and too good, to miss.

—Murray Seeger

Adding to Unemployment

Harmful Economic Policy Tied To Wrong Analysis of Inflation

The following is excerpted from the presidential address to the Industrial Relations Research Association by AFL-CIO Research Director Rudy Oswald.

INFLATION IS sometimes described as America's number one economic problem. But today rising unemployment, increasing poverty, and a worsening of the income distribution should be the real economic concerns.

A wrong analysis of inflation leads to wrong solutions—and, unfortunately, the Reagan Administration's analysis of America's economic problems adds up to the economic disaster of more unemployment and continued inflation.

Too many policymakers and too many academic economists still cling to a version of the trade-off theory—the long-discredited notion that the way to stop inflation is to accept and even to promote high unemployment. Following the logic of this theory, high unemployment will make workers and their unions afraid to push for wage increases and reduce workers' bargaining power to the point that they will accept pay cuts. This further cuts consumer buying power and weakens demand, aggravating the recession.

THE IDEA that lies behind this attack on inflation is essentially a simple-minded, tunnel-vision view that the cause of inflation is union wage push. That's just plain wrong.

What then are the real causes of this inflation?

Energy price increases were the biggest and the most obvious source of inflation. These increases were the result of the cartel policies of the major oil exporting nations and domestically of the decontrol policies and the extraordinary profits of U.S. oil and gas producers.

TIGHT MONEY and high interest rate policies of the Reagan Administration and the nation's central bank, the Federal Reserve, have been another key source of inflation. These tight money, high interest rate policies pushed up the cost of housing, construction, consumer credit, private investment, and public investment in basic economic infrastructure.

Health and medical care cost rose at extraordinary rates because of the lack of a rational health care system.

When unemployment jumped to 8.4 percent in November, the highest rate in six years, the Reagan White House informed the nation that "this is the price you have to pay for bringing down inflation." Unemployment is rapidly approaching 9 percent. Yet, the effect on inflation has been—and is expected to continue to be—only slight.

Because of the ineffectiveness of current anti-inflation policies and the obvious failure of "supply side" tax-cuts based on tight money, union wages are once again being cast as the scapegoat for the persistence of inflation.

Because prices have risen more rapidly than wages, workers' real earnings have declined and the distribution of income has become less equitable. Not only have workers' wages not been the initial source of inflation, but the lagged response of wages to price increases has failed to restore lost buying power. Workers have suffered a cut of 15 percent in their average after-tax buying power, their real pay, in the last three-and-a-half years.

Today's inflation problem will not be solved by suppressing wages. Any "devil" theory of inflation that establishes wage increases as the "devil" is clearly unwarranted.

Today's inflation fight should deal with the factors responsible for inflation. Wages are not the villain, indeed, workers are the victims of the current inflation. Unless workers' real earnings increase, they and their families will not be able to buy the goods and services that the economy is capable of producing. The danger for the 1980s may well be the lag in real wage income and purchasing power for most Americans while a small elite continue to prosper. In such a two-tier economy characterized by massive inequality in income distribution, the lack of balance assures continued troubles for the economy.

Inflation is a complex problem that will not be solved by such simple prescription as high unemployment or clamping down on union wage settlements. The only program with any chance to succeed is one that recognizes and attacks the many structural factors underlying the inflationary process.

THE BASIC PRINCIPLES behind the economic policies supported by the AFL-CIO are simple:

- Economic progress and social justice go together. Fairness and compassion are not in conflict with efficiency.
- Full employment is a moral, social, political and economic imperative.
- The attack against inflation must focus on the true causes of inflation.

Inflation in America today is not caused by excessive government spending nor can it be halted by cutting basic social programs and loading hardship on the weak and defenseless and tax breaks and tax loopholes on the rich. The tight monetary-high interest rate policies are aggravating inflation rather than curing it.

Restraining wages through government or engineered recessions diverts attention from the real causes of inflation and prolongs the adverse economic conditions. It also undermines free collective bargaining, the hallmark of a free society.

New Restriction Threatens

White House Plans Deeper Cuts In Jobless Insurance System

THE THREAT of a renewed push by the Reagan Administration for more deep cuts looms over the unemployment insurance system which already fails to help two-thirds of the nation's jobless workers, AFL-CIO Social Security Director Bert Seidman warned.

Noting that the Administration last year forced restrictions on unemployment compensation benefits that cut more than 600,000 long-term unemployed workers out of the program, Seidman said it may well try this year to expand those restrictions to benefits during the first 26 weeks of layoff.

He said that among the most severe of the new restrictions is the demand that applicants for extended benefits "accept a minimum wage job or lose their eligibility."

Cutting unemployment compensation at a time when the job market is shrinking is neither sensible nor just, Seidman declared on the network radio interview Labor News Conference.

"It makes no sense" to force highly skilled and professional workers to "take minimum wage jobs or starve," Seidman said. He pointed out that if skilled workers accept such jobs, "all of that experience, all of that training, go down the drain and the economy suffers because of it."

Seidman said that the recession with large-scale unemployment has put a tremendous burden on the state unemployment insurance funds that carry the basic 26-week protection program. As a result, he noted, there is a growing outcry from state officials and others close to the grass roots to adopt the recommendation of the National Commission on Unemployment Compensation that the federal treasury "share the extra financial burden during periods of recession."

THERE ALSO APPEARS to be growing congressional support for the proposal, which has had the backing of the AFL-CIO from the outset, he said.

"The root problem is jobs," Seidman asserted. But, he said, the President's campaign promise of more jobs has not been kept, and the unemployment rolls have swollen by more than a million in the last year.

By Press Associates, Inc.

THE WAY MOST pension funds are invested traditionally has been the domain of employers or their hired managers, such as banks and insurance companies.

But in recent years the question of how this huge reservoir of future retirement income is put to use has come under increasing scrutiny by organized labor and others.

It's easy to see why. Pension funds, which began growing rapidly after World War II, now total more than $600 billion, more than the 1980 federal budget. These funds today are the largest source of financing for U.S. corporations.

Since pension funds are the deferred wages of some 50 million workers, it follows that these workers ought to have a say in how their money is invested. It also makes sense to find ways to put some of these vast sums to work helping beneficiaries before as well as after they retire.

IRON WORKERS President John H. Lyons, who headed an AFL-CIO committee on pension fund investments, found that the funds frequently "are invested in companies which are among the most anti-union, which export workers' jobs to low-wage countries, which ignore workers' needs for health and safety protections, and in other ways hinder rather than help workers in the achievement of their most basic and legitimate objectives." Lyons concluded that "this situation must be turned around."

With this in mind, unions have been making increasing strides to secure a voice in the use of their members' pension funds.

Currently, less than 15 percent of private pension funds are subject to joint company-union control. The AFL-CIO has been working with its affiliates to help win contract guarantees for such joint administration of these funds, or at least the right to participate in decisions such as selection of fund trustees and investment managers, and determination of general investment policy.

UNIONS ALSO have been exploring ways in which pension funds might be used to help "reindustrialize" the nation's lagging basic industries, strengthen local economies and preserve jobs.

The building trades have been especially active. For example, a consortium of 20 southern California construction union pension funds has invested $100 million in residential and commercial-industrial construction projects.

The AFL-CIO is setting up a new investment trust fund to loan mortgage money for construction of rental and single-family housing using union labor. Money for the fund, a separate offshoot of the federation's Mortgage Investment Trust, will come from jointly administered pension funds.

Some public worker unions have been able to get pension funds controlled by state and local governments to set up special accounts to provide low-cost home mortgages and economic activity aimed at job creation. While some argue that the new investment criteria, sometimes called "social investing" or "alternative investing," is overly risky compared to traditional stock and bond investment, this argument holds little water.

TRADITIONAL investment policies over the years have provided "miserable returns" for pension funds, says Robert Georgine, president of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. And Chemical Workers' President Frank D. Martino, whose union pulled its staff retirement fund away from an insurance company when it refused to give the union a say in its investment, said the union has done better managing the fund "than the insurance company has in the past 20 years."

While social investing sometimes has been hindered by state laws regarding pensions, lobbying by unions and other groups has produced more flexible laws in several states.

But much more work, including internal education, needs to be done if unions are to have an effective voice in the investment of pension funds.

A RENEWED PUSH for another round of budget cuts looms as a threat over the unemployment compensation system that already fails to help two-thirds of the nation's jobless workers, AFL-CIO Social Security Director Bert Seidman, center, warned on Labor News Conference. He was questioned by Calvin Zon, left, of Press Associates, Inc., and Michael Posner of the Reuters News Agency. The AFL-CIO produced public affairs program is aired weekly over Mutual radio.

Kirkland Offers Labor Alternatives

The following is excerpted from an interview with AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland conducted in Washington, Jan. 12, 1982. Reporters questioning him were William Eaton of the Los Angeles Times, Warren Brown of the Washington Post, Jonathan Fuerbringer of the New York Times, Robert Greenberger of the Wall Street Journal, Drew von Bergen of United Press International and Merrill Hartson of the Associated Press.

KIRKLAND: . . . Congress should overturn the inequitable Reagan tax bill to restore fairness to the tax system and provide a revenue base adequate for the country's national security and general welfare needs.

Q: How would you undo the tax bill?

KIRKLAND: We proposed in February of last year that there be a tax credit for the amount of the social security tax, which would have given a better break to persons in income brackets up to $30,000. Since this credit would apply to both employer and employee contributions, one-half of it would have gone, in effect, to reduce the corporate share. In addition to that, we proposed corporate tax reductions through various approaches, such as accelerated depreciation, but on a targeted basis aimed at the objective that we've consistently been harping on to reverse the trend toward reindustrialization of our economy.

We thought that approach was sound then, and we think it is still sound. That is the program that we testified in support of during the hearings early in the congressional session this past year.

Again, this past September, at the time that the President called for new cuts in government services and programs, we proposed an alternative. Instead of the $16 billion additional amount in cuts that the President said he needed and demanded of the Congress, we proposed meeting that $16 billion goal by a couple of specific steps—capping the individual income tax break for '82 at $700 and eliminating the oil company and oil royalty owner tax breaks. Just those two steps would have recouped that full $16 billion that he was seeking at that time.

Q: What makes you think that they'll listen to it now any more than they did in the past?

KIRKLAND: I would be hypocritical if I suggested to you that I had exaggerated hopes that the Administration would embrace our position. But I believe we have a responsibility to do what the President has so often suggested—that those who don't agree with his approach ought to offer alternatives. We have from the beginning offered alternatives—alternatives that are derived, I think, from a quite different view of the role and responsibility of the federal government in a modern industrial society.

Q: What about the Congress? Do you feel that the current unemployment rate will have any effect in terms of changing their reluctance to go along with some of the things you're suggesting?

KIRKLAND: I trust that in the next session the condition of the country and the prospects for the future and the effect that the Reagan program has had on a broad cross-section of the American people—the adverse effect—will have persuaded members of Congress that there ought to be a responsible opposition, that responsible alternatives ought to be advanced and pursued. That was not the case in the first session where, as you will recall, we were equally critical of both the Democratic posture and the Republican proposals.

Q: Through the previous two or three months of unemployment, Reagan spokesmen have been characterizing that as the price one has to pay to get inflation under control.

KIRKLAND: I was reminded of what a long road they seem to have travelled from their campaign. The 1980 Republican platform accuses the Democrats of "trying to stop inflation with a recession, a bankrupt policy which is throwing millions of Americans out of work. We categorically reject this approach. Shutting down our nation's factories and throwing millions of people out of work leads only to shortages and higher prices." And that was also a frequently reiterated theme of the President's campaign speeches.

Q: Since your Dec. 2 meeting with the President, have you spoken about where he's going economically?

KIRKLAND: We spoke at that meeting about our concerns with the Administration's economic policy and expressed deep, principled disagreement with it. We suggested that at some point they even might become persuaded that their policies don't work, and that we stood ready to give them any assistance and advice that they might be willing to accept, pointing in an alternative direction.

Q: Are they taking you up on that?

KIRKLAND: No.

Q: Do you think they will?

KIRKLAND: I don't preclude it.

Q: Has anything tangible come out of that meeting, from your point of view?

KIRKLAND: Well, the President indicated that, in terms of the style and openness of channels of communication, he would like, as he put it, to "make a fresh start." He designated the Vice President as a point of day-to-day contact on any of the issues that trouble us. I think that's an improvement.

Q: Has that worked out?

KIRKLAND: Oh, yes. He's been accessible.

Q: You seem to feel, despite all this, that the Administration is not now heeding your alternatives, and you don't really expect them to?

KIRKLAND: That's right. I think they're on a course comparable to that of Mrs. Thatcher (the British prime minister). In the United Kingdom, they're taking the position . . . that steadfastness in the pursuit of error is required.

Q: What is your attitude toward deficits in the $100 billion range that are being projected for fiscal '82 and possible for '83 and thereafter?

KIRKLAND: Well, last February, when we attacked the budget and tax policies enunciated by the Administration we noted the very serious, grave downside risks of the presidential policy, and I will say frankly that at that time I could not have conceived of, perhaps in two or three years, its leading to the first $100 billion deficit in our history and a level of interest rates that we had not hitherto dreamed of. I could not have conceived of $200 billion dollar deficits projected for the end of the term. I would not have dreamed that the first $100 billion deficit would come so soon. It staggers me.

Having said that, let me make it clear that although the irresponsible tax cuts engineered and forced through the Congress by this Administration are contributing factors of that deficit, essentially the deficit is the product of unemployment. I am sure you are familiar with the estimate that each 1 percent unemployment equals a swing of $30 billion in the federal budget. That's the source of the deficit.

The only way that deficit is going to be met on a constructive basis is by national growth and returning to the pursuit of full employment. If you could get the level of unemployment down by 4 points, that would make up your $100 billion.

Q: So you are going to oppose any tax increases?

KIRKLAND: No, we pointed out in the beginning that we believe the entire tax program ought to be reexamined, that the approach embodied in the President's irresponsible tax bill of last year ought to be scrapped and a new approach taken that leaves the federal government with sufficient resources to do those things necessary to bring us back to the road to full employment. Under the current scheduled tax reduction, which I think over the term amounts to some $750 billion, there is a systematic stripping of the federal government of any capacity to meet its responsibilities, foreign and domestic, and that's a catastrophe, in both the large and smaller aspects.

Let me give you one little example: At a time when unemployment is reaching officially almost 9 percent—and we usually add a couple of points to that for the real unemployment measure, so we would regard it as 12.5 percent counting the discouraged workers and those involuntarily working part-time—the Administration is in the process of crippling the Employment Service. The Employment Service staff that operates the offices where people go to look for work around this country is being reduced from a level of 30,000 in fiscal year 1980 to 17,500 in fiscal year 1982. In that period 1,000 employment offices will be closed. The appropriations bill for fiscal year 1982 which was signed into law on Dec. 15 cut administrative expenses for both employment service and unemployment insurance activities by $264 million or 12 percent below the President's March budget. The Dept. of Labor intends to take the entire cut out of employment service administrative expenses. The allocations under that cutback went out to the states last Saturday, requiring a 29 percent reduction in fiscal year 1982 in Employment Service staff with a result of almost 10,000 state Employment Service staff losing their jobs this year and over 600 local Employment Service offices closing.

Q: On the question of collective bargaining concessions—should workers make these concessions this year? Are they just being bludgeoned into it? (Federal Reserve Board Chairman) Paul Volcker has been talking about nothing for the last year but that this is the way we're gong to bring down inflation: by reducing the rate of wage increases.

KIRKLAND: Well, I had a couple of conversations with Paul Volcker about that, and I think I've addressed some remarks to his arguments. It's a confession of the bankruptcy of his policies that he's reduced to blaming future wage negotiations for what he did last year. That's what it amounts to. It's scapegoat hunting. He feels the blowtorch on his tail, so he's trying to divert it to a popular target—the target that he can join in the hue and cry against.

The problems that this country faces are not the product of previous wage negotiations, and the problems this country faces—all of us face—are not going to be solved by this year's wage negotiations. The process of collective bargaining is one of give-and-take, and it's based on the particular economic environment that those negotiations occur in. I'm confident that the organizations representing working people in these industries again will carry out their responsibilities in a skilled and serious and responsible way. And it may involve some concessions. It may involve reciprocal concessions. All of them are determined through the democratic process—as far as the union side goes—in the multiple possibilities of the collective bargaining process. But the thing that is most clear, it seems to me, is that when people talk about give-back demands in negotiations, they forget what the people who don't have a union to fight for them are faced with. Think of what would happen if the employer had total discretion to squeeze it out of the workforce as he has in many areas of employment in this country. I think it reemphasizes the vital role of the trade union movement in affording working people a chance to have a voice in their own destinies.

Q: After the Solidarity Day protest, you said that the labor movement and other allies might have to do it again. Is another Solidarity Day protest in the works or possible?

KIRKLAND: We've got two or three different options. We've noted this year, '82, is an election year. In a democracy, the political process is one that's always available to us to change the direction in which the country's moving. We expect to try and do our level best to take full advantage of it this year. I expect that the energies that last year we devoted to that protest will be channeled in that direction, which means organizational work in the districts, precincts, and states throughout the country.

I continue to believe in the value of public manifestations of one's views. They are an exercise of the right to petition by rallies, demonstrations or any other way. And they're a very good, valid part of the educational process both for those to whom they're directed and for those who participate. I believe that all of those who worked and participated in the Solidarity Day rally will be a little more ready and a little more dedicated in carrying forward the objectives that day dramatized and highlighted.

Q: What do you think of the wisdom of these union leaders that have joined in with the Democratic Party in its Labor Advisory Council? There's still three years in the Reagan Administration.

KIRKLAND: That's not a departure from history. Even when the old AFL, before the merger, did not as a federation actively participate in the party process, there was a Labor Advisory Committee to both political parties. I regard this as the same sort of thing.

Q: Are you suggesting that this should be more of a bipartisan effort at this point?

KIRKLAND: I think every time I have responded to questions on what we were trying to do to make our role in political life more effective, I've indicated that we're prepared to play the same role in the Democratic Party and the Republican Party—that is to say, helping to organize a more effective presence on the part of those of our members that were registered in that party. We have had no response from the Republican Party.

Q: You refer to the National Accord. What sort of National Accord would you like to see with this Administration?

KIRKLAND: The National Accord (signed in the Carter Administration) laid out an agreed basis of combatting inflation in a fair way, of distributing the burden of austerity and resuming the path of national growth. One of its essential components was the proposition that everybody should bear the burden of austerity in accordance with their ability. The only ones exempted should be those at the lower end of the ladder, who know nothing but austerity and don't have any more to sacrifice.

Q: Assuming this Administration would be interested, would you advocate a similar arrangement?

KIRKLAND: If it's part of a program of fairness, along the lines outlined in that accord, we would play our part, bear our share of the load, take our share of the sacrifice. In other words, if someone asks us to walk a mile, we'll walk two miles with them.

Court Urged To Overturn ERA Setback

(Continued from Page 1)

Thirty-five of a necessary 38 states have voted for ratification of the amendment. The Idaho ruling, however, would permit five of the ratified states to rescind their votes.

The brief was filed to support NOW in its Jan. 8 appeal of a ruling Dec. 23 by Chief Judge Marion Callister of the U.S. District Court for Idaho in a case brought by the states of Idaho and Arizona. Callister's decision held that Congress did not have the power under Article V of the Constitution to extend its original deadline for ratification of ERA, and he ruled that states could reverse approval of an amendment any time before it was made valid by the necessary three-fourths majority of states.

THE AFL-CIO brief, joined by the Women's Legal Defense Fund and the National Women's Law Center, argued that Congress alone has the right under the Constitution to act both on the extension of deadlines and on a state's right to rescind its ratification. Article V, the brief pointed out, reserves the "mode of ratification" to the legislative branch.

A 1939 Supreme Court decision, the AFL-CIO noted, held that "the efficacy of ratifications by state legislatures . . . should be regarded as a political question pertaining to the political departments with the ultimate authority in the Congress."

The federation argued that Callister's decision was wrong in saying that Congress needed a two-thirds vote to extend the ERA deadline. Such a majority is required to propose an amendment, the brief said, but the language of the Constitution does not apply to the ratification procedures which can be decided on by Congress.

QUICK ACTION by the high court is essential, the AFL-CIO stressed, because the judge's decision, coming at a "critical season for ratification of the ERA," could provide a "decided political advantage" for opponents of the amendment "at the very time when the political processes should operate freely."

There are precedents for expedited action in emergencies, the AFL-CIO pointed out, including the 1974 Watergate tapes decision and the 1952 action after President Truman federalized steel plants.

CHALLENGES AND ISSUES facing the trade union movement were spelled out by AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland in an interview with a panel of labor reporters. Participating in the session were William Eaton of the Los Angeles Times, Warren Brown of the Washington Post, Jonathan Fuerbringer of the New York Times, Robert Greenberger of the Wall Street Journal, Drew von Bergen of United Press International and Merrill Hartson of the Associated Press.

Kirkland Calls for Action by Congress To Halt Reagan Recession, Spur Jobs

(Continued from Page 1)

But tax inequities would be compounded, Kirkland stressed, if Congress were to turn for needed revenue to sales and excise taxes, "which are unfairly weighted against workers and the poor." He termed the value-added tax scheme "nothing but another regressive sales tax."

IN RESPONSE to questions, Kirkland noted that the AFL-CIO had originally proposed a social security tax credit and corporate tax subsidies targeted to strengthening the nation's industrial base as an alternative to the Administration plan. He reiterated the AFL-CIO's proposal to raise $16 billion in revenue through a $700 ceiling on individual tax cuts this year, and elimination of the extra tax breaks given to oil companies and owners of oil royalties.

A $700 ceiling on tax cuts would only affect persons earning more than $47,000 a year.

The huge budget deficits that have been projected are only partly the result of "irresponsible tax cuts engineered and forced through Congress by this Administration," Kirkland told the reporters.

Unemployment is the chief source of the deficit, he stressed, and full employment is the solution. "If you could get the level of unemployment down, that would make up your $100 billion."

BUT THE automatic tax cuts scheduled by law for future years would be a "catastrophe," Kirkland warned, denying the federal government the resources to meet both foreign and domestic responsibilities.

With unemployment officially at 8.9 percent—and in double digits if the discouraged job-hunters were counted—budget slashes are forcing the closing of hundreds of state employment offices and the layoffs of thousands of trained staff, Kirkland noted.

"THAT'S THE most basic and fundamental service that the Labor Dept. administers for people in trouble," he said. Delays and large errors in unemployment insurance payments will result, "and I say it's madness," he added.

Kirkland stressed the AFL-CIO's readiness to enter into the same type of National Accord with this Administration that it reached late in the Carter Administration—involving cordinated efforts by government labor and business to strengthen the nation's industrial base and assure that sacrifices required by austerity would be equitably shared, with no additional hardships for the poor.

In response to questions, Kirkland made it clear that the improved communication offered by the Administration and welcomed by the AFL-CIO after a White House meeting last month was not a comparable mechanism.

VICE PRESIDENT Bush, designated by Reagan as the key Administration contact with labor, has been accessible, as promised, Kirkland said. But the Reagan Administration has never been in doubt as to labor's views, and there is no indication that it is going to change a course that the AFL-CIO considers disastrous.

Kirkland said he anticipates that Congress will be more critical of the Administration program in the second session, starting Jan. 25, than in the first session because of a growing awareness of the harm done by the Reagan program.

"People in political life are responsive to what they perceive as tides of public opinion," Kirkland suggested, and the first-session record of Congress reflected a belief in the popularity of Reagan's presidency.

"IF THEIR perceptions haven't changed I think they're going to be in trouble," Kirkland said, because circumstances have changed "and what the people expect of their representatives certainly has."

Kirkland noted that Reagan was elected on a platform that specifically rejected the doctrine "that inflation can be reduced only by throwing people out of work." Kirkland contrasted that pledge with the response of a White House spokesman when the latest rise in unemployment was announced, "that unfortunately unemployment is the price we have to pay to get inflation down."

Kirkland said the problems of industries in economic difficulties haven't been caused by high wage rates, and the unions representing these workers are carrying out their collective bargaining role "in a skilled and serious and responsible way." In some cases, he noted, this may involve concessions or "reciprocal concessions" but the process is one which gives "working people a chance to have a voice in their own destinies."

FAR MORE of a factor than wage rates, he stressed, have been interest rates driven up by the Administration's monetary policy. High money costs have fueled inflation and are "undermining both the automotive industry and the housing construction industry, and all of those other collateral industries that depend upon them," Kirkland pointed out.

As for labor's follow-up to Solidarity Day, Kirkland told reporters that "the energies that last year we devoted to that project" will be channeled toward the congressional elections in November, with "organizational work in the district, precincts and states."

But for the future, "I continue to believe in the public manifestation of one's views . . . the right to petition by rallies, demonstrations or any other way."

CWA Asks Talks on 'Divestiture' Impact

The Communications Workers called for "prompt negotiations" with American Telephone & Telegraph Co. to address concerns of CWA members stemming from a pending divestiture settlement between AT&T and the Justice Dept.

At a special meeting, the CWA executive board also urged Congress to move forward on telecommunications legislation to protect employee rights and the interests of telephone company customers.

UNDER THE terms of the antitrust settlement, AT&T has agreed to relinquish ownership of 22 operating subsidiaries, which represent about two-thirds of the giant telephone company's $136 billion in assets.

CWA President Glenn E. Watts stressed that "many questions of profound importance to our members and to the general public remain unresolved" in the wake of the agreement.

"We continue to believe that the Congress, taking this development into account, must have the final word on the shape of the telecommunications industry as it enters a new era of competition and a revolution in technological advancement," Watts said.

CWA BOARD members voiced concern over the guarantee of contractual rights and job protections with the proposed breakup and restructuring of the Bell Telephone System. They noted that CWA will seek assurances on these issues, as well as on maintaining pension rights and benefits, in negotiations with AT&T.

The CWA represents more than a half-million of AT&T's 750,000 unionized workers. Another 120,000 are represented by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, and the unaffiliated Telecommunications Union bargains for 60,000 AT&T workers.

Under the agreement, which had been quickly approved by U.S. District Court Judge Vincent P. Biunno in Newark, N.J., AT&T has six months to file a reorganization plan on how it will divest itself of the 22 local operating companies.

BUT JUDGE Harold H. Greene of the federal district court in Washington, D.C., said the seven-year-old anti-monopoly case could not be dismissed without a full judicial review and a 60-day public comment period involving interested parties as required under a 1974 law.

Although Greene was not critical of the settlement between the Justice Dept. and AT&T, he said he could not go along with the "judicial rubberstamping" that the 1974 law was intended to prevent.

While the agreement provides for AT&T to give up the 22 operating companies, the company is allowed to retain ownership of its Long Lines department, while picking up some long distance lines from the local companies, and hold onto its giant Western Electric manufacturing company and its Bell Laboratories research arm.

IN FILING the antitrust suit in 1974, the Justice Dept. accused AT&T of monopolizing the nation's telecommunications service and related equipment field.

The CWA board statement said the union will work for employee protection guarantees in legislation to amend the 1934 Communications Act, along with provisions to keep residential telephone rates from soaring when the local telephone companies are divested and are no longer subsidized by other AT&T enterprises, such as the long distance network.

THE CWA has negotiated national agreements with AT&T since 1974. Its current three-year agreement with the company would expire in August 1983.

The 22 operating companies to be spun off by the AT&T divestiture are: Pacific Telephone & Telegraph, Bell Telephone of Nevada, Illinois Bell, Indiana Bell, Michigan Bell, New England Bell, New Jersey Bell, New York Telephone, Northwestern Bell, Pacific Northwest Bell, South Central Bell, Southern Bell, Southwestern Bell, Bell Telephone of Pennsylvania, Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone of Virginia, C&P of Maryland, C&P of Washington, D.C., C&P of West Virginia, Diamond State Telephone, Mountain States Telephone, Ohio Bell and Wisconsin Telephone.

Retired Field Staffer James M. Scott Dies

Richland Hills, Tex.—James M. Scott, who retired in 1968 as an AFL-CIO field representative, died of cancer Jan. 1. He was 69.

Scott held a number of elected offices with Boilermakers Local 587 in Orange, Tex., before joining the AFL organizing staff in 1948. He retired from the AFL-CIO field staff after suffering a stroke.

Survivors include his wife Bobbi.

'Growing Tragedy'

8.9% Jobless Rate Near Peak for Postwar Years

Soaring unemployment induced by tight money and high interest rates and reflecting a deepening of the current economic recession rocked the nation last month, lifting the U.S. jobless rate to 8.9 percent of the workforce.

The December unemployment rate — half a percentage point higher than the November rate and 1.9 percent above the rate in July when the recession began — was within a tenth of a percentage point of the post-World War II high of 9 percent reached in May 1975 during the deepest downturn of the postwar years. Economists in and out of government say joblessness could approach 10 percent before the economy strengthens.

AFL-CIO PRESIDENT Lane Kirkland called the unemployment surge "a growing tragedy produced by Reaganomics which must be turned around to alleviate the suffering of the unemployed."

"We urge the Congress and the Administration immediately to enact programs to put America back to work, and to direct the Federal Reserve Board to release its stranglehold on the money supply and direct the flow of funds to productive uses," Kirkland said.

December's rise of five-tenths of 1 percent in the jobless rate was the fifth straight monthly increase. A year earlier, in December 1980, the unemployment rate was 7.4 percent. Since then, an additional 1.68 million Americans have lost jobs.

"PERSONS WHO lost their jobs as a result of layoff or permanent separation accounted for all of the December increase in unemployment," the Bureau of Labor Statistics noted in reporting on the employment situation. "There was little change in the number of unemployed persons who voluntarily left their last job or entered the labor force in search of work.

"As is typical during economic downturns, job losers have comprised most of the rise in unemployment since the beginning of the current slump."

Federation Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue, interviewed on NBC-TV's "Today" show before the latest figures were released, said blame for rising joblessness "has to be placed on the White House. We're operating under what is the White House economic plan."

DONAHUE SUGGESTED that the Administration return to public-service jobs programs and targeted job programs for the disadvantaged to ease the employment crisis. "All of those programs are being dismantled by the Reagan Administration," he pointed out. "It's inevitable that you're going to have this kind of unemployment."

Nearly 9.5 million workers were officially unemployed last month, an increase of 458,000 over the November level. Total employment fell by 937,000 to 97,188,000, contributing heavily to a 1.8-million decline since July. The workforce fell by 379,000, to 106,650,000, as the large employment drop exceeded the rise in unemployment.

Actually, the government statistics failed to show the true extent of joblessness since they do not account for so-called "discouraged" workers and workers employed only part-time because they are unable to find full-time jobs. When these workers are factored into the count, the AFL-CIO calculates that "true" unemployment last month came to 13.5 million, or an unemployment rate of 12.5 percent.

THE NUMBER of discouraged workers —persons who want to work but are not looking for jobs because they believe they cannot find any—rose by 150,000 in the fourth quarter of 1981 to 1.2 million, the highest level since the government began keeping such records, BLS said.

The number of persons working part-time "for economic reasons," as BLS puts it, meaning they could not find full-time work, rose 360,000 to a record 5.4 million. "Most of this increase occurred among those who usually work full-time but experienced a curtailment in their workweek," BLS reported.

The December job losses fell most heavily on the key bread-winners of American families. The unemployment rate for adult men, usually the last group to lose their jobs, soared to a postwar high of 8 percent from 7.2 percent in November.

The rate for full-time workers jumped from 8.1 to 8.7 percent over the month.

BOTH WHITE and black workers shared in the layoffs. The jobless rate for all white workers moved up to 7.8 percent, from 7.4 percent in November, while that for blacks rose from 15.5 to 16.1 percent. Teenage unemployment remained about the same, at 21.7 percent, but it was higher among blacks whose jobless rate was 39.6 percent last month.

Blue-collar workers, whose jobless rate rose by 1.1 percent to 12.9 percent in December, continue to bear the brunt of the economic downturn, but the recession has touched most other sectors as well. White-collar joblessness rose to 4.6 percent from 4 percent of the workforce over the 12 months ended in December.

THOUSANDS OF white-collar layoffs have occurred in the automobile industry, where the jobless rate rose to 21.7 percent in December from 15.6 percent the month before. Other workers have lost their jobs in the airline industry, in retailing, in small businesses, and in high-technology companies. Government employment, long thought of as immune from economic downturns, has declined steadily since President Reagan assumed office.

As BLS Commissioner Janet L. Norwood observed at a congressional Joint Economic Committee hearing, however, the greatest deterioration in the job market has taken place in heavy industry, particularly in the five major metals and metal-using sectors — primary and fabricated metals, machinery, electrical equipment, and transportation equipment.

JOB SAFETY and health issues were explored at a conference sponsored by two AFL-CIO departments. Discussing the program are, from left: George Hagglund, director of the University of Wisconsin's School for Workers; AFL-CIO Education Director Dorothy Shields, Occupational Safety & Health Director George Taylor, and George Daitsman, education director of the Allied Industrial Workers. The federation's Education and Safety & Health departments sponsored the conference.

GM Accepts UAW Proposal To Pass Savings to Buyers

Detroit—General Motors has agreed to an Auto Workers' proposal that any reduced labor costs resulting from current contract negotiations will be passed on directly to the consumer in the form of lower car prices.

"There will be no economic concessions to General Motors," UAW President Douglas A. Fraser said in Detroit, where the union has reopened bargaining with the Ford Motor Co. as well as GM.

"IF WE REACH an agreement which our members at GM believe addresses their problems, any concessions will go to the consumer, not to the corporation," Fraser said. "Lower prices for car buyers should stimulate the total car, truck, and van sales in the United States and benefit the entire domestic auto industry.

"Improved sales mean increased production, and that will result in many of the more than 120,000 UAW members on indefinite layoff at GM being recalled. When GM executives look across the table, we want them to see advocates on behalf of GM workers and also the consumers who buy the products we build. The price reduction must be large enough to be meaningful and in place for an extended duration."

Ford was set to consider the UAW proposal, which is part of a broader framework on which current bargaining talks will be based.

GM CHAIRMAN Roger B. Smith, making the first appearance ever by a GM board chairman during negotiations, said the company welcomed the union's "historic" plan, and was prepared to match any UAW concessions—"dollar for dollar" —with car price cuts. The cuts would be retroactive to midnight Jan. 12, and would be made in the form of rebate checks, he said.

Contracts between the UAW and the nation's major automakers do not expire until Sept. 14, but the union, faced with massive layoffs and continued slumping sales agreed to early contract talks in an attempt to revive the industry. The union said it hopes to be able to present contract proposals to its Ford and GM bargaining councils on Jan. 23, when they assemble at the annual UAW legislative conference in Washington.

Other elements of the union's bargaining framework include:

- Selection of an independent certified accounting firm jointly agreed to by the union and the automakers to examine corporate records to make sure that all cost savings are passed through to consumers.
- "Equality of sacrifice" by non-union GM employees, including top management.
- Job security proposals, particularly protection against the exportation of UAW jobs to overseas subsidiaries.
- An automatic return to economic provisions in the current GM contract.
- An open-ended contract with no expiration date.

FRASER AND UAW Vice President Owen Bieber noted in a statement that "nothing we do in these talks will mean the auto companies' difficulties are over. We hope—should an acceptable agreement be reached—that our efforts to force reduced car prices will stimulate sales and spur a recovery."

Food Stamp Rules for Strikers Protested

Proposed changes in food stamp eligibility rules are harsher on strikers and their families than Congress intended or the law requires, the AFL-CIO protested.

The federation urged the Agriculture Dept. to modify regulations it has drawn up to enforce food stamp cutbacks imposed by the last session of Congress.

The department's "most glaring error," AFL-CIO General Counsel J. Albert Woll and Attorney Janet Kohn wrote, is its method of determining the income status of a household that had been eligible for food stamps before the start of a strike.

PREVIOUSLY, strikers had been treated like any other applicants for food stamps, with their eligibility determined by a combination of household income and assets.

Over the labor movement's objections, Congress included in the budget-cutting resolution it adopted last year a ban on food stamps to strikers, with only one exception. The working poor—those receiving or eligible for food stamp assistance before a strike—would not lose their food stamp entitlement because they went on strike. But the amount of food stamps they would receive would not be increased as a result of loss of wages resulting from a strike, Congress decreed.

The AFL-CIO and its affiliates are protesting an Agriculture Dept. interpretation of the law change that could reduce or eliminate a food stamp recipient's benefits during a strike—even if his total income was down.

THIS WOULD be done by counting strike benefits and any part-time employment a striker might find as additional income—on top of the wages that the worker would have received from his regular job if he weren't on strike.

The AFL-CIO attorneys challenged the reasoning as irrational and "contrary to fact."

The intent of Congress was to prevent an increase in food stamp assistance because of a strike, and "not to reduce the allotment by making up a fictitious increase in income," they protested. A Senate committee report makes the intent clear, they asserted.

Woll and Kohn also associated the AFL-CIO with the detailed statement of objections to other portions of the regulations submitted by the Food & Commercial Workers.

UFCW VICE PRESIDENT Arnold Mayer, who submitted the union's statement, urged that the regulations be revised "to require the counting of either wages from the struck job or strike benefits plus temporary wages, whichever is higher. This would be consistent with the law and achieve the results that Congress intended," he wrote.

The UFCW also urged clarification of the definition of strikers affected by the change in law and said a striker who finds another full-time job should be eligible for assistance if he otherwise meets the need test of income and assets.

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

1/16/82

Nation's Output Down Sharply in 4th Quarter

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII Saturday, January 23, 1982 No. 3

The nation's economy, mired in the depths of its second recession in two years, declined at an annual rate of 5.2 percent in the final three months of 1981, the Commerce Dept. reported.

Gross national product—the total value of all goods and services—rose slightly over the quarter to a seasonally adjusted annual level of $2.985 trillion in current dollars. Converting that figure to 1972 dollars to eliminate the effects of inflation, the government said "real" GNP totaled $1.496 trillion.

IT WAS the economy's worst showing since a 9.9 percent plunge at the deepest point of the 1980 recession, and confirmed the belief that the current downturn accelerated rapidly during the October-December quarter.

For all of 1981, inflation-adjusted GNP rose 1.9 percent, mostly due to an unusually sharp first-quarter gain at an annualized rate of 8.6 percent. The economy declined by two-tenths of 1 percent in 1980 and rose 3.2 percent in 1979.

Inflation throughout the economy, as measured by the GNP's "implicit price deflator," was 9.1 percent through all of last year, nearly the same as 1980's 9 percent rate. For the fourth quarter alone, however, prices showed some improvement, rising at an annual rate of 8.4 percent, compared with the third quarter's 9.9 percent rate.

The Commerce Dept. said decreases in final sales accounted for about two-thirds of the overall economic decline in fourth-quarter real growth. Analysts inside and outside the government predict that the current January-March quarter also will show a real GNP decline.

Meanwhile, signs of economic deterioration showed up in other government reports. The Federal Reserve Board said industrial production fell by 2.1 percent in December, the fifth straight monthly decline and the biggest since May 1980.

HOUSING STARTS last year plunged to a 35-year low despite a 13.3 percent rise in December. And personal income grew by only two-tenths of 1 percent last month, the smallest monthly gain since April 1980.

The recession also pulled the nation's

(Continued on Page 2)

Labor Presses Support for Poles

LABOR AND CITIZEN groups mass in the rotunda of the Minnesota state capitol at St. Paul for a full-employment rally sponsored by the State AFL-CIO. The 2,500 demonstrators, arriving by the busload, brought along 42,000 petition cards calling on the legislature and Minnesota's congressional delegation to initiate action to counter Reagan Administration economic policies and press for job-creating programs. Addressing the demonstrators is President David K. Roe of the Minnesota AFL-CIO.

Kirkland Calls on Unions To Join Jan. 30 Rallies

By James M. Shevis

The American labor movement threw its full weight behind the planned International Day of Solidarity with the workers of Poland and their independent unions, and called for a massive outpouring of support in their behalf.

"Jan. 30 offers an opportunity for us to join with other free trade union movements around the world in an unprecedented display of international labor support for our embattled Polish brothers and sisters," AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland said in a letter to all affiliated unions and state and city central labor bodies.

KIRKLAND'S CALL is part of a worldwide appeal of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions for workers everywhere to focus attention on martial law in Poland, imposed Dec. 13 by the military junta headed by Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski.

The Brussels-based ICFTU called on its 130 affiliates to keep the glare of publicity on the suppression of Polish workers' rights until the Communists live up to the historic Gdansk agreement forged with Solidarity in August 1980 following a wave of strikes in Poland. The accord gave Polish workers the right to form independent unions, to strike, and to enjoy a measure of freedom never before allowed in a Communist-ruled country.

"As a member of the ICFTU, the AFL-CIO has pledged to participate in this effort and to undertake throughout the nation a series of activities to manifest our moral support for Solidarnosc (Solidarity) and the courageous struggle of the Polish people," Kirkland said.

AFL-CIO RALLIES and events are targeted in over a dozen big U.S. cities—Chicago, Boston, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Buffalo, Washington, Minneapolis, Houston, New York, Milwaukee, New Britain, Conn., and two as yet undetermined on the West Coast—but are being encouraged in every community. The events are being planned by organized labor in cooperation with the Polish-American Congress (PAC), and various religious, civic, and ethnic groups.

The largest rally will be held in Chicago, the home of more ethnic Poles than any city outside Poland's capital of Warsaw. Scheduled speakers at the Amphitheater include Kirkland, Longshoremen's President Thomas W. Gleason, PAC President Aloysius A. Mazewski, and Msgr. George G. Higgins of Catholic University, who attended Solidarity's national congress last year.

THE RALLIES represent a continuation of those staged in December by American trade unionists immediately after the Polish government's harsh crackdown on Solidarity. The AFL-CIO has led the demand for release of Lech Walesa and other Solidarity leaders detained by the Communists and for resumption of government talks with Solidarity and the Roman Catholic Church, as well as an end to military rule.

The rally points also will serve to raise additional funds for the Polish workers and their unions, and to circulate petitions to the Polish government demanding the lifting of martial law. Petitions circulated by the AFL-CIO already have garnered the signatures of some 70,000 Americans.

Plans for the Jan. 30 events were drawn up at a meeting of AFL-CIO officials and leaders of national religious and Polish-American groups at federation headquarters in Washington. Participants included Tom Kahn, coordinator of the AFL-CIO Polish Workers' Aid Fund and an assistant to Kirkland; Mazewski; Msgr. Higgins; Dr.

(Continued on Page 3)

OSHA Scored on Plan For Voluntary System

By John R. Oravec

The Reagan Administration's proposal to set up a system of voluntary job safety and health programs threatens to further erode worker protections provided under federal law, the AFL-CIO warned in a sharp attack on the plan.

These and similar programs proposed by the Occupational Safety & Health Administration during the past year have "the common objective of keeping OSHA inspectors out of workplaces and curbing worker complaints," AFL-CIO Occupational Safety Director George H. R. Taylor charged.

TAYLOR DISPUTED OSHA Administrator Thorne G. Auchter's contention that the voluntary programs would improve protections against workplace hazards.

In announcing the proposal, Auchter maintained that workers would play a more active role in developing and implementing safety practices, while "employers would be better able to abate hazards more quickly and without undue government interference."

As outlined in the Federal Register, Auchter's plan calls for:

- Large industrial firms to set up management-worker committees which would establish safety and health rules leading to voluntary compliance.
- Periodic inspections of larger firms with "good safety records" would be eliminated.
- Most inspections would also be ended for smaller companies in low-hazard industries that have established voluntary programs.

TAYLOR POINTED out that the same proposals were a key component of the employer-backed OSHA reform bill sponsored by former Sen. Richard S. Schweiker that was killed in committee in 1980.

In effect, Taylor said, Auchter is now attempting to impose through administrative action OSHA amendments that supporters of the reform bill could not achieve in Congress.

(Continued on Page 6)

State Legislation Mixed for Labor

By David L. Perlman

Labor legislation wasn't high on the agenda of most state legislatures last year, and that may have been all to the good in terms of union concerns. The 1980 elections had tilted legislatures as well as Congress to the right even though Democrats retained party control in a majority of states.

A Labor Dept. survey of state labor legislation enacted in 1981, supplemented by trade union sources tapped by the AFL-CIO News, found both gains and retreats.

BILLS TO REPEAL prevailing wage laws—the "little Davis-Bacon Acts" that determine wage levels in state-funded construction—were introduced in 14 states.

The repeal effort succeeded in Utah, where a heavily Republican legislature was able to override the veto by a Democratic governor. The Republican strength gained in the last elections made the difference between the situation two years earlier when a similar veto was not overturned.

IN COLORADO and New Mexico, bills repealing prevailing wage protections passed the legislature but were killed by vetoes. On the other side of the coin, Rhode Island tightened its enforcement procedures by barring violators of the prevailing wage law from bidding on public contracts for 18 months. New York authorized penalties for wage law violators, in addition to back pay obligations.

The minimum wage was raised in five states through new legislation and moved up automatically in 21 other jurisdictions as a result of previously enacted laws. But most state minimum wage laws continue to trail the $3.35 federal minimum, some significantly.

Among the few exceptions are Alaska, where a previously enacted law pegs the state minimum 50 cents above the federal wage floor, and the District of Columbia, where minimums are set by wage orders based on occupation. Connecticut's minimum is two cents above the federal level.

CHANGES IN STATE unemployment insurance and workers' compensation laws are still being compiled and will be reported later.

Every legislature except Kentucky met during 1981, and most will be in regular session this year as well, so the legislative scorecard is only half complete.

(Continued on Page 2)

LABOR JOINS TRIBUTE to Martin Luther King, Jr., with delegations from area unions among thousands who marched Jan. 15 in a Washington, D.C., parade honoring the memory of the slain civil rights leader on what would have been his 55th birthday. The AFL-CIO convention in November endorsed federal legislation to set aside the day as a national holiday. It is now officially observed in nine states and the District of Columbia.

State Legislative Record Reflects Conservative Gains in '80 Elections

(Continued from Page 1)

These are among the legislative actions taken during the 1981 sessions dealing with direct labor issues:

Arkansas—Minimum wage for workers not protected by federal law raised from $2.70 to $2.80 an hour as of Jan. 1, 1982, and to $2.95 a year later. Tips can be credited for up to 50 percent of the minimum wage; previously the limit was $1 an hour.

California—Local public agencies were authorized to negotiate agency shop agreements. State public works contracts may not be awarded to a contractor who has been held in contempt of court more than once in the previous two years for failure to comply with a federal court order enforcing a National Labor Relations Board ruling. Law enforcement officers were banned from moonlighting as private security guards at the site of a strike, picketing or other labor dispute in the jurisdiction where they are employed.

The legislature adopted a "comparable worth" policy for setting salaries for state jobs held primarily by women. Ceiling on pay to prison inmates for productive work was raised from 35 cents an hour to one-half the minimum wage. Employers must now give written assurance to employees or job applicants asked to take polygraph tests that they need not do so in order to get or keep a job.

Colorado—Republican legislature voted to repeal the state prevailing wage law, but veto by Democratic Gov. Richard Lamm saved it.

Connecticut—The existing ban on sex discrimination in employment was strengthened to cover discrimination related to pregnancy. Legislation also toughened enforcement of a law requiring that workers be informed of any cancer-causing substances in the workplace. A labor-management-government committee was established to consider plant-closing problems and recommend legislation to deal with them. Parties to a labor dispute were barred from hiring local police officers for duties related to the dispute.

Hawaii—The state's fair employment practices law was extended to cover public employees and to include a ban on discrimination related to pregnancy. Hawaii's agency shop requirement for public employee bargaining units was amended to include a requirement for checkoff of amount equal to dues from the pay of non-members, provided the union involved allows a refund to non-members on request of any portion of the payment used for political or ideological activities not related to conditions of employment.

Louisiana—An employer who retaliates against a worker who reports or complains of environmental hazards can be sued for triple damages plus attorney fees and court costs.

Maine — Collective bargaining rights, previously accorded to most public employees, were extended to county employees. Penalties were imposed for failure to inform workers about chemical hazards they may encounter. Employers were barred from deducting losses on bad checks or cash or inventory shortages from pay of workers. Employers of 100 or more workers must notify employees and city officials at least 60 days before relocating an establishment out of state.

Michigan—The right to obtain public or private employment without discrimination because of handicap is declared a civil right under state law.

Minnesota—The state law requiring open meetings of public bodies was amended to allow closed sessions to set strategy for labor negotiations. But tape recordings of the sessions must be made available to the public after negotiations are completed and a contract signed.

Mississippi—The law restricting hours of work for women employees to 10 hours a day or 60 hours a week was repealed.

Missouri—The previous limit of 8 hours a day work in mines, smelters or chemical manufacturing was lifted if the employee consents.

Montana—The state minimum wage was increased from $2 to $2.50 an hour last July, and will rise to $2.75 on July 1, 1982. The minimum that can be paid to a farm worker in lieu of the hourly rate was raised from $460 to $575 a month and will go to $635 next July.

Nevada—The state prevailing wage law was amended to exclude construction contracts under $4,000 and emergency work needed to cope with disasters. Polygraph examiners were barred from inquiring into union, political or religious affiliations. The age discrimination ban, previously unlimited, is now restricted to ages 40 through 69.

New Jersey—The minimum wage was raised to match the federal level of $3.35 an hour.

New Mexico—A conservative coalition pushed repeal of the prevailing wage law through the legislature, but Gov. Bruce King (D) vetoed the action and it was not overridden.

North Carolina—The state minimum wage was raised from $2.90 to $3.10 as of Jan. 1, 1982, and to $3.35 on Jan. 1, 1983. The law was made applicable to employers of three or more workers, down from the previous four or more.

Collective bargaining for public workers had previously been prohibited by state law. The legislature added to the law a prohibition against public employee strikes, although the version finally enacted was less punitive than originally proposed. A voluntary dues checkoff was authorized—but only for membership in a state employee association located in North Carolina which has at least 5,000 members and does not engage in collective bargaining.

Ohio—The ban on sex discrimination was expanded to include pregnancy.

Oklahoma—The state Civil Rights Act was amended to include protection of handicapped workers and job applicants. Principals and assistant principals in school districts serving 15,000 or more pupils were recognized as a separate unit for collective bargaining. Municipal employees are now allowed to participate in political activities during off-duty hours if not in uniform and if not prohibited by the city charter or federal law.

Oregon—The state wage-hour commission may no longer set a subminimum wage for persons over 65, and the maximum age for protection against wage discrimination was raised from 65 to 70.

Rhode Island—Guaranteed call-in pay was reduced from four hours to three hours. Violators of the prevailing wage law will be barred from public works contracts for 18 months, and the discrimination ban was extended to mental as well as physical handicaps.

South Carolina—Payroll deductions in the public sector are allowed only for charities and credit unions; labor organizations are specifically banned.

Tennessee—A state employee who participates in or encourages a work stoppage will be permanently barred from participation in a dues checkoff. A state law prohibiting most work on Sunday was repealed.

Texas—The use of short-handled hoes was prohibited in commercial agriculture, except for greenhouses or nurseries.

Utah—For the second time in two years, the Republican-controlled legislature voted to repeal the state's prevailing wage law and Democratic Gov. Scott Matheson vetoed it. But this time the veto was overridden and the "little Davis-Bacon Act" was repealed last March.

West Virginia—The minimum wage was raised from $2.75 an hour to $3.05 as of Jan. 1, 1982. The Human Rights Act was amended to prohibit discrimination in employment, public accommodations and housing on the basis of handicap. Employers of 10 or more must post notices of hazardous chemical substances used in the workplace.

CLINTON FAIR MEMORIAL

The family of Clinton M. Fair, retired AFL-CIO legislative representative who died Jan. 6, has suggested that memorial tributes to him be made in the form of contributions to the St. Ignace, Mich., Historical Society. They may be sent directly to the organization at St. Ignace, Mich. 49781.

IUD Warns Of Danger to Industry Base

America's future as an industrial power is in danger, threatening both the economy and the nation's defense capability, the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. warned.

"Some industries that only a few years ago were world production leaders are now operating with skeleton workforces, and spending their limited resources on staving off bankruptcy," the IUD executive council observed in a resolution adopted at a one-day meeting in Washington.

"MANUFACTURING employment, once the mainstay of the American labor market, is likely to account for less than 20 percent of all employment in the 1980s," the resolution pointed out. "This is a revolutionary shift from the post-World War II era, when 40 percent of all private employment was in the manufacturing sector.

"If we continue on our present path, we are likely to become an economy that can supply nothing but services and agricultural products."

The IUD warned that without a significant industrial base, the United States will not be in a position to mobilize its resources in a national emergency.

TO BRING a halt to the attrition of American industry and to restore the competitiveness of the U.S. manfacturing sector, the department urged a multi-faceted program that would include tax policies to promote domestic industrial growth and discourage U.S. businesses from going abroad, implementation of monetary policies to provide a growth-oriented level of credit at reasonable rates and direct scarce credit resources to productive purposes, and greater utilization of worker skills and experience, within the framework of collective bargaining, to improve productivity.

In another resolution, the IUD called on Congress for legislation to safeguard the health of workers from toxic agents in the work environment. Such legislation should include notification, counsel, and medical assistance for those at high risk of environmental disease.

As many as 8 million workers may be at high risk of developing cancers from workplace health hazards, the IUD observed. These include pesticide, dye, shipyard, coke oven, rubber and plastic workers, painters, printers, molders, miners, and workers in dozens of other trades.

Two new members were elected to the IUD Executive Council at the meeting, Auto Workers President Douglas A. Fraser and Rubber Workers President Milan Stone.

Slump Worsens As Output Drops In 4th Quarter

(Continued from Page 1)

factories down to 72.9 percent of their capacity in December—below the rate of the 1980 recession and the worst since July 1975. The auto industry, which has been in a state of depression for some time, operated at below 50 percent of capacity, the Federal Reserve Board reported.

In other economic reports, the Japanese government said that it had achieved a record trade surplus with the United States last year of $13.4 billion, nearly twice as high as in 1980. The trade imbalance resulted from brisk exports of Japanese automobiles, tape recorders, and other goods while Japan kept down imports.

The December report on industrial output of the nation's factories, mines, and utilities was further evidence that the recession, which began in midsummer, has not yet bottomed out.

The report showed that output of raw materials fell more than twice as much as output of final products for the third consecutive month. The only advance was in defense and space-related goods.

Posthumous Award

JLC Cites Wurf's Role In Human Rights Effort

New York—Jerry Wurf "was always on the cutting edge of democratic social change," AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland declared at a banquet honoring Wurf with the Labor Human Rights award of the Jewish Labor Committee's National Trade Union Council.

The award dinner planned before Wurf's death on Dec. 10, became a memorial tribute to the late president of the State, County & Municipal Employees.

PRESENTING THE annual award to Wurf's widow, Mildred, Kirkland cited Wurf's lifetime of "active concern for the victims of repression and hate." He recalled that this concern drove Wurf into AFSCME's "historic struggle on behalf of Memphis sanitation workers seeking dignity in the refuge of trade unionism" and into "one organizing campaign after another producing an explosive growth in public sector trade unionism" as well as into support for Israel and the solidarity trade union movement in Poland.

"Passionate advocacy was his hallmark. Jerry Wurf was a fighter, and you always knew where he stood," Kirkland told the gathering of 800 national and local union leaders and AFSCME members. Past recipients of the award have included Kirkland, George Meany, I. W. Abel and Albert Shanker.

Gerald McEntee, who succeeded Wurf as AFSCME president, pledged "no retreat" from the course on which Wurf had set the million-member union.

"JERRY WURF was among the most fortunate of human beings," said McEntee." In 41 years of serving and shaping this nation's labor movement, he never lost that fire in his heart. He never had to search for indignation against injustice; it walked with him as an old companion."

JLC President Don Slaiman, deputy director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization & Field Services, called Wurf an "irascible organizer" who believed strongly in the "democratic values so important to the Jewish community and the trade union movement."

SLAIMAN introduced the evening's "surprise guest," the former Polish Ambassador to Japan, Zdzislaw Rurarz, who spoke to the audience in a videotaped message.

Rurarz, who had defected to the United States only two weeks earlier, charged that the military takeover of Poland had actually been planned months in advance to hit during the cold weather and peaceful spirit of the holiday season.

The Solidarity movement, he said, was "a genuine workers' movement that hoped one day to win democracy and freedom" in Poland.

KIRKLAND RESPONDED by describing Ambassador Rurarz as "a man of conscience, whose bravery and loyalty to the workers of his country spring from the same values that shaped the early leaders of the Jewish Labor Committee."

Kirkland said the military junta ruling Poland is "stirring up the cesspool of anti-Semitism. It is to Solidarity's everlasting credit that it clearly understood the purpose of this odious game just as American unions, and certainly Jerry Wurf, understood the use of racism by reactionary employers to divide workers.

"The AFL-CIO wants for Polish workers all the rights enjoyed by American workers. We have therefore urged upon the Reagan Administration the imposition of strong economic and political sanctions against the Soviet Union. We welcome the actions announced by the President as a first step."

HUMAN RIGHTS AWARD of the Jewish Labor Committee was presented posthumously to Jerry Wurf, the late president of the State, County & Municipal Employees. Accepting the award in New York is his widow, Mildred. Others, from left are JLC President Don Slaiman, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue, AFSCME President Gerald W. McEntee and Wilbur Daniels, chairman of the JLC National Trade Union Council.

Jan. 30 Rallies To Show Support For Polish Union

(Continued from Page 1)

David Preus of The American Lutheran Church; Rabbi Alex Schindler of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations; Ronald Kreitemeyer, director of the Office of Domestic Social Development of the U.S. Catholic Conference; Director Alan Kistler and Deputy Director Donald Slaiman of the federation's Dept. of Organization & Field Services.

A SEPARATE rally in support of the Polish workers involving U.S. trade unionists took place Jan. 21 at the Soviet consulate in San Francisco. Speakers included AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue, Executive Sec.-Treas. John F. Henning of the California State AFL-CIO, Andrew Guzoarski of the Polish-American Congress, and Sec.-Treas. John F. Crowley of the San Francisco Labor Council.

President Reagan has issued a proclamation designating Jan. 30 as "A Day of Solidarity with the People of Poland," and the U.S. International Communication Agency plans to beam a television special on the ICFTU-sponsored events around the world via satellite on Jan. 31.

In related developments, 11 international trade secretariats linking free unions around the world—including many AFL-CIO affiliates—issued a statement condemning the summary trials and imprisonment of Polish trade unionists for exercising their basic rights under the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, various conventions of the International Labor Organization, and the 1975 Helsinki Final Act.

"SOLIDARITY WAS born and exists primarily as a trade union even if it was obliged to carry other hopes and aspirations of the Polish people," the ITS representatives said following their general conference in Geneva, Jan. 12-13.

"Therefore, there rests a responsibility on the shoulders of trade unions throughout the world to continue to support the struggle of the Polish workers to regain their freedom and trade union organization.

"We shall do all in our power to help them regain their independence, for the sake of Poland's workers as part of our struggle for the emancipation of working people throughout the world."

Inter-American Director Andrew C. McLellan Dies

Alexandria, Va.—Andrew C. McLellan, for 20 years the AFL-CIO's principal representative with the unions of Latin America and the Caribbean, died Jan. 17 at his home here.

McLellan was 70 and died six days after he won a landmark Virginia court ruling on his right to die with dignity by being detached from life support systems for both breathing and kidney functions at Alexandria Hospital.

AFTER 25 YEARS of working for the rights of Hispanic Americans in Texas, McLellan came to the AFL-CIO in 1960 as associate inter-American affairs director and became director in 1962. He served as a member of the executive board of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), headquartered in Mexico City and on the Trade Union Technical Advisory Committee of the Organization of American States. He authored numerous articles and pamphlets on labor questions throughout the hemisphere.

"To generations of workers struggling to organize and to overcome political and economic oppression, he was a messenger of hope and freedom, a trusted symbol of all that is best in the country and the labor movement that he loved," AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland and Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue said in a message to his wife, Gloria.

Born in Fife, Scotland, in 1911, McLellan went to Canada in 1926 and to Texas in 1934. He was active in Local 229 of the Meat Cutters & Butcher Workmen, now part of the Food & Commercial Workers, and retained that membership to his death.

McLELLAN BECAME legislative director of the Texas AFL after World War II army service in the Pacific theater. As an expert on the conditions of Chicanos in the South of Texas, he spent two years, 1949 to 1951, traveling to remote corners of Mexico for an international commission on hoof and mouth disease. From 1954 to 1960 he was inter-American representative of the International Union of Food, Drink & Allied Workers, a trade secretariat with headquarters in Geneva.

He came to Washington in 1960 as assistant to Serafino Romualdi, whom he succeeded as the AFL-CIO's inter-American representative in 1962.

A memorial service will be held at 1 p.m., Jan. 24, at the Grace Episcopal Church in Alexandria.

In addition to his wife, McLellan is survived by two sons, William and Andrew. The family asks that memorial tributes be in the form of contributions to the Hospice of Northern Virginia, 4715 N. 15th St., Arlington, Va. 22205.

March of Dimes Panel Includes 14 Unionists

White Plains, N.Y.—Fourteen officers of AFL-CIO organizations have been named to the national labor advisory council to the March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation.

March of Dimes President Charles L. Massey in announcing formation of the council said it will meet regularly with the foundation's national officers "to help encourage, promote, carry out and to assist with their expertise and advice the projects of the March of Dimes."

The members of the advisory council include AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue; Sol C. Chaikin, president, Ladies' Garment Workers; John A. Gannon, president, Fire Fighters; John Kelly, president, Office & Professional Employees; William Lucy, secretary-treasurer, State, County & Municipal Employees; Charles H. Pillard, president, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Vincent R. Sombrotto, president, Letter Carriers; John J. Sweeney, president, Service Employees; Martin J. Ward, president, Plumbers & Pipe Fitters; William W. Winpinsinger, president, Machinists.

Also, John F. Henning, executive secretary-treasurer, California AFL-CIO; Harry Hubbard, president, Texas AFL-CIO; Robert A. Georgine, president, AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.; and Joyce D. Miller, president, Coalition of Labor Union Women.

Rosy Statistics Color Reagan's Assessment Of First Year

President Reagan might have been better briefed by his aides before boasting of how employment has increased in his first year of office. His figures were way off, and the correct statistics are nothing to boast about.

Reagan told reporters at his Jan. 19 news conference that there are now a million more people working than there were just before he took office.

A look at the monthly reports issued by the Bureau of Labor Statistics would have showed him that in December 1981 there were 97,188,000 Americans with jobs compared with 97,282,000 a year earlier—a net decline of 94,000 jobs.

In January 1981, employment had risen to 97,696,000. It continued upward to 99,235,000 in May 1981, but declined steadily through the year as the recession took hold.

Reagan also said the rise in unemployment the past year was a continuation of a trend that began before he took office. But the record shows he was wrong on that point, too.

Unemployment was 7.6 percent in July 1980 and by January 1981, when Reagan took office, it had declined to 7.4 percent. The jobless rate continued to decline until July, when it reached 7 percent, and then began to rise until it hit 8.9 percent in December, just shy of the post-World War record. The rate may well exceed 9 percent this month.

The day after his press conference, Reagan publicly corrected himself saying the figures he used on the number of people working were wrong. But he stuck to the basic assumption that more people have jobs now than when he took office.

Are You Better Off?

THE QUESTION that President Reagan kept asking the voters during his campaign for the presidency—"Are you better off than you were four years ago?"—has come back to haunt him.

A year after his inauguration, the inevitable question is whether we are better off than we were before the Reagan Administration.

At the Jan. 19 White House news conference, it was the Reagan record that was being scrutinized. The President had an opportunity to defend it, and he flubbed badly.

He was asked about the steep rise in unemployment over the past year, about the 9 million of his fellow Americans who were looking for work and not finding it.

HE WAS REMINDED that even formerly staunch supporters in Congress were complaining publicly of Administration tax proposals that "hurt the little guy and give a bonanza to big corporations."

And the President was asked directly: "What are you going to do about the people who are undergoing great hardships now? And how is it possible for you to propose deep cuts in the social programs in view of all this suffering?"

Almost every sentence Mr. Reagan spoke in reply had to be corrected or somehow explained away.

The rise in the unemployment rate did not date from the Carter Administration. It was on a down curve when President Reagan took office; it rose under his stewardship from 7.4 percent to 8.9 percent. There are 1.7 million more persons out of work than a year ago. No matter how you juggle statistics, fewer people are employed today—not more, as the President claimed.

Mortgage interest rates have gone up, not down, under the Reagan presidency. The inflation rate has indeed slowed. But wages have slowed even more, and the buying power of the averag worker's paycheck is down 3 percent from a year earlier. It's down to zero, of course, for those without jobs.

MR. REAGAN would have us believe that the only casualties of the changes in social programs were those who were "unfairly" getting benefits.

To give it the most charitable interpretation, the President is grievously misinformed.

His Administration has wiped out 250,000 public service jobs and drastically slashed the job training programs designed to help America's most disadvantaged.

Virtually nothing has been left of the trade adjustment assistance that was supposed to help workers whose jobs were wiped out by imports. The jobs are still being wiped out. So are the savings, homes and hopes of the workers.

With unemployment near a postwar high, the Reagan Administration has taken away extended unemployment benefits and denied funds for public works programs that helped pull the nation out of earlier and less serious recessions.

EVEN THE resources of state employment offices have been chopped back, forcing the closing of some 2,000 job-finding centers across the country at a time when the need is greatest.

Are Americans better off after a year of the Reagan presidency?

No, Mr. President. No way.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
LANE KIRKLAND, President
THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
Jerry Wurf*	S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward
Murray H. Finley	Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts
Sol C. Chaikin	Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco
Charles H. Pillard	J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride
David J. Fitzmaurice	Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps
Wm. W. Winpisinger	William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell
John DeConcini	Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss
William Konyha	Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney
Douglas A. Fraser	Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield
Barbara Hutchinson	Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto

*Deceased

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman, James M. Shevis

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W. Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, January 23, 1982 No. 3

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

International Labor Press AFL-CIO CLC Affiliation

'How's About the Hair of the Dog?'

Credit Crunch for Steel

U.S. Banks Play Critical Role In Shifting Production Overseas

By Gus Tyler

AMERICAN BANKS, like American industrial corporations, are no longer American in an economy that has become more and more global. Consider this case for a provoking example of what this means for the United States:

An American steel company comes to an American bank for a loan. The reason? The steel producer wants to modernize its plant to make it more competitive against a Japanese rival. The bank refuses the loan.

ABOUT THE SAME time, a Japanese steel producer comes to the same bank to request a loan. The reason? The Japanese producer wishes to expand its facilities to grab a bigger piece of the American market. The bank grants the loan.

Why does the bank act this way? Not because it is anti-American or pro-Japanese. The bank has only one motive: to get the biggest and fastest return on its money. The American steel company has been in decline; the Japanese has been on the incline. The smart money goes for the more highly touted horse from the Orient.

The above case is neither imaginary nor isolated. In a study prepared for the Joint Economic Committee of Congress, Robert B. Cohen, a professor with the Division of Urban Planning at Columbia University, noted: "Several of the largest U.S. banks played a key role in lending to Japanese steel companies (in the 1970s), increasing their outstanding loans more than threefold over a two-year period."

COMPARING THESE loans to the Japanese steel producers with those to American companies, Cohen continues: "The pattern described above appears to indicate that there may have been a curtailing of access to credit by certain large U.S. steel companies during the 1970s based on their credit-worthiness and much easier access to credit by their Japanese counterparts."

If the U.S. company wants easier access to credit from the banks, it can satisfy its needs by a simple ploy: move its operations overseas.

"It is usually far easier," testified Cohen, "to obtain funds for new projects outside the United States than for those within the United States. . . . This has led U.S. companies to establish a large number of operations overseas."

Steel is only one example, but it is well chosen. Steel is more than just another commodity like Wheaties, lipstick or even computer games; steel is central to the economic and political strength of an industrial society.

Indeed, one of the arguments for the recent tax cut to enrich the richest was to get the needed capital to carry through a revitalization of steel and similarly situated industries in the United States.

But where is the money going? Overseas.

"WHAT NEEDS to be examined," says Cohen, "is the role and responsibility of financial institutions in the U.S. economy. These institutions have traditionally operated as though the profit motive is central. Perhaps in the age of a more advanced industrial society subject to serious potential economic dislocations, greater attention must be paid to developing policies that require financial institutions to have a greater sensitivity to the problems of the nation."

Basic Human Rights At Stake in Poland

One month has passed since the military crackdown in Poland. Basic human and trade union rights remain suspended. Thousands of people, including national and regional leaders of Solidarity, remain in detention. . . .

As representatives of 65 million workers throughout the world, we unreservedly condemn the coup. We shall help Solidarity materially and financially. We shall campaign amongst our member organizations to ensure that support at the workplace and national level for Polish workers is developed and sustained, and that the right of Polish workers to have their independent trade union is one that remains a top priority for the international free trade union movement.

—Statement following the General Conference of International Trade Secretariats in Geneva, Switzerland, Jan. 12-13, 1982.

A Factory Worker's Perspective

The Cruelties of Reaganomics

By Vicki Williams

I CONSIDER MYSELF the classic "poor overburdened taxpayer" that you hear so much about these days. I work for an electronics company and make $6.58 an hour which translates into $204 per week after deductions, $30.21 of which are federal withholding taxes.

I have a husband, laid off, whose unemployment compensation has run out, and a 13-year-old son who thinks he should have a leather coat, a P.K. Ripper motocross bike, a Pioneer stereo and an Asteroids game. It bothers me a lot that I can't afford to buy him any of these things. It also bothers me that I'm not sure how we're going to fill up the fuel tank often enough to stay warm this winter.

There is something else that bothers me, though not to the same extent as my son's unfulfilled desires or the ever-hungry fuel tank, and that is that every single politician and editorialist is positive he knows exactly what I think.

EVERYONE SEEMS to be wildly anxious to be my spokesman. Yet these people don't know a damn thing about how the "poor overburdened taxpayer" thinks or lives. I imagine it's been quite some time since most politicians or well-known journalists lived on $204 per week, though I've read plenty of complaints from congressmen about their meager salaries.

One even said he had to sleep in his office because he couldn't afford to buy a house. Do you know how much pity I can spare for a senator who can't live on $60,000 a year?

I know I'm not as articulate as the people who write the editorials for newspapers and the speeches for politicians, but just once I'd like to have on the record the thoughts of an average taxpayer. I'm tired of these people putting their words in my mouth and their thoughts in my head.

One of the statements I read and hear most often is how fed up I'm supposed to be with the amount of my taxes that goes toward welfare, food stamps, programs for the elderly, subsidized school lunches and other supportive social services. Wrong!

WHAT THE PEOPLE "up there" don't understand is that I identify with the beneficiaries of these programs much more than I do with the politicians and the media people. "There, but for the grace of God, go I." So far I have never had to rely on welfare, free lunches or Medicaid, but I very well might someday.

When I was divorced, I could have qualified for welfare. Fortunately, I had parents who were in a position to help, but if I hadn't, you can believe I would have swallowed my pride rather than watch my son go hungry.

People like me, who live only a hairbreadth from economic disaster, are glad those programs are out there, though we pray we'll never have to use them. We feel sympathy for the ones who do.

IN 1977 MY sister-in-law was abandoned by her husband. Her health did not permit her to work full time, so she drew $194 per month from the welfare department to support herself and her child. I doubt that anyone can think she lived extravagantly on $194 per month.

I think it's possible that at least one of the very same politicians who are now complaining about welfare recipients might have taken a political junket during one of the months that my sister-in-law and her son lived on $194. Believe me, I resent that junket at my expense much, much more than I resent helping an AFDC mother, or buying eyeglasses for an elderly person or free lunches for a ghetto child.

To me, Reaganomics is cruel and self-serving. Reagan seems to be telling us that the United States is a sinking ship and that if we harden our hearts and throw a few people overboard, we can lighten the load. Then, possibly, the Ship of State can sail back to shore. I don't see my country quite that way. The philosophy behind the original structure of the United States is that we are a people who sink or swim together. We don't make human sacrifices.

IF THERE IS EVEN one child in this country who is hungry or one old person who needs medical care, then I want my $1,570.92 in taxes to go toward helping that child or that old person.

I know about the cheaters. There are always cheaters.

If we have to give a free lunch to one child whose parents could afford to pay in order to give free lunches to nine children who genuinely deserve them, so be it.

THE MUCH-TOUTED tax cut doesn't make sense to me. Perhaps there's a complicated economic formula that explains the logic of a tax cut at the same time we're slashing federal programs because of lack of funds, but if so, I missed it. I pay $30.21 per week to the federal government.

As I understand it, when all the tax cuts are in effect, I will only pay $22.66, giving me $7.55 extra to save or spend. Well, I could do a few things with $7.55 a week but, had I been consulted, I would have just as soon paid it and kept the food-stamp program or veterans' benefits intact. I suspect that the government will give it to me with one hand and take it away with the other.

You see, I really believe that most politicians and media people think that those of us out here in America who work in the factories and offices are ignorant. I believe that they think we will never catch on to their sleights of hand. I believe that they think they can tell us the grass is black one day and white the next and we'll never trust ourselves enough to look down and say, "Why, that grass isn't black or white—it's green!"

WE DON'T REALLY believe that 56 oil companies recorded 98 percent of the increase in all corporate profits from 1978 through 1980 for our benefit. We don't believe the tobacco subsidy is for our benefit. We don't believe that congressmen who were violently anti-AWACS magically changed their minds for our benefit.

We know it's always us who pay the bills.

I wish a politician would come along who'd tell me that the grass is green.

The author is a member of Machinists Local 2574 and was employed at the Square D factory in Huntington, Ind., when she wrote this article for the "My Turn" feature in the Jan. 18 issue of Newsweek. Since then, a new wave of layoffs has left Mrs. Williams unemployed.

Tax Giveaway Deepens Slump

EXCESSES and inequities of the Reagan tax program will drive the economy deeper into recession and could send unemployment as high as 10 percent, AFL-CIO Economist Arnold Cantor warned.

Noting that nearly two-thirds of the $750 billion cut over the next five years will go to only "a handful of wealthy Americans and businesses," Cantor said that little of that money will go to investments that will add jobs and stimulate the economy.

"We cannot get the economy going when we have a fantastic drain on the Treasury," Cantor declared. He said the unbalanced distribution of the tax cut is causing huge deficits and "sky-high interest rates." Cantor, who is the federation's assistant director of economic research, appeared on the network interview, Labor News Conference, aired weekly on the Mutual radio network.

Cantor renewed the call for a $700 cap on individual tax cuts in fiscal 1983, which would restore $9 billion to the Treasury. That would still give virtually every family with an income up to $40,000 the same tax cut already scheduled, but would "get rid of the excesses that are going to taxpayers with incomes of $200,000 to $500,000," he said.

Cantor noted that the "distributional inequities" of the Reagan tax program are so great that they have "created a new industry" built on buying and selling tax credits. "Companes have so much that they can write off" under the new law "that they can't use all of it," he observed. He cited the comment of a Republican conservative that such arrangements amount to "food stamps for the rich corporations."

By Press Associates, Inc.

WHILE EARLY RETIREMENT is a shining goal for many workers, a majority of Americans now want to work, at least part-time, after they reach 65—for several reasons:

- Medical progress is enabling workers to live longer, healthier lives. Older workers are stronger and more alert than they were when the drive for early retirement began 30 years ago.
- As the cost of living rises, retirement benefits become less adequate than ever, but there's more to the general desire to hold a job than the finances.

Those findings keynoted a recent, day-long seminar on the older worker at the George Meany Center for Labor Studies. Sponsored by the Institute on Aging of Drexel University, the seminar brought together gerontologists, sociologists and economists with union educators, researchers and retiree directors.

Participants reviewed the results of the drive for early retirement that began about 30 years ago when a baby boom, national prosperity and union negotiations combined to produce liberalized eligibility for retirement and increased benefits in both private pension plans and social security.

EARLY RETIREMENT at 55, 60 or 62 was popular. In 30 years, the proportion of men in the workforce aged 55 and over dropped from 70 percent to 46 percent. For those over 65, the decline has been even greater, from 48 percent to 19 percent.

But now conditions have changed:

- The birthrate is declining; the number of young people entering the workforce has dropped.
- Lack of adequate funding for social security has raised concern about the cost of pensions.
- Employers are thinking that the removal of experienced workers from the workforce may contribute to a decline in productivity.

Harold L. Sheppard of the National Council on Aging reported on a 1981 opinion poll on aging commissioned by the council. It showed that many older Americans want to remain active, primarily through paid jobs but also through unpaid volunteer work.

THAT POLL DISCLOSED that 67 percent of older workers (55-64) are not planning early retirement before 65. In 1974, in an earlier poll, 57 percent said they planned to work to their 65th birthday or later.

The new poll showed that only 15 percent of workers 65 and older are looking forward happily to retiring.

The survey by the National Council on Aging also disclosed that today, more than in 1974, younger workers support the preference by older persons to continue working.

In the survey, management—those with responsibility to hire and fire—also opposed forced retirement to make room for younger workers. In this employer group, 72 percent disapproved; only 26 percent supported mandatory retirement.

Participants in the George Meany Center seminar reviewed several recommendations to help older workers:

- Promoting age-neutral personnel policies with performance appraisals rather than age cut-offs.
- Extending worklife with job sharing, part-time work and other phased retirement, sabbaticals and redesigned jobs.
- Allowing retirees to return to work on temporary or part-time jobs.
- Making more pensions portable so the middle-aged can consider alternative careers.
- Training older workers to take new jobs.

The seminar ended with the conclusion that older workers represent a tremendous reservoir of talent at a time when the nation cannot afford to waste the skills, the abilities and the experience they offer.

EXCESSES AND INEQUITIES written into the Reagan tax program could push the unemployment rate to 10 percent as the economy sinks deeper into recession, AFL-CIO Economist Arnold Cantor, center, warned on Labor News Conference. Questioning him were Jerome Cahill, left, of the New York Daily News and Michael Posner of the Reuters news service. The public affairs interview is aired weekly on Mutual radio.

'Have I Got a Deal for You!'

Voluntary Job Safety Plan Hit as Threat to Protections

(Continued from Page 1)

Citing a number of pitfalls in the proposal, Taylor said "workers have nothing to gain and everything to lose through their participation in the joint management-worker committees."

HE EXPRESSED concern that by serving on the committees, workers may have to assume responsibility for safety and health programs and share in the legal liability.

Taylor cited the findings of an AFL-CIO analysis that the Administration has sharply rolled back workplace safety and health enforcement during the past year.

Comparing OSHA compliance activities in similar 10-month periods of 1980 and 1981, the federation's study shows that the total number of inspections dropped 21 percent, complaint inspections dropped 32 percent, follow-up inspections were down 72 percent, and construction site inspections fell 13 percent.

THE STUDY covers the periods of January-October 1980 and February-November 1981 and is based on data released by the federal job safety agency.

Taylor said OSHA's compliance activities have steadily deteriorated during the year. Comparing the agency's performance of October 1980 with that of October 1981, the analysis found declines of 45 percent in total inspections, 49 percent in complaint inspections, 40 percent in citations for "serious" violations, 94 percent in citations for "willful" violations, 60 percent in citations for "repeat" violations.

Meanwhile, the agency's complaint backlog was up 208 percent.

While acknowledging that OSHA has fewer inspectors and enforcement support personnel as a result of Reagan budget slashes, Taylor pointed out that the decline in citations and proposed penalties was far deeper than the proportionate reduction in staff and inspections.

HE NOTED that even though Auchter had issued a directive for the remaining enforcement staff to focus inspections on more hazardous workplaces where a greater number of violations could be detected, the safety agency's data for October and November 1981 suggest that this did not happen.

Instead, Taylor stressed, the analysis clearly shows that the federal job safety agency is retreating from the four years of gains made under former OSHA Administrator Eula Bingham.

"The declines in OSHA activity since February 1981 have been significant and constant," he charged. "Even more disturbing, each month's new data show a grimmer picture than the month before. And to date, there appears to be no let up in sight for these downward trend."

THE FEDERATION study shows that the amount of proposed penalties in a 10-month period of 1981 declined 44 percent from a comparable 10-month period of 1980.

And despite the supposed emphasis on more hazardous workplaces, OSHA inspectors spent 13.7 hours per inspection in 1981, compared with 15.9 hours in 1980 —a decline of 14 percent.

Oil Settlements Extend Pattern, Texaco Holds Out

Denver—The Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers have reached agreement on new two-year contracts covering a substantial majority of some 55,000 of their members employed by major U.S. oil companies.

The major exception is Texaco, which employs the largest contingent of OCAW members. Talks with the firm have bogged down over a pension dispute, and a unit of 4,600 workers at the company's Port Arthur, Tex., plant has been on strike since the old contract expired on Jan. 8. The union represents 7,600 employees at 10 Texaco refineries.

THOSE COMPANIES that have settled with the union have generally agreed to the terms of the pattern settlement negotiated a week ago with Gulf Oil Corp.

The contract provides for a 9 percent pay boost this year and 90 cents an hour more, or about 7 percent, in 1983.

Among other companies that have settled on new pacts are Cities Service, Amoco, Union Oil of California, Exxon, Mobil, Shell, and Marathon.

AT ISSUE in the Texaco standoff is the manner in which the company calculates lump-sum pension benefits. The union charges that Texaco violated the previous bargaining agreement by increasing the percentage by which benefits are discounted when taken in a lump sum. More than $50 million is involved in the dispute.

The union's interpretation of the contract was upheld by the U.S. District Court for East Texas and is being appealed by the company. OCAW said that it is considering filing unfair labor practice charges with the National Labor Relations Board over the firm's conduct in the current negotiations.

1982 Calendar

Conventions Scheduled By Federation Affiliates

Below is a list of conventions scheduled for 1982 by AFL-CIO national and international affiliates and state central bodies. Changes and additions will be reported.

DATE	ORGANIZATION	PLACE
Feb. 26-28	New Mexico	Albuquerque
Mar. 2-6	Longshoremen	Hollywood, Fla.
Mar. 15	Marine Engineers	To be announced
Mar. 15-17	Louisiana	Baton Rouge
Mar. 15-19	Woodworkers	Portland, Ore.
Mar. 21-26	Professional Athletes	Albuquerque, N.M.
Mar. 21-27	Food & Commercial Workers	Miami
Apr. 27-30	Pennsylvania	Pittsburgh
May 3-5	Mississippi	Jackson
May 13-15	North Dakota	Grand Forks
May 24-28	Distillery Workers	Washington
May 26-28	Arizona	Prescott
May 29-June 2	Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union	Washington
June 3-11	Upholsterers	Philadelphia
June 4-6	Furniture Workers	Nashville
June 6-9	New Jersey	Atlantic City
June 7-9	Idaho	Coeur d'Alene
June 15-17	Ohio	Cleveland
June 20-25	Leather Goods, Plastics & Novelty Workers	Washington
June 21-25	State, County & Municipal Employees	Atlantic City, N.J.
June 21-25	Newspaper Guild	Los Angeles
July 1-7	Teachers	New York
July 12-16	Communications Workers	Detroit
July 12-16	Maintenance of Way Employees	Vancouver, B.C.
July 14-16	Indiana	Indianapolis
July 15-21	Police Associations	Las Vegas, Nev.
July 19-22	Yardmasters	Denver
July 26	Theatrical Stage Employees	Winnipeg, Man.
July 28-Aug. 3	Bakery, Confectionery & Tobacco Workers	Hollywood, Fla.
Aug. (no date)	Nevada	Las Vegas
Aug. 2-6	Fire Fighters	Chicago
Aug. 2-6	Typographical Union	Seattle
Aug. 9-13	Professional & Technical Engineers	Seattle
Aug. 9-13	United Garment Workers	Atlantic City, N.J.
Aug. 10-12	School Administrators	Kiamesha Lake, N.Y.
Aug. 16-21	Letter Carriers	San Francisco
Aug. 18-20	Iowa	Waterloo
Aug. 19-21	Montana	Helena
Aug. 23	Asbestos Workers	Las Vegas, Nev.
Aug. 23-26	Marble Polishers	Las Vegas, Nev.
Aug. 23-27	Railroad Signalmen	San Francisco
Aug. 23-27	Postal Workers	Miami Beach, Fla.
Aug. 23-27	Government Employees	New York
Aug. 23-27	Washington	Spokane
Aug. 26-28	Virginia	Roanoke
Aug. 30-Sept. 2	New York	Kiamesha Lake
Aug. 30-Sept. 4	Sheet Metal Workers	New York
Sept. 13	International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers	Los Angeles
Sept. 13-16	Florida	Orlando
Sept. 20	Alaska	Ketchikan
Sept. 20-22	Minnesota	Duluth
Sept. 20-23	Illinois	Rosemont
Sept. 20-24	Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers	New York
Sept. 20-24	Steelworkers	Atlantic City, N.J.
Sept. 22-24	Connecticut	Hartford
Sept. 24-25	Wyoming	Cheyenne
Sept. 29-Oct. 1	Utah	Salt Lake City
Oct. 11-14	Wisconsin	La Crosse
Oct. 11-15	Broadcast Employees & Technicians	Toronto
Oct. 12-21	Marine & Shipbuilding Workers	Kissimmee, Fla.
Oct. 17-23	Chemical Workers	Las Vegas, Nev.
Oct. 18-22	Cement, Lime & Gypsum Workers	Minneapolis
Oct. 20-22	Georgia	Augusta
Nov. 15-18	Flight Engineers	New Orleans
Nov. 8-14	Air Line Pilots	Bal Harbour, Fla.

Wholesale Prices Up 7% for Year

Wholesale prices, as measured by the government's producer price index for finished goods, rose a modest three-tenths of 1 percent in December and were up 7 percent for all of 1981.

The increase over the year was the smallest since a 6.9-percent rise in 1977. The current recession, near-record unemployment, soaring interest rates, and the oil surplus all contributed to last year's lower wholesale prices. The producer price index for finished goods is a rough barometer of the inflation that consumers will face in the future.

The 7-percent rise in wholesale prices compared with an 11.8-percent jump in 1980. The Bureau of Labor Statistics, which reported the figures, said the slowdown in producer prices was broad-based.

Consumer food prices rose only 1.5 percent in 1981, compared with 7.5 percent the previous year. The rise in energy prices, 14.3 percent over the year, was far less than the 27.8-percent increase of 1980. And the prices of items other than food and energy were up 6.9 percent, compared to a 10.4-percent jump in 1980. The 1981 increase in prices for capital equipment slowed to 9.2 percent from an 11.4-percent rise in 1980.

The December rise of three-tenths of 1 percent in the producer price index for finished goods followed a rise of five-tenths of 1 percent in November and an increase of six-tenths of 1 percent in October.

Energy costs increased seven-tenths of 1 percent in December despite cheaper gasoline.

FDR Remembered as Workers' Ally

National Tribute to Mark 100th Anniversary of Birth

By Susan Dunlop

The 100th anniversary of the birth of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, on Jan. 30, will be celebrated by America's unions as a tribute to the New Deal President who so strongly supported the right of workers to organize.

National observances of the centenary include special exhibits and programs at Roosevelt's Hyde Park, N.Y., home, now a national park, and at Harvard University of which he was a graduate. There will be exhibits in schools across the country, at the Smithsonian Institution and other Washington museums.

CONGRESS WILL mark the event with a joint session Jan. 28, to be televised live over PBS. The ABC, CBS and NBC networks are scheduling documentaries on Roosevelt's life and era.

To former AFL-CIO President George Meany, Roosevelt was the chief executive who "made the greatest contributions to the solution of America's problems" in this century.

Meany pointed to the 32nd President's efforts to combat the Depression and to the New Deal program he put through. FDR supported the Wagner Labor Relations Act, the Fair Labor Standards Act, which established the minimum wage, and major social insurance legislation including unemployment compensation and the Social Security Act.

ROOSEVELT'S TIES with organized labor dated from his tenure as governor of New York, aided by Frances Perkins whom he appointed state labor commissioner and made Secretary of Labor when he became president.

In urging Perkins to accept the appointment to his Cabinet, Roosevelt stressed that the "Secretary of Labor should be the secretary for labor." Perkins was the first woman to hold a Cabinet office, and she was instrumental in bringing state and national labor officials into Roosevelt's staff of advisers.

Roosevelt's campaign for president in 1932 was linked to the desperate need for economic recovery from the Depression gripping the country, and he won worker support with a personal platform pledge that any recovery programs would include improvements in wages and working conditions and the protection of organizing and bargaining rights.

Full, secure employment and "a more equitable distribution of national income" were the keys to recovery, Roosevelt said, asserting that government action to achieve those goals was both right and necessary. In a speech, he urged Americans to "never forget that government is ourselves and not an alien power over us."

WITHIN DAYS of his inauguration in 1933, Roosevelt presented Congress with major programs to alleviate the economic and social ravages of the Depression, including the labor-supported Federal Emergency Relief Act meant to quickly make more food, shelter, clothing and medical care available as well as to begin restoring workers' buying power.

In his campaign, Roosevelt had said that the Depression exposed the fallacy of the theory that cut-throat competition among industries would help the economy, since that competition took the form of slashing wages, increasing hours and laying off workers, cutting buying power just when it was needed most.

His recovery program called for immediate raising of wages, reduction of hours and provisions for job security. Roosevelt was responsive to the assertions of AFL President William Green and other leaders that unions provided workers with the unified strength needed to bargain with employers as equals.

The National Industrial Recovery Act, passed in June 1933, was designed to set up codes for industries to end cut-throat competition at the expense of workers. Its landmark "Section 7(a)" guaranteed organizing and bargaining rights, outlawed company-controlled unions and required employer compliance with wage and hour standards.

Roosevelt resisted heavy pressure from business to weaken or eliminate the labor section. Through Frances Perkins, he assured labor it would have a voice in the National Recovery Administration.

The AFL acted quickly to urge unions to participate in the NRA, and the protections of Section 7(a), called labor's "Magna Charta" by Green, led to widespread organizing.

Employer resistance and open defiance mounted in spite of the efforts of the National Labor Board set up under the act and it was clear a stronger, more specific labor relations law, including a labor board with greater power, was needed.

That legislation was introduced by New York Sen. Robert Wagner in 1934, and the need for it was underscored when a 1935 Supreme Court decision nullified the part of the recovery act that contained Section 7(a).

At almost the same moment, Roosevelt, despite more intense pressure from business, agreed to join labor in urging Congress to pass the Wagner Act, which he signed July 5, 1935.

The law, the basis of today's National Labor Relations Act, also led to the creation of the National Labor Relations Board in its present format.

Roosevelt's recovery program stressed a long-term need for social insurance to underpin the economic system, and the Social Security Act was a direct result.

AT THE SAME time, Roosevelt endorsed unemployment compensation, workers' compensation, health insurance, assistance for the elderly, disabled and needy, and protections for dependent children. Frances Perkins told the Council on Economic Security appointed to plan strategy to achieve these goals that Roosevelt believed the most important kind of social insurance was employment.

Many of the "alphabet agencies" created under Roosevelt's New Deal programs were geared to creating jobs, including the Civilian Conservation Corps, the Works Progress Administration, the Public Works Administration and the Tennessee Valley Authority. Roosevelt was urged by union leaders, Perkins and others in his administration to guarantee that these programs would not undermine organizing efforts by unions or collective bargaining agreements.

ROOSEVELT'S continuing commitment to seek the advice and help of labor in national affairs was underscored during World War II when he insured labor representation in war production mobilization efforts, including the War Labor Board whose labor members included Meany.

Efforts by business to use war production mobilization as an excuse to freeze or end gains being made by labor in union security agreements were turned aside by Roosevelt who said in 1943, "I believe now as I have all my life in the right of workers to join unions and to protect their unions."

This concern for working people was cited by CIO President Philip Murray in a radio eulogy in 1945. In Roosevelt's 12 years as president, Murray said, "the common man . . . has made more progress in terms of economic and social welfare than in any comparable period of our recent history."

FULL COOPERATION of organized labor in efforts to win World War II was enlisted by President Roosevelt. Roosevelt insisted that labor be represented on the War Labor Board as equals with business to help maintain both production and labor standards and to settle disputes. Labor's drive to sell revenue-raising war bonds was symbolized in this poster presentation to Roosevelt at the White House by then AFL President William Green and Sec.-Treas. George Meany.

First-Day Cover Set For FDR Centennial

The Samuel Gompers Stamp Club is sponsoring a first-day cover to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the birth of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Jan. 30.

The filler card of the cachet traces Roosevelt's efforts to end the Depression, and includes the text of the statement he issued on his signing of the landmark Wagner Act of 1935, the basis of today's National Labor Relations Act.

The first-day cover is available from the Samuel Gompers Stamp Club, P.O. Box 1233, Springfield, Va. 22151 at 75 cents each or three for $2. Orders should include a self-addressed number 10 envelope.

'Worklife Plans' No Substitute for Bargaining

Amherst, Mass. — Labor-management cooperation to improve the quality of worklife can be mutually beneficial, but it should never be a substitute for collective bargaining, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue said here.

Donahue made clear his strong belief in the "conflict theory of labor relations," in which workers seek "a larger share of the wealth they produce" and "the boss doesn't want to give it to us."

THAT'S A CONFLICT that should be resolved through bargaining table confrontation, not worker-management cooperation, Donahue stressed as a participant in a program held at the Labor Relations Research Center of the University of Massachusttts.

But when a contract agreement is reached, he suggested, the adversary role should wherever possible "be replaced by a period of cooperation" since both workers and management share a stake in the success of the company.

Donahue noted wryly that management seems most interested in cooperative efforts to improve production through a better work atmosphere when its company or industry is in trouble. And he acknowledged that unions are often suspicious of management motives, sometimes with good reason.

"EXPERIENCE HAS taught us to look for pitfalls," he explained. Too many employers are interested only in "cosmetic changes" designed "to fool the worker into believing . . . that management really cares, despite the lousy pay and rotten conditions."

Labor-management cooperation works when it is the outgrowth of the collective bargaining process, Donahue stressed. He cited joint safety and apprenticeship committees as well as quality of worklife experiments as outgrowths of this process.

"Only the collective bargaining stature of their unions establishes workers as real partners in these labor-management committees," he insisted, and the weaker the union, the more risky its participation.

A JOINT EFFORT that does not seek to co-opt the union function can serve a useful purpose, Donahue said. Unions "have an interest in maintaining productive, competitive employers," and union members on the job welcome a work environment that enhances individual dignity and accomplishment.

He added:

"Any program which strengthens the union's ability to grapple with the new issues our members want addressed, any program which holds out real promise for the expansion of workplace democracy, ought to be grasped, minutely examined for flaws, reshaped as necessary, polished and put in place—and then watched very carefully."

Donahue cautioned against overselling the potential of quality of worklife committees to workers and noted differences in circumstances that make it difficult to adopt structures developed in other nations.

The most successful programs in Japan, he noted, have been in prosperous companies experiencing rapid growth. They have the resources to invest heavily in employee training and to wait for the investment to pay off.

BUT MANY American firms turning to quality of worklife programs have declining profits, outmoded equipment, and are looking for a "quick fix" rather than long-term improvement.

Despite the hazards, Donahue suggested, there are potentially "real benefits" for all parties involved. "American industry badly needs the surge of creative energy" that can be unleashed through genuine cooperation, he said.

But the needed cooperation, he cautioned, won't be achieved by employers who proclaim their desire for a "union-free environment" or by management consultants seeking to wean workers away from their unions.

Donahue Tells Consumer Federation

Economic Slump Signals Collapse of Reaganomics

Reaganomics may well be on the way out as signs of economic deterioration abound, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue told a meeting of the nation's consumer affairs leaders.

Until President Reagan took office, there was a rough consensus among Americans that the goals of federal government in the economic area were full employment, stable prices, steady growth, and a more equitable distribution of income, Donahue said.

"THESE ARE not the goals of Reaganomics. Not one of them has a place in the Reagan game plan," he declared at the 1982 Consumer Assembly sponsored by Consumer Federation of America.

"Instead of full employment, this country is rapidly approaching the highest level of unemployment since the Great Depression," Donahue pointed out. "Instead of price stability, the inflation rate continues to hover near 10 percent. . . . Instead of economic growth, the economy is declining more steeply."

Donahue noted that auto sales are at their lowest level in 22 years, with some 300,000 workers laid off; the homebuilding industry produced fewer houses last year than in any year since 1946, and in the first 10 months of 1981 nearly 15,000 businesses went bankrupt.

"THOSE ARE the normal, natural, predictable effects of Reaganomics, which takes its cue from 18th and 19th Century theoretical models that have nothing to do with today's economic structures," he said.

In addition to wrecking the economy, Donahue charged that the Reagan Administration is "proceeding under full steam with the social revolution that is part and parcel of their economic program even though they know that the destruction of federal entitlement programs, such as unemployment insurance, Medicaid and food stamps, which have served as automatic stabilizers that cushioned the worst effects of previous recessions, will make the present one much, much worse.

"This is not and never was a search for a single rational economic policy," he said. "It was and is the acceptance of a melange of discredited economic ideas slapped together to appear to support a political philosophy."

WHAT AMERICA needs today is a "rational anti-recession program," said Donahue. People-oriented programs already on the books must be given sufficient funding to provide jobs quickly and help lift the economy, he said. Also, there has to be action to revive the emergency local public works program, to provide new low and middle-income housing, to reactivate public service job programs, and to restore nationwide extended unemployment compensation for the long-term unemployed, Donahue said.

To finance these programs, there has to be a change in the tax structure that has been crippled by irresponsible giveaways to the rich, he added. The AFL-CIO is urging Congress to limit the individual income tax cuts for 1982 to $700 per taxpayer, which is about the amount scheduled for those with incomes of $40,000.

THE FEDERATION is also urging a cutback of the 10-percent investment tax credit to its original 7-percent level, in order to stop subsidizing the same firms and investments as the huge new depreciation system subsidizes. And the AFL-CIO has called for withdrawal of the oil windfall profits tax proceeds that were given away to wealthy oil royalty owners.

Besides these emergency actions, the AFL-CIO is urging an extensive restructuring of the economy to revitalize and reindustrialize the country, Donahue said. "We have a whole set of alternative economic proposals that we believe would easily outperform Reaganomics, without creating the intolerable inequities that Reaganomics has brought about," he declared.

Creation of a tripartite National Reindustrialization Board, bringing together government, management and labor, is urgently needed to insure the revitalization of the nation's sick and decaying communities while at the same time encouraging the development of new industries with promise for the future, Donahue said. The Reindustrialization Board would take into account more than just short-term profits for a corporation, but rather would be attuned to job creation and to the long-term development and welfare of the nation, he said.

"THE SOLUTION to America's problems is not to hamstring the federal government by cutting its programs and its sources of income and weakening or undermining its laws and the regulations and standards used to protect health, safety, civil rights, and the environment," Donahue stressed.

"We believe there are alternatives to Reaganomics that are workable, equitable, and effective. That is a belief we share with all of the voluntary organizations that marched with us on Solidarity Day," he added.

UNION SECRETARY-TREASURERS compare notes at the George Meany Center seminar in Williamsburg, Va. From left are Thomas R. Donahue, AFL-CIO; Nicholas C. Vrataric, Paperworkers; Charles B. Dale, Newspaper Guild, and William Bywater, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

Economist Sees Disillusion With Reagan's Programs

Williamsburg, Va.—The Reagan counter-revolution based on taking from the many to benefit the few will be short lived, Prof. Charles C. Killingsworth of Michigan State University's School of Labor & Industrial Relations predicted at a seminar for union secretary-treasurers.

The seminar was sponsored by the George Meany Center for Labor Studies as a continuation of its annual program for executive officers of national and international unions begun in 1962. This year's program was planned with the cooperation of the AFL-CIO Secretary-Treasurers Conference.

THE 22 PARTICIPANTS were greeted by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue and Fred K. Hoehler, Jr., executive director of the Meany Center.

Dr. Killingsworth opened the program with an analysis of the impact of Reaganomics.

For 50 years, he observed, three basic presumptions have dominated U.S. social policies:

- The United States should be a compassionate society, giving a decent minimum of help to the ill, the unemployed and the destitute.
- The best paying investment is in human beings, money spent for education and other kinds of training and development. It offers a greater cash return than money sunk in mortar, brick and machinery. The phenomenal growth of productivity in the U.S. economy has resulted from the rising educational levels of Americans.
- A democratic society should always strive to reduce the extremes of economic inequality.

KILLINGSWORTH summed up the implications so far of the Reagan program as "a beginning of a counter-revolution" in U.S. social policy. He told the secretary-treasurers that cuts in government programs so far add up to about $40 billion less than Jimmy Carter proposed for these programs for 1982 "and they promise further reductions mainly in social programs that will amount to $80 or $90 billion over the next several years."

Pointing to the large holes already torn in the so-called "safety net" the President Reagan promised, the Michigan State economist enumerated:

- Public service employment has been totally eliminated.
- The school lunch program has been cut in ways that would be comical if they weren't tragic.
- Unemployment benefits have been restricted.
- Various forms of welfare programs have been slashed.
- The nature of the tax cut bill makes it an engine to generate greater inequality.

Killingsworth recalled the question Ronald Reagan asked the voters during the 1980 campaign: "Are you better off now than you were four years ago?"

He predicted that when the same question is asked in the 1982 and 1984 campaigns, the electorate will answer with a louder "no" than in 1980.

"THAT IS A safe prediction because the essence of the Reagan counter-revolution is to take from the many to benefit the few who are already well-off," he concluded.

The seminar's third day was devoted to a review of automated record-keeping and other computerized office management systems. Thomas S. McFee, assistant secretary for personnel administration of the Dept. of Health & Human Services, lectured on "Planning, Budgeting and Evaluation."

The secretary-treasurers participating in the conference at Williamsburg represented unions with 6 million members, Hoehler reported.

Coalition Fights Surging Health Care Costs

National representatives of labor, business, health care providers and insurers have agreed to coperate at the local level in efforts to bring health costs under control.

Citing a "new climate" in which the federal government is withdrawing its functions and funding, participating organizations—including the AFL-CIO—underlined the urgency in launching the program for some 70 communities.

The diverse group was brought together by John Dunlop, former Secretary of Labor, who disclosed at a press conference that repersentatives of the six national organizations have been discussing the local coalition approach for six months.

Participating organizations, in addition to the AFL-CIO, are the American Hospital Assocation, American Medical Association, Blue Cross and Blue Shield Associations, the Business Roundtable and the Health Insurance Association of America.

While endorsing the objectives of the local coalition approach, Federation Social Security Director Bert Seidman pointed out at the press conference that organized labor will continue to pursue its goals of national health insurance or federal legislation to contain hospital costs.

DUNLOP, WHO is coordinating the coalition effort, said the organizations came together "out of a deep concern with the rate of increase in health care costs and the effects of public and private policies on the quality and access to health care."

He said the coalition members recognize their strong differences over national policies and legislation, yet agreed to cooperate locally in today's new circumstances.

Seidman agreed. "The chances of achieving legislation are much less" at the present time, he said, and so labor is responding in "a pragmatic way" as it has done in other fields.

SEIDMAN NOTED that the federal government is "pulling back from its responsibilities" and unions would be encouraged to work with other groups at the local level.

Labor's aim, he said, will be not only to restrain costs but to seek broader access to quality care for working people, the unemployed and those now lacking health care.

In a common statement, the six organizations endorsed "coalitions" on a local, state or regional basis. They urged, first, an inventory of local resources and problems.

THEY ADVISED local groups to focus on a few priorities, such as decreasing the emphasis on expensive in-patient technology, and stressing alternative care such as ambulatory and home care.

They also urged efforts to finance and provide care for the unemployed and others without it and efforts to offset federal, state and local budget cuts.

Labor representatives participating in the discussions in addition to Seidman were President John J. Sweeney of the Service Employees and Melvin Glasser, health specialist with the Auto Workers.

New Guide Published On Union Scholarships

A guide to union-sponsored scholarships and awards has been compiled by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education. The guide includes information on scholarships given by national and international unions, state and local central bodies and local unions as well as a directory for other sources of student aid.

Single copies of the guide are available free from the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education, 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Room 407, Washington, D.C. 20006.

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

1/23/82

Kirkland Hits Reagan's Failure To Address Nation's Job Needs

RALLY FOR JOBS and justice drew over 15,000 workers to Washington's state capitol in Olympia, the largest crowd ever to assemble there. AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue, addressing the huge turnout, charged that widespread unemployment and the deepening recession are the direct results of Reaganomics. (Story, Page 2.)

Scores Plan To Diminish Federal Role

By David L. Perlman

The AFL-CIO protested President Reagan's do-nothing response to rising unemployment and urged Congress to reject his proposal to scrap dozens of national programs and shift responsibility for the general welfare to the 50 states.

Such a drastic realignment amounts to an abdication of the national government's constitutional responsibility, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland charged.

"THIS NATION needs federal programs to attack unemployment and protect the weakest in our society," Kirkland insisted. And it would have the resources to finance such programs "if it recaptured the tax giveaways to the wealthy" that were enacted last year, he said.

Reagan's televised State of the Union address to Congress acknowledged recession and unemployment, but sloughed off responsibility. The nation's economic collapse is an "inheritance" from the policies of his predecessors, Reagan insisted.

The President had only one proposal for dealing with problems of cities and the disadvantaged—a warmed-over plan for experimental "urban enterprise zones" to attract businesses to inner cities and rural towns.

REAGAN DID NOT spell out the details of his proposal, but a White House document quoted in a Bureau of National Affairs newsletter includes a subminimum wage for teenagers employed in the enterprise zones as one of the incentives for business expansion.

In a memorandum to AFL-CIO state and city central bodies, Research Director Rudy Oswald noted that an earlier version of the urban enterprise zone concept was opposed by the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

It amounts to more "business tax giveaways," Oswald said, and "a localized version of trickle-down economics" that won't create additional jobs. "A more likely result is job losses, lower wages, lower standards . . . and a shifting of employment from one area to another."

IN A LAST-MINUTE change of policy, Reagan sided with the hard-line supply-side ideologues and dropped plans for new taxes to hold down a deficit projected at close to $100 billion next year.

White House aides had persuaded the President to support higher taxes, but he

(Continued on Page 3)

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII ® 3 Saturday, January 30, 1982 No. 4

'Further Steps' Urged Against Poland, Soviets

By James M. Shevis

Tougher economic and political sanctions against the communist governments of Poland and the Soviet Union were urged by the AFL-CIO as free unions prepared for a worldwide demonstration protesting the suppression of human rights in Poland and supporting the embattled Solidarity union movement in that country.

In announcing a program of curtailed trade and scientific exchange with the USSR Dec. 30, President Reagan noted that if those actions did not bring about the desired results—the end of martial law in Poland, the release of imprisoned Solidarity leaders, and the resumption of government negotiations with the independent union—further steps would be taken.

"THERE HAS been no progress toward these goals. Indeed, the repression in Poland is getting worse," AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland said in a speech at the Auto Workers' national legislative conference in Washington.

"Where," he asked, "are the 'further steps' promised by the Administration? Where is the action to match the rhetoric?"

Kirkland outlined AFL-CIO plans for the Jan. 30 International Day of Solidarity called by the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions and urged all of organized American labor to do its part to make the day a success.

"WHAT WE WANT for Polish workers is no more and no less than we want for ourselves," Kirkland declared. "We view the rights of the members of Solidarnosc (Solidarity) to form and support free unions and to negotiate on equal terms with their employer as linked to our own rights and to the rights of free men and women everywhere.

"So long as (Solidarity Chairman) Lech Walesa and thousands of Solidarity members are under arrest and denied the rights for which they have sacrificed so valiantly, American labor cannot rest."

Kirkland charged that the Soviet Union is "the real author of the savage repression" in Poland, and that the gross violation of human rights in Poland is a mockery of any number of binding treaties signed and sealed by both the Polish and Soviet governments.

AT AFL-CIO News press time, firm plans for rallies, special masses, and other events demonstrating American labor's backing of the Polish workers and their

(Continued on Page 8)

Voting Rights Battle Opens 2nd Session

The second session of the 97th Congress opened with the civil rights coalition and the Reagan Administration on a collision path over extension of the Voting Rights Act and the issue of tax exemptions for racially segregated schools.

President Reagan said in his State of the Union address that he "strongly supports" extension of the Voting Rights Act and "laws that guarantee equal rights should be strengthened, when necessary."

BUT AT Senate hearings the next morning, Atty. Gen. William French Smith made clear that the Administration's support didn't apply to the bill the House passed last year by a large bipartisan majority.

That bill, supported by the AFL-CIO and the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, includes a key provision to spell out the intent of Congress and nullify a damaging interpretation by the Supreme Court.

The Administration wants Congress to specify that an election law change in a jurisdiction covered by the Voting Rights Act can be blocked only if it was proposed with the "intent" to discriminate.

(Continued on Page 7)

Labor Presses Job-Creating Alternatives

Labor's alternative to the Reagan Administration's recession-breeding economic policies calls for "direct government action" to provide jobs for the unemployed, bring down interest rates and make taxes fairer.

AFL-CIO Research Director Rudy Oswald told a House subcommittee on monetary policy that the Administration appears bankrupt of ideas to check the recession.

HE URGED Congress to revive the emergency local public works program that helped pull the nation out of previous recessions, impose credit controls to bring down interest costs, restore public service job programs and expand housing programs.

Oswald challenged President Reagan's attempt "to blame the deepening recession on mistakes made by a previous Administration." This is a "Reagan recession" resulting from a failed economic policy, he insisted.

Just in the past two months, one million more workers have lost jobs, Oswald testified.

He charged that the Federal Reserve Board's tight-money policy has been an ineffective tool to bring down inflation, and has in fact pushed up costs of goods and services.

HE CALLED ON the House panel to go beyond the unemployment statistics and consider the human misery that results. "It's not only putting bread on the table that worries the jobless worker," he noted. "It's the mortgage payments, medical and dental bills for the children, and all the other bills that are coming in."

Oswald reiterated the AFL-CIO's proposal for a new Reconstruction Finance Corp. "to revitalize the economy with loans, loan guarantees, interest rate subsidies and targeted tax benefits for retooling and growth of basic industries."

He urged temporary restrictions on imports that add to unemployment and further weaken the nation's industrial base.

OSWALD TOOK issue with President Reagan's refusal to budge from the heavy tax cuts enacted last year and pressed the AFL-CIO proposal to:

- Limit the individual income tax cuts scheduled for this year to $700 per taxpayer, a ceiling that would affect only persons with incomes above $40,000 a year.
- Cut back the 10 percent investment tax credit to its previous 7 percent level, since it subsidizes the same firms and investments that also receive big benefits from the new depreciation system.

(Continued on Page 8)

DISMANTLING VITAL government agencies designed to help workers in hard times, as the Reagan Administration is doing, is "nothing short of madness," AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue said in a speech before a conference on public sector labor relations sponsored jointly by the American Arbitration Association and the Labor-Management Relations Service of the U.S. Conference of Mayors. With Donahue are AAA President Thomas R. Colosi, left, and Executive Director John F. Leyden of the AFL-CIO Public Employee Dept.

Donahue Warns of 'Disaster'

Program Cuts Scored As Public Needs Grow

At a time when the American people have the greatest need to rely on government, the Reagan Administration is deliberately withholding help, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue charged at a public sector labor relations conference.

"It is during hard times, with falling production, rising unemployment, and a shrinking tax base that the American people have to put greatest reliance on government resources," Donahue observed. "So it seems nothing short of madness to choose this time, when the American people and their economy stand in greater need of their government's help than at any time in two generations, that the Administration chooses to deny all responsibility."

Donahue pointed out that in its one year in office, the Reagan Administration has succeeded in producing the largest number of jobless workers in the nation's post-war history. More than 9.5 million Americans —the largest number since 1939—are officially unemployed, "a social and economic disaster of the highest order," he observed.

But in the face of this tragedy, the Administration has no plan, no ideas, and apparently no interest in trying to limit the damage wrought by the recession, Donahue charged.

"INSTEAD," he said, "it has reduced unemployment compensation, training programs, welfare programs, and emergency public-service job programs at the same time it is putting more and more people on the street who need help and who have nowhere else to turn but to their government."

Donahue spoke at the annual public sector labor relations meeting sponsored by the American Arbitration Association and the Labor-Management Relations Service of the U.S. Conference of Mayors.

He told the participants that in its attitude toward the role of government, the Reagan Administration blames much of the nation's troubles on the rank-and-file government worker, who is made to suffer by its actions. He cited as an example the Administration's sharp cutbacks in the U.S. Employment Service at a time of severe and growing unemployment throughout the nation.

So far, there have been layoffs of 7,300 employment specialists and the closing of 600 employment offices across the nation in fiscal year 1982. That is in addition to 5,200 layoffs and the closing of 400 offices in 1981.

What Reagan has undertaken, Donahue warned, is to dismantle the government itself and to strip it of essential functions.

"And if this Administration has a distaste that amounts to contempt for the structure and functions of government and government workers, they have even less love for their unions and, in general, for all of the mediating structures that people have established in part to protect them in their relations with government."

AS FOR state governments, he said there are only a handful that treat their employees as first-class citizens in the area of collective bargaining. In general, he observed, labor-management relations in public service are in a state of chaos. With almost 16 million Americans employed at some level of government, that kind of chaos is not a minor matter, he said.

"Public employees in every jurisdiction are well aware of the immense problems that state and local government are undergoing as a result of inflation, recession, and above all the severe cutbacks in federal aid," Donahue said. "They stand ready to share in the search for solutions. They do not expect to find themselves exempt from the sacrifices that are necessary.

"They don't expect favored treatment, but they expect fair treatment," he stressed. "What this country needs is more and better collective bargaining, not less. It needs to strengthen all of the instruments which citizens carry on their dialogue with their government."

15,000 Seek 'Jobs, Justice' At Washington State Rally

Olympia, Wash. — More than 15,000 demonstrators jammed the capitol grounds here Jan. 20 in a rally for "jobs and justice" organized by the Washington State AFL-CIO to protest the harsh impact of Reaganomics and parallel policies of the Republican state administration.

The demonstrators focused particularly on the state's skyrocketing jobless rate, expected to hit 14 percent by February, and legislative attempts to cripple the state's workers' compensation system.

DOZENS OF community organizations including civil rights, religious, senior citizens and student groups joined in organizing the march—"Rally '82 for Jobs and Justice."

Nearly every charter bus in the state was booked to bring in marchers, State COPE Director Ross Rieder reported, and thousands of the demonstrators arrived in car caravans, many from hundreds of miles away.

Rieder said the rally would serve as the first step in a year of all-out political activism leading up to the November elections.

AFL-CIO SEC.-TREAS. Thomas R. Donahue, addressing the huge crowd gathered before the state legislative building, pinned responsibility for the growing recession on the economic policies of the Reagan Administration. He noted, however, that the hardships these policies have created for workers have spurred "a resurgence of labor solidarity" as evidenced by the rally, underscoring the determination of workers to be heard.

Washington State AFL-CIO President Marvin L. Williams noted that the crowd represented "the people of Main Street, Washington State. We come from towns where 50 percent of our people are out of work. We come from the cities where the disadvantaged and the elderly are told to fend for themselves."

Through the rally, Williams stressed, "we are asking this legislature to listen and to learn that the hardships and hard times hitting our people are beyond belt-tightening, they are cruel and unnecessary burdens that cannot be permitted any longer."

HE EMPHASIZED that the 1982 election campaign "starts here and now," and leaders who fail to listen to the concerns of the state's working people "will be turned out of office."

Sec.-Treas. William Lucy of the State, County & Municipal Employees noted that the crowd included many state workers who face the threat of layoffs under the policies of the current administration of Gov. John Spellman. He likened these to national Republican policies that he said "take from the needy and give to the greedy."

Many of the marchers followed up on the rally with personal visits with state senators and representatives who were asked to support programs to reduce unemployment and to oppose a renewed effort to determine the state workers' compensation system.

THE LATTER proposal, defeated in 1981, would change the system from an exclusive state fund to a "three-way" plan that would allow private insurance companies to write workers' compensation policies in the state and permit self-insurance by employers.

Among the largest contingents at the rally were members of the Woodworkers, whose industry has been experiencing unemployment above 30 percent in some areas as recession in the construction industry has forced the shutdown of sawmills and timbering operations.

Histadrut's Emissary Named for U.S., Canada

Meir Gatt has been named special representative to the United States and Canadian labor movements by Histadrut, the Israeli labor federation.

Gatt, 41, will act as an observer for Histadrut on trade union activities in the two countries, advise unions here on social and economic conditions in Israel and plan joint projects including exchange programs for working youth. He replaces Shimon Avizemer, who is returning to Israel after three years in the post.

Gatt has been national secretary of Histadrut's working youth movement and has served in local and national government posts in Israel.

IUD Arranges for Broadcast Of Squelched Safety Films

The AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. and six unions have arranged to transmit for public broadcast two films on safety and health that were suppressed by the Reagan Administration.

The award-winning films, "Worker to Worker" and "Can't Take No More," were commissioned by the Occupational Safety & Health Administration during the Carter Administration. In March 1981, the Reagan Administration had directed OSHA offices to suspend distribution of the films.

OSHA officials claimed the films didn't reflect current Administration policies. Supporters of the films charged the Administration didn't want workers to know their rights under the federal job safety law.

HOWEVER, after mounting public pressure, the Administration reversed its policy in December and re-released the films. Although the films now are available to the public from OSHA's national office in Washington, they still aren't available through its regional offices.

To insure that the films are in fact released to the public, the IUD group is offering the films to public television stations as a two-part series hosted by Ed Asner called "Withdrawn from Circulation." The programs will be transmitted via the Westar 1 satellite on Feb. 2. Most local PBS stations will tape the programs and then decide whether to use them, rather than airing them at the time of transmission.

"Worker to Worker" is a portrait of four people who are exposed to hazards on the job and go to OSHA for protection. "Can't Take No More" chronicles the history of job safety and health from the turn of the century, using rare archival footage.

THE SIX UNIONS involved in the project are the Steelworkers, Auto Workers, Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers, Machinists, Communications Workers, and Screen Actors Guild.

IUD noted that a seldom-used provision in the 1978 Public Telecommunications Financing Act permits groups outside public broadcasting to rent time on one of the four channels PBS leases on the Westar 1 satellite.

RECUPERATING FROM INJURIES in a New York hospital, President Alvin E. Heaps of the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union works on union business with RWDSU Sec.-Treas. Lenore Miller. Heaps is showing rapid progress in recovering from the effects of a Dec. 30 pipe bomb explosion in his office.

Shift of Social Programs

Reagan Scored on Move To Scuttle Federal Role changed his mind after a meeting with a Chamber of Commerce delegation.

(Continued from Page 1)

The AFL-CIO has urged a rollback of some of the corporate tax windfalls voted by Congress last year and a cap on the amount of the individual income tax reduction in order to finance economic recovery programs.

Reagan did propose a tightening of the minimum tax for corporations. But he said the scheduled tax cuts should go into effect, despite the deficit. More revenue would merely "encourage more government spending," he contended.

THE PRESIDENT said he will seek still further cuts in what he termed "nonessential" government programs and will abolish another 75,000 federal jobs—on top of the severe layoffs in progress.

Reagan said he will seek major cuts in federal "entitlement" programs "to bring their spiraling costs under control." But the budget savings will be achieved "without affecting social security," he said. One of the few rebuffs Congress gave to Reagan last year was its refusal to go along with his proposals to cut back future social security benefits, especially for persons retiring at age 62.

The President's proposal to realign national-state responsibilities was described at a White House briefing for reporters as part of "the Reagan revolution."

THE WHITE HOUSE conceded that the details of the proposal have yet to be fleshed out and that there are "1,000 little questions" still to be answered. But here's how it would operate in broad terms, if Congress should go along with the plan:

Starting in the 1984 fiscal year, the federal government would take over the administration and full funding of the Medicaid program which provides health care protection for persons on welfare and for other low-income persons made eligible under state law. The federal government already pays more than half the cost.

Presumably, although not spelled out, a national program would provide broader benefits in some states and less benefits to fewer people in other states.

AS THE OTHER half of the "swap," the federal government would end its matching financing of the Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) program—the basic public assistance program—and drop the federally-funded food stamp program. It would be up to the states to take up the difference.

The White House projects the cost of the swap to be comparable, with the states coming out a bit ahead on the deal.

Leaving public assistance to the states is a reversal of the welfare reform concept—initiated, ironically, under the Nixon Administration—of seeking greater uniformity in welfare benefits through a federal minimum payment.

BUT THE MOST drastic feature of the Regan plan would be achieved by a phaseout of most of the federal grant programs. The programs have not yet been specified, but the White House said they would include local mass transit grants, federal funds for water and sewer facilities, vocational rehabilitation and education, training and employment programs, health, social services, child nutrition, low-income energy assistance, noninterstate highways, airport funds, existing revenue-sharing and a number of educational programs other than the Title I program of aid to schools serving low-income households.

Initially, a trust fund would be established to fund these programs during the phaseout period. The money would come from existing federal excise taxes on gasoline, tobacco, alcoholic beverages and telephone service plus the oil industry windfall profits tax, which is already scheduled for a phaseout.

In the first stage, fiscal 1984 through 1987, states could draw from this fund to administer the federal programs they take over. Or, alternatively, they could withdraw from some or all of the federal grant programs and claim their share of the money in the trust fund to use as they wish, except that a portion of the money would have to be passed on to cities.

From fiscal 1988 to 1991, the trust fund would be phased out and federal excise taxes abolished, except for the portion of the gasoline tax earmarked for interstate highways.

It then would be up to the states to raise their taxes to fund whatever programs they wish to continue. But there would apparently be no obligation to do so.

Meanwhile, the federal government would be relieved of any obligation or expense.

Kirkland sharply criticized this abdication of constitutional responsibilities.

"At stake is the responsibility of the federal government in a modern industrial society," he said. "That responsibility cannot be shifted to the states or their subdivisions, to the private sector, or to voluntarism," he declared.

INEQUALITY IS the hallmark of the Reagan Administration, whose "supply-side" economic policies have resulted in the highest unemployment rate since the severe 1973-75 recession, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland told the Auto Workers national Community Action Program conference. UAW Sec.-Treas. Raymond Majerus is at right and CAP Director Henry R. Lacayo at left.

Campaign Promises Called Bitter Joke for Unemployed

The hope of balancing the budget and the promise of "jobs, jobs and more jobs" which Ronald Reagan made in the 1980 presidential campaign have turned into a bitter joke by the creation of massive unemployment, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland told delegates to the Auto Workers annual Community Action Program conference in Washington.

The Reagan Administration has pushed its "supply-side" economic policies, Kirkland charged, in the full knowledge that every one-percent increase in the jobless rate means a loss to the Treasury of $25 billion in lost taxes and $5 billion more in additional government outlays.

"OVER AND above that, it means a loss to the economy as a whole of $100 billion worth of goods and services that laid-off workers cannot produce," he added.

"As a result, in its first year, the Reagan Administration—which preached that government spending is the root of all economic evil and that federal deficits are the sole cause of inflation—has produced the highest deficits in history while wrecking vital programs and draining the public treasury."

Hard times for the auto industry and its workers must be overcome, Kirkland declared. The industry, which has suffered steady sales declines for over two years now, has a jobless rate of 22 percent, with thousands of workers permanently laid off.

IN ITS current round of bargaining with the industry, the UAW will need to exercise great wisdom, skill, and vision, Kirkland noted. He pledged to the delegates that whatever judgments and decisions the union reaches in the course of its bargaining, "you will have the full and unstinting support of all of your brothers and sisters in the AFL-CIO."

The entire American labor movement shares with the UAW a deep conviction that the nation cannot survive strong and free if its industrial manufacturing base continues to erode, Kirkland observed.

"Most particularly," he said, "it cannot afford to sacrifice, to predatory forces overseas and crackpot economic dogmas at home, an industry as vital to a healthy America as automobile manufacturing, which accounts—directly or indirectly—for one out of every six jobs in this country.

UAW President Douglas Fraser opened the four-day legislative and political action conference. Other labor speakers included AFL-CIO Vice President Joyce Miller, who heads the Coalition of Labor Union Women, and Jack Otero, vice president of the Railway & Airline Clerks.

CONFERENCE workshops were conducted featuring members of Congress knowledgeable on subjects ranging from industrial revitalization, the federal budget and Reaganomics to voting rights, occupational safety and health and the social security system.

Participating in the conference were UAW's top officers and regional directors, officers of the union's local, county and state CAP councils, local union leaders and staff members of the UAW's Community Action Program headed by Henry Lacayo.

Labor Dept. Halts Monthly Reports On Real Wages

The Bureau of Labor Statistics announced that it will no longer publish its monthly series on workers' real spendable earnings, the measure that organized labor uses to gauge changes in purchasing power. The December report was the last in the series.

BLS said it is discontinuing the series "because of the conceptual and methodological shortcoming related to the use of average earnings of all workers as a basis for computing the tax deductions for a married worker with three dependents filing a joint return."

THE DEPARTMENT said it will continue to publish inflation-adjusted hourly and weekly earnings before deductions on a monthly basis.

The AFL-CIO opposed elimination of the series and of other vital labor statistics BLS is dropping. Because of trimmed funding, the bureau will no longer issue its analysis of major union contracts nor its union directory. It also will report only on strikes by more than 1,000 workers instead of those involving more than six.

The AFL-CIO has charged that less reporting on strikes may violate the law requiring BLS to review "all" labor-management disputes.

"Good, sound economic policy and good, sound social policy depend on good, sound statistics," AFL-CIO Research Director recently testified.

"Without such statistics, we won't know where we are and we won't know where we are going."

Auto Workers Resume GM Bargaining

Detroit — The Auto Workers resumed negotiations with the General Motors Corp. in the second round of talks aimed at pulling the automobile industry out of its worst slump since the Depression of the 1930s.

The first round of bargaining broke off Jan. 20 when the two sides could not reach agreement on the economics of a settlement to replace the current pact that expires on Sept. 14. Similar talks with the Ford Motor Co., recessed later in the day.

IN THE NEW talks, the union set a deadline for agreement at midnight Thursday, Jan. 28. UAW President Douglas Fraser told reporters at a press conference following a meeting of the union's GM Council that the negotiations represented a "final, final chance" for the parties to reach an early agreement.

"If you don't do it this time, forget about it until July," said Fraser. Negotiations ordinarily would have begun six months from now, but the union decided to open talks early to explore ways of reviving the depressed industry. Domestic auto sales in mid-January were 15.8 percent below the year-earlier level, their lowest in 21 years.

SHORTLY AFTER initial talks opened on Jan. 11, GM and the UAW reached accord on the principle that all labor cost savings resulting from the negotiations would be passed on to consumers in the form of lower car prices to help stimulate sales. GM also agreed to let an independent accounting firm examine its books, to require equal sacrifice from all employee groups, and to protect union members from loss of jobs to foreign operations.

In announcing the resumption of talks, Fraser said the union is seeking a revised contract that would run only through September 1983. He called this goal "a basic tactical decision" based on the premise that the union will be "better off" at that date than at the current expiration date. The UAW is also calling for automatic renegotiations of any new contract if car sales improve sharply to a specified level.

EVEN IF THERE is not a new agreement with GM by the union's deadline, the UAW said it would resume new contract talks Jan. 29 with Ford.

Fraser said talks with GM had broken down over three issues—the extent of the reductions to be borne by the union, job security, and the size and duration of the price cuts to be instituted by the company.

Shirking the Federal Duty

THE PRESIDENT'S outrageous proposal to turn over a vast area of federal responsibility to the states must not go unchallenged or unexplained.

A White House official was close to the mark when he spoke of the proposal in terms of a "Reagan revolution," although counter-revolution might have been a more apt phrase.

Certainly, such a drastic realignment of federal and state roles deserves a more candid description than the President gave in his State of the Union address.

If his plan is enacted, Mr. Reagan said, "by 1988, the states will be in control of over 40 federal grant programs." Thus, "in a single stroke . . . we insure that these programs will be more responsive to both the people they are meant to help and the people who pay for them."

WHAT PROGRAMS? Well, as a starter, the White House listing includes both cash welfare assistance and food stamps, an assortment of health, child nutrition and social services grants, vocational rehabilitation, job training, mass transit assistance, sewer construction grants and low-income energy assistance.

There will be many more included, and the White House says it will be several months before the specifics of the plan are worked out.

The bottom line, though, is that there would be absolutely no obligation for the states to continue any of these programs or even replace them with home-grown alternatives. They could leave the poor to the strained resources of private charity or revive the county poorhouse if they so wish.

During a phaseout period, states could tap a federal trust fund to finance the programs or use the available money for any other purpose.

At the end of the phaseout, however, there would be no more trust fund. Anything the states wanted to do to continue or replace the federally-aided programs would have to be funded by new taxes voted by state legislatures.

THE REAGAN PEOPLE make a big thing of the fact that the federal government would drop most of the excise taxes it now imposes, thus opening up a new revenue source for the states. However, the states would not have to impose state excise taxes to replace the federal levy. And even if they chose to do so, this wouldn't make up for all of the lost federal revenue.

Since voting new taxes is no more popular among state legislators than among members of Congress, it's safe to assume that most federally funded programs turned over to the states would be abandoned or starved of resources. Again, the poorest states with the biggest problems would be worst off.

That's where President Reagan's new federalism leads. And it will be a tragedy if Congress takes the nation down that path.

Memo to President Reagan

"THE TEST of our progress is not whether we add more to the abundance of those who have too much; it is whether we provide enough for those who have too little."

—Franklin D. Roosevelt's second inaugural address, Jan. 20, 1937.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
LANE KIRKLAND, President
THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer
Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
Jerry Wurf*	S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward
Murray H. Finley	Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts
Sol C. Chaikin	Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco
Charles H. Pillard	J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride
David J. Fitzmaurice	Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps
Wm. W. Winpisinger	William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell
John DeConcini	Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss
William Konyha	Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney
Douglas A. Fraser	Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield
Barbara Hutchinson	Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto

*Deceased

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman, James M. Shevis

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W. Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, January 30, 1982 No. 4

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

International Labor Press AFL-CIO/CLC

Time to Get a Grip

Court Eliminates Cap

Campaign-Financing Loophole Puts Presidency Up for Bids

By Gus Tyler

IT COST US at least $60 million in 1980 to help keep the presidency of the United States from going to the highest bidder with the most money. Almost $30 million went to Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan each to finance their campaigns for the White House. The money came out of the U.S. Treasury, out of the pockets of the taxpayers.

It is a lot of money. But it seemed worthwhile. The candidates for President would not be obligated to this big giver or that big giver but could feel free to say and do what they wished without fear that next time around they would be denied campaign funding for themselves or their party.

THE PUBLIC FINANCING of elections seemed the logical way to go to keep our democracy from becoming a plutocracy, to keep government in the hands of men and women and out of the grip of money.

But there was a loophole in the law—actually not in the law but in a decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Buckley versus Valeo. The court ruled that, if an independent committee was set up to raise and spend money on its own to back a presidential candidate, such an operation was not illegal.

The tricky part of this ploy revolves around the word, "independent." It is a committee that supposedly was not set up by the candidate or his official associates; it does not coordinate its work with the candidate's committees. It does its own thing in its own way—from raising money to spending it.

IN 1980, SUCH "independent" groups spent $13.7 million in the presidential election—almost all of it on behalf of Ronald Reagan.

In effect, this means that the ceiling on expenditures in presidential campaigns is no ceiling at all. The candidates who are getting millions from the Treasury so that there should be a ceiling can also be the beneficiaries of additional aid from the "independent" committees.

An organization interested in limiting the might of money in our democracy, Common Cause, decided to take this question back to the Supreme Court, hoping that the court would permit some kind of limit on the "independent" expenditures.

The original law put a cap of $1,000 on each independent committee. Common Cause pleaded that such a limit be legalized, so that while "independent" committees would not be outlawed, they would be checked in their influence.

In mid-January, the Supreme Court made its decision. By a 4-to-4 vote, it said, yes and no, because the justices disagreed. The ninth member of the court, the newly appointed Sandra Day O'Connor, abstained.

WHAT THIS MEANS is that, for the moment, there is no ceiling on "independent" expenditures because a lower court of three judges had so decided. The Supreme Court did not reverse them.

But with the high court so closely divided, there still is hope, hope that in a new case the court will rule that "independent" committees either be outlawed or limited, so that we do not once more fall into the practice of putting our government up for sale to the highest bidder.

Copyright 1982, Gus Tyler Columns

The Administration's 'Moral Meanness'

Increasingly, as the year progressed, it has become clear that the President's concept of domestic policy leaves little room for the fundamental American value of fairness. . . .

At the same time he was deliberately tilting economic policy toward the rich and powerful through the massively regressive tax cuts, he was systematically removing government assistance from some of the most needy and powerless.

The moral meanness of the Reagan Administration has been evidenced constantly; in its indifference to civil rights for blacks or equal rights for women; in its attack on legal services for the poor; and in the President's own cruel remark that those who cannot find good jobs or schools or services where they live should "vote with their feet" and move on.

Even when the Reagan Administration decided to distribute cheese to the poor, it did so . . . to cut government storage costs.

—From column by David S. Broder in the Washington Post, Jan. 20, 1982.

Default on Government Functions

Reagan Pulls Back Services In Time of Greatest Need

The following is excerpted from an address by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue to a public sector labor relations conference in Washington, D.C. on Jan. 25, 1982.

THE REAGAN Administration has chosen to default on government functions that are absolutely essential to a healthy society and a healthy economy.

Since the beginning, growth in economic activity has depended upon an adequate expanding stock of private and public capital facilities that complement and enhance each other. Public highways, bridges, and port facilities are essential to the health of private enterprise. So are water and sewage systems and mass-transit facilities in an age of energy scarcity.

At this moment, for example, while world demand for U.S. coal was never higher, obsolete port facilities are holding coal shipping far below its potential and vastly inflating costs, because ships have to lie at anchor for weeks to load even a comparatively small cargo.

THE CONSTRUCTION and maintenance of the public facilities that undergird the private economy is a legitimate and essential function of government which is not being met. So the common stock of public assets is deteriorating faster than it is being repaired, and economic recovery is hampered.

Another area in which our government is defaulting is protection of the weak from the strong. Over many generations, the government of the United States has evolved as a shield against the power of concentrated wealth. It has developed anti-monopoly regulations, pollution controls, protective standards that govern banking, shipping, housing and employment, food and drug and health-care standards, laws to protect workers and consumers, to regulate access to the airwaves and a thousand other things that have been put in place because they were found to be necessary to prevent human exploitation.

There has never been any doubt that providing and administering all of these functions is difficult and expensive.

IT IS A PARADOX of a complex, interlocking economy that government outlays are lowest when the private economy is most prosperous and highest during periods of recession. When the economy is working at a rate somewhere near full employment, there is less need for welfare administration, food stamps, unemployment benefits or public health services. In a full-employment economy, the federal tax income can easily handle the outlays for administration of public enterprise.

It is during hard times, with falling production, rising unemployment and a shrinking tax base, that the American people have to put greatest reliance on government resources.

So it seems nothing short of madness to choose this time, when the American people and their economy stand in greater need of their government's help than at any time in two generations, that the Administration chooses to deny all responsibility.

It does, in fact, blame all of the nation's troubles on the inadequacies of government, and specifically on the rank-and-file workers who keep government operating.

That isn't exactly new. Government workers have been scapegoats for the sake of political expendiency for a long time.

It is understandable that those who are unable to come up with creative policies to stabilize the wobbling economy would prefer to lodge the blame elsewhere. Instead of holding the people in charge responsible for solutions, voters were told to blame hard times on government workers who carried out the instructions of the elected leaders. Obviously, the ploy worked. At least it was swallowed by enough voters to elect an array of so-called fiscal conservatives who promised, in effect, to demolish the instruments of government, rather than make them work better.

WHEN GOVERNMENT programs go wrong, it's from the top down, not from the bottom up. To arouse the anger of businessmen against OSHA, all that's necessary is to picture OSHA regulations as foolish and pointless and pretend that the OSHA inspectors who are charged with carrying them out are the guilty parties.

To subvert the progress the country has made against racial injustice, all you have to do is announce that certain government employees in the Internal Revenue Service have exceeded their authority in denying tax exemption to segregationist schools, while ignoring the laws and court decisions that required them to act in no other way.

As you know, at this time of sky-high unemployment, the Administration has chosen to hamstring the U.S. Employment Service.

That exercise involves layoffs of 7,300 employment specialists and the closing of 600 employment offices across the nation in Fiscal 1982. That's in addition to 5,200 layoffs and the closing of 400 offices in 1981.

PUBLIC EMPLOYEES in every jurisdiction are well aware of the immense problems that state and local government are undergoing as a result of inflation, recession and above all the severe cutbacks in federal aid. They stand ready to share in the search for solutions. They do not expect to find themselves exempt from the sacrifices that are necessary.

They don't expect favored treatment, but they expect fair treatment. They expect to be listened to. And I believe that they will continue, in growing numbers, to perceive that the most effective voice they have is a strong and effective union.

For Battered Industries

Selective Import Restrictions Urged to Help Curb Recession

TEMPORARY RESTRICTIONS on imports of certain items should be a key part of the overall effort to stem the snowballing U.S. recession, AFL-CIO Economist Elizabeth Jager urged on Labor News Conference.

"Added penetration of U.S. markets," Jager said, threatens to further weaken the America's industrial base. She said the steel and automobile industries are among those most strained by the high volume of imports, particularly now, when they are struggling to marshal the massive capital investments needed to modernize their plants and processes.

Jager said that although the problems of these industries are not tied solely to the current recession, the steep economic downslide makes the need to act urgent.

The United States should take the action against "unfair, subsidized, dumped imports" that is provided for in current law, she stressed in noting that "it's a known fact that the governments of other countries are subsidizing their steel exports to the United States." American steel companies say these foreign subsidies run from $50 to $300 per ton, making it impossible to compete in that kind of situation, she said.

Jager said the Reagan Administration has earned poor marks in the trade area. She charged, for example, that the Administration has done "virtually nothing on shoes," refusing to extend even minimal controls. She said the Administration has followed the same kind of non-action course on "virtually every product category that needed help," including autos, where the White House showed no more than "very modest concern."

She pointed out that even the one cushion that workers did have against job-eroding imports—Trade Adjustment Assistance—"was virtually destroyed by the budget-slashing proposals of the Administration and the budget concessions in the Congress."

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

TO REMEMBER Franklin D. Roosevelt on the 100th anniversary of his birth is to almost forget Ronald Reagan.

FDR in his greatness stands with Washington and Lincoln. Winston Churchill, FDR's trusted ally during World War II, rated Roosevelt the greatest president of all because of his impact on world history.

As the Great Depression unfolded and unemployment grew by the millions, Herbert Hoover in 1930 announced: "We have now passed the worst." Hoover, though a humanitarian, was disbelieving; he said half the unemployed were either between jobs or not seriously seeking work. A hit song of the time was "Happy Days Are Here Again."

Unemployment reached an estimated 15 million by early 1933. "Hoovervilles" were everywhere. There were breadlines and soup kitchens. Hunger and evictions. Suicides. Broken families. People lost confidence in their country and themselves.

ROOSEVELT SENSED the despair. At his inaugural in March 1933, he declared: "This nation asks for action and action now." And act he did.

The first hundred days brought an "alphabet soup" of agencies: CCC, FERA, AAA, TVA, NIRA. Attracting the best talent in the land, Roosevelt moved to revive the financial, agricultural and industrial sectors.

Organized labor benefited by a provision in the National Industrial Recovery Act which gave legal protection to the right of workers to organize and bargain "through representatives of their own choosing." When the Supreme Court struck down the industrial act, FDR attacked the court's "horse-and-buggy" states' rights approach to national problems.

The year was 1935 and Sen. Robert F. Wagner (D-N.Y.) was convinced a strong labor law was necessary to deal with industrial turmoil, protect workers' rights, and give the National Labor Relations Board power to enforce its decisions and make anti-union employers obey the law. FDR signed the Wagner Act into law over the protests of industry and it was later upheld in the Supreme Court, 5-4. Millions upon millions of workers organized in the mass production industries and in the trades across the nation.

THE FAIR LABOR Standards Act of 1938 was enacted to deal with widespread employer wage-cutting. The law, popularized as "a floor under wages, a ceiling on hours and a break for kids," abolished the worst sweatshops and most child labor.

Roosevelt knew the strength of America was in its people and their well-being. He knew a democracy divided into rich and poor, between the powerful and powerless, could not survive in a world threatened by totalitarianism.

Today, President Reagan may be borrowing FDR's words, but his actions speak louder.

Foisting an untried economic theory on the nation, Reagan has shifted more wealth to the wealthy and more power to the powerful. He has brought on a recession, pushed millions into the ranks of the unemployed and brought on mass business failures.

REAGAN HAS USED the might of government to break a small union. He has nominated an anti-union consultant to head the NLRB. He has taken food from the mouths of children. He has cut education and science research. He has cut jobless benefits for the unemployed. He ended food stamps for one million people. He has cut programs for the elderly and attacked social security.

The American people, in their patience and generosity, have given Reagan more than a fair chance. As the consequences of Reaganism spread, they will see and reject its negative policies and will rebuild the programs that strengthen democracy, as they always have.

THE SNOWBALLING recession underscores the need for temporary restrictions on imports that threaten to further weaken the U.S. industrial base, AFL-CIO Economist Elizabeth Jager, center, said on Labor News Conference. Questioning her on the AFL-CIO produced public affairs interview program were Jane Seaberry of the Washington Post and Robert Cooney of Press Associates, Inc. Labor News Conference is broadcast weekly over the Mutual radio network.

A NEW APPROACH to settlement of jurisdictional disputes among building and construction trades unions was developed at a meeting of the Building & Construction Trades Dept.'s governing board in Palm Springs, Calif. BCTD President Robert A. Georgine said the plan would be presented to employers next month.

Craft Unions Shape New Disputes Plan

Palm Springs, Calif.—Presidents of the 15 building and construction trades unions have developed a "new approach" to the Impartial Plan for the Settlement of Jurisdictional Disputes and will present it to employers at a Bal Harbour, Fla., meeting Feb. 12, President Robert A. Georgine of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. announced.

In an attempt to iron out difficulties that have hampered operations of the disputes plan for over a year, the Governing Board of General Presidents spent two full days of their five-day quarterly meeting here Jan. 18-22, discussing the situation.

"WE HAVE developed something that is somewhat of a departure from the existing plan," Georgine said.

Three prominent political leaders were among the individuals who spoke at the closed sessions—House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, Gov. Jerry Brown of California, and Mayor Tom Bradley of Los Angeles.

Georgine reported that O'Neill was highly critical of a number of budget cuts proposed by the Reagan Administration. He said the department's own legislative report said "the implications of these massive budget cuts and others proposed to run through 1984 suggest grave consequences as they are applied to local public works, highways, water projects, port development, public housing, synthetic fuels programs and all of the other federal and federally-assisted construction programs that have been a substantial part of the overall construction activity in the United Staes for many years."

CONTRACT maintenance, organizing, pension investments and issues facing the construction industry in the 1980s also received the attention of the general presidents, Georgine said. Plans were discussed for the department's legislative conference to be held in Washington, Apr. 4-7.

Coalition Charges Administration Tramples Consumer Protections

The Reagan Administration "rode roughshod" over the American consumer in 1981, and rights and protections stand to be trampled even more this year, a consumer coalition charged.

The labor-supported coalition, made up of seven consumer organizations with 33 million members, released a report, "Warning: Reaganomics Is Harmful to Consumers" on what it called the Administration's "devastating" record in its first year in office.

BUDGET CUTS have slashed or ended many programs and protections designed to aid consumers, the report points out, and the Administration has pulled back or failed to enforce many protective regulations, at the same time weakening the agencies responsible for them.

The Administration has been unwilling to protect consumers from market forces or practices that have led to steep increases in the costs of such necessities as food, housing, health care and energy, the 51-page report charges.

Organizations in the coalition include the Consumer Federation of America, National Consumers League, National Council of Senior Citizens, Consumers Union, Congress Watch, Center for Science in the Public Interest and Community Nutrition Institute.

Its review of the Reagan Administration's record concentrates on twelve critical areas that have been adversely affected by the Administration's economic policies: food, health, energy, housing, credit, transportation, product safety, business practices, antitrust regulations, communications, information and education, and citizen participation in consumer legislation and rule-making.

WITH THE report, the coalition announced a 12-point consumer agenda for 1982 outlining "issues on which we intend to fight actively; rights and protections we intend to preserve."

Among those priorities will be efforts to preserve a strong role for the Federal Trade Commission; prevention of deregulation of natural gas prices; new product safety programs, and strong clean air, food and automobile safety standards.

The coalition said it will also fight budget cuts in programs that aid the poor, elderly and needy, including nutrition programs, legal services, housing and energy assistance as well as social security and Medicare.

In its review, the coalition points out that occupational safety and health have been among the casualties of the Reagan Administration's drive to provide "regulatory relief" to industry from those rules it finds "burdensome."

THE STANDARDS that aid or protect workers, such as regulations on exposure to cotton dust or rules to give workers information on hazardous substances in the workplace, have been pulled back, the report notes.

At a press conference following release of the report, Sandra L. Willet, executive vice president of the National Consumers League, said consumers are not only not better off than they were one year ago, but now are "forced to live with their fingers crossed hoping to avoid injury, death and financial hardship."

Also cited in the coalition's review of the Administration's record of "harm to consumers" are its actions to:

- Stop a rule to protect children from exposure to asbestos in their schools.
- Cut the budget for the Consumer Product Safety Commission.
- Cut health maintenance, screening and care programs, including protections for senior citizens in nursing homes.
- Slash the national school lunch program and the food stamp program.
- Delay or eliminate major auto safety and air safety rules.
- Seek repeal of the Federal Communications Commission's "fairness doctrine" to assure balanced presentation by broadcasters of all points of view on critical issues.
- Halt consumer protections in federal regulations for variable and adjustable rate mortgages.
- Eliminate major consumer information and education programs.

Copies of the full report are available from the organizations participating in the coalition.

February Calendar Listed By Labor Studies Center

The George Meany Center for Labor Studies offers four training institutes for fllltime union officers and representatives in February. In addition, four AFL-CIO unions and the American Institute for Free Labor Development (AIFLD) will use the campus for programs during the month. Two off-campus programs also will be offered. The schedule:

Unions and the Quality of Work Life, Feb. 8-11—A four-day seminar on the union's role in quality circles, autonomous work groups, QWL Committees and profit sharing.

Organizing Techniques, Feb. 21-26—A review of elements in a successful organizing campaign.

Negotiating Techniques, Feb. 21-26—An opportunity for negotiators in private sector unions to sharpen their bargaining skills. A simulated negotiating session with federal mediators present will be videotaped for review and comment.

Arbitration: Preparation & Presentation, Feb. 28-Mar. 5—An opportunity to prepare a case for hearing, present it before a professional arbitrator, then hear the arbitrator's comments and suggestions.

Unions using the campus for their own leadership training during February are the Association of Flight Attendants, Feb. 8-11; the Newspaper Guild, Feb. 12-19; Carpenters, Feb. 16-19; Communications Workers, Feb. 21-24 and Feb. 28-Mar. 12.

Forty Spanish-speaking trade union leaders from Latin America will be on campus all month for the 100th leadership development class sponsored by AIFLD.

Off-campus activities include a pension investment institute at New Orleans and an institute for Building Trades business agents at the University of Oregon, Eugene.

Information on these and other labor studies programs may be obtained from Fred K. Hoehler, Jr., executive director, George Meany Center, 10000 New Hampshire Ave., Silver Spring, Md. 20903. Telephone 301/431-6400.

Rex Hardesty Named To Information Post

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland has named Rex Hardesty, the associate editor of the Federationist magazine for the past 12 years, to the Dept. of Information position of assistant director for public relations.

Hardesty, 44, joins John M. Barry, the managing editor of the AFL-CIO News, as one of two assistant directors in a department headed by Murray Seeger.

Kirkland named Seeger director of the department effective with the retirement of Saul Miller Jan. 15, 1982. Hardesty fills a slot held until July 1981 by Allen Y. Zack.

A member of the Newspaper Guild since 1964, Hardesty is a native of Oklahoma and was a sports writer for the Tulsa World and Washington Star before becoming editor of the CWA News in 1967. He left the Communications Workers to become associate editor of the Federationist in July 1969.

High Court Stay Leaves Questions On ERA Battle

Supporters of the Equal Rights Amendment won one and lost one when the Supreme Court put a hold on the ruling that would have stopped the ratification process cold but refused to hear appeals of the case on an emergency timetable.

The court stayed the Dec. 23 ruling by U.S. District Court Judge Marion Callister in Idaho that Congress acted unconstitutionally when it extended the ratification deadline from 1979 to June 30, 1982. Judge Callister had also ruled that states could change their minds on ratification votes any time until the amendment was actually ratified by the necessary three-fourths of the states.

THE NATIONAL Organization for Women, backed by the AFL-CIO, the Coalition of Labor Union Women and other supporters of ERA, appealed the ruling to the high court, urging that it be reviewed quickly to remove uncertainty for state legislatures debating action on ERA.

Thirty-five of the needed 38 states have voted for ratification, but five states claim the right to rescind their votes. The Supreme Court's action means the "yes" votes of those states will remain on the books until the court acts on the appeal.

However, the high court's refusal to grant an expedited hearing on the merits of the appeal means that a final ruling will be delayed until after the June 30 deadline for ratification.

The Justice Dept. also appealed the Idaho ruling, but did not seek a speedy review. The government and NOW were the original defendants in the case brought by the states of Idaho and Arizona.

Voting Rights Battle Opens 2nd Session

(Continued from Page 1)

The house bill makes clear that a change that brings about a discriminatory result by freezing minorities out of the political process is illegal without the need to produce proof of motive.

Smith also asked the Senate panel to devise an easier means for states to free themselves permanently of federal election law supervision than the House bill would provide.

On the issue of school segregation, civil rights groups were outraged when Reagan reversed the government's longstanding policy and restored tax-exempt status to private schools and colleges that practice discrimination.

REAGAN ACTED at the behest of right-wing southern supporters. But when a storm of protest arose, he sought to defuse the issue by asking Congress to enact legislation that would deny tax exemptions to discriminatory schools.

But the civil rights coalition wants no part of any such legislation.

Their position—in accord with labor's view—is that the Civil Rights Act already prohibits tax favors and any other form of federal aid to segregated private schools. That's also the interpretation given over the years under both Republican and Democratic Administrations, and sustained by a series of court decisions.

Therefore, no legislation is needed and Congress should not get embroiled in an already settled issue.

STILL ANOTHER civil rights controversy will be before the Senate early in the session—resumption of debate on a Justice Dept. appropriations bill that includes an amendment to prohibit federal courts from ever ordering busing as a tool to overcome racial imbalance, even if no other means is available to rectify past discrimination.

This effort to tie the hands of the judiciary branch of government sparked a filibuster in the last session, but supporters of the amendment mustered the 60 votes needed to limit debate.

NEWSPAPER GUILD'S Heywood Broun Award winner William Ritz of Denver Post is congratulated by Daniel Schorr, right, one of the contest judges. Ritz earned the prize, including a $1,000 check, for a series of articles exposing the "ripoff" of billions of dollars in oil from fields owned by Indian tribes and state and federal governments.

Series on Oil Ripoffs Wins Newspaper Guild Award

More than 80 articles exposing the loss of billions of dollars in oil fields owned by Indian tribes and state and federal governments earned Denver Post reporter William R. Ritz, the Newspaper Guild's Heywood Broun Award for 1981.

The award—$1,000 for Ritz and a citation for the newspaper—was presented at a luncheon at the National Press Club the opening day of the Guild executive board's winter meeting.

Ritz's entry was selected from among 154 in the annual competition, established 41 years ago in memory of the Guild's founding president.

WHILE MANY of the entries helped right a wrong or correct an injustice, major criteria for the award, the focus of Ritz's "superb" articles included an injustice "peculiarly relevant to our time—a large-scale injustice involving the ripoff of oil from Indian leases," the judges said in announcing their choice.

Ritz's articles and his year-long investigation of problems in the oil fields were touched off last January when he went to Wyoming to investigate complaints by the Shoshone and Arapaho Indian tribes that oil was being stolen from their leases.

By year's end, Ritz, the Post's energy writer, had uncovered patterns of:

- Thefts of up to $6 billion a year in crude oil from oil fields for sale to refineries, marine terminals and petro-chemical plants.
- Thefts of up to $1 billion a year in drilling and production equipment, nourishing a thriving black market that sometimes sells equipment back to theft victims.
- Delinquent royalty payments by a dozen oil companies for crude oil pumped from Indian, federal and state lands totalling more than $8 million.
- Half-hearted efforts by the U.S. Geological Survey to assure payment of the billions of dollars in oil royalties due Indian tribes, state and federal governments.
- Inadequate control of their own oil fields by virtually all oil-producing states.

THE PROBLEMS Ritz documented brought creation of a federal commission to investigate them and recommend solutions, triggered probes by House and Senate committees, investigations by three states and several indictments and pleas of guilty to oil theft.

Judges of this year's award entries were: Daniel Schorr, senior correspondent for Cable News Network; Georgie Anne Geyer, syndicated columnist and author; and Albert A. Eisele, former Washington correspondent and now with the Center for National Policy.

Real Earnings Of Workers Slump 3.3%

The buying power of the American worker's paycheck slipped 3.3 percent last year despite a moderation of inflation.

Consumer prices rose 8.7 percent during 1981, down from 12.4 percent the previous year and the smallest increase since 1977. But wages continued to trail prices, although the loss in buying power was less than the 4.8 percent decline workers suffered the previous year.

A WORKER with three dependents earning the average factory wage had "real" earnings—takehome pay expressed in 1977 dollars—of $146.29 in December. That was $4.92 less than a year earlier. A single worker with no dependents had a $3.87 loss by the same measurement.

In the month to month tally, real earnings were down five-tenths of 1 percent from November to December and prices were up three-tenths of 1 percent. A drop in hours worked helped push down earnings.

The slowing of the inflation rate was attributed largely to the pressure of recession, ample harvests, an actual decline in meat prices, and moderate fuel price increases despite the decontrol of domestic oil prices.

RISING JOBLESSNESS and weak growth in overall personal income reduced consumer demand over the year, thus taking pressure off prices. The Bureau of Labor Statistics, which reported on the latest price rises, issued a list of city inflation rates indicating that prices rose by the smallest amounts in those communities hardest hit by the recession, notably Detroit, Chicago and Cleveland.

The 8.7 percent rise in the CPI for 1981 followed surges of 12.4 percent in 1980, 13.3 percent in 1979, 9 percent in 1978, and 6.8 percent in 1977. The biggest price break last year was in food and beverage prices, which rose 4 percent, or less than half the 10.1 percent jump in 1980.

FOUR OF THE seven major categories measured by the CPI, however, rose more than average for 1981. Medical care and transportation costs were up 11.3 percent over the year. Housing became 10 percent more expensive, and a miscellaneous category of goods and services went up 9.2 percent.

For December alone, food and beverage costs rose four-tenths of 1 percent, about the same as in October and November. Howeownership costs rose a slight two-tenths of a percent, largely due to a 1.2 percent increase in property taxes.

Medical care costs were up seven-tenths of 1 percent in December. Clothing and upkeep declined one-tenth of a percent. Entertainment prices were unchanged.

Kirkland Sees Federal Cuts Weakening Voluntary Efforts

New York—Active government leadership "in securing social justice and providing a real safety net for the needy" stimulates citizens to support private community services agencies, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland said in a message to a March of Dimes audience here.

"A humane government is an instrument forged by caring citizens as an expression of their finest social impulses," Kirkland stressed in a speech accepting the March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation's Franklin Delano Roosevelt Memorial Award. The address was delivered by AFL-CIO Community Services Director Walter G. Davis when a transportation delay prevented Kirkland from attending the award ceremony.

KIRKLAND NOTED that President Roosevelt and his successors Truman, Kennedy and Johnson "took seriously the constitutional obligation of government to promote the general welfare, as well as to provide for the common defense."

Their actions, he said, put federal resources to work "in the war against poverty, hunger, ignorance, hatred and disease," and "inspired and encouraged" individuals and voluntary organizations to help the needy.

He charged that the Reagan Administration is pursuing a radically different philosophy, stripping away protections "from the consequences of an uncontrolled market economy" and dismantling social programs established over the last 50 years.

KIRKLAND POINTED out that despite the Administration's "preaching" about "voluntarism" and the responsibilities of private citizens to support private agencies, "we are also being told that no citizen has any right to expect any help or concern from his government" and that "government is a thing apart that has nothing to do with the people except to distribute tax money to the Fortune 500."

Cuts in public health programs increase the burdens on private agencies, Kirkland pointed out. The work of organizations such as the March of Dimes will be made harder by cuts in such programs as prenatal and nutrition aid for young mothers, pediatric care and aid to families with dependent children, he said.

THROUGH SUCH cuts, he observed, "the Administration is in effect guaranteeing an increase in birth defects, malnutrition and other handicaps that will afflict the next generation."

Kirkland said tax cuts that enable the wealthy to keep more of their income for personal use "tempt those most able to give to give less" at a time when contributions are most needed. He added that inflation and unemployment are also "increasing the pain of sacrifice" among workers.

Although the resources of private agencies and the AFL-CIO Community Services network will be severely strained, Kirkland said, "the Administration's bad example" will not change the national concern for helping the needy or the labor movement's belief that "through organization, the weak and the poor can help themselves, and protect themselves from the powerful and the greedy."

MEMORIAL AWARD of the March of Dimes, named in honor of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, was given to AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland in recognition of labor's support for the agency whose efforts eradicated polio and are now fighting birth defects. From left, are March of Dimes President Charles Massey; James Roosevelt, son of the late president; AFL-CIO Community Services Director Walter G. Davis who accepted in Kirkland's behalf at a banquet in New York; and Harry Green, son of former AFL President William Green and March of Dimes chairman emeritus.

Stronger Sanctions

'Further Steps' Urged Against Poland, Soviets

(Continued from Page 1)

unions had been drawn up in 21 cities.

In addition to the U.S. events, reports from the State Dept. indicated public assemblies and other shows of support were being planned in at least a dozen other countries, including Britain, West Germany, Japan, Iceland, Canada, Spain, Denmark, Belgium, Austria, Italy, Korea, and the Netherlands.

The largest U.S. demonstration was planned in Chicago, where an estimated 600,000 Polish-Americans reside. Slated to participate in the program at the International Amphitheater were Kirkland, Secretary of State Alexander Haig, Longshoremen's President Thomas W. Gleason, President Aloysius A. Mazewski of the Polish-American Congress, and Msgr. George G. Higgins of Catholic University, who attended Solidarity's national congress last year.

SEC.-TREAS. Thomas R. Donahue was set to address another big rally in New York City, along with Gov. Hugh Carey, Mayor Edward Koch, Teachers President Albert Shanker, AFL-CIO Regional Director Michael Mann, and Chairman Bayard Rustin of the A. Philip Randolph Institute.

Other rallies were scheduled in Cleveland, Boston, Fort Worth, Houston, Denver, Milwaukee, San Francisco, Detroit, Buffalo, New Castle, Pa., Sacramento, Calif., Columbus, Ohio, New Haven, Conn., Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Washington, D.C., Minneapolis, and Yonkers, N.Y.

In many cities, mayors and governors planned to issue proclamations declaring Jan. 30 International Solidarity Day and pledging support for the Polish workers. In addition to labor leaders, scheduled speakers included representatives of Polish-American groups and, in certain cities, Solidarity members who were out of Poland when the junta headed by Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski imposed military rule on the country's 35-million inhabitants last month.

Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish leaders were to join with Kirkland at a noon Jan. 29 press conference at AFL-CIO headquarters to detail the support activities of the American religious community in behalf of the Polish workers. They included Msgr. Francis J. Lally of the U.S. Catholic Conference, Dr. David Preus of the American Lutheran Church, Rabbi Alexander Schindler of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, Methodist Bishop D. Frederick Wertz of Washington, D.C., and Rabbi Israel Miller of the National Jewish Community Relations Advisory Council.

IN CANADA, the Canadian Labour Congress planned demonstrations of support in Ottawa and in other major cities.

The Icelandic Federation of Workers planned a major Polish workers' fund-raising effort in connection with rallies. The German Trade Union Federation, one of the first European labor federations to castigate the Polish government for its crackdown on Solidarity, planned demonstrations at both the national and local levels.

In Tokyo, ICFTU President P. P. Narayanan and Gen.-Sec. Otto Kersten were listed as key speakers at a Solidarity Day demonstration planned by the Japanese Confederation of Labor (Domei). Belgium's two major trade union centers, the Socialist Trade Union Federation and the Catholic Trade Union Federation, planned vigils in front of the Polish embassy in Brussels to protest the continuing imprisonment of Polish union leaders.

PICKET LINE at the Soviet consulate in San Francisco demands freedom for imprisoned members of Poland's Solidarity trade union federation. That's the message of the sign carried by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue, right. With him in the front row are John Curtis, western director of the American Trade Union Council on Histadrut, and John F. Henning, center, executive secretary-treasurer of the California AFL-CIO. Members of the Polish-American community took part in the demonstration, which called for stepped-up sanctions against the Soviet Union as the instigator of the oppression.

Labor Presses Moves to Foster Creation of Jobs

(Continued from Page 1)

- Cancel the newly-enacted "oil windfall profits tax giveaways to wealthy oil royalty holders."

OSWALD NOTED that an estimated 1.2 million persons aren't counted in the official unemployment tally because they have "stopped looking for jobs because the needed jobs don't exist."

But even the official count of 9.5 million unemployed "is the iargest number of jobless since the Depression of the 1930s," he testified.

Labor's alternative to the Reagan program, he insisted, can "stop the economic waste" of recession "and put America back on the road to full employment and healthy economic growth."

Reagan's Corporate Tax Cut Poses State Revenue Pinch

Annapolis, Md.—States with tax laws linked to the federal pattern face shrinking revenues and compounded inequities, the Maryland AFL-CIO warned at a legislative hearing.

Maryland is one of a number of states that use federal definitions to determine income subject to the state's corporate and individual income tax. State AFL-CIO President Thomas Bradley urged that the tie be loosened to avoid duplicating the damage done by the Reagan Administration's tax changes at the federal level.

HE URGED the state senate's Budget & Tax Committee to make needed changes in state law to prevent a shift in the tax burden from corporations to low-income and middle-income households.

Bradley was accompanied at the hearings by Arnold Cantor, assistant director of the national AFL-CIO Dept. of Economic Research and the federation's tax policy specialist. The AFL-CIO witnesses warned of the needless revenue loss that would result from copying the changes in the depreciation formula made in the federal tax law.

The fast writeoff of the value of property and equipment "totally destroys the concept of business income for tax purposes," Bradley testified. He said the revenue the state loses "ends up subsidizing investments that would take place anyway, providing cash to buy up other companies, increasing dividends, investing overseas, speculating or financing relocations that destroy jobs and blight local communities."

IN MARYLAND, the AFL-CIO testimony noted, conformity to the federal depreciation system will cost the state $77 million a year in corporate income tax losses by 1986 and more than double that amount if the tax returns of unincorporated businesses are included.

The AFL-CIO witnesses urged the legislature not to be intimidated by "dire threats of plant shutdowns and relocations," noting that "study after study has shown that state taxes do not affect plant location decisions."

Bradley and Cantor also urged the legislature not to match the federal government's tax exclusion for funds invested in individual retirement accounts (IRAs).

"UPPER INCOME individuals will merely receive added windfalls for continuing to do what they are already doing —building up their bank accounts," Bradley noted.

Ironically, the AFL-CIO witnesses noted, Maryland does not copy the more progressive feature of federal tax law. Thus, conforming to the Reagan Administration tax changes "amounts to the acceptance of all that's bad in the federal structure and the rejection of the good," they pointed out.

OSHA Assailed on Farm Standard Delay

A coalition of labor, industry, health professionals, insurance companies and consumer and environmental groups has sharply criticized Labor Dept. efforts to delay a field sanitation standard for farm workers.

Representatives of the Coalition for Health and the Environment warned at a press conference that the Occupational Safety & Health Administration's failure to require drinking water, portable toilets and handwashing facilities for farm workers is threatening the health of some five million agricultural workers and the public.

As the result of a suit filed by the National Congress of Hispanic American Citizens and individual farm workers, the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia last Oct. 30 ordered Labor Sec. Raymond Donovan and OSHA to complete a field sanitation standard within 18 months. The Labor Dept. promptly appealed the decision, a move which may stall the standard another few years.

OSHA chief Thorne G. Auchter told the court the agency intended to issue a standard, but it would take another five years to complete studies and develop a standard because the agency has other priorities.

Margaret Seminario, industrial hygienist for the AFL-CIO charged that Auchter's "other priorities" apparently include weakening the cotton dust, lead, medical records access and cancer standards, and these are the reasons OSHA "cannot spare the time" to work on field sanitation.

OSHA's delay on field sanitation "marks another failure by the Reagan Administration in carrying out its duty to protect the health and safety of American workers," she said at the press conference.

U.S. District Judge June L. Green, in her strongly worded decision against the Labor Dept. and OSHA, said there is a consensus of expert medical opinion and evidence that "significant health hazards" result from working without adequate drinking water under hot weather conditions and from the lack of toilet and handwashing facilities. She cited urinary tract infections, parasitic and infectious diseases, heat exhaustion, heat stroke and pesticide poisoning.

Chiding OSHA for "irrational" and "bad faith" delays in developing the standard, Judge Green said OSHA's timetables for such a simple standard "belong in Alice in Wonderland's tales: each step forward brings us two steps backward."

She cited a report to OSHA by the National Institute for Occupational Safety & Health which said that requiring proof of a causal relationship between lack of basic sanitation and increased disease and health disorders is "asking OSHA to reinvent a wheel that has been rolling for approximately 130 years."

Only eight states currently require growers to provide sanitary facilities: California, Texas, Connecticut, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Oregon and Idaho. Enforcement of state laws requires prosecution at the county level.

However, the coalition said there have been no county prosecution cases, and the state standards are not being enforced. For this reason and because other major agricultural states, such as Florida, have yet to require sanitation standards, the coalition said it will continue to support the plaintiffs in the case aganst the Labor Dept. and to push OSHA for a federal standard.

British Joblessness Climbs to New Peak

London—Unemployment in Britain topped the 3-million mark in January for the first time ever, resulting in angry outcries against Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and her Conservative Party.

The government reported that joblessness, unadjusted for seasonal variations, totaled 3,070,621, or 12.7 percent of the British labor force, up from 2,940,703, or 12.2 percent in December. On a seasonally adjusted basis, the January rate was 11.7 percent, compared with 11.5 percent last month.

Seasonally adjusted joblessness has risen every month for more than two years in Britain under Thatcher's monetarist policies and budget cutbacks. Her programs are similar in principle and concept to those of the Reagan Administration, whose policies have led to a near post-World War II record 8.9 percent jobless rate in the United States.

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

1/30/82

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII | Saturday, February 6, 1982 | No. 5

World-Wide Rallies Back Poles In Struggle Against Oppression

1,000 WASHINGTON MARCHERS carrying the banner of the Polish labor union federation on the Day of International Solidarity wound their way to Lafayette Park in front of the White House, where they draped the banner around the statue of Polish Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko, a hero in the American Revolution. The Washington march and rally were among dozens across the country and the world in support of free trade unionists in Poland.

Free Unions Hail Stand Of Solidarity

By James M. Shevis

Thousands upon thousands of free workers around the world rallied and demonstrated on a Day of International Solidarity to declare unwavering support of the Polish workers and condemn their suppression by the Polish military regime.

The Jan. 30 demonstrations, demanding an end to the martial law imposed on Poland Dec. 13 and the release of leaders of the Solidarnosc (Solidarity) labor movement, were in response to an appeal from exiled Solidarity leaders to the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions for the show of support.

"SOLIDARITY'S FIGHT, which is also a fight for its very existence and therefore for Polish workers—a fight that the Polish authorities can no longer conceal from the outside world—will be the spearhead of the international trade union campaign," the ICFTU said in a statement on behalf of its 130 affiliated organizations throughout the world.

"Our sisters and brothers in Poland are fully aware that, despite the government's efforts, they are not isolated."

The AFL-CIO, as a member of the ICFTU, joined Polish-American groups and religious organizations in sponsoring rallies, parades, vigils, and other events in support of the Polish workers in dozens of communities in the United States.

Abroad, there were gatherings in several British cities, in Tokyo, Vienna, Copenhagen, Brussels, The Hague, Berne, a number of Australian cities, and about 100 communities in West Germany.

"IN EVERY state of the union, in every major city of America, the Solidarnosc banner is now being raised," AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland said in Chicago

(Continued on Page 3)

Surge in Unemployment Spurs Emergency Aid

By David L. Perlman

An emergency bill to help states meet unemployment insurance payments and avoid further cuts in job services was being rushed to the House floor as the recession crisis worsened.

The $2.3 billion supplemental appropriation was requested by the Administration, which acknowledged that rising unemployment has knocked its earlier budget estimates askew.

MOST OF THE funds are earmarked for loans to the states to replenish depleted unemployment insurance reserves and to finance the federal share of extended benefit programs that are being triggered in state after state as the jobless rate mounts.

The emergency funding bill includes $210.7 million to stave off further closings of state employment offices and prevent layoffs of trained job counselors. It would also add $133 million for the staff needed to process a backlog of unemployment insurance claims.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr., who took the unusual step of testifying in support of the funding request, welcomed what he termed the Administration's "flip-flop" on employment services. But he criticized the "stupidity" of the earlier budget slashes that had forced cutbacks in job services "in the middle of a recession."

AN APPROPRIATIONS subcommittee headed by Rep. William H. Natcher (D-Ky.) approved the funding request by a unanimous vote on the same day it was received.

It then went on to adopt, with only one Republican dissent, a companion bill to add $123 million to the low-income energy assistance program, which helps needy households pay heavy winter heating bills.

The Administration is opposing restoration of funds cut from this program, but O'Neill insisted that the money is needed "because we have had a very hard winter and these funds have been cut too deep by the Administration."

HE TOLD the subcommittee that the people being helped are more than statistics. "They are the elderly and disabled. They are children, and working poor desperately trying to avoid welfare."

As for the Administration's contention that states can tap other resources if they run short of federal money for the pro-

(Continued on Page 8)

Interest Rate Rise Adds Fuel To Recession

A new boost in the prime lending rate of most commercial banks—from 15.75 to 16.5 percent—threatened to prolong the recession and further curtail jobs.

The increase in the rate banks charge their best corporate customers was attributed to Federal Reserve Board actions to make less money and credit available because of a recent spurt in the money supply. Tight-money policies are largely responsible for the nation's current recession, the second in two years.

High interest rates have devastated both the construction and the domestic automobile indusries. U.S. auto production last month plunged to 279,832 cars, down 38.5 percent from January 1980, and the

(Continued on Page 8)

OSHA Maps New Enforcement Cutbacks

By John R. Oravec

The Occupational Safety & Health Administration is initiating new cutbacks in enforcement activities with plans to shut down 41 offices and field stations, and by downgrading worker complaints on "extremely serious" hazards.

OSHA Administrator Thorne G. Auchter said it was essential to "delete the term 'extremely serious' from its criteria for inspecting nonformal complaints" because of the job safety agency's shrinking staff and Reagan Administration budget cuts.

WITH JUST 1,200 inspectors to cover some 3 million workplaces, Auchter insisted, "OSHA needs to concentrate its limited resources on answering first those complaints of employees who face the greatest, most immediate risk of injuries and illnesses."

A few days before the directive on OSHA's new complaint inspection policy was issued, Auchter announced plans to close 12 area offices, nine district offices and 20 field stations, with further reductions in needed enforcement personnel.

OSHA said the reduction in force will affect at least 250 positions, including those of inspectors, industrial hygienists and office back-up personnel.

BUT AFL-CIO Occupational Safety Director George H. R. Taylor said that an analysis of the staffing charts at the 41 offices and stations shows that 372 positions would be affected by the new cutbacks.

By his count, Taylor said, the shutdowns would wipe out the jobs of 142 occupational safety specialists, 84 industrial hygienists, 69 managers and supervisors, 56 clerical workers and 21 other staff workers.

IN A LETTER to congressional committees, Auchter said the "reorganization" of OSHA's field operations would be completed in six to nine months. He said the reorganization "will reflect both new balance among program activities and fiscal year 1982 budget reductions, including lower levels of staffing."

The 12 area offices listed for closing are Brooklyn, White Plains and Rochester, N.Y.; Newark, N.J.; Washington, D.C.; Akron, Ohio; New Orleans; Tulsa, Okla.; and Harlingen, Fort Worth, Tyler and Clear Lake City, Tex.

In addition to the closings, OSHA will downgrade the status of six area offices to district offices. They are Providence, R.I.; Richmond, Va.; Erie, Pa.; Savannah, Ga.;

(Continued on Page 7)

Marchers drape flag over Kosciuszko statue in Washington.

Tokyo march reflected worldwide support of free trade unionists for Solidarity.

Global Support for Solidarnosc

Jackson

Haig

Kirkpatrick

Houston workers join hands in support of Solidarnosc.

International Day of Solidarity, led in the United States by the AFL-CIO, drew thousands of demonstrators around the world to marches in support of the beleaguered Polish workers and in condemnation of the regime of martial law in Poland. Among the prominent speakers were Sec. of State Alexander Haig, who joined the rally in Chicago, and Sen. Henry Jackson (D-Wash.), and UN Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick, who addressed the gathering at AFL-CIO headquarters in Washington. The Jan. 30 demonstrations were held in response to an appeal from exiled leaders of Poland's Solidarity union to the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Demonstrators jam hall in Cleveland.

Solidarnosc flag is raised by Bakery Workers.

Chicago rally was largest of U.S. demontrations.

In Detroit, martial law decree was assailed.

Marchers carry protest to Polish consulate in New York City.

AFL-CIO and Polish-American officials lead San Francisco rally.

Rallies Back Polish Workers' Struggle

(Continued from Page 1)

at the largest American rally. "We raise that banner not only for Polish workers but for ourselves.

"It is our rights—the common property of mankind—that are being trampled in Poland, the rights we sought to make more secure for ourselves by securing them for others through such instruments as the Final Act of the Helsinki agreement, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and Convention No. 87 of the International Labor Organization for freedom of assembly which the Polish government signed," Kirkland declared.

"The Soviet Union and the Polish government have unilaterally violated and abrogated those agreements and obligations," he charged. "In so doing, they not only mean to extinguish the flame of freedom in Poland. They assault freedom itself. The lights that have gone out in Warsaw and Gdansk are weaker now in all the capitals of the West."

CHICAGO WAS chosen as the focal point of the U.S. rallies because of its strong labor heritage and its large Polish community. About 8,000 braved the severe cold to hear Kirkland and others condemn the communist governments of Poland and the Soviet Union for putting down workers' rights in those countries. Icy driving conditions kept thousands of others from the International Amphitheater event.

The Chicago rally heard a message from President Reagan which noted that "there is a spirit of solidarity abroad in the world today that no physical force can crush." The message was delivered by Sec. of State Alexander M. Haig, Jr., who in his own speech warned that, by ignoring the just demands of the Polish people, the Polish and Soviet governments "seem determined to plunge further into the abyss." He pledged that the United States "will not do business as usual with either Poland or the Soviet Union while repression in Poland continues."

WHILE HAIG did not raise the possibility of further U.S. sanctions against the Polish and Soviet governments, Kirkland and Longshoremen's President Thomas W. Gleason spoke directly to the point. Both called for sterner measures, including a grain embargo against the USSR.

"The time has come to call in the Polish debt, to stop all further credit to the Soviet bloc, and embargo the export of grain, goods, and factories to the Soviet Union," Kirkland declared.

Gleason said ILA members would consider stopping all Soviet shipping to and from the United States if the Reagan Administration takes no further action.

In Washington, at a special mass at St. Matthew's Cathedral, Roman Catholic Archbishop James A. Hickey denounced the "prolonged miseries of martial law" in Poland and asked Washingtonians to pray for Poles "deprived of their basic human rights to participate freely in the destiny of their country." In the audience was Zbigniew Brzezinski, national security adviser to former President Carter, as well as dozens of area union officials and leaders of local Polish and other East European ethnic groups.

About 1,000 marchers wound their way from the cathedral to Lafayette Park in front of the White House, where a Solidarity banner was draped around the statue of Polish Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko, who fortified Saratoga and West Point during the American Revolution.

AT THE RALLY which followed at AFL-CIO headquarters, Sen. Henry M. Jackson (D-Wash.) declared that "the national aspirations of a people cannot be destroyed even by the sophisticated weapons of a totalitarian state."

Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, noted "the colossal irony of the government of a so-called workers' state crushing the most important workers' movement of the post-World War II era," and accused the Soviet Union of presiding over, planning, and directing the harsh repression in Poland.

Ladies' Garment Workers President Sol C. Chaikin, an AFL-CIO vice president, told the rally that the Gdansk agreement signed by the Polish government and the Solidarity trade union federation in August 1980 "will go down in history as another Magna Carta, detailing the rights and privileges and needs of the working class of Poland."

IN KENSINGTON, Md., a Washington suburb, some 150 persons turned out at the headquarters of the Bakery, Confectionery & Tobacco Workers, where a Solidarnosc flag was hoisted. BCT President John DeConcini said the flag will fly as a symbol of freedom and justice for the Polish workers.

In New York, some 3,500 demonstrators assembled in midtown Manhattan to declare solidarity with the Polish workers. Following the rally, the crowd marched to the Polish consulate, led by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue, Regional Director Michael Mann, President Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., of the New York City Central Labor Council, other labor leaders and heads of Polish-American and religious groups.

Donahue's remarks stressed the role of the Soviet Union in the Polish crisis.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS outlined church activities on International Solidarity Day at a press conference at AFL-CIO headquarters led by Federation President Lane Kirkland. Special masses, vigils, and sermons highlighted the worldwide outpouring of support for Poland's embattled workers and their independent labor movement. With Kirkland are Methodist Bishop D. Frederick Wertz of Washington, D.C., left, and Msgr. Francis Lally of the U.S. Catholic Conference.

"The President has now twice said that if the partial sanctions imposed on the Soviet Union did not bring about the desired results—the end of martial law, the release of imprisoned union leaders, and the resumption of negotiations with Solidarity—that further steps would be taken," he observed. "There's been no progress toward those goals. It is time for the further sanctions on the Soviet Union."

New York City and the state of New York, like several other cities and states across the country, issued proclamations declaring Jan. 30 International Solidarity Day.

Detroit—Some 2,000 Solidarity supporters at a rally sponsored by the Metropolitan Detroit AFL-CIO, the Polish-American Congress, and the Roman Catholic Church heard Rep. Dennis M. Hertel (D-Mich.) call for reimposition of the grain embargo against the USSR if martial law in Poland is not ended by Mar. 1.

Sen. Donald W. Riegle, Jr. (D-Mich.) called upon the Administration to do more to mobilize U.S. allies in the West to take a stronger stand against the Polish and Soviet regimes for the crackdown. Metro AFL-CIO President Thomas Turner told the rally in suburban Hamtramck that the 1930s "should have taught us it isn't enough to just wring our hands when oppression is imposed on a nation."

Boston—About 500 people gathered at a rally in suburban Dorchester to hear speeches by Gov. Edward King, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.), Cardinal Humberto Medeiros, Boston Mayor Kevin White, Polish exile Stanislaw Baranczak, and others.

Kennedy told the crowd, "What we are seeing in Poland is repression by proxy. It is the dark work of a regime and an army acting under the shadow of Soviet bayonets."

Dallas-Fort Worth—A sudden thunderstorm drove an outdoor rally into a hall in downtown Fort Worth, where a crowd of about 250 listened to speeches and sang "Solidarity Forever."

Pittsburgh — Steelworkers President Lloyd McBride called for "the strongest kind of economic and diplomatic sanctions" against the Soviet Union until martial law in Poland is lifted and Solidarity is restored as a labor union.

Columbus, Ohio—A Solidarity banner was draped over the state Capitol at a rally that heard Gov. James A. Rhodes, Roman Catholic Bishop Edward J. Herrmann, Ohio AFL-CIO President Milan Marsh, and others. The massive red-and-white banner representing the colors of Poland and Solidarity was erected by members of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the Sheet Metal Workers, and will fly throughout February.

Cleveland—More than 450 trade unionists and Polish-Americans jammed the Alliance of Poles Hall at a rally sponsored by the Cleveland AFL-CIO and the Auto Workers. Nearly 150 of the demonstrators marched two miles in the rain to get there. President Richard E. Jablonski of the 50,000-member Union of Poles brought the crowd to its feet when he declared, "May a free Poland live, and may a free Walesa live."

Houston—Iron Workers President John H. Lyons shared a speaking program with five Polish sailors, members of Solidarity who jumped the Polish freighter Zabrze in the port of Houston in December just after martial law was declared in their homeland.

"This is the way we are protesting, physically, here and now," said Antoni Sczepowski, the Zabrze's first officer, who thanked Americans for their support and understanding for what is going on in Poland.

Milwaukee—About 500 people at a rally at American Serb Hall heard Milwaukee Circuit Court Judge Robert Miech protest the Jaruzelski junta's actions against the Polish workers in their struggle for democracy. His speech was taped for broadcast over Radio Free Europe. Other speakers included President Eugene Kaluzny of the Wisconsin division of the Polish-American Congress.

Denver — Several hundred Solidarity supporters gathered in the parking lot of the Denver Labor Center and cheered remarks by Gov. Richard Lamm, Sen. Gary Hart (D-Colo.), Reps. Timothy E. Wirth (D-Colo.) and Patricia Schroeder (D-Colo.), Denver Catholic Bishop George Evans, and Henry Podzinski, a leader in the city's Polish community.

Hart said it was crucial that free people around the world respond to the plight of the Poles who draw courage from such rallies. Schroeder said the Polish workers had "blown the whistle that their country was a class society," rather than the classless one claimed by communist rhetoric.

San Francisco — Executive Sec.-Treas. John F. Henning of the California AFL-CIO said the labor rally was held in front of Bank of America's international headquarters to demonstrate against the bank's monetary policies, which indicate it is more concerned about preserving its investment than in supporting the Polish people's demands for freedom from an oppressive government. Bank of America is the biggest U.S. lender to Poland, he noted.

Other rallies took place in Philadelphia, Los Angeles, Boise, Ida., Sacramento, Calif., Seattle, Jersey City, N.J., New Castle, Pa., Austin, Tex., Buffalo, N.Y., Lincoln, Neb., St. Louis, Syracuse, N.Y., and Omaha.

'Go Away! We're All Happy Here!'

An Economic House of Cards

PIECE BY PIECE, the Reagan Administration's economic house of cards is falling apart. The White House keeps trying to shore up its shaky structure, but the facts of life keep intruding.

The newest leap in the unemployment statistics is simply the most poignant in the long line of bad bulletins that disrupt the Administration's charade.

In the real world, more and more men and women are being forced out of work because of cruel policies that are so senseless they had to be given a new title, Reaganomics.

Record high unemployment for the post-depression era now joins record low housing construction as a fact of life.

Just this week, the nation's big banks, usually anxious to please such an accommodating Administration, started pushing their interest rates back toward the record high level attained last year.

IT IS NO WONDER that businesses are postponing or cancelling their big investments which were supposed to spur recovery under the fuzzy precepts of Reaganomics. The businessmen are finding out what working people discovered earlier—paying interest rates like 15 to 20 percent is just too expensive whether you are trying to buy a house, a car or a new factory.

Even those lucky enough to get the banks' best rates—say 16 percent—find the cost of their loans equals the principal in only five years. There are many examples now where the cost of borrowing money for a new enterprise is more expensive than the other essential elements that could make it function, including labor.

Faced with these grim facts of life, Treasury Sec. Regan this week said it was a "temporary phenomenon." He predicted that the economy would come "roaring back" by late spring.

Well, waiting for the Reagan Recovery from the Reagan Recession which was brought on by Reaganomics is a little like waiting for the return of Halley's Comet. We would all like to see it, but we're not sure we can survive that long.

The Administration had to backtrack on just one crucial front this week. Faced with the incredible contradiction of firing employment counsellors at the same time the jobless lines were getting longer, the Administration did a turn-about and agreed to restore funds rashly cut from the U.S. Employment Service.

The AFL-CIO is in the position of saying, "we told you so." All the warnings organized labor and its allies started issuing a year ago have been proved correct.

But that offers no satisfaction. We are waiting for those in the Administration who have been proved wrong to come up with a recovery program; a program that will take account of the millions of working people and under-privileged Americans who have been made victims of the selfish policies of the narrow clique huddled around President Reagan.

WE TAKE satisfaction in only one thing now, and that is the fact that more and more observers with greater patience than we have are making criticisms that go to the heart of the matter.

This week, for instance, Charles W. Bailey, a former Washington correspondent who is now editor of the Minneapolis Tribune wrote: "The trouble with this Administration is that it smells of greed. That is not an appropriate aroma for this kind of country."

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
LANE KIRKLAND, President
THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer
Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
Jerry Wurf*	S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward
Murray H. Finley	Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts
Sol C. Chaikin	Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco
Charles H. Pillard	J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride
David J. Fitzmaurice	Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps
Wm. W. Winpisinger	William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell
John DeConcini	Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss
William Konyha	Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney
Douglas A. Fraser	Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield
Barbara Hutchinson	Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto

*Deceased

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop, John R. Oravec
David L. Perlman, James M. Shevis

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, February 6, 1982 No. 5

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

LABOR PRESS AFL-CIO/CLC

'You Gotta Be Kidding!'

Reneging on Promises

Move to Cut Veterans' Benefits Could Prove Blow to Recruiting

By Gus Tyler

SPEAKING OF AMERICA'S war veterans, the administrator of the Veterans Administration, Robert Nimmo, said recently: "What has to be recognized by those people, if they want to be realistic, is that there are more words in the dictionary than 'more, more, more.' "

What provoked the blunt statement about "those people" from a man whose official responsibility it is to represent "those people" is the growing concern of the Administration about continuing medical services for ex-combatants who have reached the age of 65.

ACTUALLY, when Nimmo talks about the veterans wanting "more," he is—in this instance—choosing the wrong word. The ex-GIs are not asking for "more," they merely would like to hold on to what they have.

The practice has been to provide free medical care to all veterans once they reach 65—with no strings attached. Veterans would like to see this continued.

The Administration would like to end the service. The government must know that in the very near future, veterans will be an absolute majority of all males over 65.

THE VETERANS' complaint is not that they are not getting "more" but that they are threatened with "less." Indeed, in the light of recent cutbacks by the government in a wide variety of services, the veterans might very well say that "those people" ought to recognize that "there are more words in the dictionary than 'less, less, less.' "

Nimmo's scolding the veterans is particularly irksome to the more knowledgeable former "heroes" who know that the government is quite prepared to give "more, more, more" to its favored classes. The great tax reductions of 1981 were a giveaway to the affluent, more and more for those who have the most.

INDEED, precisely this exemption of the richest from carrying their proper share of the tax load is the reason the Administration is trying to balance the books at the expense of the less advantaged—including veterans.

The discontinuance of medical services for the senior citizen veteran is not only a blow to those who once wore the uniform, it is also a blow to the armed forces of today.

The quality of our defense depends as much on the caliber and morale of the men and women in uniform as on the range and fire power of our missiles. To improve the human element in our services, the government has been trying to dream up all sorts of inducements to recruit better enlistees.

BUT HOW effective can such recruitment be when young people see how shabbily the government is treating its older veterans?

Even worse, why should potential volunteers believe that anything they are promised will come to pass when they see the government withdrawing benefits that were already established for veterans?

Copyright 1982, Gus Tyler Columns

For Polish Workers, 'No More . . . No Less'

What we want for Polish workers is no more and no less than we want for ourselves.

We view the rights of the members of Solidarnosc to form and support free trade unions and to negotiate on equal terms with their employer as linked to our own rights, and to the rights of free men and women everywhere.

We intend to continue in every forum available to us:

- To press for the immediate release of trade unionists imprisoned in Poland because they dare to defend trade union rights and human rights.
- To press for the restoration of those trade union rights and for the full freedom of association and freedom of expression those rights require.
- To press for a Polish direction which will ensure the ability of Poles to decide for themselves how their union and their nation shall be run.

Long live Solidarnosc!

—From address by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue at rally sponsored by the New York City AFL-CIO, Jan. 30, 1982.

'Not Enough to Light a Candle'

'Time to Call In Polish Debt,' Kirkland Tells Chicago Rally

Following is an address by AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland at rally for solidarity with the Polish people, Jan. 30, 1982, Chicago.

TODAY WE SAY to the betrayers of the Polish nation:

You speak only for your masters in Moscow. From them, and not from the Polish people, comes your illicit power.

The true voices of the Polish nation huddle in concentration camps. They hunger on food lines. They nourish Poland's proud heritage from the pulpit of her historic church.

The thousands here assembled are part of a worldwide movement—not of governments but of plain people who cherish, for themselves, the rights claimed by Solidarnosc. They are gathering today in dozens of American cities from coast to coast, and in scores of cities and towns overseas at the call of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

In every state of the union, in every major city of America, the Solidarnosc banner is now being raised.

We raise that banner, not only for Polish workers but for ourselves.

THERE ARE some small souls who argue that Solidarity "went too far," victim to a romantic, unrealistic illusion of freedom that is supposedly peculiar to Poles.

But it was not a Pole who asked: "Is life so dear or peace so sweet as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery?"

That was a Virginia gentleman named Patrick Henry.

It was not a Solidarity "extremist" who said, "It is better to die on your feet than to live on your knees."

That was a Mexican, Emilio Zapata.

It was not a Polish poet who said, "Before I'll be a slave, I'll be buried in my grave and go home to my Lord and be free."

Those are the words of the old spiritual, "Oh Freedom," which inspired our civil rights movement in this country.

JUST BECAUSE they are human, Poles do not like pistols at their heads—any more than we do.

It is our rights—the common property of mankind—that are being trampled in Poland—the rights we sought to make more secure for ourselves by securing them for others, through such instruments as the Final Act of the Helsinki Agreement, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and Convention 87 of the International Labor Organization for freedom of assembly, which the Polish government signed.

The Soviet Union and the Polish government have unilaterally violated and abrogated those agreements and obligations. In so doing, they not only mean to extinguish the flame of freedom in Poland; they assault freedom itself. The lights that have gone out in Warsaw and Gdansk are weaker now in all the capitals of the West.

The yearning for freedom knows no international boundaries; nor do the enemies of freedom.

WHATEVER GROUND we cede to the enemies of human rights, we surrender of our own freedom.

The democratic governments of the West are entrusted by their people with the responsibility for protecting the people's rights.

They do not meet that responsibility when they permit corporations to provide technology for the Soviet war machine.

They do not meet that responsibility when they allow big grain companies to feed the Red Army.

They do not meet that responsibility when they permit a steady flow of credits to those who keep Lech Walesa imprisoned, Andrei Sakharov in exile, thousands in psychiatric prisons, countless more in labor camps, and whole peoples enslaved.

If the western governments feed, clothe and traffic with the jailers of Lech Walesa and the keepers of the Gulags now extended to Poland, they will sell out any of us.

THE AFL-CIO welcomed the sanctions announced by the President after martial law was declared. He told us then that he was prepared to take further steps unless martial law was lifted, those imprisoned released, and the Gdansk agreement fufilled.

But oppression has grown worse, not better. The Jaruzelski junta threatens to prolong martial law indefinitely and to deport the leaders of Solidarnosc. It has sentenced workers to jail terms for exercising the right to strike. It has refused to negotiate with Solidarnosc.

What, then, are we waiting for?

The time has come to call in the Polish debt, to stop all further credit to the Soviet bloc, and to embargo the export of grain, goods and factories to the Soviet Union.

IT IS NOT enough to light a candle for Poland, or to proclaim "Let Poland Be Poland."

Poland can be Poland when the West is true to itself and gathers the will and the united capacity to defend its own values.

Then, and only then, Poland will be Poland again, and there will be no need to light a candle. The bright flame of freedom will light the world.

Solidarnosc lives!

Union Membership Up

Gain in NLRB Votes Reflects Improved Organizing Outlook

THE ANNUAL REPORT of the National Labor Relations Board showing unions winning a bigger share of representation elections in 1980 than in the previous year is particularly encouraging, given the intense activity of professional union-busting consultants, AFL-CIO Organization & Field Services Director Alan Kistler said.

Pointing out that the bargaining units won in those elections were also larger, Kistler said the combination of those gains has produced an overall increase of union membership. He predicted that as organizers continued to sharpen their skills to counter the tactics of the anti-union consultants and as unions commit more resources to organizing, the success rate will continue to improve.

Questioned by reporters on the network radio interview Labor News Conference, Kistler said the sagging national economy cuts both ways in the effort of workers to form a union. He said employers are fighting harder to keep unions out, and workers can be intimidated by the severity of employer actions.

"One of the favorite weapons is to fire people" who show an interest in organizing a union, Kistler noted. He said the NLRB report showed more than 10,000 illegal firings over the period covered, and workers who see unemployment spreading throughout the economy may be "somewhat less willing to risk the job they currently hold" in an organizing effort.

"ON THE OTHER hand," he observed, "when the economy takes a severe downturn," workers realize there is a greater need for the security. "They see, in collective bargaining and union representation, a very important self-help measure and turn toward it, perhaps more so than if they had no such concerns."

The concentrated, effective voice of collective bargaining is a strong argument for union representation in the current period of economic distress, he declared.

By Press Associates, Inc.

AMONG THE KEY PROPOSALS outlined by President Reagan in his State of the Union message was the creation of so-called "urban enterprise zones" in the nation's troubled inner cities.

The enterprise zone idea is to designate geographical areas, such as New York's blighted South Bronx, where businesses would receive special tax breaks as an incentive to set up shop or expand in these pockets of very high unemployment.

Legislation to establish such "experimental" enterprise zones was first introduced in 1980 and re-introduced in the current session of Congress. Its sponsors include Reps. Jack Kemp (R-N.Y.) and Robert Garcia (D-N.Y.). The idea also was a centerpice of candidate Reagan's urban policy during the presidential campaign.

One of the pending bills would allow businesses in enterprise zones to deduct 50 percent of their gross receipts from their taxable income.

THE BILL WOULD eliminate capital gains taxes for these businesses; provide them a refundable tax credit equal to 5 percent of the wage paid to hard-core unemployed, or CETA-eligible employees. It also would provide a refundable employee tax credit of 5 percent of wages for their employees if 50 percent of their services are performed within the zone.

A U.S. Chamber of Commerce official hailed enterprise zones as a possible "supply-side answer to our inner city problems." But, labor experts and others who have taken a hard look at enterprise zone proposals fear they amount to little more than a localized version of "trickle-down" economics.

AFL-CIO economist Arnold Cantor told a Senate Finance subcommittee last year that the proposals "add up to an array of tax reductions and other devices which directly or indirectly encourage a diminution of government revenues, programs, standards and safeguards."

CANTOR SAID THAT while organized labor "has no quarrel with the concept of targeted assistance, we believe it should be done directly and not in a fashion which has so much potential for inequity, waste and abuse." He said the proposed generous tax breaks could trigger tax avoidance schemes by businesses to shift their reported income into the zone.

One bill speaks in vague language about "streamlining" government requirements for businesses in the zones. "Does this mean local building codes, safety, health, sanitation and environmental standards, or state and local wage-hour and child protection laws?" asked a labor expert.

Another bill is more specific. It would permit a 90 percent reduction in employer and employee social security taxes for workers in the zone under age 21, and a 50 percent reduction for all other workers. This could induce employers to fire parents and hire their children.

THIS INDUCEMENT also would occur if a subminimum wage for teenagers is allowed in the zones, which the Administration reportedly has under consideration. While its advocates concede that enterprise zones are no panacea, there is great danger they will be viewed as a substitute for the kind of programs genuinely needed to attack chronic inner city joblessness.

Any further tax breaks for business must take place in a framework of a coordinated economic revitalization program, using the government's full range of tools, including job training, public facilities, and direct loans or grants.

America's once-great cities are in deep trouble and they need attention as an organic whole. "Gilding the ghetto" will do nothing to bring inner-city residents into the mainstream.

DESPITE INTENSE activity by professional union-busting consultants, unions won a bigger share of representation elections in 1980—the most recent NLRB reporting period—than in the preceding year, AFL-CIO Director of Organization & Field Services Alan Kistler, center, said on Labor News Conference. He pointed out also that the units won were larger, producing an overall gain in union membership. Kistler was questioned by Alan Adams, left, of Employment Relations Report and Drew Von Bergen of United Press International. The AFL-CIO produced public affairs program is aired weekly on Mutual radio.

SYMBOLIC THANKS to union members for supporting the fund-raising effort for a memorial to Vietnam war veterans is presented in a plaque to AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland by Jan Scruggs, president of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Fund. Scruggs said a letter from Kirkland to the federation's affiliates encouraging aid to the fund resulted in nearly $50,000 in contributions. Dedication of the memorial on the mall in Washington, D.C., is scheduled for Nov. 11, 1982. Additional contributions to assure construction are still needed.

Economy, Organizing Focus Of Southern Labor School

Gulfport, Miss.—Reagan economics, organizing and the political climate were the focus of the 1981 AFL-CIO Southern Labor School held here.

More than 80 officers and staff representatives of state and city central labor bodies took part in the school organized by a conference of state federation officers with the cooperation of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education.

BILL BECKER, president of the Arkansas AFL-CIO serves as president of the school, and its secretary-treasurer is Tennessee AFL-CIO President James G. Neeley. The 1981 session, held Dec. 6-14, drew the largest attendance since the program was established in 1952, AFL-CIO Education Director Dorothy Shields noted.

Panels discussed the impact of the Reagan Administration's economic policies on the American economy with emphasis on education, training and the construction industry proposals for changes in the role of the Occupational Safety & Health Administration.

Former Labor Sec. Ray Marshall discussed the impact of "Reaganomics" on the South. Steve Suitts, representative of the Southern Regional Council, a labor-supported research organization, pointed out that the federal budget cuts in social programs will be especially harsh in that region because other services, such as those provided by states, were already thin and often inadequate.

THE OUTLOOK for organizing in the South was examined by panels that included AFL-CIO Region V Director James Sala, Region I Director James Freeman and Robert Comeaux, AFL-CIO field staff representative who is directing the federation's Houston organizing campaign. Labor attorney James Youngdahl of Little Rock, Ark., explained the uses of law in organizing campaigns.

The value of the Equal Rights Amendment to women workers was emphasized by Sibal Taylor, assistant to the president of the Louisiana AFL-CIO, and threats to continued progress in civil rights legislation and action were covered in panel discussions led by the federation's civil rights director, William E. Pollard, and the department's southern area director, E. T. Kehrer.

COPE REGION V Director Dan Powell led discussion of legislative action and political campaigns, with Mississippi AFL-CIO President Claude Ramsey, Virginia AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Butch Foutz, and Neeley.

Becker, Florida AFL-CIO President Dan Miller, Louisiana AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Gordon Flory and Larry Smedley, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Social Security Dept., explained threats to workers' compensation and other social security protections.

Among other speakers were: Paperworkers' President Wayne Glenn, whose union recently moved its headquarters from New York to Nashville, Tenn.; Brad Dye, lieutenant governor of Mississippi; Lois Felder, assistant director, Food & Commercial Workers civil rights and women's affairs department; Dr. Aaron Henry, member of the Mississippi house of representatives; Earl Shinhoster, NAACP; and John Lewis, director, Voter Education Project.

Trade Defenses Held Inadequate For Soviet Bloc

The United States needs a more effective defense against unfair trade tactics by communist nations and other government controlled economies, the AFL-CIO told Congress.

Price tests applied to imports from free market nations simply don't work for controlled economies, Legislative Rep. Stephen Koplan stressed at Senate hearings.

HE URGED the International Trade subcommittee to develop more sophisticated tests of unfair pricing and to improve procedures for "complete and accurate reporting" of U.S. trade with controlled-economy nations.

Koplan charged that manipulated pricing and dumping tactics are being used to grab a bigger share of the U.S. market. Such tactics are succeeding, he warned, because existing safeguards are so inadequate.

Prices set by communist-bloc countries often have no relation to marketplace factors and production costs, he testified. Their aim is to penetrate the U.S. market, often with goods or products that aren't even sold in the country of their manufacture.

MONITORING of trade should include so-called "countertrade," Koplan said. This involves a commitment by a U.S. firm to market another country's products in the United States in an amount equal to that nation's purchases from the U.S. firm.

Such deals "are a form of barter that do not fit into the modest protection afforded by existing trade laws," Koplan noted. But the end result can be disruption of the U.S. market, he warned.

Manufacturing Sector Trails

'81 Contract Settlements Bring Higher Increases

Major collective bargaining settlements reached in 1981 in the private sector provided average first-year wage increases of 10.1 percent, compared with 9.5 percent in 1980, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

Measured over the life of the negotiated contracts, the wage gains were also higher than the year before, with increases averaging 8.1 percent annually compared with 7.1 percent for settlements reached in 1980.

MOST OF THE wage acceleration came in the nonmanufacturing sector, where first-year increases averaged 11.5 percent in 1981, up from 10.9 percent in 1980, BLS said. In the manufacturing sector, where the recession has hit many industries especially hard, the first-year increase edged down from 7.4 percent in 1980 to 7.3 percent in 1981.

For the first time, BLS noted, agreements resulting from unscheduled reopenings had a "noticeable effect" on the settlement data. In 1981, there were 36 such settlements, covering 368,000 workers. If the workers under those contracts were excluded from the data, the wage increase would have averaged 10.9 percent for the first year and 8.6 percent annually over the life of the contract, the bureau said. The settlement data do not include any wage hikes resulting from cost-of-living adjustments.

Altogether, settlements reached last year covered 2.3 million workers in 543 major collective bargaining units of 1,000 or more workers.

IN A SEPARATE BLS measure of total compensation, wages plus the value of benefits, key contracts covering 5,000 or more workers showed an average first-year increase of 11.3 percent last year compared to 10.4 percent in 1980. Measured over the full term of the agreements, these contracts provided average yearly gains of 7.1 percent.

Other highlights of the report:

- Settlements in the construction industry covered 25 percent of workers under agreements reached in 1981. Railroad settlements covered 10 percent, and settlements in the soft coal and retail food industries each covered 7 percent.
- Average first-year wage boosts were 13.5 percent in construction, 7.3 percent in manufacturing and 10.2 percent in nonmanufacturing, excluding construction.
- Contracts negotiated last year had an average duration of 29.5 months.
- Unscheduled contract reopenings resulted in additional wage increases for about 280,000 workers in the apparel industry. Wage and benefit concessions, on the other hand, were negotiated for 95,000 workers in the auto, airline, and meatpacking industries. About 67,000 workers were covered by agreements negotiated under contract expirations or scheduled reopeners that provided no wage change or decreases in the first contract year.

BLS POINTED OUT that because measures of wage settlements exclude possible future changes under cost-of-living clauses, they tend to be lower in settlements with COL clauses than in those without such clauses. First-year negotiated adjusments last year averaged 8.2 percent in pacts with COL clauses, compared to 10.8 perment in those without such clauses.

Wage increases over the life of the agreements averaged 5.5 percent annually for those with COL clauses, compared to 9.1 percent for those without COL clauses. Contracts with such clauses had an average duration of 35.7 months while those without such clauses averaged 27.3 months.

Some 612,000 workers were covered by COL clauses last year, about 27 percent of all those covered by settlements reached in 1981.

BLS also reported that about 995,000 workers will receive deferred wage increases averaging 4.6 percent during the first three months of 1982. Some 4.3 million workers in the private sector are scheduled to receive deferred wage increases at some time in 1982 that will average 6.3 percent—the highest average since 1971.

RWDSU Board Suspends Talks On Merger Plan

New York—The executive board of the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union has voted to suspend merger discussions with the Service Employees.

The RWDSU board said in a statement that many questions relating to the merger remain unresolved and that continued discussions at this time would be impeded because of time limitations due to the union's quadrennial convention, which opens in Washington May 29.

It also noted that contract negotiations covering more than 80,000 RWDSU members in food retailing, department stores and health care in the United States and Canada would require the full attention of board members.

"Therefore, we are suspending the merger discussions," the statement said. "After the convention and the settlement of these contracts we will re-evaluate our merger position."

A merger plan was initiated last April by the executive boards of the two unions. The SEIU has 675,000 members and the RWDSU 235,000.

Study Finds States Losers Under Reagan 'Federalism'

All 50 states will be losers under President Reagan's "new federalism," a study by the State, County & Municipal Employees concluded.

AFSCME researchers found that the Administration used a lower set of cost assumptions for programs it wants to turn over to the states than it did for the state savings on Medicaid funding the federal government would assume.

By the union's tally, states would be $17 billion in the hole in fiscal year 1984 if current services are maintained. By 1991, when the federal trust fund proposed for the transition period would be phased out, the states would be saddled with an $86 billion shortage.

AFSCME President Gerald W. McEntee said the Reagan plan would "either result in massive reductions of public services delivered by state and local government or massive increases in property taxes and state income taxes."

He termed the proposal a "Trojan horse" by Office of Management & Budget Director David Stockman for new budget cuts on top of $15 billion cut from state and local government assistance last year.

Auto Industry Negotiations Shift to Ford

Dearborn, Mich.—The Auto Workers and the Ford Motor Co. opened negotiations at the firm's headquarters here on a replacement contract for the current agreement that expires Sept. 14.

The bargaining got under way after talks with the nation's largest automaker, General Motors, were suspended. UAW President Douglas A. Fraser said the breakdown in the GM talks "means that there will be more layoffs. Things are going to be worse than they otherwise would have been."

THE HISTORIC negotiations mark the first time that the union and the industry have met so early to bargain on a pact to replace a current agreement. The companies sought the early negotiations in a search for solutions to the industry-wide slump.

Bargainers at the Ford negotiations set no deadline for conclusion of discussions during their three and one-half hour opening session, although industry observers said the talks likely would last two to three weeks. Ford, the No. 2 auto maker, is in a much weaker financial position than GM.

In proceeding with talks at Ford despite the breakdown at GM, union leaders hope to "put an end to outsourcing and layoffs," said UAW Vice President Donald Ephlin, director of the union's Ford department. "Outsourcing" means buying parts instead of making them, a practice Ford has used widely.

Ford has put forth a tentative proposal to address the union's job-security concerns, but neither side has disclosed specifics of the plan. Ford also has proposed a profit-sharing plan for workers.

OSHA Orders Further Slash In Enforcement

(Continued from Page 1)

Mobile, Ala., and Omaha, Neb. One district office, Corpus Christi, Tex., will be upgraded to an area office.

Under a continuing funding resolution adopted by the House last year, OSHA's fiscal 1982 budget is set at $192.5 million, reflecting a 12-percent cut by President Reagan as well as 4 percent more lopped off by Congress.

As a result of its new complaint inspection policy, OSHA said its field inspectors will respond only to those that indicate "imminent danger."

IN ADDITION to budget considerations, Auchter said the reason for elimination of "extremely serious" hazard complaints from its criteria was that the term was unclear and confused its field staff.

The AFL-CIO, in protesting the change in policy when it was first proposed last summer, said any confusion in the term could be cleared up by clarifying the usage.

In responding to the proposal, Taylor wrote Auchter: "By limiting automatic inspections to 'imminent dangers,' OSHA would run the risk of not responding to conditions which pose serious threats to health and safety.

"FOR EXAMPLE," Taylor said, "a nonformal complaint alleging conditions of over-exposure to lead without respirators would not be responded to with an inspection unless the employee also had blood levels of lead which posed an imminent danger. Such a policy would be extremely dangerous when dealing with life-threatening hazards which may not meet the definition of 'imminent danger,' and runs directly counter to the purposes" of the 1970 federal OSHA law.

Taylor said that OSHA initiated the new policy directive without responding directly to the federation's concerns.

GEORGIA SOLIDARITY DAY drew some 2,000 demonstrators to Atlanta Jan. 16 for a march to the state capitol organized by the State AFL-CIO and a coalition of civil rights, religious, consumer and pro-ERA groups. Marchers turned out from across the state in the face of snow storms, record cold and planted rumors that the march had been called off. They urged state lawmakers to respond to the needs of workers, consumers, the poor and the elderly.

Georgia's Union Members March To Prod 'Do-Nothing' Legislature

Atlanta—Nearly 2,000 people braved snow and icy cold for a march and rally organized by the Georgia AFL-CIO to spur state legislators to respond to the needs of workers.

The Georgia Solidarity Day march from Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium to the state capitol on Jan. 16 was swelled by union members and their supporters in civil rights, consumer and religious organizations across the state despite unusual snow, sleet, record cold temperatures and an attempt to sabotage attendance.

STATE AFL-CIO President Herbert H. Mabry said someone had tried to undermine the rally by calling statewide media and claiming the march had been cancelled. A number of television and radio stations carried the false message causing several unions to cancel plans to come to Atlanta, Mabry reported.

The demonstrators pressed for improvements in the state's unemployment compensation and workers' compensation programs, as well as for ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment, collective bargaining rights for public employees, decent housing, easier voter registration, consumer protections and a state budget giving high priority to the needs of the poor and elderly over business interests.

Kenneth Young, executive assistant to AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, told the marchers that the state's problems could be blamed on the "trickle-down effect" of the Reagan Administration's regressive social and economic policies.

IN ONLY ONE YEAR in office, he pointed out, the Administration produced the highest jobless rate since the end of World War II, with blacks and minorities the hardest hit.

The White House is paying little attention to ways to increase employment, Young charged. He called for rejection of "supply-side" economics that "gives to the rich and takes from all others," and rejection of the theory that government is "the enemy."

The Administration's cuts in federal job and training programs, health and nutrition, and other vital social programs only aggravate America's difficulties, Young said.

THESE CUTS, he charged, coupled with reductions in social security and unemployment benefits as well as "the wholesale abandonment of government regulations that protect the health and pocketbooks of workers and consumers" are a so-called liberation movement for those "who subscribe to the notion that it is the high duty of government to feed the fat cats and leave it to them to take care of the poor and the weak as they see fit."

The private sector is "unwilling and unable" to deal with social and economic problems, Young said, stressing that "social benefits must be paid for by society itself as our Constitution proclaims, not left to the charity of private and corporate largess."

He urged the demonstrators to look to Election Day 1982 as "Solidarity Day II" and to vote for public officials "who are committed to righting the wrongs of Reaganomics; who will work to heal the divisions being perpetuated upon the American people."

MABRY CALLED the march a "new beginning when working people will rise up and let the General Assembly know that we are unhappy with our representation in this state."

State legislators, he charged, "have not listened" to workers' phone calls, personal visits, letters and the presentation of facts about state problems. Instead, they have paid attention only to a "select minority of their constituents" including "monied business interests," Mabry declared.

"We are here today," he told the crowd, "to make the legislators take a second look at their constituency. We are here to finally make them listen to the majority, the working people of this state, and we shall be heard."

NORMAN HILL, president of the A. Philip Randolph Institute, told the marchers it is impossible for labor and other concerned groups to take the Administration's advice to "be patient and quiet" while hoping for its economic policies to work "because our very survival is at stake."

The voting records of elected officials will be monitored to determine whether they respond to the needs of working people and the poor, and those who don't "will have an opportunity to find out what unemployment is all about after Election Day," Hill told the demonstrators.

Prevailing Wage Laws Cited As Small Business Protection

The Davis-Bacon Act protects small contractors as well as their employees, the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. testified at Senate hearings.

Legislative Director Dan Mundy took issue with an opening statement by Subcommittee Chairman Don Nickles (R-Okla.) that "small business and the Davis-Bacon Act just don't mix."

MUNDY SAID the prevailing wage law gives well-managed small construction firms a chance to win government contracts on the basis of efficiency and productivity. Otherwise, he said, the competitive advantage would lie with "fly-by-night contractors" who base low bids on paying substandard wages to less competent workers.

Nickles is chairman of the Senate Labor subcommittee that has jurisdiction over the Davis-Bacon Act. But he presided in his role as chairman of a Small Business subcommittee that has no legislative powers.

The only government witness was the "advocacy counsel" of the Small Business Administration, Frank S. Swain, who told the panel that his testimony reflected only the views of the agency, and not the position of the Administration.

Swain termed the Davis-Bacon Act an example of "over-regulation" by government and suggested that contracts under $100,000 be exempt. The present coverage threshold is $2,000.

Mundy told the panel that virtually all of the record-keeping involved in compliance with the Davis-Bacon Act is also required by other federal laws, including the Fair Labor Standards Act and the Copeland Anti-Kickback Act. Thus, exclusion from Davis-Bacon would not eliminate burdensome paperwork.

He challenged the argument that minority workers would benefit if contractors didn't have to pay prevailing wages.

MUNDY TERMED that a "cynical argument" that "would permanently relegate such workers to the lower rungs of the economic ladder and undermine much of the gains they have made."

Excluding a large number of construction contracts from the law's coverage would set up "a double standard" for government construction and would induce artificial fragmentation of contracts to evade the intent of the law, he warned.

ITU Opens New Office For Canadian Members

Ottawa — The International Typographical Union has opened a Canadian national office here to expand services for its growing membership in Canada.

"This is the first time in the ITU's 128-year-old history that a national office has been established in Canada, and the development reflects a growing dynamism of the ITU in Canada," ITU President Joe Bingel said at a ribbon-cutting ceremony.

In the past five years, the union's Canadian membership has increased 20 percent, the union reported.

INTERNATIONAL DAY of Solidarity with Poland's workers included globe-girdling rallies in major cities. AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue in New York, left, charged that the Soviet Union sponsored the Polish government's crackdown on the Solidarity labor federation. In London, supporters of the Polish workers waved protest signs linking the USSR with the suppression in Poland. Demonstrations were also held in other countries. (Story, Page 1.)

Jobless Aid Bill Contains Added Funds for States

(Continued from Page 1)

gram, O'Neill countered that "helping them is a national responsibility."

At the hearings, questioning of Assistant Labor Sec. Albert Angrisani, the Administration's witness, revealed official projections of further increases in unemployment and the triggering of the extended benefits program in all but a handful of states before the end of the current fiscal year on Sept. 30, 1982.

AS PART OF the Reagan budget cuts, Congress last year ended the national trigger which previously made extended unemployment benefits available in every state during severe recessions.

Of 14 jurisdictions that now have extended benefit programs allowing unemployment insurance payments to continue for a total of 39 weeks, nine reached the trigger point during the past five weeks. The trigger point is based on a complex formula tied to the insured unemployment rate in each state over a 13-week cycle.

Indiana and North Carolina were added to the list on Feb. 1. Other jurisdictions currently covered are Alaska, Idaho, Mississippi, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Puerto Rico, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Washington and Wisconsin. Ironically, Michigan is not currently covered because of a quirk in the calculation formula, although its unemployment rate is among the highest in the nation.

ANGRISANI, the Administration's spokesman at the hearings, said as many as 46 states could qualify for extended benefits before the recession bottoms out.

But unless Congress changes the law, this will be the last year in which extended unemployment benefits will be a significant factor. As part of the Administration cutbacks Congress approved last year, a substantially higher level of unemployment will be required after Oct. 1, 1982, to trigger extended benefits.

Angrisani conceded that the Administration was unusually far off the mark last fall in its projections of the unemployment rate for the current fiscal year, but he denied that the underestimate was deliberate in order to push through budget cuts.

2/6/82

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

NLRB Boosts Rate On Backpay Interest

The National Labor Relations Board announced that it has increased the interest rate it assesses on back pay and other remedial money awards from 12 percent last year to 20 percent for all of 1982.

The increase was announced in a memorandum from NLRB Gen. Counsel William A. Lubbers implementing the agency's order in a case involving the Florida Steel Corp.

In the 1977 ruling, the board ordered that interest on back pay and other money awards be computed at the "adjusted prime rate" used by the Internal Revenue Service in calculating interest on the underpayment or overpayment of taxes. The IRS recently announced a 20-percent penalty interest rate.

Rise in Prime Lending Rate Tightens Economic Squeeze

(Continued from Page 1)

lowest level in 35 years. Construction spending declined 4 percent in 1981 to its lowest level since 1975.

THIS WEEK'S increase in the prime rate reversed a downward trend that began last July. Of the nation's 15 largest banks, 12 had moved to the 16.5 percent level with the others notching up to 16.25 percent. The borrowers most affected by changes in the key rate are medium-size and small companies. Other short-term rates, including consumer notes, are scaled upward from the prime.

Irwin L. Kellner, senior vice president of Manufacturers Hanover Trust in New York, said a widespread increase in the prime would mean a big rise in bankruptcies, already at record levels.

In other economic developments, the Commerce Dept. reported that its index of leading economic indicators for December rose six-tenths of 1 percent after declines of two-tenths of 1 percent in November and 1.8 percent in October.

THE GOVERNMENT also reported that business productivity took its worst tumble since World War II in last year's fourth quarter, but for 1981 as a whole was up by 1 percent, the first annual rise since 1977. The small gain for the year in the private business sector contrasted with declines of two-tenths of 1 percent in 1978, three-tenths of 1 percent in 1979, and two-tenths of 1 percent in 1980.

The productivity figures measure the output of private business per hour of work. The fourth-quarter drop occurred because output fell 7.5 percent, while the number of hours worked declined only two-tenths of 1 percent, the Commerce Dept. said.

The rise in the index of leading indicators, which is designed to foreshadow economic trends, was the first since last July. New orders adjusted for inflation, building permits, stock prices, the money supply, and the layoff rate all showed improvement, with building permits contributing the largest increase.

FIVE OF THE 10 indicators declined: the average workweek, the number of companies receiving slower deliveries, contracts and orders for plants and equipment, producer prices, and the change in total liquid assets.

The Commerce Dept. also reported that new orders for factory goods rose a bare two-tenths of 1 percent in December, or no gain at all after discounting for inflation.

Devastating Impact Foreseen From Natural Gas Decontrol

The deregulation of natural gas prices that the Reagan Administration is pressing would have a devastating impact on workers, consumers and the nation's economy, the Consumer Energy Council of America warned.

In a study based on Dept. of Energy data, CECA charged that over the next three years, deregulation would cost American workers 300,000 to 450,000 jobs and $70 billion in lost wages while raising living costs sharply and slashing up to $22 billion from the gross national product.

"WE HAVE used the DOE's own analysis of deregulation to highlight the staggering negative income transfer effects of deregulation," said CECA Executive Director Ellen Berman. "These effects are buried so deeply in DOE's technical analysis that legislators would be significantly handicapped in using DOE's analysis for decision-making purposes," she stressed.

Titled "Natural Gas Deregulation: A Case of Trickle-Up Economics," the study is the first in a series of in-depth analyses of the impact of deregulation on consumers, workers, investors and the nation's economy.

CECA is a national coalition of consumer, labor, farm, urban, senior citizen and rural electric cooperative groups.

BERMAN SAID deregulation would provide an income-transfer bonanza for gas producers at the expense of workers, other industries and consumers.

"In the short run," she observed, "the income-transfer effects are staggering; the long-run recovery still leaves the wealth out of the pockets of consumers and in the hands of gas producers."

Even three-year phased-in decontrol, which CECA viewed as more moderate than the approach currently favored by the Administration, would:

- Increase gas bills at least $400 a year per household.
- Add at least $800 a year to consumers' costs for other goods and services.
- Wipe out up to 450,000 jobs, resulting in $70 billion in lost wages.
- Raise the government's consumer price index 1.8 percentage points.
- Reduce national productivity by almost 1 percent.
- Lower capital income in non-gas industries more than $9 billion.
- Increase income of gas industry stock by more than $63 billion.

Using the Administration's own analysis, the CECA study found that over the next three years, the GNP will actually decrease by $16 to $22 billion (in 1980 dollars) because of deregulation.

James Kennedy Named Assistant to Donahue

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue has named as his executive assistant James J. Kennedy, Jr., the legislative and political director of the Brotherhood of Railway & Airline Clerks for the past 14 years.

Kennedy, 49, has been the executive secretary-treasurer of the Railway Labor Executives' Association. He will begin his new duties as Donahue's assistant Feb. 15.

Kennedy, a lawyer, also serves as general counsel of BRAC. His undergraduate and law degrees are both from Fordham University. In recent years he has been chairman of the House Marginal Committee for the COPE operating committee. He is also an officer of Frontlash and of Concerned Seniors for Better Government and is counsel to the National Council of Senior Citizens.

A native of Poughkeepsie N.Y., Kennedy was legal affairs counsel for the Pulp, Sulphite & Papermill Workers, now part of the Paperworkers, and education director of the RLEA before assuming his legislative and political duties for BRAC in 1967.

Keep Education At Cabinet Level, Teachers Urge

Education should continue to have Cabinet-level representation in the federal government, the American Federation of Teachers urged.

AFT President Albert Shanker said the union opposes an Administration plan to dismantle the Dept. of Education and relegate its functions to an independent "foundation."

Shanker noted that the AFT had opposed taking education functions out of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare in 1979, when the separate department was established. But "we believe education belongs in the Cabinet," he stressed.

Before any decision is made on the future of the department, Shanker said, the President and Congress should determine the role of the federal government in the field of education. There is a continuing need for a federal commitment to improving the nation's school systems, he said.

Vanishing Jobs Shrink Workforce

Employment continued to decline in January, with heavy new layoffs in manufacturing and construction, despite a drop in the overall unemployment rate.

The seasonally adjusted unemployment rate declined from 8.8 percent in December to 8.5 percent in January. But the drop was attributed in part to the exodus of discouraged workers from the labor force. Persons who have given up active job hunting because there are no jobs to be had aren't counted as unemployed.

"THE REAGAN recession which began in July of last year has pushed unemployment to the most critical level since the Great Depression of the 1930's," Federation President Lane Kirkland said in a statement.

"Millions are suffering and can't afford to be told: 'Wait, prosperity is just around the corner.' Americans need jobs to put food on the table, pay the mortgage and live with dignity," said Kirkland.

"Now is the time to put America back to work and rebuild the economy. These programs could be paid for by cutting back last year's excessive tax giveaways to the wealthy. Now is certainly not the time for further cuts in programs desperately needed by the jobless and the poor."

More than 9,298,000 people remained out of work last month, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

IN MAY 1975, when the country was in another severe recession, the jobless rate hit a post-World War II peak of 9 percent, representing 8,433,000 unemployed workers out of a total labor force of 93.9 million. The workforce since has risen to nearly 109 million.

BLS Commissioner Janet L. Norwood

(Continued on Page 3)

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII No. 6

Saturday, February 13, 1982

Reagan Calls for New Cutbacks, Forecasts More Unemployment

INSTEAD OF STEPPING UP support for oppressed Polish workers, the Reagan Administration is bailing out U.S. bankers at the cost of American taxpayers, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland charged at a Government Employees legislative conference. AFGE President Kenneth T. Blaylock is at right.

Kirkland Scores Retreat On Sanctions for Poland

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland charged the Reagan Administration with turning its back on Poland's workers and free trade unions while protecting the interests of American bankers.

Instead of taking further action to bring an end to martial law in Poland, as promised, the Administration has responded to the worsening situation in that country by retreating, Kirkland told delegates to a Government Employees' legislative conference.

IN ANNOUNCING that American taxpayers would pay the banks $71 million they are owed by the Polish government and secretly rigging the regulations requiring that Poland be declared in default, President Reagan in effect told the Polish military junta and the Soviets to disregard his earlier tough talk, Kirkland declared.

"He announced that the United States would not use the most potent economic weapon at our disposal in defense of Solidarity," observed Kirkland. "By stretching the gap between rhetoric and action, he has undermined his credibility in dealing with the Soviets. Nothing could be more dangerous."

Kirkland recalled the Administration's adoption of limited sanctions against Poland and the USSR—"the real author of the savage repression that is being taken against Solidarnosc (Solidarity)"—last December, and its pledge to take additional measures unless imprisoned union leaders were released and good-faith negotiations begun with the independent labor unions.

"Among these steps, we urged calling in the Polish debt and halting the sale of grain, goods, and factories to the Soviet Union," said Kirkland. "The situation in Poland has not improved. The repression is growing worse."

THE ADMINISTRATION justifies its bail-out of the U.S. banks on the grounds that declaring Poland in default would relieve the Soviet Union of the burden of

(Continued on Page 3)

'Best Hopes' On Economy Still Grim

By James M. Shevis

Even if President Reagan's best-case scenario for economic recovery were to come true—and this is doubtful due to the impact of skyhigh budget deficits and continuing high interest rates—severe joblessness appears part of America's future.

This gloomy assessment is contained in the President's annual Economic Report to Congress, which forecasts unemployment averaging 8.9 percent this year and 7.9 percent in 1983 before dipping to 7.1 percent in 1984, 6.4 percent in 1985, 5.8 percent in 1986, and 5.3 percent in 1987.

STICKING TO his rigid monetarist and "supply-side" theories, Reagan held to his prediction of a "vigorous economic recovery" this year.

"I am convinced that our policies, now that they are in place, are the appropriate response to our current difficulties," Reagan said in a statement accompanying the 357-page report prepared by his Council of Economic Advisers. But he acknowledged that more suffering may lie ahead before the nation reaps the benefits of permanently lower inflation, his avowed goal.

"The decision to end inflation over a period of several years will be sustained by this Administration, even though short-run costs will be suffered before long-term benefits begin to accrue," the presidential report observes. Acknowledging a "short-lived tradeoff between unemployment and the rate of inflation," the report continues, "this means that policies to reduce inflation significantly will temporarily increase unemployment and reduce output growth."

IF HIS 1982 economic forecast holds up, the President will usher in during his second year in office the highest sustained rate of unemployment in the post-World War II era. Current unemployment is 8.5 percent of the labor force.

(Continued on Page 14)

Budget Axe Slashes Aid For Neediest

By David L. Perlman

President Reagan asked Congress to slash deeper into programs to help the needy and to continue to rely on drippings from the tax cut enacted last year to nourish a sick economy back to health.

Reagan's budget message claimed the "remarkable achievements" of his first year in office have put the economy on a sound course.

His accompanying budget pointed to a second successive year of huge deficits—stemming largely from high unemployment, huge interest costs and new tax breaks for wealthy individuals and profitable corporations.

IF CONGRESS follows the President's budget script, there will be less food, cash and medical assistance for the poor and the near-poor.

Public housing construction would be ended, cities and states would have less federal aid for mass transit, construction, social services and community development.

Despite inflation, which reduces the purchasing power of federal grant dollars, federal assistance for elementary, secondary and vocational education would be slashed by $1.6 billion and outlays for higher education would be reduced $700 million. Fewer college students would be eligible for loans and grants and the amounts they could receive would be cut.

JOB PROGRAMS and training for the disadvantaged, heavily slashed during Reagan's first year, would be further demolished. And nothing at all would be left of the trade adjustment assistance an earlier Congress had enacted for workers thrown out of their jobs by increased imports.

Military programs would be spared the budget cuts and allowed an after-inflation

(Continued on Page 15)

Congress Restores Funds for Poor, Jobless

Congress voted emergency appropriations to keep state employment offices open and process unemployment insurance claims—and then broke with the Administration to increase funds to help low-income households to pay winter heating bills.

Republicans from frost-bitten northern states joined House and Senate Democrats in approving the added $123 million for heating costs. Sunbelt Republicans, who stuck with the White House on the issue, said states that ran out of money should divert funds from federal "block grants" meant for other programs.

But the House approved the added money, 354-62. The Senate followed through with an 85-10 vote and the measure was tacked on to a bill the Administration supports to discourage a veto.

THE SEPARATE $2.3 billion emergency supplemental appropriations was requested by the Administration and is mostly for loans to replenish state unemployment insurance reserves and to finance the federal share of extended benefits in states that qualify.

It includes restoration of $343.5 million in budget cuts previously imposed in allocations to states to administer employment offices and process unemployment claims.

The last round of budget cuts had forced the closings of scores of state employment offices and the layoffs of trained job counselors at a time of rising unemployment.

Rep. David R. Obey (D-Wis.), a senior member of the House Appropriations Committee, warned his colleagues that the President's new budget proposals invites a repetition of the turmoil.

THE NEW BUDGET request, Obey said, would cut $60 million from unemployment services from the total provided this year.

"If my colleagues can make any sense out of that," he suggested, "they are a lot smarter than I am."

Massive show of support in Malta

Washington, D.C., parade

Day of International Solidarity

Workers around the world joined in a Day of International Solidarity to show support of the Polish workers and to condemn their oppression by the Polish military junta.

The Jan. 30 demonstrations, spearheaded in dozens of U.S. cities by the AFL-CIO, demanded an end to martial law clamped on Poland in December in an attempt to destroy Solidarity, the nation's free trade union federation. Marchers also called for the release of Solidarity's imprisoned leaders.

The worldwide rallies were held in response to an appeal from exiled Solidarity leaders to the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The AFL-CIO, its state and local councils and many affiliated unions led the U.S. demonstrations including parades, vigils, rallies and other events. Many showed support by symbolically raising and displaying the Polish union's banner, or its red and white colors.

These are some of the photos that were not used in the previous issue of the AFL-CIO news because of space limitations, including the one from the big demonstration in Malta.

Ohio state capitol

New York march

Akron, Ohio

Denver rally

Milwaukee protest

AFL-CIO headquarters building

Water tower near U.S. Capitol

Second Thoughts on OSHA

State, City Regulations Snare Chemical Firms

By John R. Oravec

Several employer groups that previously fought a federal occupational health standard on the labeling of toxic chemicals are having second thoughts—now that state and city regulations are starting to fill the gap.

Most industry organizations, led by the nation's largest chemical firms, adamantly opposed a regulation drafted during the Carter Administration that would have assured workers the right to know what hazardous substances they encounter on the job.

HEEDING INDUSTRY complaints, the Reagan Administration upon taking office quickly torpedoed the labeling proposal. It was one of the first actions of Labor Sec. Raymond J. Donovan after his confirmation.

Since then, several states and a handful of cities—spurred by union grass-roots lobbying—instituted requirements for chemical labeling that have the industry on the defense. Employers are now concerned that regulations being developed at the state and local level are a lot stiffer than what they could get from the Administration.

Unions have been fighting for a strong federal toxic labeling standard for the past decade, AFL-CIO Occupational Safety Director George H. R. Taylor said in noting that thousands of workers die each year from exposure to chemicals they didn't know were hazardous.

Taylor pointed out that the original labeling proposal issued by former OSHA Administrator Eula Bingham was withdrawn by Donovan over the protests of the AFL-CIO.

THAT STANDARD would have required precise chemical identification and warnings on hazardous substances used in some 328,000 manufacturing facilities that employ more than 20 million workers.

The Occupational Safety & Health Administration has now drafted a watered-down version, according to union job safety experts. But even that "more flexible" proposal is being strongly opposed by David Stockman's Office of Management & Budget.

Employer groups, faced with the state and local labeling regulations, are now urging that OMB allow OSHA to proceed with publication of its draft of the labeling standard.

Joining in this effort are representatives of auto, paintings and coatings, and petroleum industries. Even the chemical manufacturers gave qualified support.

IN THE MIDDLE of the spat between OSHA and OMB is the President's Task Force on Regulatory Relief, headed by Vice President George Bush, which recently gave Stockman's office another 30 days to review its hardline opposition to the draft.

OMB contends that OSHA is not sticking close enough to the Administration's interpretation of the Supreme Court decision on benzene in addressing "significant risk" and the impact of costs of regulation versus benefits.

One of the industry groups, the National Paint & Coatings Association, wrote Bush that the flexible OSHA proposal was needed to avoid having state and local governments impose their own regulations on business. The Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Association also has called for publication of the labeling standard and the scheduling of hearings.

WHILE THE Chemical Manufacturers Association has urged that an OSHA draft be issued, it wants an even weaker regulation than the one now under consideration. It is seeking to further relax the requirements on the disclosure of all ingredients in a hazardous substance.

Industry's backing of a federal action rides largely on the hopes that a federal standard would preempt the rules of state and local governments.

Six states—Maine, Michigan, Connecticut, California, New York and West Virginia—have already enacted legislation on toxic labeling. Several other states have bills pending.

UNIONS ALSO favor a federal standard, Taylor noted, but one that is effective enough to give workers all the information they need to know about the ingredients and related hazards of toxic substances.

Labor, he observed, had been forced to seek relief at the state and local level because of the lack of an OSHA standard.

In a letter to Bush's office, Taylor pointed out that the responsibility for standard setting under the 1970 federal job safety law "rests squarely" with the OSHA administrator.

"INTERFERENCE by OMB will thus be interpreted as indifference by this Administration toward American workers as well as a decision that OMB, not OSHA, will establish occupational health policy," he asserted.

Meanwhile, the labor-supported Workers' Institute for Safety & Health is starting up a new computerized system to provide union members a wide range of data on toxic substances.

WISH has access to the Environmental Protection Agency's new Chemical Substance Information Network, which is linked to a number of data bases. Included are the National Library of Medicine, the Chemical Information System operated by EPA and the National Institutes of Health, the Chemicals in Commerce Information System and the Chemical Abstract Service.

Vernon McDougall, WISH's director of technical assistance and labor education, said the services will be available to union members at no charge during a two-month pilot period.

SOLIDARNOSC FLAG is presented to Philadelphia's City Council, which adopted a resolution of solidarity with Polish workers. It is presented by Philadelphia AFL-CIO President Edward F. Toohey, left. Holding the flag are Michael S. Perry of the Jewish Labor Committee and Edward Turzanski and Michael Blichasz of the Polish-American Congress.

Safety Directors Challenge Review of Cotton Dust Curb

Labor job safety specialists accused the Reagan Administration of launching a new attack on worker protections by reopening the federal cotton dust standard which the Supreme Court upheld last June.

In calling for the review, the Occupational Safety & Health Administration said "new health data and consideration of more cost-effective compliance methods may result in reconsideration of present exposure levels."

The AFL-CIO and the Clothing & Textile Workers charged that OSHA's action was an attempt to dismantle the 1978 regulation to help protect cotton textile workers from crippling "brown lung" disease.

NOTING THAT 100,000 American workers die each year from occupational illness, AFL-CIO Occupational Director George H. R. Taylor said that "if OSHA under the Reagan Administration were as zealous in developing new standards to protect workers from job site hazards as it is in attempting to weaken or wipe out those already in effect, it would be possible to anticipate a decrease in the continuing toll of occupationally injured, ill and dead workers."

ACTWU Safety Director Eric Frumin challenged OSHA's claim on the need to review "new health data" on worker exposure to cotton dust.

"There are no new data," Frumin asserted. "There is only the continuing effort of the textile industry to minimize the serious health risk posed by exposure to cotton dust."

The American Textile Manufacturers Association, which attempted to block the standard through court challenges that took the battle all the way to the Supreme Court, welcomed OSHA's call for the review.

ATMI sought to have the standard overturned on the contention that installation of required engineering controls was not economically feasible and that OSHA had ignored cost-benefit analyses in the development of the regulation.

IN UPHOLDING the standard, the court ruled that benefits should not be measured against restrictive costs tests when workers' health is at stake.

The court decision pointed out that Congress, in enacting the 1970 federal safety law, "itself defined the basic relationship between costs and benefits by placing the 'benefit' of worker health above all other considerations, save those of making attainment of this 'benefit' unachievable."

OSHA said that while it recognizes that the court's decision precludes the use of cost-benefit analysis in the cotton dust standard, "it is totally appropriate to reexamine new health data and alternative compliance approaches, as well as other matters relevant to the implementation and enforcement of the cotton dust standard."

OSHA Administrator Thorne G. Auchter said the standard will remain in effect during the review. The deadline for public comments is Mar. 25.

Kirkland Scores U.S. Retreat on Polish Sanctions

(Continued from Page 1)

one seriously believes that the Polish debt will be repaid.

"The loans were a bad risk in the first place. They were made only because the bankers assumed they could rely on the Soviet Union and the American taxpayer to cover their losses," said Kirkland, adding:

"The AFL-CIO does not believe that American foreign policy should be made by the bankers—or by the giant grain companies. We believe that the people ought to have something to say about how their government responds to the suppression of freedom in Poland."

FOR THAT REASON, he said, the AFL-CIO sponsored rallies and demonstrations in over 20 cities across the nation Jan. 30 at the appeal of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

"We will continue to raise our voices in defense of Solidarity because we know that to defend Solidarity is ultimately to defend ourselves," Kirkland declared.

As an example of the ongoing show of support for the Polish workers, thousands of shipyard workers in Seattle planned to wear white ribbons Feb. 12. The demonstration of solidarity came in response to an initiative of the Seattle Metal Trades Council.

Vanishing Jobs Shrink Nation's Workforce

(Continued from Page 1)

repayment, Kirkland observed, "but no told the congressional Joint Economic Committee that the January jobless data were "more difficult than usual to interpret." She noted that a decline of 305,000 in the civilian labor force to 108.9 million more than offset a drop of 32,000 in total employment, which measured 99,581,000 last month.

"We do not have sufficient information to determine whether the drop in labor force activity resulted from discouragement caused by the recession, was merely a temporary phenomenon caused by January's bad weather, or resulted from other factors," Norwood said.

THE JANUARY drop in overall unemployment surprised analysts, many of whom had looked for a jobless rate of 9 percent or higher. BLS noted that the January release of employment and unemployment incorporated revised figures to reflect the 1980 Census population data.

In her JEC testimony, Norwood pointed out that widespread declines in nonfarm employment suggest that "no real improvement in the labor situation occurred in January."

January's frigid weather was a major factor in a decline of the average workweek to 34.1 hours, she said. The eight-tenths of an hour drop was the largest over-the-month decline ever recorded.

Nonagricultural payroll employment declined 235,000 in January and has dropped by 1.2 million since last September.

THE LARGEST over-the-month decline occurred in manufacturing, where employment fell by 215,000. There were particularly large cutbacks in transportation equipment, machinery and fabricated metals, the BLS reported.

The construction drop of 140,000 jobs, greater than in recent months, was attributed largely to weather conditions.

In the service industries, retail trade showed a seasonally adjusted gain. The BLS explanation was that "the normally expected reductions in sales staff did not take place due to the comparatively light pre-Christmas hiring." Government employment was down 35,000.

THE JOBLESS RATE for adult males declined to 7.5 percent from 7.9 percent in December, while the unemployment rate for adult women decreased to 7.2 percent from 7.4 percent, BLS said.

The rate for teenagers increased slightly from 21.5 percent to 21.7 percent over the month. Unemployment among whites fell to 7.5 percent from 7.7 percent the previous month, while the rate of blacks fell to 16.8 percent from 17.3 percent.

Where the Buck Stops

IN THE Harry S. Truman Library, at Independence, Mo., visitors can see the medallion that graced that doughty president's desk. It is the one that carried the familiar motto, "The Buck Stops Here."

It's time to return it to the White House, to the Oval Office where its lesson needs relearning.

Mr. Reagan seems to have forgotten that he is now the President of the United States, and that his stewardship must be measured on performance rather than campaign rhetoric.

JUST A YEAR AGO, on Feb. 18, 1981, President Reagan called on Congress to put the nation on the path to prosperity by enacting his economic program compounded of tax cuts and budget cuts, the shedding of federal responsibilities along with "burdensome" regulations.

An accompanying Administration "White Paper" made clear the view of the President and his advisers that the most important cause of the nation's problems was "the government itself."

Congress last year gave the President almost everything he sought. It hewed closer to the White House script than any Congress since the heyday of the New Deal.

When conditions got worse instead of better and the Administration last September came back for a second round of budget cuts, Congress met it at least part way. A few more strands were cut from the already skimpy safety net for the nation's needy.

AS FOR the "burdensome" regulations supposedly stifling business, the Administration foxes put in charge of the chicken coops saw to them.

Now, we hear from this President that the rise in unemployment and the slump in economic growth must be attributed to the mistake of his predecessors, to "problems that have been building for more than four decades," through the administrations of three Republican presidents as well as Mr. Reagan's Democratic predecessors.

In his recent campaign-style travels across the country, President Reagan has been even more agile in shifting the blame.

IN ONE of his more outrageous comments, he suggested that readers be skeptical of media stories dealing with hardships caused by his spending reductions. Some disgruntled government employee is probably behind it.

As Mr. Reagan put it: "At times such as these there are those in government employ who will possibly sabotage and deliberately penalize some individual who is not supposed to be penalized in order to get a story indicating the programs are not working."

HOW NICE to get away from those "puzzle palaces on the Potomac," the President tells his audiences, and to return to the "real world."

But the unemployment lines are long in the real world, and those standing in them are not as simple-minded as President Reagan seems to assume.

The "buck" has sure traveled a long distance since it left President Truman's desk at the White House.

In this Administration, who knows where it will stop next.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
LANE KIRKLAND, President
THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer
Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
Jerry Wurf*	S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward
Murray H. Finley	Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts
Sol C. Chaikin	Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco
Charles H. Pillard	J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride
David J. Fitzmaurice	Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps
Wm. W. Winpisinger	William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell
John DeConcini	Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss
William Konyha	Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney
Douglas A. Fraser	Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield
Barbara Hutchinson	Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto

*Deceased

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop John R. Oravec
David L. Perlman James M. Shevis

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, February 13, 1982 No. 6

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

INTERNATIONAL LABOR PRESS AFL-CIO/CLC ASSOCIATION

'Just Double the Recipe!'

Rise of Monopolies

When Business Still Competed, Prices Would Even Go Down

By Gus Tyler

ONCE UPON a time, prices used to go down in America. They went down when times were good; they went down when times were bad.

Nowadays, we don't even expect them to go down. We cheer when the Labor Dept. announces, as it did recently, that prices in 1981 rose by only 8.9 percent. We're supposed to rejoice, which virtually nobody does because prices are still going up.

WE HAVE BECOME so inured to rising prices that we think it is normal, that prices have always risen. But, as a simple matter of fact, that is not the way it has always been.

Take a quick look at the last century. Prices in 1800 were twice as high as in 1860 and more than twice as high as in 1896. Indeed, if you look at that century, the general tendency was for prices to decline: the big exceptions took place during the War of 1812 and the Civil War.

When you get to our 20th Century, prices trend upward. In part this was due to wars: World War I, World War II, Korea, Vietnam. But even after we were out of these conflicts, prices continued to rise through the 1970s and into the 1980s. Prices rose, contrary to the previous century, both in good times and in bad times, during prosperity and recession in the last two decades.

What's the reason? One intriguing theory relates to competition and monopoly.

WHEN THE 19th Century opened there was not much competition in our economy. Producers served a local market and, in the absence of competition from other areas, they established a monopoly in the neighborhood. And prices were high.

But, notes John M. Blair in his classic text, Economic Concentration, with "the passage of time the economic conditions that had made for monopoly in the early part of the century gave way to conditions more favorable to competition. Rival producers began to spring up en masse." And as competition rose, prices fell.

But then things began to turn around again. "Concentration of industry (ownership of industries by a few) on a widespread scale made its appearance on the American scene as a result of the great consolidation movement of 1897-1905."

HORIZONTAL MONOPOLIES (few owners in one trade or industry) led to vertical corporations (in which the manufacturer owned his own suppliers and his own outlets) that led in turn to conglomerates (ownership of diverse enterprises by a handful).

Whatever the form, fewer and fewer controlled more and more of the economy. They were in the powerful position of being able to dictate prices—no matter what was happening in the economy.

As monopolies grew, prices rose—in good times and bad. That's the theory. It's worth a thought.

Copyright 1982, Gus Tyler Columns

Jobs Loss Underscores Reagan Policy Failure

One in 10 American workers is currently looking for a job.

When unemployment strikes an economy it is the duty of a responsible and a civilized society to perform four basic tasks:

First, assist the unemployed in their job search through effective employment service programs.

Second, improve the skills of the unemployed through realistic job training programs.

Third, maintain a decent quality of life for the jobless through unemployment insurance, and,

Fourth, develop a strategy for relieving the burdens of the unemployed by creating jobs through a realistic look at the economy—not as it was or how we hope it might be, but as it is.

The Administration has failed to perform the four basic tasks. The fact that we are here today, responding to an emergency request for suplemental unemployment benefits, is testament to the failure of this Administration's policies.

—Rep. George Miller (D-Calif.), in House debate. Feb. 9, 1982.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII February 13, 1982 No. 6

1981

A REPORT ON CONGRESS

By Lane Kirkland

AT YEAR'S END the AFL-CIO analyzes the performance of Congress in terms of each Representative's and each Senator's votes for or against the interests of workers during the session. In 1981, long-standing laws and basic programs that benefit American working people, retirees, children—the full range of our society—came under serious attack.

In January 1981, Congress found itself facing a new President intent on dismantling the legislation that gave America its strength and growth of the past several decades. It soon became clear that Congress was unwilling to assert its role to resist that onslaught and to shape programs that would deal realistically with a declining economy and people's needs. In almost every instance a majority of the Congress became accomplices to President Reagan's dismantling of social and economic programs.

MUCH OF THE Reagan Administration program—tax policy, budget policy, energy policy, regulatory policy—can be explained as shifting hundreds of billions of dollars away from workers and the middle class and toward wealthy individuals and corporations in the name of supply-side economics. That program, it was promised, would improve the economy as investments would be made and new jobs created. The AFL-CIO testified before Congress that such a program would not work, and the signals are clear now that it is not working.

- The Administration promised that its tax cuts for the wealthy would somehow produce an economic boom to benefit all Americans. The alliance of Republicans and a minority of Democrats enacted his sought-for program. However, by fall the President was publicly confirming what everyone else already knew: The tax cut produced not a boom but a recession, and as the year closed the economic slowdown showed no sign of letting up.

- The Administration promised that its economic policies would create new jobs as it pushed through Congress massive cuts in highway, maritime, rail and public works programs. Instead, unemployment jumped from 7.2 percent in July 1981 to 8.8 percent in December, which translates into 1.5 million more unemployed workers. The hardship for those workers and their families was made worse by the cuts Reagan had brought about in unemployment compensation eligibility.

- By any criterion, the congressionally enacted Reagan program is a bust: the average standard of living is down; interest rates are still prohibitively high; inflation continues near double-digit levels; projected federal deficits have doubled; housing starts are down 48 percent; bankruptcies are up 40 percent; and home mortgage defiicits are at a record high.

The voting charts on the following pages will allow you to see where your legislators stood in 1981 on votes that offered clear choices between helping or hurting American workers and between making our nation poorer and weaker or stronger and more prosperous.

This special section carries labor's 1981 report card on Congress tabulating the votes on major issues of concern to the AFL-CIO in the first session of the 97th Congress. Congressmen have been judged on 15 and Senators on 19 key issues—"R-right" or "W-wrong" on the basis of the position the AFL-CIO took on the legislation. The tables also include the cumulative voting record and cumulative "right" percentage of each member since election to the House or Senate. With the voting records are brief descriptions of the issues—what the vote was about and its importance to the labor movement and the nation. Issues of prime importance to labor are the first 6 votes in the House and the first 8 votes in the Senate. In the tabulations they are the votes listed to the left of the rules.

Labor's Stand on Major Issues in the House

1. Slashing Labor Department Funds

The Reagan Administration's economic policies—Reaganomics—coupled a record tax bonanza for the wealthiest individuals and corporations with devastating cuts in the programs that help ensure a better life for the majority of Americans. The budget cuts hit particularly hard at the worker protection programs run by the Labor Dept. Federal funds to enforce union rights, job safety and fair wage legislation as well as unemployment compensation and manpower programs were slashed by nearly $23 billion over three years. Yet no sooner had Congress made these monumental budget reductions than the President sought more cuts.

As the economy fell into recession and the Administration economic advisers began to realize the potential of huge budget deficits due to its giveaway tax bill, rising unemployment and high interest rates, the President in September demanded a further 12-percent cut in non-defense program funding. During the debate on the Labor Dept. appropriations bill, Rep. Ralph Regula (R-Ohio) tried to recommit the bill to the Appropriations Committee to inflict another round of even harsher budget reductions in programs that protect workers. In the first major budget defeat for the Administration, the House rejected the motion by a 168-249 vote on Oct. 6.

Against—Right. For—Wrong.

2. Weakening Job Safety Protections

The conservative assault on "big government" set its sights on eradicating federal job safety protections for American workers. One target in 1981 was the Mine Safety & Health Administration (MSHA), whose health standards and enforcement policies for this hazardous industry are more stringent than those employed by OSHA.

During consideration of a Labor Dept. appropriations bill, Rep. John Rousselot (R-Calif.) offered an amendment to prohibit MSHA from spending any funds to enforce safety and health rules for workers employed in stone, sand and gravel surface mining operations. His amendment excluded some 40,000 surface miners from any federal job safety protection including OSHA, despite the fact that in 1978-80, 134 workers died in accidents in those mining industries—the worst collective job fatality record in surface mining. Despite those grim statistics and strong AFL-CIO opposition, the House approved the Rousselot amendment 254-165 on Oct. 6.

Against—Right. For—Wrong.

3. Saving American Jobs

As segments of the U.S. auto industry teetered on the brink of economic collapse, foreign car imports continued to take their toll. By year's end the United States had a staggering trade deficit of $10 billion in autos, auto parts and engines. Worse, nearly a million workers in auto plants and supplier industries stood in unemployment lines. With unregulated imports continuing to flood U.S. markets and thousands of job opportunities disappearing, the AFL-CIO renewed its support for "Buy American" preference provisions requiring that all taxpayer-financed federal programs use U.S.-produced goods and services where available.

During consideration of the 1982 Defense authorization bill, Rep. Elwood Hillis (R-Ind.) proposed an amendment prohibiting the Defense Dept. from signing a contract worth more than $50,000 to purchase civilian cars or light trucks not made in the United States or Canada. Seen as a small step toward revitalizing the sagging auto industry, the Hillis amendment was adopted 231-187 on July 16.

For—Right. Against—Wrong.

4. Maintaining Public Works Jobs

A major federal public works program—the Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway—barely escaped the ax of congressional budget cutting in 1981. This 232-mile inland canal, by connecting the Tennessee and Tombigbee Rivers, will allow barge traffic to flow from Appalachia to the Gulf seaport of Mobile, Ala. This labor-backed public works program is considered necessary to developing a modern mid-American waterway transportation system, which is vital to improving interstate commerce and furthering U.S. exports of agricultural commodities, coal and manufactured products. The government already has spent about $1 billion on the "Tenn-Tom" project, which now is more than 80 percent complete.

During debate on the 1982 energy and water appropriations bill, Rep. Joel Pritchard (R-Wash.) tried to delete $189 million earmarked for continuation of the "Tenn-Tom" project. The Pritchard amendment would have resulted in lost construction, maintenance and transportation jobs while preventing improvement in U.S. commercial transportation and export capabilities. The amendment was rejected 198-208 on July 23.

Against—Right. For—Wrong.

5. Crippling Federal Worker Rights

Federal employees were hammered hard by President Reagan's budget cuts in 1981, as nearly 11,000 were fired while many others were transferred, often to lower paying positions. In 1982 at least another 5,000 are expected to lose their jobs as the President attempts to reduce the federal work force by 75,000 jobs. In addition to these reductions in personnel, the Administration sought to raise premiums for federal employee health benefits while at the same time arbitrarily denying coverage for certain kinds of medical care services.

Taking their cue from the President, congressional conservatives jumped in with their own version of anti-federal employee legislation during debate on a 1981 supplemental appropriations bill. Rep. John Ashbrook (R-Ohio) proposed an amendment to deny a full range of medical services for women, including abortions, which are now available under federal health insurance policies for which federal workers pay 60 percent of the premium. The AFL-CIO has taken no position on the issue of abortion; however, to the federation the key issue was not abortion but whether Congress could disregard the limited collective bargaining rights of federal workers by arbitrarily terminating certain health benefits that are now available to workers in the private sector. Despite opposition from the AFL-CIO, the amendment was approved 242-155 on May 13. Later, however, Senate opposition to this anti-worker proposal forced the House to drop it from the bill during conference deliberations.

Against—Right. For—Wrong.

6. Pay Raise for Strikebreakers

The eradication of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization (PATCO) and the firing of 12,000 of its members were among the most vicious anti-labor acts by the federal government. Reneging on his campaign promise to address PATCO concerns about excessive hours of work and other demanding working conditions, President Reagan's negotiators responded by offering the union a 16-percent pay cut after the membership had rejected the first contract. When PATCO struck, the government refused to continue contract negotiations. Twelve thousand PATCO workers then were fired, their union decertified and their membership condemned to joblessness with little hope of reemployment. Thus far, this government-imposed lockout has caused more than $100 million in losses to the airlines. Thousands of airline workers who were innocent victims of the government's hard-line position have subsequently been laid off. The Federal Aviation Administration now admits that it will be three to five years before it can train replacements at an estimated cost of $140,000 per controller.

Since this bitter dispute began, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland and other union leaders have tried unsuccessfully to get the government to return the controllers to their jobs. Barely a week before the AFL-CIO Executive Council was to meet with President Reagan to discuss this issue, Congress voted to give the nonstriking controllers a pay raise that was in effect 40 percent higher than the government's last offer to PATCO. The pay raise had been included in the Senate version of an interim appropriations bill. Rep. Larry Coughlin (R-Pa.) offered a motion to have the House recede from its disagreement with the Senate amendment and thus in effect approve the pay boost. By a 213-183 vote on Nov. 22, the Coughlin motion was approved. Ironically, the entire continuing appropriations resolution, which included the pay hike for strikebreakers, was vetoed by the President and the controversial provision was removed from a subsequent funding bill.

Against the motion—Right. For the motion—Wrong.

7. Destroying Federal Programs I

The Reagan budget slashed billions of dollars from "people" programs in order to finance "trickle-down" tax breaks for the rich and corporations. By eliminating more than $214 billion over three years, social investments necessary to strengthen the economy were eradicated, the meager incomes of the jobless, the elderly and the poor were cut, and the nation's long-range needs for energy security, transportation improvements, environmental safeguards and urban development were seriously endangered.

During consideration of the First Budget Resolution—the first step in the congressional process that sets yearly federal spending targets—the AFL-CIO backed a substitute budget bill offered by Rep. David Obey (D-Wis.) to block a conservative alternative measure encompassing the Reagan budget cuts. The Obey bill sought to minimize damage to key programs such as unemployment compensation, Medicaid, housing, education and energy assistance. His substitute would have achieved budget savings comparable to the President's plan by limiting tax cuts to one year instead of three, while saving hundreds of thousands of jobs marked for extinction by the President's budget plan. Despite lobbying by the AFL-CIO and the Budget Coalition of more than 200 national public interest organizations, the Obey substitute was defeated 119-303 on May 6.

For—Right. Against—Wrong.

8. Destroying Federal Programs II

Once the Obey substitute was defeated, the conservative coalition rammed through the Reagan budget. Representatives Delbert Latta (R-Ohio) and Phil Gramm (D-Tex.) had earlier joined forces to sponor a substitute budget resolution incorporating the Reagan budget. The Gramm-Latta substitute inflicted far greater cuts in domestic programs than those originally proposed by the pending House Budget Committee measure. The extent of these budget cuts was far-reaching. For those seeking educational opportunity, $10 billion was cut in college loans and grants, aid to elementary and secondary schools, and the school lunch program. For the elderly, the budget made billion-dollar reductions in social security, railroad retirees' pensions, and federal employee retirement benefits while boosting Medicare premiums another billion dollars a year. For the jobless, $6 billion was axed from unemployment benefits while federal manpower programs were cut by $14 billion. For workers, major reductions in budget and personnel were imposed on such key agencies as OSHA and the NLRB. On economic development, $7 billion was severed from federal highway maintenance, mass transit and rail transportation funding. For the poor, $16 billion was cut from various assistance programs. Meanwhile, key consumer and environmental agencies saw their budgets, staff and regulatory authority substantially curtailed.

The AFL-CIO, warning that adoption of the Gramm-Latta substitute would cost a million Americans their jobs, condemned the Reagan budget cuts as "a high-risk gamble with the future of America in which workers and the poor take the lion's share of the risk." Turning aside labor's objections, the House adopted the Gramm-Latta substitute resolution 253-176 on May 7.

Against—Right. For—Wrong.

9. Destroying Federal Programs III

The First Budget Resolution, which cut more than $35 billion from federal social and economic programs, included "reconciliation" instructions requiring committees with jurisdiction over specific federal programs to translate these broad budget reductions into individual program cuts. Once completed, those cuts would then be packaged by the House Budget Committee into a budget "reconciliation" bill—the second of three steps in the congressional budget process. While the House committees tried to achieve the budget cuts in a manner that minimized hardship and job losses, President Reagan sought to dictate to the Congress which programs should be cut and by how much. Only hours before the Budget Committee's reconciliation package was to be considered on the House floor, the conservative coalition countered with a 400-page budget bill targeting programs opposed by congressional conservatives for the steepest cuts. This strategy was a clear attempt to allow the Executive Branch to manipulate congressional budget procedure to bypass the legislative process, and push through massive cuts in federal programs that help working people and the poor.

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue voices labor's opposition to anti-union nominee for NLRB at Senate hearing.

Federation President Lane Kirkland brands Reagan tax cut a giveaway to corporations and the wealthy. He was accompanied by Research Director Rudy Oswald, left, and Legislative Director Ray Denison.

Education Director Dorothy Shields warns of negative impact from tuition tax credit for private school students.

As a counter-strategy, House Democrats constructed a debate rule to force separate votes on each of the deepest Reagan cuts—in social security benefits, the school lunch program, college loans, inflation adjustments for federal retiree pensions, and housing and welfare assistance for the poor. The key vote came on a procedural motion by Rep. Richard Bolling (D-Mo.) to "order the previous question" and thus end debate on the proposed Democratic rule. Seeking to avoid the political consequences of voting for deep cuts in federal programs that enjoyed wide public support, the conservative coalition lined up to defeat the Bolling motion by a 210-217 vote, June 25. By limiting Congress to a single vote on budget reconciliation, the President was thus able to achieve permanent changes in long-standing federal programs that would have been impossible under conditions of reasoned debate.

For the motion—Right. Against the Motion—Wrong.

10. Destroying Federal Programs IV

No sooner had Congress approved President Reagan's massive budget cuts than he was back asking for still deeper reductions. The President's economic advisers realized that the combination of deepening recession, exorbitant interest rates and their near-trillion-dollar "supply side" tax-cut giveaway were likely to generate uncontrollable deficits over the next few years. Instead of back-tracking on the tax bill, the President's solution was again to victimize those with little political influence by slashing their programs. In September, the President used television to urge another $16 billion in budget cuts, including a 12-percent across-the-board reduction in non-defense programs on top of the $35 billion in cuts enacted only two months earlier.

Unable to complete action on all federal agency appriations bills before a Nov. 20 deadline, the House Appropriations Committee reported a stopgap funding bill that cut another $2 billion—far short of the President's $16 billion request. When the bill came to the floor Rep. Robert Michel (R-Ill.) moved to recommit the bill to committee with orders that additional cuts be made. In a rare budgetary setback for the Administration, the House rejected Michel's motion 189-201 on Nov. 16. However, the President vetoed the bill, forcing an unprecedented and wasteful one-day shutdown of most government agencies.

Against recommittal — Right. For recommittal — Wrong.

11. Destroying Federal Programs V

Following President Reagan's veto of the continuing appropriations bill, the House Appropriations Committee constructed a new funding measure that fell far short of the President's budget-cutting expectations. Once the bill reached the floor, the Republicans again sought further cuts. Rep. Silvio Conte (R-Mass.) led the attack this time with another motion to send the interim funding bill back to committee with instructions to cut nearly $2 billion more than the $2 billion already cut by committee. The Republican strategy was to slice another $4 billion in federal spending so as to achieve an overall 4-percent across-the-board funding reduction in certain non-defense federal agencies. Particularly hard hit were Labor Dept. programs that had already been cut by 12 percent. For OSHA, the Conte motion cut another $5 million which, combined with earlier reductions, will force a major cutback in job safety inspections. An additional $8 million cut from the NLRB budget coupled with previous reductions will force layoffs of some 300 employees, thus delaying union elections and trebling the backlog of unfair labor practice charges and other cases before the Board. The new budget resolution also inflicted a 25 percent reduction in personnel who process unemployment benefit claims, which, at a time of rising unemployment, will significantly delay the payment of benefits. Despite strong AFL-CIO opposition to the Conte recommittal motion, it was adopted 222-194 on Dec. 10.

Union members spell out their concerns over Reagan's deep slashes in vital programs in a meeting with Rep. Ramano Mazzoli (D-Ky.).

Against recommittal — Right. For recommittal — Wrong.

12. Billion-Dollar Tax Giveaways

The second part of the Reaganomics equation was a trickle-down, tax-cut bill that used the billions of dollars in budget reductions from federal social and economic programs to finance a huge tax cut for the rich and big business. As enacted, the Reagan tax bill is the most expensive revenue-loser in history. By 1986 it will cost the federal Treasury $750 billion in lost revenue.

The Reagan tax bill will cut the effective corporate income tax rate in half at a loss of $170 billion within five years. And the oil companies will reap an additional $12 billion tax bonus. By 1986 the bill will save the heirs of the rich $15 billion in estate and gift taxes while new "savings incentives" tax schemes heap another $21 billion on those who can afford large savings accounts. The highly touted "across-the-board" cuts used to peddle the Reagan tax scheme were later labeled a "Trojan Horse" by Reagan Budget Director David Stockman. They were really designed, he said, to ensure passage of the Administration's hidden objective—slashing the top income tax rate for the rich from 70 to 50 percent. Thus, the individual tax cuts allotted one-third of the tax savings to the wealthiest six percent of American taxpayers.

During House deliberations on the tax bill, the Administration competed with House Democrats for the votes of oil-state Democrats. As a result, a so-called Democratic alternative tax bill emerged, loaded with a host of last-minute special-interest amendments, making it just as costly and only slighty less inequitable than the Reagan proposal. For that reason the AFL-CIO supported a substitute measure offered by Reps. Morris Udall (D-Ariz.), David Obey (D-Wis.), and Henry Reuss (D-Wis.), which provided for a one-year tax cut with no special-interest sweeteners" for the oil industry or the wealthy. This labor-backed alternative would have provided for a fairer distribution of personal tax cuts while targeting business tax reductions to areas and firms in economic need, at less than half the cost of the Reagan package. Despite strong AFL-CIO lobbying, the House rejected the substitute 144-288 on July 29.

For—Right. Against—Wrong.

13. Achieving Energy Independence

During consideration of the 1982 Energy appropriations bill, Rep. Vin Weber (R-Minn.) proposed an amendment to delete $135 million in funding for construction of a synthetic fuels demonstration plant in Newman, Ky. If approved, this amendment would have weakened U.S. efforts to overcome its dependence on foreign oil and political vulnerability to countries that supply it. With several thousand jobs also at stake in an area hard hit by unemployment, the AFL-CIO urged that the amendment be rejected. It was voted down 177-236 on July 22.

Against—Right. For—Wrong.

14. Protecting Civil Rights

The Voting Rights Act of 1965, a landmark civil rights law, important provisions of which are scheduled to expire in 1982, has resulted in doubling of voter registration among blacks in the South and has enabled greater numbers of minority citizens to seek and win elected office. The AFL-CIO and civil rights groups lobbied for extension of the law, particularly its important "pre-clearance" provision, which requires political subdivisions with a history of discrimination to seek approval from the U.S. Attorney General before making any change in election laws or practices.

When the Voting Rights Act extension bill came before the House, it contained a compromise "bail-out" provision that would allow covered jurisdictions to apply for exemption from the "pre-clearance" requirement if they satisfied certain criteria of good conduct in voting procedures and practices. One of those criteria was to bring their "bail-out" petitions to the federal court in the District of Columbia. Rep. Caldwell Butler (R-Va.) proposed an amendment to allow jurisdictions to argue their "bail-out" cases before federal judges across the country, in judicial forums which lacked the expertise of the D.C. court. The AFL-CIO urged rejection of the Butler amendment, which the House turned down by a 132-277 vote on Oct. 5.

Against—Right. For—Wrong.

15. Food Stamps

A major supplementary unemployment benefit program to help feed the families of long-term jobless workers is the federal food stamp program. Long a target of conservatives, funding for the anti-hunger program was cut by nearly $2 billion in 1981, as Reagan budget cutters lopped off eligibility for 1.1 million needy persons. During House debate on a food stamp funding bill, conservatives led by Rep. Robert Walker (R-Pa.) tried a different strategy to cut even more from the programs. His amendment would have required most poor recipients of food stamp benefits to deplete their already meager incomes by paying for a portion of their benefits. Opposed by the AFL-CIO, the Walker amendment was rejected 147-251 on Oct. 22.

Against—Right. For—Wrong.

How Your Members Voted in th

	Labor Dept. Funds	Job Safety	Auto Industry Jobs	Public Works Jobs	Federal Bargaining Rights	Strikebreakers' Pay Raise	Total Labor Votes		Federal Program Cuts I	Federal Program Cuts II	Federal Program Cuts III	Federal Program Cuts IV	Federal Program Cuts V	Tax Giveaways	Energy Independence	Civil Rights	Food Stamps	Cumulative Voting Record		Cumulative Right Percentage
	1	2	3	4	5	6	R	W	7	8	9	10	11	12	13	14	15	R	W	%
ALABAMA
1. Edwards J. (R)	W	W	W	R	R	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	31	185	14
2. Dickinson (R)	W	W	W	R	R	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	24	194	11
3. Nichols (D)	R	W	R	R	W	W	3	3	A	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	R	58	144	29
4. Bevill (D)	R	R	A	R	W	R	4	1	W	W	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	105	98	52
5. Flippo (D)	R	W	R	R	R	R	5	1	W	W	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	41	46	47
6. Smith (R)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	2	13	13
7. Shelby (D)	W	W	R	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	16	38	30
ALASKA
AL Young D. (R)	R	W	W	R	W	A	2	3	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	58	88	40
ARIZONA
1. Rhodes (R)	W	W	A	R	W	W	1	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	25	236	10
2. Udall (D)	R	R	W	R	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	176	32	85
3. Stump (D)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	11	84	12
4. Rudd (R)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	A	W	W	R	W	W	9	86	9
ARKANSAS
1. Alexander (D)	R	W	R	R	R	R	5	1	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	108	72	60
2. Bethune (R)	A	W	R	R	W	W	2	3	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	11	41	21
3. Hammerschmidt (R)	W	W	R	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	33	173	16
4. Anthony (D)	R	W	R	R	R	R	5	1	W	W	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	26	26	50
CALIFORNIA
1. Chappie (R)	W	W	W	A	W	W	0	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	14	0
2. Clausen (R)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	48	174	22
3. Matsui (D)	R	R	W	R	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	46	8	85
4. Fazio (D)	R	W	W	R	R	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	43	10	81
5. Burton J. (D)	A	A	R	W	A	R	2	1	R	R	R	A	R	R	W	A	A	118	11	91
6. Burton P. (D)	R	R	W	W	R	A	3	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	202	15	93
7. Miller G. (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	121	14	90
8. Dellums (D)	R	R	W	W	R	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	167	17	91
9. Stark (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	138	15	90
10. Edwards D. (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	212	17	93
11. Lantos (D)	R	R	R	W	R	A	4	1	W	R	R	R	R	W	W	R	R	10	4	71
12. McCloskey (R)	W	W	W	W	R	A	1	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	A	91	94	49
13. Mineta (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	6	0	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	121	20	86
14. Shumway (R)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	5	45	10
15. Coelho (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	6	0	W	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	38	14	73
16. Panetta (D)	R	W	W	W	R	R	3	3	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	64	31	67
17. Pashayan (R)	A	W	R	R	W	W	2	3	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	13	39	25
18. Thomas (R)	A	A	W	R	W	W	1	3	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	5	46	10
19. Lagomarsino (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	20	133	13
20. Goldwater (R)	W	W	W	R	W	A	1	4	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	A	17	164	9
21. Fiedler (R)	A	A	R	W	R	W	2	2	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	A	W	3	9	25
22. Moorhead C. (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	A	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	16	142	10
23. Bellenson (D)	R	R	W	W	R	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	73	21	78
24. Waxman (D)	R	R	W	W	A	R	3	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	A	118	17	87
25. Roybal (D)	R	R	W	R	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	213	15	93
26. Rousselot (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	17	175	9
27. Dornan (R)	W	W	A	W	W	A	0	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	8	85	9
28. Dixon (D)	R	R	A	R	R	R	5	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	47	3	94
29. Hawkins (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	6	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	205	11	95
30. Danielson (D)	R	R	A	W	R	R	4	1	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	R	R	161	16	91
31. Dymally (D)	R	R	W	A	A	R	3	1	R	R	R	R	A	R	A	R	R	10	1	91
32. Anderson G. (D)	R	R	W	R	R	W	4	2	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	162	33	83
33. Grisham (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	5	46	10
34. Lungren (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	4	50	7
35. Dreier (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	15	0
36. Brown G. (D)	R	R	W	R	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	A	R	R	W	R	R	175	21	89
37. Lewis (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	A	W	W	W	A	A	W	7	44	14
38. Patterson (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	6	0	R	W	R	R	R	R	A	R	R	106	18	85
39. Dannemeyer (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	4	50	7
40. Badham (R)	W	W	A	R	W	W	1	4	A	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	12	78	13
41. Lowery (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	15	0
42. Hunter (R)	W	W	R	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	4	11	27
43. Burgener (R)	W	W	W	R	R	W	2	4	A	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	24	133	15
COLORADO
1. Schroeder (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	W	W	R	R	118	44	73
2. Wirth (D)	R	W	A	R	R	R	4	1	W	R	R	R	R	W	W	R	R	99	37	73
3. Kogovsek (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	6	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	44	9	83
4. Brown (R)	W	W	W	R	R	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	2	13	13
5. Kramer (R)	W	W	R	R	W	A	2	3	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	7	43	14
CONNECTICUT
1. Vacant	—	—	—	—	—	—	0	0	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	0	0	0
2. Gejdenson (D)	R	W	R	W	R	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	12	3	80
3. Denardis (R)	R	R	R	W	W	W	3	3	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	R	R	7	8	47
4. McKinney (R)	R	W	R	W	R	W	3	3	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	98	71	58
5. Ratchford (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	44	9	83
6. Moffett (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	123	15	89
DELAWARE
AL Evans T. (R)	W	W	W	W	R	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	19	71	21
FLORIDA
1. Hutto (D)	W	W	W	R	W	R	2	4	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	R	R	22	31	42
2. Fuqua (D)	R	W	W	R	W	A	2	3	W	W	R	R	W	W	R	R	R	78	141	36
3. Bennett (D)	R	W	W	R	R	W	3	3	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	W	124	165	43
4. Chappell (D)	W	W	R	R	W	R	3	3	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	W	R	59	133	31
5. McCollum (R)	W	W	R	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	2	13	13
6. Young C. W. (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	31	156	17
7. Gibbons (D)	R	W	W	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	R	W	R	W	R	R	W	128	95	57
8. Ireland (D)	W	W	W	R	A	W	1	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	18	72	20
9. Nelson (D)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	R	R	W	W	R	R	R	19	35	35
10. Bafalis (R)	W	A	W	W	W	W	0	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	W	24	133	15
11. Mica D)	R	W	R	R	W	W	3	3	W	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	24	28	46
12. Shaw (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	15	0
13. Lehman (D)	R	R	W	R	R	R	5	1	W	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	R	136	25	84
14. Pepper (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	6	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	209	16	93
15. Fascell (D)	R	R	W	R	R	R	5	1	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	220	50	81
GEORGIA
1. Ginn (D)	R	W	R	R	R	R	5	1	W	W	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	83	81	51
2. Hatcher (D)	R	W	W	R	R	R	4	2	W	W	R	A	R	W	R	W	R	8	6	57
3. Brinkley (D)	R	W	W	W	R	W	2	4	W	W	R	W	R	W	W	W	R	71	137	34
4. Levitas (D)	R	W	W	R	R	W	3	3	W	W	R	W	R	W	R	W	R	70	72	49
5. Fowler (D)	R	W	W	W	R	R	3	3	R	R	R	R	R	W	W	R	A	55	34	62
6. Gingrich (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	2	50	4
7 McDonald (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	10	133	7
8. Evans B. (D)	R	W	R	R	A	R	4	1	A	W	W	W	A	W	R	W	R	34	54	39
9. Jenkins (D)	W	W	W	R	R	R	3	3	W	W	R	W	W	W	R	W	R	31	59	34
10. Barnard (D)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	15	76	16
HAWAII
1. Heftel (D)	R	W	R	R	R	R	5	1	W	R	R	R	R	W	W	R	R	64	29	69
2. Akaka (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	6	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	78	19	80
IDAHO
1. Craig (R)	W	W	R	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	2	13	13
2. Hansen (R)	W	W	W	R	W	A	1	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	13	142	8
ILLINOIS
1. Washington (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	13	2	87
2. Savage (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	5	0	R	R	R	R	R	A	A	R	A	11	0	100
3. Russo (D)	R	R	R	W	W	R	4	2	W	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	107	34	76
4. Derwinski (R)	W	R	W	W	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	38	212	15
5. Fary (D)	R	R	W	W	W	R	3	3	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	111	17	87
6. Hyde (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	29	116	20
7. Collins C. (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	137	11	93
8. Rostenkowski (D)	R	R	W	R	W	R	4	2	W	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	218	29	88
9. Yates (D)	R	R	W	W	R	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	251	24	91
10. Porter (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	3	23	12
11. Annunzio (D)	R	R	W	R	W	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	201	21	91
12. Crane P. (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	13	162	7
13. McClory (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	38	193	16
14. Erlenborn (R)	W	W	W	W	A	W	0	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	24	186	11
15. Corcoran (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	9	86	9
16. Martin (R)	A	W	R	W	R	W	2	3	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	4	10	29
17. O'Brien (R)	R	W	W	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	29	130	18
18. Michel (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	W	32	230	12
19. Railsback (R)	W	W	R	W	R	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	81	119	40
20. Findley (R)	W	W	W	R	R	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	48	192	20
21. Madigan (R)	W	W	R	W	W	A	1	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	46	112	29
22. Crane D. (R)	W	W	R	W	W	A	1	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	4	48	8
23. Price (D)	R	R	W	R	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	272	12	96
24. Simon (D)	R	R	W	R	W	A	3	2	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	106	28	79
INDIANA
1. Benjamin (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	81	16	84
2. Fithian (D)	R	R	A	W	W	R	3	2	A	R	R	A	A	R	R	R	R	93	41	69
3. Hiler (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	2	13	13
4. Coats (R)	W	R	R	W	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	3	12	20
5. Hillis (R)	W	W	R	W	W	A	1	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	62	112	36
6. Evans D. (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	5	1	W	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	87	49	64
7. Myers J. (R)	W	W	R	R	W	A	2	3	W	W	R	W	W	W	R	W	W	35	172	17
8. Deckard (R)	W	W	R	W	A	W	1	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	A	9	41	18
9. Hamilton (D)	R	W	R	W	W	W	2	4	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	148	75	66
10. Sharp (D)	R	W	R	W	W	A	2	3	W	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	W	96	46	68
11. Jacobs (D)	R	R	R	W	W	R	4	2	W	W	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	138	64	68
IOWA
1. Leach J. (R)	R	W	W	W	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	28	69	29
2. Tauke (R)	R	W	W	W	W	A	1	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	10	40	20
3. Evans (R)	R	W	W	W	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	4	11	27
4. Smith N. (D)	R	W	W	R	W	R	3	3	W	R	R	R	R	W	A	R	R	196	47	81
5. Harkin (D)	R	W	W	W	R	R	3	3	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	95	39	71
6. Bedell (D)	R	W	W	W	W	R	2	4	W	R	R	A	W	R	W	R	R	85	55	61
KANSAS
1. Roberts (R)	W	W	W	W	A	W	0	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	14	0
2. Jeffries (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	4	49	8
3. Winn (R)	W	W	W	R	W	A	1	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	34	163	17
4. Glickman (D)	R	W	W	W	R	W	2	4	W	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	55	42	57
5. Whittaker (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	5	49	9
KENTUCKY
1. Hubbard (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	5	1	W	R	R	W	R	W	R	A	R	80	58	58
2. Natcher (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	5	1	W	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	194	85	70
3. Mazzoli (D)	R	R	R	A	W	W	3	2	W	W	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	122	57	68
4. Snyder (R)	R	R	R	R	W	W	4	2	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	46	175	21
5. Rogers (R)	R	R	R	R	W	W	4	2	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	6	9	40
6. Hopkins (R)	R	R	R	W	W	W	3	3	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	14	37	27
7. Perkins (D)	R	R	W	R	W	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	252	31	89
LOUISIANA
1. Livingston (R)	R	W	W	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	12	69	15
2. Boggs (D)	R	W	W	R	W	R	3	3	W	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	108	46	70
3. Tauzin (D)	W	W	W	R	A	W	1	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	5	12	29
4. Roemer (D)	W	W	R	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	3	12	20
5. Huckaby (D)	W	W	W	R	W	R	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	24	71	25
6. Moore (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	13	127	9
7. Breaux (D)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	57	100	36
8. Long G. (D)	R	R	W	R	W	R	4	2	W	R	R	A	R	W	R	R	R	121	86	58
MAINE
1. Emery (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	55	86	39
2. Snowe (R)	R	W	R	W	R	W	3	3	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	24	29	45
MARYLAND
1. Dyson (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	5	1	W	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	12	3	80
2. Long C. (D)	R	A	R	R	R	R	5	0	R	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	162	67	71
3. Mikulski (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	84	11	88
4. Holt (R)	R	W	A	R	W	W	2	3	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	27	134	17
5. Hoyer (D)	R	W	R	R	*	R	4	1	*	*	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	11	1	92
6. Byron B. (D)	R	W	R	R	W	W	3	3	W	W	W	A	R	W	R	R	R	22	31	42
7. Mitchell P. (D)	R	A	R	A	R	R	4	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	173	11	94
8. Barnes (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	46	6	88
MASSACHUSETTS
1. Conte (R)	R	W	W	W	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	R	R	157	99	61
2. Boland (D)	R	R	R	W	W	W	3	3	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	247	33	88
3. Early (D)	R	R	R	W	W	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	111	26	81
4. Frank (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	13	2	87
5. Shannon (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	W	W	R	R	46	7	88
6. Mavroules (D)	R	R	R	W	W	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	45	7	87
7. Markey (D)	R	R	R	W	W	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	81	15	84
8. O'Neill (D)																		173	9	95
9. Moakley (D)	R	R	R	A	W	R	4	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	142	16	90
10. Heckler (R)	R	R	R	W	W	W	3	3	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	R	R	142	63	69
11. Donnelly (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	40	11	78
12. Studds (D)	R	R	W	W	R	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	147	18	89
MICHIGAN
1. Conyers (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	6	0	R	R	A	R	R	R	W	R	R	184	18	91
2. Pursell (R)	R	W	R	W	R	R	4	2	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	R	R	53	38	58
3. Wolpe (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	W	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	45	9	83
4. Siljander (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	1	14	7
5. Sawyer (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	A	W	W	R	W	W	18	72	20
6. Dunn (R)	W	W	R	W	R	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	4	11	26
7. Kildee (D)	R	R	R	W	W	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	86	11	89
8. Traxler (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	5	1	W	R	R	R	R	W	W	R	R	118	25	83
9. Vander Jagt (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	33	167	17
10. Albosta (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	5	1	W	W	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	40	14	74
11. Davis (R)	R	W	R	W	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	R	R	25	28	47
12. Bonior (D)	R	A	R	W	W	R	3	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	86	10	90
13. Crockett (D)	R	A	R	R	A	R	4	0	A	R	R	R	A	R	W	R	R	10	1	91
14. Hertel (D)	R	R	R	W	W	R	4	2	R	R	R	A	R	R	W	R	R	11	3	79
15. Ford W. (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	6	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	199	9	96
16. Dingell (D)	R	A	R	W	R	R	4	1	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	238	22	92
17. Brodhead (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	131	11	92
18. Blanchard (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	W	R	R	A	R	A	R	A	R	126	15	89
19. Broomfield (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	43	154	22
MINNESOTA
1. Erdahl (R)	R	W	W	W	R	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	10	42	19
2. Hagedorn (R)	W	W	W	R	W	A	1	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	15	123	11
3. Frenzel (R)	W	W	W	W	R	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	34	149	19
4. Vento (D)	R	R	R	W	W	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	86	11	87
5. Sabo (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	6	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	47	7	87
6. Weber (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	1	14	7
7. Stangeland (R)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	13	84	13
8. Oberstar (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	129	13	91

Key to Symbols

R Voted Right or was paired Right.

W Voted Wrong or was paired Wrong.

A Absent and not paired.

* Not in Congress at time.

Number before each name shows congressional district.

he U.S. House of Representatives

	Labor Dept. Funds 1	Job Safety 2	Auto Industry Jobs 3	Public Works Jobs 4	Federal Bargaining Rights 5	Strikebreakers' Pay Raise 6	Total Labor Votes R	Total Labor Votes W	Federal Program Cuts I 7	Federal Program Cuts II 8	Federal Program Cuts III 9	Federal Program Cuts IV 10	Federal Program Cuts V 11	Tax Giveaways 12	Energy Independence 13	Civil Rights 14	Food Stamps 15	Cumulative Voting Record R	Cumulative Voting Record W	Cumulative Right Percentage %
MISSISSIPPI
1. Whitten (D)	R	W	R	R	W	R	4	2	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	W	85	195	30
2. Bowen (D)	R	W	W	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	R	R	R	W	R	W	R	54	107	34
3. Montgomery (D)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	23	182	11
4. Dowdy (D)	W	W	R	R	*	R	3	2	*	*	*	R	R	W	R	R	R	8	3	73
5. Lott (R)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	26	131	17
MISSOURI
1. Clay (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	168	12	93
2. Young R. (D)	R	W	R	R	W	R	4	2	W	W	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	70	23	75
3. Gephardt (D)	R	W	R	W	W	R	3	3	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	70	26	73
4. Skelton (D)	R	W	R	R	W	R	4	2	W	W	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	57	34	63
5. Bolling (D)	R	R	W	W	A	A	2	2	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	R	234	16	94
6. Coleman (R)	W	W	R	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	A	W	W	R	W	W	13	82	14
7. Taylor (R)	W	W	R	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	20	141	12
8. Bailey (R)	W	W	R	A	W	W	1	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	2	12	14
9. Volkmer (D)	R	W	R	R	W	R	4	2	W	W	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	60	33	65
10. Emerson (R)	W	W	R	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	3	12	20
MONTANA
1. Williams P. (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	6	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	42	11	79
2. Marlenee (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	23	70	25
NEBRASKA
1. Bereuter (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	11	43	20
2. Daub (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	2	13	13
3. Smith V. (R)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	15	126	11
NEVADA
AL Santini (D)	R	W	R	W	W	A	2	3	W	W	W	A	R	W	W	W	W	57	77	43
NEW HAMPSHIRE
1. D'Amours (D)	R	R	R	A	W	R	4	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	108	34	76
2. Gregg (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	1	14	7
NEW JERSEY
1. Florio (D)	A	A	A	W	R	R	2	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	A	119	17	88
2. Hughes (D)	R	W	W	R	R	A	3	2	W	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	99	41	71
3. Howard (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	6	0	R	R	R	R	A	R	W	R	R	194	14	93
4. Smith (R)	R	R	R	W	W	W	3	3	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	R	R	6	9	40
5. Fenwick (R)	R	R	W	W	R	W	3	3	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	62	79	44
6. Forsythe (R)	W	W	W	W	R	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	45	121	27
7. Roukema (R)	R	W	W	W	R	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	4	11	27
8. Roe (D)	R	R	R	R	A	R	5	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	165	19	90
9. Hollenbeck (R)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	W	W	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	69	26	73
10. Rodino (D)	R	R	W	W	R	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	260	15	95
11. Minish (D)	R	R	R	W	W	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	212	20	91
12. Rinaldo (R)	R	R	R	W	W	W	3	3	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	R	R	125	36	78
13. Courter (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	8	45	15
14. Guarini (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	6	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	47	7	87
15. Dwyer (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	14	1	93
NEW MEXICO
1. Lujan (R)	W	W	R	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	44	135	25
2. Skeen (R)	W	W	R	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	3	12	20
NEW YORK
1. Carney (R)	R	W	W	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	11	42	21
2. Downey (D)	R	R	W	A	A	R	3	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	119	17	88
3. Carman (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	15	0
4. Lent (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	49	130	27
5. McGrath (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	1	14	7
6. Leboutillier (R)	W	W	W	W	A	W	0	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	2	12	14
7. Addabbo (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	6	0	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	229	15	94
8. Rosenthal (D)	R	R	R	A	A	R	4	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	A	207	12	95
9. Ferraro (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	46	6	88
10. Biaggi (D)	R	R	R	R	W	A	4	1	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	163	29	85
11. Scheuer (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	6	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	179	17	91
12. Chisholm (D)	A	A	A	R	R	A	2	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	174	10	95
13. Solarz (D)	R	R	W	W	R	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	122	16	88
14. Richmond (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	127	11	92
15. Zeferetti (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	122	14	90
16. Schumer (D)	R	R	A	W	R	R	4	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	13	1	93
17. Molinari (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	W	R	4	11	27
18. Green (R)	R	W	W	W	R	W	2	4	W	W	W	R	R	W	W	R	R	39	33	54
19. Rangel (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	6	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	165	13	93
20. Weiss (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	87	9	91
21. Garcia (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	6	0	R	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	63	4	94
22. Bingham (D)	R	R	W	W	R	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	197	21	90
23. Peyser (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	111	18	86
24. Ottinger (D)	R	R	R	W	A	R	4	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	156	21	88
25. Fish (R)	R	W	R	W	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	83	109	43
26. Gilman (R)	R	W	R	A	R	W	3	2	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	R	R	113	47	71
27. McHugh (D)	R	R	W	W	W	R	3	3	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	111	25	82
28. Stratton (D)	R	W	R	R	W	W	3	3	W	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	192	52	79
29. Solomon (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	10	42	19
30. Martin (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	2	13	13
31. Mitchell D. (R)	R	W	W	W	A	W	1	4	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	R	R	68	93	42
32. Wortley (R)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	3	12	20
33. Lee (R)	W	W	R	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	12	39	24
34. Horton (R)	R	W	R	R	R	W	4	2	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	R	R	152	79	66
35. Conable (R)	W	W	W	W	A	W	0	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	35	183	16
36. LaFalce (D)	R	R	W	R	R	R	5	1	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	111	29	79
37. Nowak (D)	R	W	R	R	W	R	4	2	W	R	R	R	R	W	W	R	R	125	18	87
38. Kemp (R)	W	W	W	A	W	W	0	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	33	145	19
39. Lundine (D)	R	W	R	W	R	R	4	2	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	87	23	79
NORTH CAROLINA
1. Jones W. (D)	A	A	A	R	R	A	2	0	W	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	79	123	39
2. Fountain (D)	W	W	W	W	R	W	1	5	W	W	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	49	201	20
3. Whitley (D)	W	W	W	R	R	R	3	3	W	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	42	52	45
4. Andrews I. (D)	W	W	R	R	R	W	3	3	W	W	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	69	84	45
5. Neal (D)	R	W	W	W	R	R	3	3	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	64	74	46
6. Johnston (R)	A	W	W	W	W	W	0	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	14	0
7. Rose (D)	R	R	W	R	R	A	4	1	W	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	R	90	59	60
8. Hefner (D)	R	W	R	R	R	R	5	1	W	R	R	A	W	R	R	R	R	64	72	47
9. Martin (R)	W	W	W	W	R	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	W	13	146	8
10. Broyhill (R)	W	W	W	W	R	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	19	212	8
11. Hendon (R)	W	W	R	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	4	11	27
NORTH DAKOTA
AL Dorgan (D)	R	W	R	R	W	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	W	W	R	R	11	4	73
OHIO
1. Gradison (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	A	25	113	18
2. Luken (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	5	1	W	W	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	80	26	75
3. Hall T. (D)	R	R	R	W	R	A	4	1	W	W	R	R	A	W	W	R	R	40	12	77
4. Oxley (R)	W	W	*	R	*	W	1	3	*	*	*	W	W	W	R	W	W	2	8	20
5. Latta (R)	W	R	W	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	33	224	13
6. McEwen (R)	W	W	R	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	3	12	20
7. Brown C. (R)	A	A	R	R	A	W	2	1	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	38	160	19
8. Kindness (R)	W	W	R	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	17	122	12
9. Weber (R)	W	R	R	W	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	3	12	20
10. Miller C. (R)	W	W	R	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	26	187	12
11. Stanton (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	67	154	30
12. Shamansky (D)	R	R	R	W	R	W	4	2	W	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	11	4	73
13. Pease (D)	R	R	R	W	A	R	4	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	77	19	80
14. Seiberling (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	161	21	88
15. Wylie (R)	W	W	W	A	W	W	0	5	W	W	W	A	W	W	R	R	W	46	159	22
16. Regula (R)	W	W	R	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	49	117	30
17. Ashbrook (R)	W	W	R	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	A	W	26	214	11
18. Applegate (D)	R	R	R	W	W	W	3	3	W	R	R	R	R	W	R	W	R	67	30	69
19. Williams L. (R)	R	W	R	R	W	A	3	2	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	28	25	53
20. Oakar (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	86	9	91
21. Stokes (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	6	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	168	11	94
22. Eckart (D)	R	W	R	W	R	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	13	2	87
23. Mottl (D)	W	R	R	W	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	W	90	48	65
OKLAHOMA
1. Jones J. (D)	R	W	W	R	W	A	2	3	W	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	W	67	90	43
2. Synar (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	W	R	R	R	R	W	W	R	R	30	23	57
3. Watkins (D)	R	W	R	R	W	R	4	2	W	R	R	R	W	W	R	R	R	29	74	28
4. McCurdy (D)	R	W	R	R	W	W	3	3	W	R	R	R	W	W	R	R	R	9	6	60
5. Edwards M. (R)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	8	87	8
6. English (D)	R	W	R	R	W	W	3	3	W	W	R	W	W	W	R	R	R	37	104	26
OREGON
1. AuCoin (D)	R	R	W	R	R	A	4	1	W	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	89	47	65
2. Smith (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	15	0
3. Wyden (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	13	2	87
4. Weaver (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	115	20	85
PENNSYLVANIA
1. Foglietta (D)	R	W	R	W	R	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	13	2	87
2. Gray (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	6	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	51	2	96
3. Smith (D)	R	R	*	*	*	R	3	0	*	*	*	R	R	R	*	R	R	8	0	100
4. Dougherty (R)	R	R	R	W	W	W	3	3	W	W	W	R	R	W	R	R	R	29	22	57
5. Schulze (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	24	115	17
6. Yatron (D)	R	R	R	W	W	R	4	2	R	W	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	153	39	80
7. Edgar (D)	R	R	R	W	A	R	4	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	118	18	87
8. Coyne, J. (R)	W	W	R	W	R	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	4	11	27
9. Shuster (R)	W	W	R	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	23	139	14
10. McDade (R)	R	R	R	R	W	W	4	2	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	151	79	66
11. Nelligan (R)	R	W	R	W	A	W	2	3	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	R	R	6	8	43
12. Murtha (D)	R	R	W	R	W	R	4	2	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	123	25	83
13. Coughlin (R)	W	W	R	W	R	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	63	132	32
14. Coyne, W. (D)	R	R	R	W	W	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	13	2	87
15. Ritter (R)	W	W	R	A	W	W	1	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	14	39	26
16. Walker (R)	W	R	R	W	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	19	77	20
17. Ertel (D)	R	W	R	R	R	R	5	1	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	66	26	72
18. Walgren (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	W	R	R	R	W	W	R	R	W	76	19	80
19. Goodling (R)	R	W	R	W	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	33	103	24
20. Gaydos (D)	R	R	R	A	W	R	4	1	R	R	R	R	R	W	A	R	R	165	18	90
21. Bailey (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	45	9	83
22. Murphy A. (D)	R	R	R	A	W	R	4	1	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	A	71	23	76
23. Clinger (R)	R	W	W	W	R	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	19	32	37
24. Marks (R)	R	R	R	W	W	R	4	2	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	54	43	56
25. Atkinson (R)	W	R	R	W	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	28	26	52
RHODE ISLAND
1. St Germain (D)	R	R	R	R	A	R	5	0	W	R	R	R	R	W	W	R	R	211	24	90
2. Schneider (R)	R	R	R	W	R	W	4	2	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	R	R	7	8	47
SOUTH CAROLINA
1. Hartnett (R)	W	W	R	W	A	W	1	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	1	13	7
2. Spence (R)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	29	156	16
3. Derrick (D)	R	W	R	W	R	R	4	2	W	W	R	W	R	W	W	R	R	76	59	56
4. Campbell (R)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	A	5	46	10
5. Holland (D)	R	R	W	R	R	R	5	1	W	W	R	A	W	W	R	R	R	67	53	56
6. Napier (R)	A	W	W	R	W	W	1	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	3	11	21
SOUTH DAKOTA
1. Daschle (D)	R	W	R	R	R	R	5	1	W	R	R	A	R	W	W	R	R	42	11	79
2. Roberts (R)	A	W	R	A	W	W	1	3	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	1	12	8
TENNESSEE
1. Quillen (R)	W	W	R	R	A	W	2	3	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	32	191	14
2. Duncan J. (R)	W	W	R	R	W	A	2	3	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	39	186	17
3. Bouquard (D)	R	W	R	R	W	R	4	2	W	W	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	79	62	56
4. Gore (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	5	1	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	R	76	20	79
5. Boner (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	5	1	W	R	R	R	A	W	R	R	R	43	10	81
6. Beard R. (R)	A	W	R	R	A	W	2	2	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	A	A	20	128	14
7. Jones E. (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	5	1	W	W	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	112	76	60
8. Ford H. (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	6	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	127	13	91
TEXAS
1. Hall S. (D)	W	W	R	R	W	R	3	3	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	A	24	76	24
2. Wilson C. (D)	R	R	W	R	R	W	4	2	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	A	97	57	63
3. Collins J. (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	14	185	7
4. Hall, R. (D)	W	W	R	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	4	11	27
5. Mattox (D)	R	R	R	W	A	A	3	1	W	R	R	A	R	W	W	R	R	56	36	61
6. Gramm (D)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	8	46	15
7. Archer (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	11	176	6
8. Fields (R)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	1	14	7
9. Brooks (D)	R	W	W	R	R	R	4	2	W	R	R	A	A	W	R	A	A	193	73	73
10. Pickle (D)	W	W	W	R	R	R	3	3	W	R	R	R	W	W	R	R	R	114	109	51
11. Leath (D)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	A	W	W	R	W	R	11	39	22
12. Wright (D)	R	W	W	R	W	R	3	3	W	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	186	66	74
13. Hightower (D)	R	W	R	R	W	W	3	3	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	46	94	33
14. Patman (D)	R	W	W	R	A	W	2	3	W	R	R	R	R	W	R	W	R	8	6	57
15. de la Garza (D)	R	W	R	R	W	R	4	2	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	113	97	54
16. White (D)	R	W	W	R	W	W	2	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	84	140	38
17. Stenholm (D)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	9	44	17
18. Leland (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	48	4	92
19. Hance (D)	W	W	W	R	R	R	3	3	W	W	W	A	W	W	R	R	R	15	38	28
20. Gonzalez (D)	R	R	W	R	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	214	22	91
21. Loeffler (R)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	6	48	11
22. Paul (R)	W	W	R	W	W	A	1	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	5	65	7
23. Kazen (D)	R	W	W	R	W	R	3	3	W	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	111	104	52
24. Frost (D)	R	R	W	A	R	R	4	1	W	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	A	34	18	65
UTAH
1. Hansen (R)	W	W	W	R	A	W	1	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	W	1	12	8
2. Marriott (R)	A	A	R	R	W	W	2	2	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	14	74	16
VERMONT
AL Jeffords (R)	R	W	W	W	R	W	2	4	R	W	W	R	W	R	W	W	R	63	75	46
VIRGINIA
1. Trible (R)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	13	83	15
2. Whitehurst (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	29	162	15
3. Bliley (R)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	2	13	13
4. Daniel R. W. (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	16	146	10
5. Daniel D. (D)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	19	179	10
6. Butler (R)	W	W	W	W	R	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	17	173	9
7. Robinson (R)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	18	169	10
8. Parris (R)	A	R	R	R	W	W	3	2	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	4	10	29
9. Wampler (R)	R	R	W	R	W	A	3	2	W	W	W	A	W	W	R	W	R	42	173	20
10. Wolf (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	15	0
WASHINGTON
1. Pritchard (R)	R	W	W	W	R	W	2	4	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	A	W	63	96	40
2. Swift (D)	R	W	R	W	R	R	4	2	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	40	14	74
3. Bonker (D)	R	R	W	A	R	R	4	1	W	R	R	R	R	R	A	A	R	109	23	83
4. Morrison (R)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	1	14	7
5. Foley (D)	R	W	W	R	R	R	4	2	W	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	177	42	81
6. Dicks (D)	R	R	W	R	R	R	5	1	W	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	77	16	83
7. Lowry (D)	R	R	W	W	R	R	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	42	12	78
WEST VIRGINIA
1. Mollohan (D)	R	R	W	R	R	A	4	1	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	166	31	84
2. Benedict (R)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	2	13	13
3. Staton (R)	W	R	R	R	W	W	3	3	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	4	11	27
4. Rahall (D)	R	R	R	R	A	R	5	0	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	77	17	82
WISCONSIN
1. Aspin (D)	R	R	R	W	W	A	3	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	146	33	82
2. Kastenmeier (D)	R	R	R	W	R	W	4	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	225	29	89
3. Gunderson (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	3	12	20
4. Zablocki (D)	R	W	W	R	W	R	3	3	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	262	24	92
5. Reuss (D)	R	R	W	W	R	A	3	2	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	249	22	92
6. Petri (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	16	36	31
7. Obey (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	5	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R*	162	31	84
8. Roth (R)	W	W	W	W	W	A	0	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	6	45	12
9. Sensenbrenner (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	6	48	11
WYOMING
AL Cheney (R)	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	5	49	9

How Your Senators Voted

	1 Prevailing Wage	2 Unemployment Benefits I	3 Unemployment Benefits II	4 Unemployment Benefits III	5 Job Safety	6 Retirement Benefits	7 Railroad Retirement	8 Maritime Jobs	Total Labor Votes R	Total Labor Votes W	9 Federal Programs I	10 Federal Programs II	11 Tax Cuts for the Rich	12 Tax Cuts for Oil Industry	13 Social Security I	14 Social Security II	15 Social Security III	16 Energy Costs	17 Public Works	18 Civil Rights	19 Food Stamps	Cumulative Voting Record R	Cumulative Voting Record W	Cumulative Right Percentage %
ALABAMA
Heflin (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	7	1	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	R	R	W	31	22	58
Denton (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	1	7	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	2	17	11
ALASKA
Murkowski (R)	R	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	2	6	W	W	W	A	W	A	W	W	R	W	R	4	13	24
Stevens (R)	A	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	2	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	87	86	50
ARIZONA
DeConcini (D)	R	R	W	W	R	R	R	R	6	2	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	R	W	A	51	40	56
Goldwater (R)	A	W	W	A	A	W	A	R	1	3	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	A	W	W	19	183	9
ARKANSAS
Bumpers (D)	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	W	6	2	R	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	78	52	60
Pryor (D)	W	R	W	R	R	R	R	W	5	3	W	W	A	A	R	W	R	W	R	W	W	27	28	49
CALIFORNIA
Cranston (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	8	0	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	A	R	R	A	164	16	91
Hayakawa (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	8	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	13	78	14
COLORADO
Hart (D)	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	R	7	1	R	R	R	A	R	W	R	A	W	R	R	102	31	77
Armstrong (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	8	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	1	53	2
CONNECTICUT
Dodd (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	8	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	18	0	100
Weicker (R)	R	R	W	W	W	W	R	R	4	4	R	W	A	R	R	R	R	W	A	R	R	104	55	65
DELAWARE
Biden (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	8	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	W	W	111	33	77
Roth (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	R	W	2	6	W	W	W	R	R	R	W	R	W	W	W	34	143	19
FLORIDA
Chiles (D)	R	W	W	W	R	R	R	R	5	3	W	W	A	A	R	W	R	W	W	W	W	78	97	45
Hawkins (R)	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	3	5	W	W	W	W	A	W	R	R	W	W	W	5	13	28
GEORGIA
Nunn (D)	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	3	5	W	W	W	R	R	W	W	W	R	W	W	55	103	35
Mattingly (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	1	7	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	2	17	11
HAWAII
Inouye (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	8	0	R	W	R	W	R	A	R	R	R	R	R	167	25	87
Matsunaga (D)	R	R	W	R	A	R	R	R	6	1	R	W	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	R	78	14	85
IDAHO
Symms (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	8	W	W	A	A	W	A	W	W	R	W	W	1	15	6
McClure (R)	R	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	1	7	W	W	W	A	W	A	W	W	R	W	W	16	133	11
ILLINOIS
Dixon (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	7	1	R	W	W	A	R	W	R	W	W	R	W	11	7	61
Percy (R)	R	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	1	7	R	W	A	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	100	77	56
INDIANA
Quayle (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	8	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	19	0
Lugar (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	8	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	6	89	6
IOWA
Grassley (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	1	7	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	1	17	6
Jepsen (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	1	7	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	4	51	7
KANSAS
Dole (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	8	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	32	147	18
Kassebaum (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	1	7	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	9	44	17
KENTUCKY
Ford (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	7	1	R	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	R	W	R	92	40	70
Huddleston (D)	R	R	W	R	R	W	R	R	6	2	R	W	R	W	R	W	R	R	R	W	R	104	43	71
LOUISIANA
Johnston (D)	R	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	3	5	W	W	W	A	R	W	R	W	R	W	A	55	87	39
Long (D)	R	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	4	4	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	R	W	W	122	125	49
MAINE
Mitchell (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	8	0	R	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	25	3	89
Cohen (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	1	7	R	A	W	R	W	R	W	W	W	R	R	17	37	31
MARYLAND
Sarbanes (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	8	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	89	3	97
Mathias (R)	R	R	R	A	A	A	R	R	5	0	R	W	W	R	A	R	W	W	W	R	R	138	42	77
MASSACHUSETTS
Kennedy (D)	R	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	7	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	W	R	R	183	16	92
Tsongas (D)	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	R	7	1	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	W	W	R	R	48	6	89
MICHIGAN
Levin (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	8	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	55	2	96
Riegle (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	8	0	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	A	85	6	93
MINNESOTA
Boschwitz (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	8	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	7	50	12
Durenberger (R)	R	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	2	6	R	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	23	32	42
MISSISSIPPI
Stennis (D)	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	3	5	W	W	A	W	R	W	W	W	R	W	W	62	198	24
Cochran (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	1	7	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	9	46	16
MISSOURI
Eagleton (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	7	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	154	24	87
Danforth (R)	R	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	1	7	R	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	30	64	32
MONTANA
Baucus (D)	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	R	7	1	W	W	R	A	R	W	R	W	W	R	R	43	11	80
Melcher (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	8	0	R	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	R	W	R	73	20	78
NEBRASKA
Exon (D)	R	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	3	5	W	W	W	A	R	W	R	W	R	W	W	19	34	36
Zorinsky (D)	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	3	5	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	W	W	W	29	67	30
NEVADA
Cannon (D)	A	R	W	R	A	A	R	R	4	1	R	A	R	W	R	R	A	R	A	W	W	144	83	63
Laxalt (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	1	7	W	W	W	A	W	W	A	W	A	W	W	15	108	12
NEW HAMPSHIRE
Rudman (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	1	7	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	W	W	R	W	4	15	21
Humphrey (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	8	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	4	52	7
NEW JERSEY
Bradley (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	A	6	0	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	W	W	R	R	50	4	93
Williams (D)	R	A	A	R	R	R	R	R	6	0	A	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	226	18	93
NEW MEXICO
Domenici (R)	R	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	2	6	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	37	113	25
Schmitt (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	1	7	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	15	74	17
NEW YORK
Moynihan (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	7	0	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	86	6	93
D'Amato (R)	R	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	3	5	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	R	W	W	4	14	22
NORTH CAROLINA
East (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	1	7	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	2	17	11
Helms (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	1	7	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	15	141	10
NORTH DAKOTA
Burdick (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	8	0	R	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	R	R	R	197	38	84
Andrews (R)	R	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	3	5	R	W	A	A	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	6	11	35
OHIO
Glenn (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	7	1	R	W	R	W	R	W	R	W	R	R	W	100	32	76
Metzenbaum (D)	R	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	7	0	R	A	R	A	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	93	9	91
OKLAHOMA
Boren (D)	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	3	5	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	R	W	W	18	39	32
Nickles (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	8	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	18	5
OREGON
Hatfield (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	1	7	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	101	88	53
Packwood (R)	R	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	2	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	80	100	44
PENNSYLVANIA
Heinz (R)	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	7	0	R	W	W	R	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	60	31	66
Specter (R)	R	W	R	W	R	R	R	R	6	2	R	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	W	R	R	11	8	58
RHODE ISLAND
Pell (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	8	0	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	209	18	92
Chafee (R)	R	R	W	W	W	R	R	R	5	3	R	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	51	41	55
SOUTH CAROLINA
Hollings (D)	R	W	W	R	R	W	R	R	5	3	W	W	W	R	R	R	W	R	R	W	R	95	100	49
Thurmond (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	8	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	30	234	11
SOUTH DAKOTA
Abdnor (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	8	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	1	18	5
Pressler (R)	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	3	5	W	W	W	A	A	R	R	W	W	R	R	18	30	38
TENNESSEE
Sasser (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	7	0	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	A	R	W	W	62	28	69
Baker (R)	R	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	1	7	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	W	44	134	25
TEXAS
Bentsen (D)	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	3	5	W	W	W	A	R	W	R	W	R	W	R	80	93	46
Tower (R)	W	A	A	A	W	W	W	R	1	4	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	20	196	9
UTAH
Garn (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	2	6	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	15	119	11
Hatch (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	1	7	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	9	83	10
VERMONT
Leahy (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	W	6	1	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	109	26	81
Stafford (R)	R	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	2	6	R	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	W	A	R	107	59	64
VIRGINIA
Byrd H. (I)	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	2	6	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	W	W	28	183	13
Warner (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	1	7	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	7	50	12
WASHINGTON
Jackson (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	8	0	R	W	R	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	251	16	94
Gorton (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	1	7	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	W	1	17	6
WEST VIRGINIA
Byrd R. (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	7	0	R	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	171	89	66
Randolph (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	8	0	R	R	R	W	R	W	R	A	R	W	R	188	56	77
WISCONSIN
Kasten (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	2	6	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	3	16	16
Proxmire (D)	R	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	3	5	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	R	W	W	W	186	74	72
WYOMING
Simpson (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	0	8	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	1	55	2
Wallop (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	1	7	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	10	84	11

Key to Symbols

R Voted Right or was paired Right.

W Voted Wrong or was paired Wrong.

A Absent and not paired.

* Not in Congress at time.

Votes by senators while members of the House are not included in this record.

Labor's Stand on Major Issues in the Senate

1. Attack on Federal Fair-Wage Laws

Conservatives continued to press their attack on the nation's basic labor laws in 1981 as once again the Davis-Bacon Act was targeted for destruction. This 50-year-old landmark law requires the payment of prevailing wages to workers on federally financed construction projects. It assures local contractors who uphold community labor standards a fair chance to compete for government projects without being undercut by outside firms using cut-rate labor. The law also helps stabilize a notoriously unstable industry by requiring payment of wage rates that allow for the recruitment, training and maintenance of a skilled construction labor force within the local area. This, in turn, helps protect the federal government against fly-by-night operators seeking to win government contracts by paying wages too low to attract competent craftsmen.

Stymied in their efforts to gain outright repeal of the Davis-Bacon law, anti-union lobbies and their congressional allies tried to eliminate the law piecemeal by removing its coverage from various federal construction programs. The most serious battle came on a military construction funding bill from which Davis-Bacon protections had been removed by the conservative-dominated Senate Armed Services Committee. However, heavy lobbying by organized labor, backed by grassroots local union pressure, turned the tables on the Senate floor, as a labor-backed amendment by Sen. Henry Jackson (D-Wash.) to delete this exemption and restore Davis-Bacon protections to the bill was approved 55-42 on Nov. 5.

For—Right. Against—Wrong.

2. Slashing Unemployment Benefits I

The centerpiece of Reaganomics was a massive and unprecedented reduction in federal spending. The cuts weakened or destroyed programs created over five decades to protect workers on the job, provide educational and employment opportunities, build a strong economy and advance the cause of social and economic justice. These program cuts enabled the Administration to finance the largest tax giveaway in history, transferring billions of dollars from "people" programs to the bank accounts of the rich and big business.

Major victims of the assault on the federal budget were programs that aid jobless workers, which were cut back even as Administration economic policies were putting some two million more Americans out of work. One such cut was a $3.1 billion reduction in unemployment insurance benefits coupled with a requirement (later dropped) to force jobless workers to take minimum-wage jobs after drawing their first 13 weeks of unemployment benefits. During debate on the First Budget Resolution, which sets yearly federal spending targets, Sen. Donald Riegle (D-Mich.) tried to restore $285 million of the slashed jobless benefits. The AFL-CIO-endorsed amendment was denounced by Senate conservatives and rejected by a 38-60 vote on Apr. 2. As a result, 600,000 long-term jobless Americans will lose their unemployment benefits.

For—Right. Against—Wrong.

3. Slashing Unemployment Benefits II

Another key unemployment assistance program targeted for extinction by the Reagan Administration was the Trade Adjustment Assistance program. Created in 1962, this program provided jobless benefits, retraining and relocation assistance to workers who suffer from U.S. foreign trade policies that increase imports and cost Americans their jobs. Unions were told in 1962 that increased imports would help all America and that only a modest number of Americans would ever need this assistance. In fact, imports became so heavy and job losses so great that available funds were soon exhausted and billions more were needed.

The Reagan Administration's budget reconciliation bill, which imposed the funding cuts of the First Budget Resolution, slashed adjustment assistance funds from $1.5 billion in fiscal year 1981 to $317 million in 1982, betraying the pledge in the law to displaced workers. Sen. Thomas Eagleton (D-Mo.) proposed an amendment to restore $400 million, still leaving the program at less than half its former size. Yet even this modest, AFL-CIO-backed amendment was rejected 29-69 on Apr. 2.

For—Right. Against—Wrong.

4. Delaying Unemployment Benefits

By year's end, Reaganomics had pushed unemployment near 9 percent with more than 10.5 million Americans out of work. Besides slashing some $3.1 billion in unemployment benefits, conservative lawmakers in the Senate meataxed the funds used to administer the unemployment insurance program and pay its benefits to jobless workers.

During Senate consideration of a stopgap funding bill, Sen. Edward Kennedy (D-Mass.) proposed an amendment to restore $120 million, which had been cut from state funds for administration of the jobless aid program. He cited an internal Labor Dept. study indicating that failure to appropriate these funds during a time of rising unemployment would not only add to the backlog of claims and cause long delays in the payment of benefits, but also result in unnecessary overpayments of $1 billion annually. Yet Senate conservatives rejected this modest, cost-effective amendment by a 30-65 vote on Dec. 10.

For—Right. Against—Wrong.

5. Weakening Federal Job Safety Laws

The callousness of Senate conservatives was starkly evident in a vote on mine safety. Less than ten days after mine accidents in Kentucky, Tennessee and West Virginia had killed 27 miners, the Senate slashed $6 million in federal funds for enforcement of mine safety laws. During debate on a continuing appropriations bill, Sen. Robert Byrd (D-W.V.) tried to restore these funds to the budget of the Mine Safety & Health Administration. But in a clear message to mine operators that unsafe working conditions are of little concern to Congress, anti-worker conservatives helped defeat the Byrd amendment 38-54 on Dec. 11.

For—Right. Against—Wrong.

6. Protecting Federal Pensions

The nation's elderly are among those most seriously hurt by inflation, which eats into the real value of their fixed pensions and forces more and more of them below the official poverty level.

Yet, even the meager incomes of older Americans felt the sharp blade of Reagan Administration budget-cutting. The Senate Budget Committee version of the first budget bill delayed for three months the standard cost-of-living increases in social security and veterans' benefits as well as pensions for federal employees, railroad workers and military retirees. Even worse, the bill incorporated a regressive change in the formula for calculating cost-of-living increases by replacing the Consumer Price Index with a Labor Dept. wage indicator as the basis for adjusting retiree benefits for inflation. Because wages tend to lag behind inflation, this provision will result in senior citizens falling farther behind in their struggle against the rising cost of living. During floor debate on the bill, Sen. Donald Riegle (D-Mich.) proposed an amendment to retain the existing system of calculating cost-of-living adjustments. Senate conservatives raised a storm of protest and defeated the Riegle amendment 44-54 on May 12.

For—Right. Against—Wrong.

7. Cutting Railroad Retirees' Pensions

The Reagan budget ax swung at the nation's 400,000 railroad pensioners who were shocked to find in early October that their monthly retirement checks had been abruptly reduced, causing serious hardship for many of these senior citizens. Their pensions had been arbitrarily cut because President Reagan's budget bill failed to provide enough funding for a special account for these retirees as mandated by legislation passed in 1974. In eliminating a system of dual pension benefits under Social Security and railroad retirement, this statute had specifically called for general Treasury funding of those benefits for pensioners receiving them at that time. When the Senate debated a continuing appropriations bill, Sen. Howard Metzenbaum (D-Ohio) offered an amendment to add the necessary $90 million to the special railroad retirement fund. The amendment was approved by a 61-34 vote on Nov. 19, but the entire legislation later was vetoed by President Reagan. Subsequent legislation failed to provide the funds necessary to maintain railroad retirees' pension checks at their original level.

For—Right. Against—Wrong.

8. Preserving U.S. Maritime Jobs

During consideration of a foreign aid authorization bill, Sen. John Danforth (R-Mo.) proposed an amendment to repeal the requirement that 50 percent of all shipments of U.S. food under the Food for Peace Program be carried on U.S.-flag ships. Since 1954 that requirement has helped prevent the further decline of the American merchant marine fleet, maintain maritime employment and ensure that beneficiaries of this program realize that the source of the foreign aid is the United States and not another country whose vessel happens to transport the commodities. By a 28-70 vote on Oct. 20, the Danforth repealer was rejected.

Against—Right. For—Wrong.

9. Shredding the 'Safety Net'

While the Reagan economic program heaped the biggest tax bonanza on record on the wealthiest individuals and corporations, it demanded painful reductions in the programs that help ensure a better life for the majority of Americans. Among these are federal loans and loan guarantees to help working people send their children to college, wage and job safety protections, unemployment benefits, environmental safeguards and aid to depressed urban areas.

During Senate debate on a preliminary budget bill, Sen. John Chafee (R-R.I.) tried to restore $973 million to several domestic programs. Among other elements, the labor-backed amendment allocated half its funds to elementary and secondary education programs, such as assistance to schools to improve basic reading and writing skills of disadvantaged and handicapped children. The Chafee package also would have restored $300 million for assistance to low-income families and the elderly to insulate their homes and help offset rapidly increasing heating bills they cannot afford. Finally, it would have increased funds for preventive health care programs as well as urban economic development and mass transit. Reaganomics and its blind budget-cutting resulted in rejection of the Amendment 40-59 on Mar. 31.

For—Right. Against—Wrong.

10. Destroying Federal Programs

As passed by Congress, the Reagan budget slashed billions of dollars from "people" programs in order to finance windfall tax cuts for the rich and corporations. By cutting more than $214 billion in federal expenditures over three years, the Administration made sure that social investments necessary to strengthen the economy were eradicated, the meager incomes of the jobless, the elderly, and the poor were reduced, and the nation's long-range needs for energy security, transportation improvements, environmental safeguards and urban development were seriously endangered.

The impact of the devastation of the Reagan budget was far-reaching. For those seeking educational opportunity, $10 billion was cut from college loans and grants, aid to elementary and secondary schools and the school lunch program. For the elderly, billion-dollar reductions were imposed in Social Security, railroad retirees' pensions and federal retirement benefits, while Medicare premiums were raised by another billion dollars a year. For the jobless, $6 billion was axed from unemployment benefits while federal manpower programs were cut by $16 billion. For workers, major reductions in budget and personnel were imposed on the key law enforcement agencies such as OSHA and NLRB. On economic development, $7 billion was severed from federal highway maintenance, mass transit and rail transportation funding. For the poor, $16 billion was cut from various assistance programs. Meanwhile, key consumer and environmental agencies saw their budgets, staff and regulatory authority substantially curbed.

The AFL-CIO condemned these and other elements of the Reagan budget as "a high-risk gamble with the future of America in which workers and the poor take the lion's share of the risk." Despite the federation's warnings that these budget reductions would cost more than a million Americans their jobs, the Senate approved the Reagan budget-cutting reconciliation bill by an overwhelming 80-15 vote on June 25.

Against—Right. For—Wrong.

11. Tax Cuts for the Rich

The Reagan Administration's 1981 tax cut represents the largest tax giveaway in U.S. history. Through billion-dollar budget cuts in programs that help people, the Administration was able to finance a tax bonanza for wealthy individuals and corporations which will deplete the federal Treasury by some $750 billion in lost revenues by 1986. This in turn will generate huge federal deficits and pressure to keep interest rates at astronomical levels.

As enacted, this raid on the Treasury cut business taxes by $170 billion, thus reducing by one-half the effective corporate income tax rate, to only 14 percent by 1986. In addition, oil companies were given still another $12 billion tax handout. For the rich, the bill eliminates $15 billion in estate and gift taxes by 1986 while new "savings incentive" tax schemes heap another $21 billion on those who can afford large savings accounts. The highly touted "across-the-board" cuts used to peddle the Reagan tax bill to the public were later labeled a "Trojan Horse" by Reagan Budget Director David Stockman, who said in reality they were designed to ensure passage of the Administration's real goal: a slash in the top income tax rate for the rich from 70 to 50 percent. The so-called across-the-board cuts in fact delivered one-third of the tax savings to the wealthiest six percent of American taxpayers.

To correct this gross inequity, Sen. Bill Bradley (D-

(Continued on next page)

Labor's Stand on Major Issues in the Senate

(Continued from preceding page)

N.J.) proposed an amendment to distribute more fairly the individual taxcut savings to the 95 percent of Americans who earn less than $50,000 a year. The Bradley amendment was rejected 24-61 on July 17.

For—Right. Against—Wrong.

12. Tax Cuts for the Oil Industry

One of the most blatant giveaways of the Reagan tax bill was a $12 billion tax break for the oil industry. Besides giving the oil companies a host of general business tax benefits, Congress further reduced the oil industry windfall profits tax by 50 percent within five years. Only 17 months earlier, Congress had enacted that tax to recoup just one-fourth of the excess profits generated by an end to federal oil price controls (See Vote 16). Oil industry lobbying for repeal of the windfall profits tax began at the moment it was enacted. In 1981, with conservatives in control of Congress, the oil firms struck a revenue gusher.

In Senate debate on the tax bill, Sen. Edward Kennedy (D-Mass.) offered a motion to recommit the bill to conference with instructions to reduce or eliminate this House-passed multi-billion-dollar revenue-losing provision. Senate conservatives once again led the effort that buried the Kennedy motion by a 20-55 vote on Aug. 3.

For recommittal — Right. Against recommittal — Wrong.

13. Slashing Social Security Benefits I

Using scare tactics based on outright distortion, President Reagan unleashed the most serious assault on the social security system in its near-50-year history by proposing to slash $82 billion in benefits for retirees, crippled workers, orphans and widows. Like his economic proposals, these cuts would be accompanied by reshaping the program through a massive redistribution of social security benefits. For example, one provision of the Reagan package would have given certain well-off elderly persons, such as doctors or lawyers whose good health and favorable job opportunities allow them to work beyond age 65, nearly $7 billion in added benefits even though they had suffered no loss in income. Meanwhile, social security protection for those who most need a government "safety net" would be drastically reduced.

The President claimed his multi-billion-dollar benefit reduction scheme would rescue social security from imminent financial collapse, even though it faced only a short-term, revenue shortage due to a combination of continuing high unemployment, double-digit inflation and an increasing number of social security beneficiaries.

In late May, Sen. Daniel Moynihan (D-N.Y.) offered a strong statement of opposition to the Reagan social security proposal as an amendment to a supplemental appropriations bill. Senate Republicans, scurrying to cover the President's political flanks, blocked Moynihan's elort by a narrow 49-48 vote on a tabling motion by Sen. Mark Hatfield (R-Ore.) on May 20.

Against tabling—Right. For tabling—Wrong.

14. Stabilizing Social Security

The $82 billion proposal by the Reagan Administration to weaken the social security system sought to manipulate public concern over short-term social security funding difficulties to justify drastic benefit reductions. The AFL-CIO and senior citizen, consumer and public-interest groups countered that the temporary $10 billion revenue shortage could be remedied easily either by borrowing from other social security funds—disability and health insurance—which were in surplus, or with an infusion of general revenues, a measure which had been originially intended by the architects of the system.

A variation of the general revenue financing remedy was proposed by Sen. Thomas Eagleton (D-Mo.) during debate on legislation to restore the minimum social security benefit. Sen. Eagleton tried to restore the $12 billion oil industry tax giveaway in the Reagan tax bill (See Vote 12) and use the revenues as a funding reserve for social security. Lining up with the oil lobby against the nation's senior citizens, conservatives succeeded in killing the Eagleton amendment, approving a tabling motion by Sen. Robert Dole (R-Kan.), 65-30 on Oct. 15.

Against tabling—Right. For tabling—Wrong.

15. Slashing Social Security Benefits II

Not even the poorest of America's elderly escaped the impact of President Reagan's budget-cutting in 1981. One of the first programs singled out was the social security minimum benefit—a $122-per-month payment to those who worked for a limited time or were employed in low-paying jobs and thus did not qualify for greater social security benefits. Of the three million Americans currently receiving this minimum benefit, nearly 90 percent are women, half are over age 70, and 500,000 are 80 or older.

During Senate debate on the budget reconciliation bill, Sen. Donald Riegle (D-Mich.) proposed an amendment to partially restore the minimum benefit by maintaining it for current but not for future retirees. But this modest proposal, backed by the AFL-CIO, was opposed by Senate conservatives and it was defeated, 45-33, on June 23. Fortunately, the minimum benefit later was restored in conference—but only for those retiring by the end of 1981.

For—Right. Against—Wrong.

16. Rising Consumer Energy Costs

Rising energy costs have been a driving force behind the double-digit inflation of the last few years. To a great extent this has been the result of 1979 legislation to phase out by Sept. 30, 1981, all federal price controls on domestically produced oil and gasoline—an action that will cost American consumers $1.1 trillion in higher energy prices by 1989. In his first major economic policy action following the inauguration, President Reagan, despite campaign pledges to bring down inflation, gave voters a preview of Reaganomics by eliminating the remainder of federal price controls. This single stroke cost consumers approximately $12 billion in higher energy costs as the oil companies immediately rased the pump price of gasoline by 8-10 cents per gallon.

During debate on an oil industry anti-trust bill, Sen. Howard M. Metzenbaum (D-Ohio) offered an AFL-CIO-supported amendment to nullify the President's action. But the oil lobby prevailed as the Metzenbaum amendment was defeated 24-68 on Mar. 10.

For—Right. Against—Wrong.

17. Saving Public Works

A major federal public works program—the Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway — barely escaped the frenzy of congressional budget-cutting in 1981. This 232-mile inland canal connecting the Tennessee and Tombigbee Rivers will, upon completion, allow barge traffic to flow from Appalachia to the Gulf seaport of Mobile, Ala. At present "Tenn-Tom" is more than 80 percent complete with the government having already spent about $1 billion on the project. This labor-backed public works program is considered necessary to developing a modern mid-American waterway transportation system, vital to improving interstate commerce and furthering U.S. exports of agricultural commodities, coal and manufactured products. In addition, thousands of construction, maintenance and transportation jobs depend upon completion of this project.

During consideration of the fiscal 1982 energy and water appropriations bill, Sen. Charles Percy (R-Ill.) proposed an amendment to delete $189 million for continued construction of the waterway and thus effectively kill the project. The Percy amendment was rejected 46-48 on Nov. 4.

Against—Right. For—Wrong.

18. Attack on the U.S. Constitution

In a frontal assault on the constitutional system of checks and balances among the three branches of government, Senate conservatives won adoption of a proposal by Senators Jesse Helms (R-N.C.) and J. Bennett Johnston (D-La.) crippling the ability of federal courts to order pupil assignment and transportation as a remedy to eliminate illegal racial segregation in schools. The amendment also included language to allow the U.S. Attorney General to file lawsuits to overturn previous desegregation orders.

In essence, the Helms-Johnston amendment would deny the judicial branch of government its appointed role of enforcing the Constitution, and it would circumvent the amending process by allowing the Supreme Court's interpretation of the Constitution to be overruled by a simple majority vote of Congress. After the amendment was approved by a 60-39 vote on Sept. 19, the Justice Dept. funding bill to which it was attached was removed from floor consideration.

Against—Right. For—Wrong.

19. Food Stamps for Jobless Workers

A major supplementary unemployment benefit program to help feed the families of the long-term jobless is the federal food stamp program. In 1981, funding for this anti-hunger program was severely cut by the Reagan budget through legislation enforcing a rigid limitation on federal food stamp spending. This spending "cap" would have the effect of drastically reducing food stamp benefits if food price inflation or unemployment increases more than predicted and creates greater demands on the program. In addition, the bill immediately denied one million Americans these benefits.

When lobbying for this restriction in early June, the Administration boldly predicted a drop in unemployment. Yet, barely six months later, 1.5 million more American workers had lost their jobs. During debate of a food stamp funding bill, even Sen. Robert Dole (R-Kan.) recognized the harshness of the food stamp spending lid. He and Sen. Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) proposed an amendment to allow small increases in the cap in case of increased demands for benefits. Once again Senate conservatives led the attack, and this modest proposal lost by a 41-53 vote on June 10. Thus, despite a promise that the Reagan budget ax would not harm the "safety net" programs, food stamp funding will be insufficient to provide minimum standards of nutrition for the hungry in America.

For—Right. Against—Wrong.

PROTECT YOUR RIGHTS!

READ MEMO FROM COPE LEGISLATIVE ALERT!

Order Blank For AFL-CIO LEGISLATIVE ALERT!

Enclosed is $_____. Please send _____ subscriptions at $1 a year (25 cents each a year for 10 or more subscriptions mailed to one address) of the AFL-CIO LEGISLATIVE ALERT! to:

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____ Zip _____

Signed _____ Union _____

Mail to: AFL-CIO LEGISLATIVE ALERT, Subscription, Room 209
815 - 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006

Order Blank For "MEMO FROM COPE"

Enclosed is $_____. Please send _____ subscriptions at $1 a year (25 cents each year for 10 or more subscriptions mailed to one address) of the "MEMO FROM COPE" to:

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____ Zip _____

Signed _____ Union _____

New? ☐ Renewal? ☐

Mail to: COMMITTEE ON POLITICAL EDUCATION
815 - 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006

Along With Vital Programs

Government Workers Victims Of Reagan Wrecking Crews

The following is from an address by AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland at a legislative conference of the American Federation of Government Employees, Feb. 4, 1982, Washington, D.C.

OVER MANY generations, the government of the United States has evolved as a shield against the power of concentrated wealth. It has developed antimonopoly regulations, pollution controls, protective standards that govern banking, shipping, housing and employment.

It has established food and drug, and health care standards. It has enacted laws to protect workers and consumers, to control access to the airwaves, and to guarantee human rights.

All of these are legitimate and necessary functions of government. They were undertaken in response to the democratic will of the people. To carry them out, governments at every level have been obliged to hire many thousands of workers in every trade and profession.

IN CHOPPING away at this great pool of manpower and expertise, the Reagan Administration is stripping government of its ability not only to carry out its responsibilities, but even to sense and interpret and understand what those responsibilities are, and what is happening in the world around it.

This assault on government and government workers is nothing new. Government workers have been scapegoats of political expediency for a long time. Presidents Nixon, Ford and Carter all campaigned against government while they were asking the American people to put them in charge of government.

Those who are unable to come up with creative policies prefer to lodge the blame elsewhere, but the fact is that when government policies go wrong, it is from the top down, not from the bottom up.

OSHA inspectors do not write the regulations they are charged with carrying out. Internal Revenue agents don't make up the tax laws they enforce. Border patrolmen and drug enforcement officers had no voice in the budget cuts that make it impossible for them to halt the influx of illegal aliens and illegal drugs.

BUT INSTEAD of holding the people in charge responsible for the excesses or shortcomings of governments, voters have been bulldozed into blaming rank-and-file government workers who carry out the instructions of the elected leaders.

The logical conclusion of that destructive exercise in buck-passing has been the election of so-called "fiscal conservatives" whose greatest ambition is not to make the instruments of government work better, but to abolish them.

Certainly, there can be no pretense of efficiency in President Reagan's new scheme for playing musical chairs with government programs

HANDING OVER 40 or so federal programs to state governments could mean that for every employee sacked in Washington, 50 or more have to be hired, one in each of the states, to administer the programs that are handed over.

No one really believes that will happen. A great many of the programs killed in Washington will be stillborn in the statehouses, and those who depend on them will have no place to turn. The programs that do survive under state auspices will be administered by people who have never done it before.

What America needs most at this moment is unified, national action to combat recession. The Reagan wrecking crews must be called off. People-oriented programs already on the books must be given sufficient funding to provide jobs quickly and help lift the economy.

WE NEED ACTION to revive the emergency public works program and to provide new housing, to reactivate public service job programs and to restore nationwide unemployment compensation for the long-term unemployed—all as a first step.

All that is required to finance these programs is to recapture the huge, irresponsible tax giveaways that were showered on the rich in the 1981 tax bill.

In the last year or so of the Carter Administration, the AFL-CIO negotiated an understanding with the President that we called a "national accord."

It outlined the conditions under which labor committed itself to participate fully in the national ecort to combat inflation and to share fairly in whatever sacrifices might be needed to restore economic growth, with the aim of establishing a productive, full-employment economy.

THE ADMINISTRATION has rejected that accord and all of its goals and premises. But they remain sound and valid. No other program holds any real promise of long-term success.

We stand ready to cooperate with this or any other Administration that will accept the principle of partnership between labor, industry and government with the goal of a stronger economy and a more just society.

Meanwhile, we intend to defend the interests of workers and to protect the progress we have made so far through all of the other channels of trade union activity that remain open to us: organizing and collective bargaining, community action, legislative and political activities at every level.

Impact on Jobs, Careers

Worker Safeguards Pressed In Wake of AT&T Breakup

PROTECTING THE rights and careers of Bell System employees is the prime focus of the Communications Workers as the union weighs the effects of AT&T's divestiture agreement, CWA President Glenn E. Watts said.

While AT&T's agreement with the Justice Dept. could have made stronger guarantees for the interests of workers, consumers, the public and the company's stockholders, Watts said there is little chance that Congress will set aside the agreement. "We're confronted by actuality," he said, stressing that the union is "preparing to deal with the situation as it will exist" when the agreement takes effect.

Questioned by reporters on Labor News Conference, Watts said the union has called on AT&T to renegotiate immediately the successor provisions of the current collective bargaining agreement to address the effects of divestiture.

He pointed out that when those provisions were negotiated in 1980, the parties anticipated that any eventual settlement of the Justice Dept.'s antitrust suit against AT&T "would establish arms-length, separate subsidiaries, not complete divestiture." He expressed confidence that the union will be able to work out adequate employee protections in the talks with AT&T.

Watts said he has no reason to doubt the assurances of AT&T Chairman Charles L. Brown that divestiture will not adversely affect employees, that pensions and salary levels will be maintained. He noted that since "present AT&T stockholders will be given shares in the spun-off entities," the newly created local telephone companies are likely to "retain the same personality."

But "I will feel much better when we've got it all in writing—when it's signed and wrapped up in a good package," he said. That, he added, is why the union is pressing for early negotiations with AT&T.

Reporters questioning Watts on the AFL-CIO produced public affairs program were Ernest Holsendolph of the New York Times and Merrill Brown of the Washington Post. Labor News Conference is broadcast weekly on the Mutual radio network.

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

WHILE PRESIDENT REAGAN apparently prefers to stand pat on failed policies, there is increased activity among groups which would rather get something going.

A diverse coalition of groups in the cities—the State, County & Municipal Employees, the American Federation of Teachers and the U.S. Conference of Mayors—has called for a $24 billion program to help the cities help themselves.

As they put it in brief, they want to revitalize the cities, retrain workers and improve basic education for the disadvantaged.

ASKING FOR "well-reasoned policies, not ideology," they said "unthinking and across-the-board cuts" in the public sector have contributed to the recession and high unemployment. Further cuts not only will make recovery unlikely, "but will also turn us into a second-rate economic power burdened by a crumbling infrastructure and retarded by an undereducated workforce."

To avoid that future, the three organizations agreed to work for a federal program with these major features:

- An urban block grant to help cities repair and replace their infrastructure, including streets, bridges, water and sewer systems.

Where the Urban Institute estimates that local governments need $700 billion to improve their dilapidated infrastructure, the coalition seeks only $4 billion a year to get the work started. Cities of greatest need and with 6.5 percent or more jobless, would get priority.

- A $5 billion Skill Training & Employment Program (STEP) to boost productivity. This would train and retrain workers for a changing job market. Funds would be targeted on areas with high unemployment and large numbers of disadvantaged.
- Assurance of Medicaid for pregnant women and young children whose family income is at or below two-thirds of the poverty line.

MEDICAID NOW covers less than 75 percent of the poor and excludes some 8 million children in poor families. Since it costs less than $2,000 for prenatal care and delivery of a child and $20,000 a year to institutionalize a retarded child, it is not only humane but much cheaper to provide preventive services, the coalition observes.

- A $1.5 billion program to enhance workers' basic educational and vocational skills.

Small businesses, which provide most of the new jobs in the economy and which do not have the resources to upgrade worker education and skills, rely on a ready supply of tilerate workers.

- A $1 billion Housing Preservation & Production program to build and rehabilitate houses and weatherize low-income units.
- A $5 billion program to provide loans, loan guarantees and interest subsidies to small business, new ventures and emerging industries in areas with high unemployment.
- A public transportation block grant of $1 billion over the current funding of $3.7 billion to help cities purchase and operate bus and subway systems. It would be financed by a one-cent hike in the gasoline tax.
- A $1 billion railroad rehabilitation program to trigger in when unemployment exceeds 7 percent, with increased funding at higher jobless rates.

Each $1 billion would employ 100,000 people very quickly in improving roadbeds and building track and upgrading existing lines.

THE $24 BILLION called for by this 10-point program could be paid for very easily by correcting some of the excesses in the $750 billion tax cut enacted in 1981, the coalition points out.

At a time when some members of the Congress are mesmerized by a presidential smile and others are paralyzed by a sense of inaction, the AFSCME-AFT-mayors proposal offers something positive to work with.

SAFEGUARDS AGAINST adverse effects for workers from AT&T's divestiture agreement are the central concern of the Communications Workers, CWA President Glenn E. Watts, center, said on Labor News Conference. He was questioned by Ernest Holsendolph, left, of the New York Times and Merrill Brown of the Washington Post. The AFL-CIO produced public affairs program is aired weekly over Mutual radio.

Reagan Budget Threatens Deepening Housing Crisis

President Reagan's proposed budget would worsen the nation's housing shortage, the AFL-CIO and a coalition of concerned national organizations warned.

The Housing Coalition statement stressed "the almost complete elimination of new federally assisted housing" along with cancellation of unused budget authority from past years that would have been used for housing construction.

If Congress goes along with the Administration budget proposals, the organizations charged, the nation would be carried still further from the goal of "a decent home for every American familly."

Instead, more families would have to double up and more low-income people would be left homeless, with the elderly and minorities especially hard hit. Established urban and rural housing programs would be scrapped before alternative programs could be put in place, the statement warned.

For the housing industry, its suppliers and the workers affected, the housing cuts would "aggravate the depression in residential construction" and thus "prolong the general economic recession caused by high interest rates."

In addition to the AFL-CIO, the groups joining in the protest were the Inter-Religious Coalition for Housing, National Association of Housing & Redevelopment Officials, National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing, National Council of Senior Citizens, National Housing Conference, National Low-Income Housing Coalition, National Rural Housing Coalition and the U.S. Catholic Conference's Office of Social Development.

Key Republicans Take Posts In Social Security Coalition

Two prominent Republicans have accepted leadership posts in the Save Our Security coalition (SOS), which is coordinating a grass roots campaign to block Reagan Administration efforts to cut back benefits.

Arthur Flemming, who served as Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare in the Eisenhower Administration and has held high government posts before and since, was named chairman of the coalition's advisory committee.

HE SUCCEEDS Robert M. Ball, who had served as social security administrator under Presidents Nixon, Kennedy and Johnson. Ball stepped down after having been named to the presidential panel that will study the social security system.

Also joining the coalition advisory committee is John B. Martin, who served as Commissioner of Aging in the Nixon Administration and was a Republican national committeeman from Michigan for eight years.

The two appointments were announced by SOS Chairman Wilbur J. Cohen, himself a former Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare.

"THEIR ACTIVE participation in the work of the coalition helps to underscore the bipartisan nature of our efforts on behalf of social security," Cohen said.

Cohen said the coalition will work to bring together local affiliates of the cooperating national organizations to let representatives and senators know the home district sentiment.

He expressed concern that people may be "lulled" into thinking that the battle has been won because of recent Administration promises not to tamper with social security.

"BUT THIS is the same Administration," Cohen stressed, "which tried to pack the recent White House Conference on the Aging, and which is still applying backdoor pressure on Congress to sharply reduce benefits and coverage to help achieve its goal of balancing the budget."

The AFL-CIO and many of its affiliates are part of the SOS coalition, along with religious, senior citizen, civil rights and handicapped organizations.

CWA Sponsors TV, Radio Series On Technology

A television show and radio series on the communications revolution, has been made available by the Communications Workers for publicly owned stations.

The public affairs series, "Rewiring Your World," features panel discussions and programs with telecommunications experts, futurists, journalists, labor representatives, sociologists, and psychologists. It is moderated by Martin Agronsky.

THE DISCUSSIONS center on the surging technological change in computers and communications and the impact this change will have on "workers, society, the nation and the world," the union said.

The half-hour television show, already scheduled for broadcast on stations in Boston, Los Angeles, St. Louis and Washington, D.C., feature CWA President Glenn Watts; former CBS president Fred W. Friendly, now broadcast dean and professor emeritus at Columbia University; researcher Daniel Yankelovich; Ian Ross, president of Bell Laboratories, and Douglass Cater, senior fellow at the Aspen Institute, along with Agronsky.

Watts said the series was intended to be "unusual and thought-provoking," and that it includes a range of opinions on how the communications revolution will shape the future.

Some guests on the show, he pointed out, "see us heading toward a utopian world in which drudgery and poverty have been eliminated."

OTHERS SEE a future where "the tools of technology are used for exploitation and control," Watts said. Another suggestion, he noted, is that "the world will no longer be divided between the haves and the 'have nots' but between the 'knows' and the 'know nots.' "

The television program, available now, can be broadcast any time during 1982 by commercial, public or cable stations, CWA said.

If All Goes Well

Economic Advisers See Continuing Joblessness

(Continued from Page 1)

The Council of Economic Advisers predicts a steadily declining rate of inflation, from nearly 10 percent last year to less than 5 percent in 1984, but CEA Chairman Murray L. Weidenbaum told reporters at a briefing that this is a tenuous forecast. He said the Administration's prediction of an inflation rate of about 7 percent this year—still high by historical standards—"indicates that we cannot relax our guard on inflation."

"Continuing deceleration in money growth, fairly rapid adaptation of expectations to lower inflation, and growth aided by tax policies that are weighted toward investment are expected to be characteristic of the mid-1980s," the CEA report observed.

But the numerical goals of the 1978 Humphrey-Hawkins Full Employment & Balanced Growth Act—4 percent unemployment and 3 percent inflation for 1983—apparently have been lost in the prognostications.

THE CEA LETS the Administration off the hook by noting that, "according to the Act, the President may, if he deems it necessary, recommend modification of the timetable for achievement of the interim and final goals for unemployment, inflation, and federal outlays as a share of gross national product."

Experts at the Congressional Budget Office, in a report to the Senate and House Committees on the Budget, indicated that the President's long-range assumptions about unemployment are optimistic. They forecast a jobless rate staying above 8 percent until 1984 and remaining above 7 percent until 1986.

"The unemployment rate is expected to be at very high levels in the near term, and to decline only gradually during the recovery," the CBO report observes. "The average unemployment rate is expected to be in the 7.9 to 9.9 percent range for the calendar year 1982 and about one percent lower for 1983."

ALSO UNDERLYING the Administration's economic forecast is the assumption of a 3 percent increase in real gross national product in 1982, followed by a 5.2 percent growth rise next year. Real GNP, or the value of the nation's total output of goods and services after discounting the impact of inflation, is expected to rise by 4.3 percent or more each year through 1987.

Weidenbaum told reporters that 1982 "will be the year of the turnaround" in the economy, and "the first year when we will be able to examine the effects of the Reagan program." He predicted that the economy will visibly turn up starting in late spring or early summer and grow at a fairly brisk pace in the second half of the year.

"Apart from the very high rate of expected inflation reflected in current interest rates, the economy is generally free of impediments to expansion," the President's advisers contend.

"THE KEY AREAS of rebound in the economy this year are expected to be consumer goods, housing, autos, and defense," the report asserts. "The principal areas that are anticipated to lead the expansion next year are business investment, inventories—including a rising trend of defense work in progress—and a further acceleration in defense deliveries."

Reagan and his advisers see as the key to recovery the series of tax cuts enacted in 1981—5 percent last year and 10 percent on July 1 this year and next. The reductions will provide "the foundation for increased employment, spending, saving, and business investment," the President's economic report claims.

"The outlook for 1983 and subsequent years is based on continuation of the Administration's spending, tax, and regulatory policies, continued monetary restraint, and broader public recognition that the Administration is committed to each of these key elements of its program," the report notes.

THE REAGAN economists acknowledge that the huge projected budget deficits are "undesirably high," but say in their report "they are not expected to jeopardize the economic recovery program."

While separating the Federal Reserve Board from its own policymaking, the Administration report makes clear that the Fed's policy of slow money growth to fight inflation is a main part of Reagan's plan. But it blamed the current recession and other economic ills partly on the central bank, and urged the agency to control the money supply more evenly.

"Unfortunately, the high and volatile money growth of the past, and the high inflation and high interest rates which accompanied it, were instrumental in bringing about the poor and highly uneven economic performance of 1980 and 1981, culminating in a sharp fall in output and a rise in unemployment in the latter months of 1981," Reagan said in his written report.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS of the Jobs for America's Graduates program explore U.S. employment problems. From left are Executive Director Mike Arnold of the AFL-CIO Human Resources Development Institute, Gov. Lamar Alexander of Tennessee, Vice President Bush and Gov. Pierre du Pont of Delaware.

HRDI's Director Named to Board Of Job Program

Mike Arnold, executive director of the AFL-CIO Human Resources Development Institute, has been appointed to the board of directors of the national youth program, Jobs for America's Graduates, on the recommendation of AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland. The board oversees the operation of five statewide pilot programs that offer assistance to high school seniors needing special help in making the transition from school to work.

JAG is based on a successful model program in Delaware begun in 1979 with the support and assistance of State AFL-CIO President John Campanelli and the HRDI office in Wilmington.

THE PROGRAM offers high school seniors instructions in basic job seeking skills, orientation to the realities of the world of work, motivation through a unique vocationally oriented student organization, and actual job placement in the private sector.

Public figures serving on the national JAG Board, besides Arnold, include Vice President George Bush, former Vice President Walter Mondale, Virginia Gov. Charles Robb, NAACP Director Benjamin Hooks, and M. Carl Holman, president of the National Urban Coalition.

In the pilot programs currently operating in Arizona, Delaware, Massachusetts, Missouri and Tennessee, 6,000 students in 80 high schools are expected to participate during this school year.

Settlements Spread in Meatpacking

The Food & Commercial Workers approved agreements with two more meatpacking companies similar to the packinghouse industry pattern set in December with Armour & Co. and Wilson Food Corp.

The new contracts with Swift & Co. and Hormel & Co. call for a 44-month wage freeze in return for job and union security protections. Under the pacts, which replace exising agreements immediately, the firms agree not to close any plants for the next 12 months.

AS IN the two earlier agreements, the companies agreed to recognize UFCW whenever a majority of workers at a new plant sign authorization cards, and to provide the union with information about its spending plans.

UFCW President William Wynn and Vice Pres. Lewie Anderson, who heads the union's packinghouse division, said at the time of the Armour and Wilson settlements that the meatpacking industry "as a whole is in sound financial condition," but that the major firms "were rapidly becoming vulnerable to severe competitive pressures from lower wage operators." One of the union's goals in its negotiations with the industry has been to protect wage increases already won by members.

One major packer, John Morrell & Co., has decided against reopening its current contract with the union as the other firms have done. Instead, the company plans to close plants in Arkansas City, Kan., and in Memphis early this summer and give job termination notices to some 500 workers at each facility.

At Kahn's & Co., a Cincinnati meatpacker, the union has taken a stand against a request for labor cost concessions, charging that concessions are not based on financial need but constitute company attempts at "union-busting."

UNDER THE pattern settlement, cost-of-living provisions are retained but payments suspended for the duration of the contracts. The firms agreed to a lump-sum payment in December 1983 of COL increases that were due in January and July of this year under the old pacts, however.

The pacts also provide for medical benefit improvements, and allow for wage reopener talks in September 1984, with the right to strike.

AFGE Mourns Death Of Joseph D. Gleason

Alexandria, Va. — Joseph D. Gleason, executive vice president of the American Federation of Government Employees, died Feb. 7 of cancer at the age of 53.

AFGE President Kenneth T. Blaylock mourned Gleason as "a dedicated trade unionist" whose life was devoted to the union cause. Before his election as executive vice president, Gleason had served for eight years as a national vice president from the New York-New Jersey district.

His trade union career began more than 30 years ago, when he joined a local of the former Textile Workers in Providence, R.I. He served on the staff of a number of unions and was appointed an AFGE national representative in 1964.

Survivors include his wife, Jenny, and three sons.

New Pamphlet Contains Convention Keynote Speech

The AFL-CIO has published a nine-page pamphlet containing the text of AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland's keynote address to the federation's 14th biennial convention. It is titled "Solidarity . . . Key to the Future."

Copies of the pamphlet, Publication No. 155, are available free in reasonable quantities on request from the AFL-CIO Pamphlet Division, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

AD CAMPAIGN launched by the Chicago AFL-CIO includes 82 billboards like this placed throughout the metropolitan area and a series of 60-second radio spots on the city's major stations through Mar. 12.

New Slash in Social, Job Programs Sought in Reagan Budget Proposal increase. But the contrast with the proposed gutting of social programs would be so great as to jeopardize congressional concurrence.

(Continued from Page 1)

The President took to the hustings to beat the drums for his budget and for the "new federalism" by which he hopes to shift an array of federal programs to eventual state funding.

IN SPEECHES before the Iowa and Indiana legislatures, he blamed the nation's economic problems on the "mess" he inherited, flayed federal employees, used campaign-style rhetoric to mock the "puzzle palaces on the Potomac," and attacked criticism of his budget proposals by the news media.

But the Republican chairman of the National Governors' Association, Vermont's Gov. Richard A. Snelling, made it clear that the states are not part of the cheering section for the Reagan economic program.

"It would be unrealistic to expect the states to support another round of deep budget cuts," Snelling said.

"THESE CUTS would fall heavily on many of the nation's needy citizens and would shift unacceptable burdens to state and local governments already struggling with the recession and deep 1982 federal aid reductions," he warned.

On Capitol Hill, Democrats assailed the lopsided tilt of the budget and Republicans splintered over how a party supposedly committed to balanced budgets can deal with the enormous deficits of Reagan's first two years.

By the Administration estimate, the deficit for the current fiscal year will amount to $99 billion and the deficit for the 1983 fiscal year, which starts on Oct. 1, 1982, will total $92 billion—even if the economy rebounds as the White House predicts and Congress swallows his recommendations intact.

THE NON-PARTISAN Congressional Budget Office, which serves both the Democratic House and the Republican Senate, projects the current deficit at $109 billion with the fiscal 1983 shortage reaching $157 billion.

The tax cuts for those with substantial income to invest are the heart of the so-called "supply-side" economics—a philosophy that the President's top budget aide, David Stockman, has characterized as "trickle-down" economics. Thus the President resisted urgings to reduce the scheduled tax increases to lower the budget deficit.

His only concession was to endorse some relatively minor revenue-raisers, including increases in various "users' fees." One such revenue-raiser involves the list of arbitrators the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service routinely provides on request to parties preparing to arbitrate contract disputes. The FCMS will now charge about $15 for furnishing the names of possible arbitrators. It issued 33,200 such lists in 1981. Another revenue-gainer would be a requirement that railroad unions and management now pay the cost of grievance arbitration services now provided by the National Mediation Board.

Ironically, while rejecting economic stimulus programs in its budget, the Administration acknowledged that its deficit is the result of the depressed economy, and not overspending by government.

At a budget briefing for reporters, Treasury Sec. Donald T. Regan said "higher revenues from having more people working" and resultant "lower outlays on unemployment and welfare programs" would "signficantly improve" the budget picture. In fact, he said, if unemployment had been brought below 6 percent, "the current deficit would be roughly $75 billion lower."

In broad terms, based on summaries of the thousands of pages of documents, these are some of the President's proposals:

LABOR DEPT. PROGRAMS — Employment and training programs, severely cut in the current fiscal year, would be further reduced and parcelled out to state control. Subsistence payments for those in classroom training programs would be eliminated. Overall, programs under the Comprehensive Employment & Training Act budgeted for $4.6 billion this fiscal year would be reduced to $2.4 billion. The Job Corps would be retained but cut back.

The remnants of the Trade Adjustment Assistance program would be wiped out, all cash assistance ended and persons displaced by imports would merely be covered by unspecified "targeted assistance" services, along with Indians, migrant farm workers and older workers. Special benefits for workers displaced by expansion of the Redwood National Park in California would be curtailed.

HEALTH PROGRAMS — Both Medicare and Medicaid patients would have to pay higher out-of-pocket expenses and a number of previously separate programs would be combined with less total money available.

Low-Income Assistance — Food stamp assistance would be reduced $2.3 billion from current services levels, on top of heavy cuts already made in eligibility. Aid to Families with Dependent Children—the basic family welfare program—would be cut $1.1 billion on top of a comparable cut in this fiscal year. An example of the change: a family receiving fuel-aid payments for winter heating bills would have its AFDC payment reduced by that amount. Child nutrition programs would be reduced. And benefits under the supplemental security income (SSI) program would be reduced for the poor, disabled and elderly.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—Comparability pay raises for federal workers, supposedly mandated by law, would again be reduced by executive action—to 5 percent. Federal workers would have to pay a Medicare payroll tax in addition to their civil service retirement contributions. Further layoffs would be required and retirees would face reduced cost-of-living adjustments to their pensions in future years.

DEFENSE SPENDING — Outlays would rise from $187.5 billion this fiscal year to $221 billion in fiscal 1983 and further increases projected for future years. The rise is necessary, the President said, "to restore our margin of safety and counter the Soviet military buildup."

HOUSING—See story on Page 14 for reaction to proposed cutbacks. The shortage of affordable housing will grow.

TRANSPORTATION — Mass transit subsidies cut 38 percent, funding for non-interstate highways reduced 21 percent, Amtrak passenger train subsidy cut $185 million. The Railroad Retirement Board would be abolished. The Social Security Administration would take over direct payment of the social security portion of the two-tier railroad retirement system. The industry-financed tier of benefits would be administered by a non-government pension fund.

EDUCATION — In addition to previously noted cuts, the Dept. of Education would be abolished and replaced by a non-Cabinet Foundation for Educational Assistance. The Administration plans to ask Congress for tuition tax credits for families sending children to private schools.

In its honeymoon year, the Administration pushed through the bulk of its program in a single budget reconciliation based on rigid spending ceilings for various categories of programs. The legislative committees of Congress were then obligated to reduce the programs—often by amending or repealing permanent laws—in order to comply with the ceilings.

But OMB Director Stockman conceded at a press briefing that the same strategy isn't likely to work two years in a row. The Administration acknowledged that its major proposals will have to be considered by legislative committees, he said, and the reconciliation process will be used only "selectively."

Congress has its own budget-setting mechanism. But last year it virtually abandoned its independent role and almost blindly followed the White House lead.

Frank Mirer Appointed To New UAW Safety Post

Detroit—Frank Mirer has been appointed director of the Auto Workers' new occupational safety and health department, which was established by UAW executive board action.

Mirer had been assistant director of the UAW social security department which previously handled the union's job safety activities.

A Democratic Future

Free Elections Held Key To El Salvador Solution

Only free parliamentary elections can provide a political solution and end the strife in El Salvador, the AFL-CIO told a congressional panel studying the situation in that troubled Central American country.

"Only a democratic form of government can provide the framework for a life with bread, peace, and freedom," Executive Director William C. Doherty, Jr., of the American Institute for Free Labor Development declared in an appearance before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

DOHERTY WELCOMED the U.S. government's action in pressing for early parliamentary elections, scheduled now for Mar. 28. "Our role there is of vital importance in the development of democracy and, by extension, to the development of pluralistic societies throughout Central and South America," he told the committee.

Doherty cited the AFL-CIO's basic policy on El Salvador, reiterated in a resolution adopted at its centennial convention last November, demanding an end to right-wing terrorism and death squads. The resolution also insists on the land reform program initiated in that country in October 1979.

AIFLD's role in the land reform process stems from its long association with the Union Comunal Salvadorena (UCS), a 110,000-member campesino union affiliated with the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers.

"OUR EFFORT on behalf of the UCS represents the major contribution of AIFLD to the solution of the problems of El Salvador," Doherty observed.

"Land reform is a key program for several reasons," he said.

"First, it is required as a matter of simple justice without which the vast majority of the people would have been compelled to live out their lives in a semi-feudal system of near slavery, completely dominated by the wealthy landowners.

"Second, it is required economically to increase production and productivity and to assure a more equitable distribution of wealth. And thirdly, it is politically required to guarantee that a major tension, that of the landless striving for land, be eliminated as a challenge to stability."

Neither the AFL-CIO nor AIFLD is completely satisfied with what is occurring in El Salvador, said Doherty.

The USC and the campersinos are on the right track but more pressure, perseverance, and patience will be required to achieve their goal of a free and democratic society in that country, he said.

Peruvian Workers Open Meany Health Center

Lima, Peru—The George Meany Medical Center, established by the Confederation of Peruvian Workers (CTP) with technical assistance from the AFL-CIO, was formally dedicated here recently.

On hand for the ceremonies were government representatives of the United States, Peru, Canada, Israel, Egypt, Norway, and Sweden as well as Peruvian legislators, rectors of local universities, and national labor leaders.

Operated by the CTP's Association of Protection for Family Welfare, the new health center provides services in the areas of pediatrics, gynecology, odontology, and general medicine. It also offers laboratory analyses and pharmaceutical services, and runs a food distribution program for the needy.

FINANCIAL STATUS of the social security system is reviewed by former Social Security Commissioner Robert M. Ball at a meeting of the AFL-CIO Standing Committee on Social Security, which explored the impact of Reagan Administration cutbacks in federal entitlement programs. Also attending the session was Wilbur S. Cohen, former secretary of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare, who heads the Save Our Security coalition of labor, senior citizens and religious groups. The federation's social security committee is chaired by Vice President Sol C. Chaikin.

Public Sector Unions Ask Pension Rights Safeguard

Public sector unions urged Congress to legislate pensions safeguards for state and local government employees comparable to protections accorded workers in private industry.

The AFL-CIO Public Employee Dept. welcomed a bill introduced by Rep. Phillip Burton (D-Calif.) as a needed assurance that public sector workers will receive the full retirement benefits "provided in collective bargaining agreements and promised as conditions of employment."

BURTON IS chairman of the House Labor-Management Relations subcommittee holding hearings on the issue and his bill is along lines that had been urged in an AFL-CIO convention resolution.

President Gerald W. McEntee of the State, County & Municipal Employees said state and local pension plans commonly lack reporting and disclosure safeguards and provide inadequate protection against conflicts of interest.

He and other union witnesses indicated their preference for the Burton bill over a version introduced by Rep. John N. Erlenborn (R-Ill.), which has some features in common.

Service Employees President John J. Sweeney, whose union represents some 250,000 public workers, termed the regulation and safeguarding of public pensions funds "a national concern." He noted that more than 11 million public employees and retirees are covered by more than 6,600 separately administered state and local government retirement plans.

RELATIVELY FEW employees receive adequate descriptions of their pension plans, Sweeney noted, and "large segments of the assets held by pension plans are managed in the interest of those who control the funds rather than in the interest of those whom the funds are intended to benefit."

Partly because of lack of fiduciary responsibility requirements, which the Burton bill seeks to remedy, investment returns on public retirement funds are often very low, Sweeney testified. And especially considering that most public retirement funds require contributions by employees, benefits are often "incredibly low."

Steven L. Pruitt, congressional affairs representative of the Public Employee Dept., stressed that pension rights represent "the deferred wages of workers" and funds should be administered with the concerns of employees foremost.

HE URGED, however, that federal law not be made so restrictive as to become "a barrier against innovations and improvements" in pension programs.

The Burton bill, he suggested, should be "the base" for public sector pension legislation that would "ensure that the participation requirements are reasonable and that future benefits are protected against inadequate financing."

California Labor Asks Ban On 'Guest Worker' Program

Los Angeles — California labor organizations are supporting legislation to keep the administration's proposed federal "guest worker" programs from operating in the state.

At a hearing held by the state Assembly's Labor & Employment Committee, Los Angeles County AFL-CIO President J. J. Rodriguez urged the legislature to pass a bill that would prohibit state and local agencies from participating in any such guest worker program.

THE ADMINISTRATION'S plan, introduced in the U.S. Senate by Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.) would permit up to 50,000 Mexican workers into the U.S. each year to work for up to two years. The bill would give states the option of refusing to participate in the program.

Assemblyman Richard Alatorre of Los Angeles has introduced the bill to remove his state from the program even though Congress has not yet acted.

Alatorre called the Reagan Administration measure a ploy to further the Administration's "anti-union strategy." Guest workers would be "a new class of bonded laborers," who would take jobs away from U.S. workers because they would accept lower wages and fewer protections, he charged.

Rodriguez compared the Administration's proposal to the now defunct "bracero" program. That system, which operated from the period of World War II until 1964, allowed U.S. employers to bring in Mexican farm workers on what was intended to be a temporary basis.

THE BRACERO program was "successful in only one respect—for employers in agriculture who exploited Mexican farm workers, and it worked to keep farm workers exploited by ruining any hopes of unionization," the county labor federation president testified.

The president of the Los Angeles chapter of the Labor Council for Latin American Advancement, Jim Rodriguez, told the committee it is "inconceivable" that the Reagan Administration is considering the importation of foreign workers during a time of record unemployment.

HE CITED statements by a former administrator of the bracero program who had branded it "legalized slavery," and "nothing but a way for corporate farms to get a cheap labor supply from Mexico under government sponsorship."

Clothing & Textile Workers representative Ruth Miller and Ladies' Garment Workers representative Max Wolf stressed that their industry was suffering severe job shortages rather than labor shortages, refuting Administration claims that guest workers were needed to fill jobs that U.S. workers would not accept.

Patrick Henning, California's labor commissioner, among the 35 people testifying in favor of exempting California from the program, said a guest worker program in the state was "tantamount to throwing gasoline on an uncontrolled blaze."

The President's program, he charged, would "depress wages, increase competition and lead to the exploitation of foreign and domestic workers alike."

AFL-CIO Sets Dates for 1982 Region Meetings

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland announced the schedule of 1982 regional conferences the federation will hold with state and local AFL-CIO council officers and other union officials.

The seven meetings will focus on labor's political programs and preparations for this year's state and congressional elections.

MEETINGS ARE scheduled for:

March 16-17, Dearborn, Mich., to include Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Ohio and Wisconsin;

March 19-20, Louisville, Ky., to include Delaware, the District of Columbia, Illinois, Kentucky, Maryland, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Virginia and West Virginia;

March 30-31, Phoenix, Ariz., to include Arizona, Colorado, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, South Dakota, Utah and Wyoming.

April 2-3, Seattle, Wash., to include Alaska, California; Hawaii, Idaho, Montana, Oregon and Washington;

May 4-5, Birmingham, Ala., to include Alabama, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina and Tennessee;

May 7-8, Houston, Tex., to include Arkansas, Kansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Oklahoma and Texas; and May 21-22, Hartford, Conn., to include Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Rhode Island and Vermont.

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

2/13/82

Council Calls for Reversal Of Reagan Economic Plan

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII Saturday, February 20, 1982 No. 7

SPIRITED EXCHANGE of views marked the meeting of Vice President George Bush with the AFL-CIO Executive Council at the council's winter session in Bal Harbour, Fla. Federation President Lane Kirkland said the discussion was "civil and good-hearted" but clearly brought out the policy differences between the Administration and organized labor.

Labor's Alternative Keyed To Job Growth, Tax Equity

By John M. Barry

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO called for reversal of President Reagan's recession-breeding economic policies and responded to his challenge by presenting an alternative program designed to create jobs, restore fairness to the tax structure and sharply reduce the President's projected budget deficit.

"We are proposing a straightforward attack on unemployment—the fundamental sickness produced by Reaganomics," Federation President Lane Kirkland said at a news conference as he reviewed the economic policy statement adopted at the opening session of the Executive Council's winter meeting here.

The council's program totally rejects the Administration's proposal to slash $41 billion more from basic social programs and outlines a series of "well-proven" job-creating measures that would cost an estimated $23 billion.

THIS $64 BILLION would be offset by $31 billion in added revenue from repeal of "the worst tax giveaways" to the wealthy and corporations in last year's tax law and by a progressive surtax on individual and corporate income to finance increases in defense spending, currently proposed by the Administration at $33 billion. (Story, this page.)

In addition, the council statement urges Congress to close a number of tax loopholes, largely benefiting big corporations, so as to reduce by some $47 billion the huge deficit anticipated by the Administration. (Text, Page 5.)

"THE AFL-CIO is convinced its alternative economic program will put the nation on a path to full employment, stable economic growth, fairness in sharing burdens and a society with compassion for those who have too little," Kirkland declared.

The economic policy statement, titled "An Alternative to Reaganomics," was adopted unanimously following a presentation by Research Director Rudy Oswald of an analysis of the Administration's policies and proposals and a separate report on the development of the current recession.

Other council statements focused on particular aspects of the current economic slump—tight money and the resulting high interest rates, the flood of job-destroying imports, and the housing crisis.

IN OTHER action, the council mourned the death of Vice President Jerry Wurf and elected Gerald W. McEntee, Wurf's successor as president of the State, County & Municipal Employees, to fill the council vacancy.

The council spent an hour in a vigorous discussion with Vice President George Bush on the differences between the Administration and the federation, and also heard a presentation by Benjamin Hooks, executive director of the NAACP, on the

(Continued on Page 3)

Civil Rights Progress Held Endangered

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The Reagan Administration's efforts to undermine a generation of civil rights progress achieved through law, if successful, would result in an "incalculable social and political loss" for the nation, the AFL-CIO warned.

The Reagan program consists of "one part Administration policy hostile to civil rights and one part Administration appointment of individuals with no interest in advancing and protecting these rights," the Executive Council charged.

"The Republican President's soothing assurance that 'he does not have a discriminatory bone in his body' is no substitute for enforcement action by the Executive agencies and the courts," the council said.

IT PLEDGED that the AFL-CIO will work with its allies in the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights to defend the civil rights programs and policies now under attack by the Administration.

Specifically, the council urged:

- Prompt enactment of the House-passed bill, now before the Senate, to extend and clarify the Voting Rights Act.
- Administration reinstatement of an Internal Revenue Service rule denying tax exemptions to private schools that discriminate.
- Opposition to legislative attempts to deny the Judicial Branch its role in protecting fundamental constitutional rights.

IN ADDITION, the council said that AFL-CIO unions will continue through collective bargaining to institute voluntary affirmative action programs to help secure civil rights for all.

(Continued on Page 8)

Spreading the Burden

Surtax Sought to Cover Higher Defense Costs

Bal Harbour, Fla. — Organized labor's long-standing support for a strong national defense does not mean support for an unfairly financed defense budget, the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared as it called for a progressive surtax on income to pay for higher military spending.

The council said in a statement at its winter meeting here that at least a third of the surtax should be "an inescapable levy" on gross corporate earnings.

"IN THIS WAY," the statement said, "defense needs can be met without adding to the federal deficit or cutting food stamps, unemployment benefits, job and training programs, mass transit, or other already battered social programs."

The council reaffirmed the AFL-CIO's conviction that a healthy American economy can meet the nation's needs for both a strong military arm and essential social programs, thus satisfying the Constitution's dual mandate to provide "for the common defense" while promoting "the general welfare."

"But we do not have such an economy today," the council statement observed. It charged that the Republican Administration's economic policies, by inducing the current recession, had "set the stage for a revival of the destructive 'guns versus butter' debate; and it has made its own choice clear: guns, not butter."

THE ADMINISTRATION'S approach to the budget would transfer billions of dollars from social programs to defense spending, "while preserving intact its $750 billion tax giveaway," the council said.

"It has chosen to place the defense burden squarely on the backs of working Americans and the poor, and to minimize the burden of those who derive the maximum benefits from our economic system."

In the light of these economic and political factors, Congress must submit the defense budget to "the same close scrutiny that social programs have always undergone," the statement declared.

WITH THE council's approval, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland designated a committee to evaluate the defense-spending proposals in the Reagan budget and report back with recommendations. Members of the panel are Federation Vice Presidents John H. Lyons, chairman, William W. Winpisinger, Charles H. Pillard, Kenneth T. Blaylock, Martin J. Ward, Albert

(Continued on Page 6)

Job Security Key in New Ford Pact

A contract designed to give Ford workers greater job security and help the company survive won the overwhelming endorsement of the Auto Workers Ford Council and is being submitted to union members for ratification.

The Ford Council, made up of UAW local leaders, approved a new 31-month contract negotiated Feb. 13, more than seven months before the expiration of the current agreement. Only 12 of the 144 Ford Council members present at the Chicago meeting voted against the contract. If ratified in voting at union halls this month, it will take effect Mar. 1. UAW members on layoffs, as well as the 105,000 Ford workers still employed, are eligible to vote.

Under the agreement, UAW members will give up personal holidays now provided and the annual 3 percent pay raise. Cost-of-living adjustments would be deferred for 18 months.

IN RETURN for the concessions, Ford would provide job assurances including a two-year moratorium on plant closings related to movement of production to non-union plants, income guarantees for workers with 15 years of service or more, and improved funding for supplemental unemployment benefits. Ford would also set up a profit-sharing plan in 1983.

The new contract, which would supersede the union's current agreement with Ford and run through September 1984, was reached after two weeks of negotiations. Earlier talks between the union and General Motors Corp. broke down.

Both UAW President Douglas A. Fraser and Ford Chairman Philip Caldwell said the agreement marked a new approach to labor relations in the automobile industry. The company, which reported losses of over $1 billion last year, said that lower labor costs will help it survive. The union for its part achieved a key goal of greater job security for its members.

MEANWHILE, there were these other industry developments:

- Fraser, who is also a member of the board of the Chrysler Corp., said Chrysler had agreed to sell its profitable defense division to the General Dynamics Corp. to raise funds for its auto operation. The sale is subject to Pentagon approval.
- General Motors announced it is closing down two plants, at Fremont, Calif., and South Gate, Calif., indefinitely due to

(Continued on Page 8)

LABOR'S ALTERNATIVE to the Reagan Administration's economic policies was set forth by the AFL-CIO Executive Council at its winter meeting in Bal Harbour, Fla. The program met the challenge of President Reagan that those who are unhappy with his budget cuts and tax giveaways should come up with something better.

High Interest Squeeze Tied To Inflation, Unemployment

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO called upon the Administration, Congress, and the Federal Reserve Board to balance monetary and tax policy, bring down interest rates, and ensure the availability of credit for productive investment leading to full employment, reduced inflation, and balanced economic growth.

Specifically, the federation's Executive Council asked Congress to insist that the Federal Reserve Board abandon its tight-money policies and meet the requirements of the 1978 Humphrey-Hawkins Act. The measure requires the Fed to set annual goals for the growth of the nation's money supply and credit consistent with full employment, balanced growth, and lower prices.

"THE BOARD has not fulfilled this requirement," the council said. Instead, it charged, the board has followed a tight-money policy—endorsed by President Reagan—that has resulted in severe economic damage to the country.

"Instead of dealing with the causes of inflation, tight money has been and continues to be an inflationary factor as the resultant high interest rates are being passed on to consumers in price increases," the council charged. "High interest rates reduce purchasing power, and cause steep increases in unemployment and business failures."

While the recession temporarily brought down record high interest rates last fall, continued tight-money policies have forced up short-term interest rates again, the AFL-CIO observed. Long-term interest rates are back at near-record rates, above 16 percent for corporate bonds and 17 percent for mortgages.

SUCH RATES dampen business investment and decimate housing construction, the council pointed out. At 17 percent, payments on a $50,000 mortgage over 30 years would be about $257,000, or about $100,000 more than at a 10 percent rate.

"High money costs have devastated interest-sensitive industries, like housing and automobiles and their supplier industries," the council said in a statement.

AT THIS time of low credit availability, the council charged, the Administration has turned a blind eye on the "unconscionable" use of credit for non-productive corporate acquisition, commodity speculation, and foreign investment. The net effect of the Administration's monetary program, the federation said, has been to curtail funds for small borrowers sharply while big investors have access to funds worldwide.

Under the Credit Control Act of 1969, the council noted, the President can authorize the Federal Reserve Board to regulate and control credit. President Carter's exercise of this authority for a few months in 1980 helped reduce interest rates and stimulate housing construction.

The council urged the President and the Federal Reserve Board again to exercise the authority of the 1969 statute, and it asked Congress to make the Credit Control Act—scheduled to expire this June—permanent.

College-Bound Facing Social Security Cutoff

High school seniors receiving social security benefits—mostly as surviving dependents of a parent who died—will have to enroll in college by May 1 to beat a deadline for discontinuance of student benefits beyond high school.

The cutback was mandated by Congress last year at the urging of the Reagan Administration, and House Ways & Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) is concerned that many graduating seniors are unaware of it.

He urged the Social Security Administration to notify eligible families of the change in law so that college-bound students can seek to arrange for early enrollment, which some institutions are allowing.

McEntee Elected New AFL-CIO Vice President

Bal Harbour, Fla. — State, County & Municipal Employees President Gerald W. McEntee was elected an AFL-CIO vice president at the Executive Council's winter meeting here.

His election fills the council vacancy left by the death last December of AFL-CIO Vice President Jerry Wurf, who was McEntee's predecessor as president of the million-member public employee union.

McENTEE, 46, had been elected president of AFSCME by the union's executive board for the remainder of Wurf's term, which is up in mid-1984.

At the time of his election, McEntee was executive director of the union's 75,000 member Council 13, a post he had held since 1973. He had also been a vice president of AFSCME since 1974.

McEntee, a native of Philadelphia, has a degree in economics from LaSalle College. He began working for AFSCME as an organizer in 1958. He had a key role in the campaign that led to the organization of Pennsylvania's state employees.

THE AFL-CIO Executive Council adopted a resolution of tribute to Wurf as "one of the most dynamic and tireless voices of the American labor movement" whose leadership "made the union he headed . . . a model of democratic trade unionism" and whose service on the AFL-CIO council "contributed to the entire labor movement."

Wurf, who died at 62, was saluted for guiding the growth of the union from 240,000 to nearly 1 million members during his presidency which began in 1964.

He helped "a generation of government workers throw off second-class citizenship and enjoy the full benefits of union membership," the council declared.

And always, the Executive Council noted, "Jerry Wurf marched as an unswerving advocate of civil rights."

Housing Cuts Fuel Crisis in Construction

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Congress should reject proposed Administration cuts in housing programs, and provide the funds needed to meet the nation's housing needs, the AFL-CIO urged.

"The housing industry is in a crisis as a result of the Reagan Republican Administration's tight money and budget slashing policies," the Executive Council said. It noted that fewer new housing units were built last year than in any year since 1946, and joblessness in the industry is one of the highest in the nation.

MORTGAGE RATES of 16 to 18 percent have priced most Americans out of the housing market, the council observed. Instead of taking steps to revitalize housing through such programs as below-market interest rate subsidies, as in other recessions, the Administration is moving in the opposite direction, the AFL-CIO noted.

"The basic support programs for middle-income housing are under Administration attack," the council charged. It pointed out that the Federal Housing Administration is to be cut, and the Government National Mortgage Association is to be phased out. The rural housing program also is being slashed, and Administration budget proposals would replace most low-income housing construction programs with a housing voucher scheme that would add no new housing units.

UNEMPLOYMENT in construction last month amounted to 946,000 workers, or 18.7 percent, accounting for one out of every eight unemployed workers in the nation. An equal number has become jobless in the production and distribution of lumber and bricks, glass and steel, plumbing and heating equipment, furniture and home furnishings, home appliances, and other building materials and components.

"Thus, one out of every four unemployed workers has been in construction or construction-related employment," the council observed. "Revitalization of housing and construction would put millions of Americans back to work."

TO PROVIDE adequate housing for Americans and to help revive the economy, the AFL-CIO urged Congress to take the following actions:

- Fund construction of 250,000 low-income new and rehabilitated housing units a year to meet national low-income housing needs.
- Provide a level of operating subsidies to maintain adequately the existing stock of public housing.
- Continue the FHA mortgage insurance, GNMA guarantees, and rural housing loans at their current levels.
- Restore below-market mortgage interest rate subsidy programs for middle-income families.

The council also urged the President and the Federal Reserve Board to use their authority under the 1969 Credit Control Act to ensure adequate credit at affordable rates for housing and other construction projects, as well as for other domestic priorities.

Voodoo Policies Conjure 'Jonestown Economics'

Bal Harbour, Fla.—"Voodoo economics" has given way to "Jonestown economics."

That was the term AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland applied to the Reagan Administration's economic policies in a parting exchange with Vice President George Bush at the conclusion of Bush's meeting with the Executive Council.

KIRKLAND TOLD reporters at his Feb. 16 news conference that the only point of agreement between Bush and the council came when Vice President Vincent Sombrotto said he had found Bush "persuasive" when he referred to candidate Ronald Reagan's economic policies as "voodoo economics."

Kirkland said that the Vice President responded in a spirited way, insisting that he had applied the term only to the Kemp-Roth tax cut proposal advocated by Reagan, and not to the total economic program that today includes the tax cut, sharp reductions in federal spending and deregulation.

At that point, Kirkland commented that while it may not be voodoo economics, he regarded it as "Jonestown economics," a budget program that "administers economic Kool-Aid to the poor and the deprived and the unemployed of this country."

PRESSED BY reporters to expand on the exchange, Kirkland said it was not a perfect analogy to the 1978 massacre in Jonestown, Guyana. But he said the term was "commensurate" with the suffering caused by the Administraion's economic policies.

"When you drive people out of work," Kirkland said, "when you cut their unemployment benefits, when you eliminate Trade Adjustment Assistance for those who've been thrown out of work by imports, when you cut back on aid to families with dependent children, when you strip the federal government of those humanitarian functions that are designed to build and maintain a decent society and give people at the lower end of the ladder a helping hand—I say it's destructive and harmful, of not only this generation but of future generations."

Kirkland said the meeting with Bush, whom President Reagan has designated to maintain liaison between the Administration and organized labor, developed into "a spirited exchange of views in which he set forth his position vigorously and aggressively, and the members of the council responded in the same style. It was civil and good-hearted, but it clearly brought out that there are fundamental differences. We simply disagree on many of the main, basic issues that face this country."

ASKED IF either side derived any benefit from the meeting, Kirkland said there are always benefits from such discussions.

"I've hoped that as events evolve—and as the inevitable consequences of pursuit of error become more and more clear—that even they will have to conclude that an alternative course might be examined and pursued.

"It's good to have the meetings and the relationships, the opportunities. I don't particularly enjoy just talking to people that I agree with. I like to have argument, discussion, dialogue. That's the way we live. That's the nature of our environment."

Labor Pushes Attack on Reaganomics

Council Bases Alternative On Job Growth, Tax Equity

(Continued from Page 1)

tasks and problems facing the labor-civil rights coalition. Reports also were given by Legislative Director Ray Denison on the congressional outlook and by Dr. William Young, media consultant, who discussed the television monitoring project sponsored by the Machinists, Operating Engineers, and the Bakery, Confectionery & Tobacco Workers.

IN CONNECTION with its statement on imports, the council acted to reconstitute the subcommittee on trade of its Economic Policy Committee. Named by Kirkland to serve on the panel were Vice Presidents John H. Lyons, William W. Winpisinger, Charles H. Pillard, Murray Finley, Sol C. Chaikin, Lloyd McBride, Douglas A. Fraser, Frank Drozak and David J. Fitzmaurice.

In other areas, the council reaffirmed its opposition to the nomination of John Van de Water as chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, sharply critized the Reagan Administration for its civil rights failures, and noted the 100th anniversary of the birth of Franklin D. Roosevelt, calling on all Americans to honor his memory.

The council's economic statements pinned direct responsibility for the recession on the Reagan Administration, declaring that it "cannot blame anyone else."

"The recession was started in July 1981 with Reagan's job-destroying tight-money, budget-slashing policies," the council statement said. "These policies must be stopped. Anti-recession, job-creating programs must be started immediately."

THE STATEMENT proposed a number of steps to help turn around the recession by providing jobs and easing hardships on the unemployed:

- Investment in public works—the "infrastructure for the nation's deteriorating communities"—including sewer, highway, bridge, mass transit, railroad and other needed facilities.
- Investment in "human capital" through effective job training programs for the unemployed and public employment for the long-term jobless.
- Encouragement of low- and moderate-income housing.
- Creation of a Reconstruction Finance Corp. to rebuild the nation's industrial base with special loans, grants or guarantees to depressed areas and industries.
- Limitations on harmful imports that aggravate the impact of the recession and weaken key industries.
- Extension of unemployment benefits to protect the long-term unemployed.

IN RESPONSE to reporters' questions, Kirkland pointed out that programs to put workers back on the job could be a major factor in reducing the heavy budget deficits forecast by Reagan and his economic advisers. He noted that every one percent reduction in unemployment means $30 billion to the federal government in added revenues and lower costs.

"So, obviously, if you reduce unemployment by 3 percent, you produce $90 billion to apply on the deficit," he said. "That's the way we'd like to see (the budget) balanced. And I don't believe we'll ever achieve balance until we do begin to follow policies and programs that rebuild and revive the industrial base of this country and put people back to work."

As for the President's deficit projection of $91.5 billion for the 1983 fiscal year, Kirkland expressed disbelief, citing the substantially higher estimates of the Congressional Budget Office.

"Once again," he said, "they've done a little cooking of the books and developed some acceptably rosy expectations. . . . At best, it's a triumph of hope over experience."

TO ACHIEVE its optimistic forecast, the Reagan Administration chose not to counter the deepening economic decline, the council statement noted, but has instead "cut unemployment insurance benefits, reduced employment and training programs and welfare assistance at the same time it has destroyed more than one million jobs, putting more people on the streets in search of help that's not there.

"One has to look back 50 years to see such a heartless official reaction to the hardship and suffering of millions of unemployed Americans."

The statement cited other program slashes proposed by the Administration, ranging from Medicare for the elderly to child care for the young, all having a heavy impact on workers and the poor.

The council said the "unfair and excessive tax giveaways" in last year's tax law must be reversed "to achieve greater equity, pay for the anti-recession program and reduce the runaway Reagan deficits."

SPECIFICALLY, it called for a cap of $700 per family on the 1982 and 1983 individual income tax cuts, which would save $20 billion in revenue. Other measures would be repeal of the leasing of tax credits by corporations and of the new loopholes in the windfall profits tax on oil, tightening of the liberalized estate and gift tax provisions, and repeal of the future indexing of tax rates.

In addition, the council said defense spending "should be scrutinized carefully," and any increase found necessary should be paid for with a separate progressive surtax on individuals and corporations.

These tax changes would be enough to offset cancellation of Reagan's budget slashes and to finance the proposed new job-creating programs.

TO ACHIEVE as much as $47 billion in revenue to narrow the budget deficit, the council called for closing a number of other tax loopholes enjoyed by big business and the wealthy.

The council charged that the Administration's "huge tax giveaways" to the wealthy had "saddled monetary policy with an unbalanced fiscal policy," placing a heavy strain on monetary policy with resulting high interest rates that further worsen the nation's recession.

The statement called on the President and the Federal Reserve Board to exercise their authority to control credit so as to channel funds where they are most needed.

The council also rejected the Administration's plan for "urban enterprise zones" that would give special tax breaks and exemption from certain regulations to businesses locating in stricken areas.

THIS WOULD create "new sub-classes of citizens," the council said. It urged instead strengthening programs that "directly address the problems of unemployment and deteriorating neighborhoods."

Kirkland told reporters that labor will press its case for the alternative economic program with Congress.

"The issue is not resolved by whether or not President Reagan agrees with us," he said, "and I am hopeful that either this year or following the next elections, we'll have a Congress, at least, that might be more responsive to the needs of the people and their equitable considerations."

He said the AFL-CIO has no special strategy for persuading members of Congress to change their minds or adopt labor's view, other than the "force, vigor and logic" of its arguments supplemented by "expressions from their home constituencies that it would be politically advantageous for them to do so."

NEW VICE PRESIDENT of the AFL-CIO, President Gerald W. McEntee of the State, County & Municipal Employees, right, is welcomed to the Executive Council by President Lane Kirkland and Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue. McEntee was elected unanimously to fill the council vacancy caused by the death last December of Jerry Wurf, his predecessor as AFSCME president.

Balance Sheet for Labor's 'Alternative to Reaganomics'

Here, in summary form, is how the AFL-CIO proposes to increase federal tax revenues and finance needed programs to create jobs, meet public needs and expand the economy:

Increased Revenues

From Revisions of Tax Law

	(in billions)
Cap the 1982 and 1983 individual tax cuts at $700 per family	$20
Repeal the leasing of tax credits by corporations	8
Repeal the new loopholes in the oil windfall profits tax	2
Modify the widened state and gift tax provisions	1
Repeal the future indexing of tax rates	—
Total	$31 billion

From Savings

Scrutinize defense outlays and finance any required increases with a corporate and individual surtax
Current proposed defense budget increase	$33
Total	$33 billion
Total of Increased Revenue & Savings	$64 billion

Necessary Outlays

New Jobs Programs

	(in billions)
Invest in public infrastructure for the nation's deteriorating communities, including sewer, highway, bridge, mass transit, railroad, and other needed facilities	$ 5
Invest in human capital through effective training of the unemployed and provide public employment opportunities for those who still cannot find work	5
Encourage low- and moderate-income housing	5
Establish a Reconstruction Finance Corporation to rebuild the nation's industrial base by aiding sectors of the economy and of the country that need special assistance through loans, grants or guarantees	4
Limit harmful imports that aggravate the impact of the recession.	No Cost
Extend unemployment insurance benefits to protect the long-term jobless	4
Total	$23 billion
Restore proposed budget cuts	$41 billion
Total	$41 billion
Total New Jobs & Restoring Budget Cuts	$64 billion

Additional Revenues

Closing Tax Loopholes

	(in billions)
Change the foreign tax credit to a tax deduction	$10
Repeal the foreign tax deferral privileges	1
Repeal the tax deferrals of the Domestic International Sales Corporation (DISC)	2
Repeal the immediate write-off of oil and gas drilling costs and the special depletion allowances	6
Reduce the investment tax credit to its former levels	7
Apply the lower corporate income tax rates only to corporations with profits of less than $100,000	9
Phase out the special capital gains exclusions	6
Repeal the special capital gains at death exclusions	6
Total	$47 billion
Total Additional Revenues from Closing Loopholes	$47 billion

Paying for Defense

THE AFL-CIO is convinced that the American economy can sustain a strong national defense without shortchanging vital social programs that reflect the humane values of our people and that make our society worth defending.

We reject the idea that Americans must choose between guns and butter—between those words of the Constitution providing "for the common defense" and promoting "the general welfare." Both of these constitutional mandates can be supported by a healthy and growing economy, fully employing the human and material resources of the nation.

But we do not have such an economy today. We are in a deep recession induced by the Reagan Administration's economic policies, and we face the long-term prospect of high unemployment, low economic growth, huge federal deficits, and drastically curtailed social services.

Thus, the Republican Administration, through its economic policies, has deliberately set the stage for a revival of the destructive "guns versus butter" debate; and it has made its own choice clear: guns, not butter.

INSTEAD OF financing defense increases through equitable taxation, it has chosen to transfer billions from social spending to defense, while preserving intact its $750 billion tax giveaway. It has chosen to place the defense burden squarely on the backs of working Americans and the poor, and to minimize the burden on those who derive the maximum benefits from our economic system.

The AFL-CIO's long-standing support for a strong national defense does not oblige us to support a defense budget that is unfairly financed. Nor does our opposition to such financing compel us to join those who see little need for improving U.S. military capability and, therefore, urge deep cuts in defense spending to finance social programs.

We do insist, given the economic and political considerations imposed by the Administration, that the defense budget be subjected to the same close scrutiny that social programs have always undergone.

A detailed analysis of specific weapons systems or of highly technical military issues is not within the special competence of the labor movement. But given the budgetary, economic, and social effects of defense spending on American workers and their families, we have a right and an obligation to address the broad defense issues confronting the nation.

MEANWHILE, the AFL-CIO insists that should Congress determine that higher levels of defense spending in fiscal 1983 are required, this increase should be fully financed by a progressive surtax on income. At least one-third of this tax should be provided by an inescapable levy on gross corporate earnings. In this way, defense needs can be met without adding to the federal deficit or cutting . . . already battered social programs.

Rather than distribute the defense burden fairly, the Reagan Republican Administration risks creating new anti-defense constituencies among working Americans and all who look to their government to "promote the general welfare." Nothing could be more threatening to our national security.

—From a statement by the AFL-CIO Executive Council, Feb. 15, 1982, Bal Harbour, Fla.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
LANE KIRKLAND, President
THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward	Murray H. Finley
Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts	Sol C. Chaikin
Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco	Charles H. Pillard
J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride	David J. Fitzmaurice
Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps	Wm. W. Winpisinger
William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell	John DeConcini
Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss	William Konyha
Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney	Douglas A. Fraser
Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield	Barbara Hutchinson
Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto	Gerald W. McEntee

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop, John R. Oravec
David L. Perlman, James M. Shevis

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, February 20, 1982 No. 7

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

INTERNATIONAL LABOR PRESS AFL-CIO/CLC ASSOCIATION

The Balancing Act

Untapped Agricultural Wealth

Land Reform in Poor Nations Key to Feeding Hungry World

By Gus Tyler

IF THE HUNGRY of the world are to be fed, it can only be done by the presently poor countries of the world. The great bread baskets of the earth—the United States, Canada, Australia and India—cannot be counted on forever to provide the food.

That is the sober, almost somber, conclusion of Orville Freeman, former Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, and present chairman of Business International. "Only if the developing countries—where population growth is taking place and where the majority of the planet's people now live—increase their production sharply can the food-people crisis be met," he says.

FREEMAN BELIEVES that the miracle can come to pass. "Only one-half of the world's good, arable land is actually being farmed" at present. Even where land is being worked, "productivity is at a level only one-third of demonstrated potential."

If the rest of the world were to use its arable land to produce in the same way as a typical Iowa corn farm, enough could be grown to feed ten times the present population of the globe.

Freeman does not expect the world to turn to the American way of large-scale farming. "The main thrust in the developing countries should be to reach out to the small landholder, the one-to-five-hectare farmer." If they work their land intensively, he says, they could end up "topping even average U.S. yield."

Freeman points to some real successes around the world where some such programs have been tried. He cites the village of Bainan, 30 miles outside Calcutta, where farmers—with holdings ranging from one-sixth of an acre to one acre—within two years realized a "production increase of 1,000 percent and an increase of the farmer's income averaging in excess of 500 percent."

What then stands in the way of other countries doing the same?

IN MANY COUNTRIES a small, empowered class of owners resists all land reform, refusing to surrender any of their holdings. Yet, says Freeman, "a system whereby the producer on the soil benefits directly from his efforts is the single most important element in increasing productivity. In most places of the world, this means producer ownership and requires egalitarian land policies, adequately supported by the government."

The other obstacle to developing agriculture has been an illusion, shared alike by the advanced and developing nations; namely, that the way for the poor countries to get rich quick was by rapid industrialization and the export of manufactured products to the rich countries. In the haste to industrialize, these countries neglected agriculture.

FREEMAN OFFERS a contrary approach. "Agriculture," he says, "is the key to economic development. No country, with the exception of a few city-states, has ever prospered and built a sound economy without a solid agricultural base." His view, spelled out in the Journal of the Institute for Socio-Economic Studies, is a total turnabout in the thinking that dominated "development" policy in the three decades since World War II and has increasingly won favor among those who study the coming crisis in food.

Copyright 1982, Gus Tyler Columns

. . . A Great Injustice To Idaho's Citizens

At a time when Idahoans are united in an effort to revitalize our state's economy, to attract new business and industry to Idaho, and to provide more jobs in areas of the state where they are needed, the introduction of a divisive issue of "right-to-work" does a great injustice to our citizens.

The relationship between Idaho labor and management is sound and based on mutual respect. The out-of-state interests promoting the "right-to-work" issue are sowing dissension.

The bill is detrimental to Idaho's economic health and stability. . . . The record shows that in the states where so-called right-to-work laws exist, the income of working people, union and non-union alike, begins to decline in relation to the national average.

The bill would actually take away an existing right: the right of labor and management to negotiate and agree upon a union-security clause through collective bargaining.

—From a veto statement by Gov. John V. Evans of Idaho, Feb. 11, 1982.

Labor Offers Alternative to Reaganomics

Following is the text of the AFL-CIO Executive Council's statement on economic policy, Feb. 15, 1982, Bal Harbour, Fla.

THE REAGAN ADMINISTRATION economic policies, which caused the current recession, must be reversed. This recession has rapidly become the worst since the Great Depression.

The Republican Administration cannot blame anyone else for this recession. This recession was started in July 1981 with Reagan's job-destroying, tight-money, budget-slashing policies. These policies must be stopped. Anti-recession, job-creating programs must be started immediately.

The unfair and excessive tax giveaways of 1981 must be changed to achieve greater equity, pay for the anti-recession program and reduce the runaway Reagan deficits. And the President's second-round budget cuts must be blocked.

The Administration has saddled monetary policy with an unbalanced fiscal policy resulting from President Reagan's huge tax giveaways to the wealthy. This abdication of fiscal responsibility by the Administration places excessive strain on the monetary system and leads to continued high interest rates that further worsen the recession.

THE CATASTROPHIC economic problems the Administration has created are made even worse by a cruel and regressive ideology which rewards the rich, forgets the jobless, punishes the minorities, ignores the poor and destroys protections for working people, the elderly and the needy.

The President's 1982 State of the Union Message added up to a total disregard for human needs and for the economic and social costs of high unemployment and recession. Nothing in his proposals will help jobless workers or hasten economic recovery. The President's "new federalism" should not divert public attention from the Administration's blatant failure. The President would thrust basic national responsibilities upon the states, which have historically failed their responsibilities. He would undercut the Constitution and turn America back to the chaos of the Articles of Confederation.

In the year since the Reagan Administration has taken office, adult breadwinners and blacks and other minorities have suffered worse unemployment than at any time since the Great Depression of the 1930s.

OFFICIAL STATISTICS concede that some 9.3 million men and women are now without jobs. But the true dimensions of the economic crisis are worse than the unemployment statistics. In addition, another 1.2 million discouraged workers have stopped looking for non-existent jobs. These "hidden unemployed" don't show up in the government's unemployment rate. Another 5.4 million workers want full-time jobs but can find only part-time jobs. These men and women and their families are suffering from reduced workweeks and reduced income.

Today America has nearly 16 million men and women who are suffering serious job loss and income loss. The real unemployment rate is 12 percent.

During 1982, one out of every three people in the labor force, more than 30 million Americans, will suffer some unemployment.

President Reagan tells us to wait. The Reagan Administration accepts the recession as unavoidable and engages in wishful thinking that a trickle-down investment boom will develop by itself in this depressed economy, even though the government's own statistics show that the business community has no such plans.

BUT MILLIONS OF Americans are suffering and cannot afford to wait. Americans need jobs to put food on the table, pay the mortgage or rent and live in dignity.

Instead of acting to counter the deepening economic decline, the Reagan Administration has cut unemployment insurance benefits, reduced employment and training programs, and welfare assistance at the same time it has destroyed more than one million jobs putting more people on the streets in search of help that's not there. One has to look back 50 years to see such a heartless official reaction to the hardship and suffering of millions of unemployed Americans.

The AFL-CIO calls upon the Congress to reverse these economic policies and set the nation on a path to full employment and balanced economic growth.

Oppose Budget Cuts

We urge the Congress to reject the newly proposed budget cuts of $41 billion which follow cuts of $33 billion last year. The serious impact of this new budget on workers and the poor is evident in a partial listing:

- Job training programs would be slashed even further from last year's cuts.
- Trade adjustment assistance would be practically eliminated.
- Railroad workers' retirement, unemployment and sickness insurance would be eliminated as a separate program.
- Medicare benefits for the elderly and severely disabled would be scaled back.
- Federal employment would be cut by 75,000 over the next two years.
- Federal pay increases would be capped at 5 percent, regardless of comparability with the private sector.
- Retirement benefits protections for federal workers would be lowered.
- Housing support for low- and middle-income families would be curtailed or eliminated.
- Maritime construction support (CDS and Title XI) would be eliminated and operating subsidies (ODS) phased out.
- Mass transit aid would be cut.
- Railroad transportation funds (Amtrak) would be reduced.
- Educational help to the disadvantaged would be lowered.
- Vocational education support would be trimmed.
- Student aid and student loans would be cut back even further than last year.
- Economic development aid to communities would be terminated.
- Sewer and water treatment support would be postponed.
- Energy programs would be curtailed.
- Energy assistance to low-income families would be cut.
- Child nutrition would suffer further cuts.
- Welfare and food stamp programs would be sharply curtailed.
- Medicaid for the poor would be further reduced.
- Day care, foster care, adoption and child welfare would receive less.

Raise Revenues

In order to provide the funds for national priorities and basic protections to workers and the poor, as well as to provide funds for new job programs, the AFL-CIO calls upon Congress to undo the worst aspects of last year's tax giveaways to corporations and the wealthy. We also propose the closing of some long-standing tax loopholes.

Specific changes in the 1981 tax law should:

- Cap the 1982 and 1983 individual tax cuts at $700 per family.
- Repeal the leasing of tax credits by corporations.
- Repeal the new loopholes in the oil windfall profits tax.
- Modify the widened estate and gift tax provisions.
- Repeal the future indexing of tax rates.

In addition, Congress should correct these tax loopholes:

- Change the foreign tax credit to a tax deduction.
- Repeal the foreign tax deferral privileges.
- Repeal the tax deferrals of the Domestic International Sales Corp. (DISC).
- Repeal the immediate write-off of oil and gas drilling costs and the special depletion allowances.
- Reduce the investment tax credit to its former levels.
- Apply the lower corporate income tax rates only to corporations with profits of less than $100,000.
- Phase out the special capital gains exclusions.
- Repeal the special capital gains at death exclusions.

Defense expenditures should be scrutinized carefully, and any increases found necessary should be financed by a separate and equitable surtax on corporations and individuals.

Create Jobs

The Congress needs to enact a number of programs to provide jobs, alleviate the suffering of the unemployed, and turn around the worsening recession:

- Invest in public infrastructure for the nation's deteriorating communities, including sewer, highway, bridge, mass transit, railroad, and other needed facilities.
- Invest in human capital through effective training of the unemployed and provide public employment opportunities for those who still cannot find work after lengthy searches.
- Encourage low- and moderate-income housing.
- Establish a Reconstruction Finance Corp. to rebuild the nation's industrial base by aiding sectors of the economy and of the country that need special assistance through loans, grants or guarantees.
- Limit harmful imports that aggravate the impact of the recession and weaken key industries.
- Extend unemployment insurance benefits to protect the long-term jobless.

The Congress should reject the Administration's call for "enterprise zones" that would create new subclasses of citizens and instead strengthen programs that directly address the problems of unemployment and deteriorating neighborhoods.

THE PRESIDENT and the Federal Reserve should exercise their authority to control credit and channel funds to productive purposes, including housing, and to restrict unproductive credit flows for corporate mergers, speculative excesses and foreign investment.

The undue reliance on tight monetary policy, huge budget cuts in social programs, and big tax cuts for the wealthy must be reversed. Tax policy must provide sufficient funds for the nation to fulfill its responsibilities to its citizens, and to provide appropriate balance to the Administration's one-sided monetary economic policy. Budget cuts cannot become an end in themselves—but should be evaluated in terms of justice and need.

The AFL-CIO is convinced that this alternative economic program will put the nation on a path to achieve full employment, stable economic growth, fairness in sharing burdens and a society with compassion for those who have too little.

Joblessness Spells Human Tragedy

The nation's near-depression unemployment rate may be exacting an even greater toll in human tragedies than that indicated by the startling official government reports on layoffs, production cutbacks and plant closings, AFL-CIO Economist Markley Roberts warned.

Hundreds of thousands of American families are in desperate straits, Roberts said, as they suffer not only lost or reduced paychecks, but are now cut off from unemployment insurance, food stamps and other buffers against the effects of joblessness in the wake of the Administration's budget slashes.

HE POINTED out that while government reports show 10 million workers "officially unemployed," at least 6 million more have become so discouraged that they've given up looking for jobs or are working only part time because they cannot find full-time employment.

"When you factor in the families and the impact on them," 30 million or more Americans now have "serious problems" in trying to cope with the severe recession and the highest joblessness since the Depression of the '30s, Roberts asserted. He was questioned by reporters on Labor News Conference, the AFL-CIO produced public affairs program.

ROBERTS CITED unemployment insurance as one of the critical protections in hard economic times that has been affected by the "very restrictive policies" the Reagan Administration has adopted. He pointed out that only a comparative handful of the unemployed are now able to qualify for benefits beyond the basic 26-week period because of the severe reduction of the extended-period protection that the long-term unemployed once had. He said about one-half million jobless workers exhaust their basic benefits each month.

Reporters questioning Roberts were Ann McFeatters, Washington correspondent for the Scripps-Howard Newspapers, and Robert Cooney, editor of Press Associates, Inc.

Surtax Sought For Increased Defense Costs

(Continued from Page 1)

Shanker, Douglas A. Fraser and Frank Drozak.

At a news conference between council sessions, Kirkland rejected the suggestion that the council's statement represents a departure from the federation's position.

"We have been historically pro-defense," he said, and have assumed that "it's safer to err on the side of adequacy in a defense budget.

"THAT'S STILL my view. However, at a time when the defense burden has been so rapidly increased and where there is so little evidence of an underlying concept that can be readily understood by the public . . . a higher degree of skepticism is justified, particularly when this Administration is taking it out of the hides of the poor and exempting the rich."

The council set no specific goal for revenue to be achieved by the proposed surtax, but a fact sheet accompanying its statement noted that the Administration is seeking an increase of $33 billion in the defense budget for fiscal 1983.

WHATEVER increase in military spending is ultimately approved by Congress should be "fully financed" by the proposed progressive surtax on individual and corporate income, the statement said.

"A detailed analysis of specific weapons systems or of highly technical military issues is not within the special competence of the labor movement," the council said.

"But given the budgetary, economic, and social effects of defense spending on American workers and their families, we have a right and an obligation to address the broad defense issues confronting the nation."

Italian-American Council Honors ILGWU's Chaikin

New York—President Sol C. Chaikin of the Ladies' Garment Workers received the Italian-American Labor Council's Four Freedoms Award at the council's 40th annual conference here.

The citation praised Chaikin's "staunch and vigorous efforts toward the preservation of the lofty ideals of American democracy and his vital contributions to international free trade unionism."

METAL TRADES DEPT. President Paul Burnsky reviews the agenda for the department's executive council meeting in Bal Harbour, Fla., with President Carl Studenroth of the Molders, left, and President emeritus John McNamara of the Firemen & Oilers, right. McNamara retired from his seat on the council, and the vacancy was filled by his successor as president of the Firemen & Oilers, George J. Franciscus.

Employer Liable for Dues After Pitch to Kill Checkoff

An employer who tries to persuade workers to revoke their dues checkoff authorizations must reimburse the union for any dues it loses as a result, the National Labor Relations Board ruled.

The ruling came out of a case involving a number of unfair labor practices committed by Cardinal Systems, a division of Hospitality Motor Inns, which operates a cafeteria at a Cummins Engine Co. plant in Walesboro, Ind. The employer's unlawful actions occurred shortly before and after a petition was filed to decertify Hotel & Restaurant Employees Local 58 as bargaining representative for the cafeteria workers.

AMONG THE violations for which the employer was cited were questioning workers about their union sentiments, creating the impression of surveillance, assisting in the filing of a decertification petition, promising improved wages and working conditions if the union were defeated, threatening to discharge employees for cooperation with the NLRB, and refusing to bargain.

In addition, the cafeteria manager approached employees to ask if they wished to continue to have their union dues deducted from their paycheck. An NLRB administrative law judge found that the manager's derogatory remarks about the union and her statement that all but one employee had revoked checkoff "were clear encouragement to revoke." The ALJ recommended a cease-and-desist order, an order to bargain, and backpay for wages that were unlawfully withheld.

IN BROADENING the proposed remedies, the NLRB panel majority of Howard Jenkins and Don Zimmerman said the situation was analogous to cases in which the NLRB has ordered reimbursement of union dues when workers were coerced by their employers into paying dues or joining a union.

Member John Fanning disagreed, arguing that since the employer could have unilaterally discontinued checkoff following contract expiration, the solicitation of revocations could not have unlawfully caused any monetary loss to the union.

While acknowledging that the firm could have discontinued checkoff for all workers on expiration of the contract, the majority pointed out that the employer instead chose to unlawfully solicit revocations from the workers and to continue to honor deductions from those who did not revoke.

The union, therefore, lost dues it likely would have continued to receive were it not for the unlawful action, the majority found.

Veto Upheld, Idaho Halts R-T-W Drive

Boise, Ida.—A union-busting attempt to make Idaho a "right-to-work" state was blocked by a veto, and Gov. John V. Evans is a hero to the state's trade union movement.

Evans, a Democrat, refused to sign a compulsory open shop measure sent to him Feb. 10 after passing the state's House by a 50 to 20 vote and the Senate by a 21 to 14 margin.

THE VETO held when a Senate vote to override fell short of the necessary two-thirds majority, again by a vote of 21 to 14. Twelve votes were all that were needed to sustain the veto, and two Republican state senators joined twelve Democrats in voting to uphold the governor's action.

This is the second defeat in two years for so-called right-to-work in Idaho. The anti-union measure was also turned back in 1977 and in 1958 had been rejected by the voters in a statewide referendum.

Idaho AFL-CIO President Jim Kerns, who led the fight against the bill, praised the state's union members for their quick response to requests for letters, phone calls and personal visits to key legislators and the governor.

WITHIN A three-day period, Kerns said, Governor Evans received over 12,000 messages from union families urging him to veto the bill.

Kerns praised the governor for "his courage in standing by the workers of this state" despite "extreme pressure" fueled by out of the state "right-to-work" organizations.

Heavy spending by proponents of the compulsory open shop included a series of full page newspaper ads, Kerns pointed out.

In his veto message, Gov. Evans called "right-to-work" a "grossly misleading" title because it "neither confers any rights on anyone nor does it create or secure any additional jobs for Idahoans."

"The out-of-state interests promoting the 'right-to-work' issue are sowing dissension where none now exists," Evans told the legislators. He called the measure "detrimental to Idaho's economic health and stability," pointing out that workers' incomes generally decline in relation to the national average in states where such laws are on the books, damaging the state's economy.

SO-CALLED "right-to-work" takes away the right of labor and management to negotiate and agree on union security clauses in contracts, and is "contrary to any notion of fairness" because it denies the concept of majority rule, Evans said.

The governor called the bill "divisive," and stressed, "I cannot believe the out-of-state interests promoting this legislation truly have the welfare of the citizens of the state of Idaho at heart."

J. P. Stevens Required to Pay Organizing, Litigation Costs

Richmond, Va.—A federal appeals court has upheld an order of the National Labor Relations Board requiring J. P. Stevens & Co. to bargain with the Clothing & Textile Workers at its Wallace, N.C., plant and reimburse the union for its organizing and litigation costs.

By a 2 to 1 vote, the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals agreed with the NLRB that the company had committed blatant unfair labor practices during a 1975 union campaign in Wallace. Besides upholding the bargaining order against Stevens, the court also approved a rarely used remedy requiring the huge textile firm to pay ACTWU's organizing expenses and the litigation costs incurred by both the NLRB and the union.

THE NLRB HAD FOUND that unfair labor practices by Stevens management tainted the outcome of a February 1975 election which ACTWU lost by a 540 to 404 vote. The board voted that the union had obtained authorization cards from 561 of the 1,000 employees at Wallace.

Stevens officials announced a month before the election the institution of a guaranteed base for each employee's equity in the company's profit-sharing plan. The NLRB said the timing of the announcement was intended to dissuade employees from voting for the union and should have been delayed until after the election.

The court's written opinion concluded that stringent remedies were appropriate in the case because of the board's findings that high-level management officials acted deliberately, and in violation of a contempt order, to frustrate employee free choices in the election campaign.

The case was remanded to the NLRB for determination of the amounts of litigation and organizing expenses that the company must pay.

IN LATE 1980, Stevens and ACTWU settled on a landmark agreement that ended nearly two decades of struggle for worker rights. Over the years, Stevens had been found guilty of numerous, blatant violations of the National Labor Relations Act at several of its plants. The NLRB's findings were repeatedly upheld by federal courts, including the Supreme Court, but the company continued to flout the law and the court rulings.

The agreement applied to Stevens's seven-plant complex at Roanoke Rapids N.C., where the union won a first contract after a lengthy organizing campaign. It did not affect pending litigation such as that relating to the Wallace plant.

New AFTRA Pact Assures Video Disc Fees to Singers

New York—The Television & Radio Artists reached agreement with the recording industry on a new three-year contract that, for the first time, will give members an additional session fee when their sound recordings are converted to video discs or cassettes even though no additional session took place.

The pact, which has been approved by AFTRA's executive board, is subject to ratification by members. Retroactive to Apr. 1, 1980, the contract is now being considered at AFTRA membership meetings in cities where a substantial number of singers—those most affected by the agreement—are employed.

ANNOUNCEMENT of the settlement was made by AFTRA Exec. Sec. Sanford Wolff, who led the union's bargaining team. The contract supplements the union's Phonograph Code with the industry, and retains most of its provisions.

The pact calls for royalty payments of 4.5 percent of distributors' gross, plus improvements in pension and welfare provisions.

"The most important aspect of the agreement is that identical provisions have been achieved for video discs or cassettes as exist in the agreement negotiated along with the Screen Actors Guild," said Wolff. "This is what the singers' wages and working conditions committees had asked for."

Increases in all Phonograph Code rates also were negotiated in the new contract. Group singers' rates rise by 7 percent the first year, 4.6 perecnt the next, and 8.2 percent in the third year.

In Port Development Plans

Maritime Trades Seek Fair Share of Cargoes

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The need for government action to revitalize the U.S. merchant fleet was the dominant theme at the winter meeting of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept.'s executive board.

Some 200 representatives of MTD affiliated unions approved a program putting special emphasis on port development to handle burgeoning coal exports and other dry-bulk cargoes and legislation to assure a fair share of these cargoes for U.S.-flag ships.

THE PROGRAM was outlined in 26 statements adopted by the board and in reports of the department's officers: President Frank Drozak, Vice President Stephen J. Leslie and Executive Sec.-Treas. Jean Ingrao.

Drozak announced that in the months ahead the MTD will sponsor a series of one-day seminars on port development in the nation's major port cities, bringing together representatives of labor, business and industry, and state and local governments.

"These forums will address the need for port development legislation to enhance the capability of the United States to compete successfully in the expanding dry bulk trades," Drozak said.

HE CALLED on the Reagan Administration to support an amendment to pending legislation on port development to require bilateral shipping agreements assuring an equitable division of cargo carriage between the U.S. and its trading partners.

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, in an address to the board, observed that "the government—year in and year out—has been long on promises and short on performance" in its approach to the merchant marine.

He noted, for example, that instead of redeeming his campaign pledge of a seven-point program to rebuild the U.S.-flag commercial fleet, President Reagan and his Administration are planning sharp cutbacks in operating subsidies to the liner trade—"which could lead to the beaching of what is left" of those ships.

"WHAT THE American maritime industry lacks," Kirkland said, "is what all other maritime countries possess—a keen and constant attention by the government to the role of shipping in relation to their own economies and their own national security."

Kirkland said the comparison of the U.S. merchant fleet with those of the Soviet Union and Japan is "shocking." Over the past decade, he noted, the Soviet merchant fleet has doubled in size and carries about half that country's commerce, while Japan's fleet has grown by 50 percent and carries more than 40 percent of its foreign commerce.

HE CITED the decline of the U.S. merchant fleet from nearly 25 million gross registered tons in 1960 to about 17 million tons today, carrying "a dismal 3.6 percent" of U.S. foreign commerce.

The potential for restoring the merchant marine as a major arm of American commerce and national security, Kirkland suggested, lies in achieving a fair share of the bulk trades, particularly the international coal trade.

He pointed out that the United States has enough coal reserves "to make us more than a match for the OPEC nations" in an energy hungry world.

The proper exploitation of those coal reserves, he said, could benefit the U.S. balance of payments and create thousands of jobs in the mines and on the railroads, in the construction of port facilities, in shipyards and on American-flag ships.

"OUR PROPOSAL for moving U.S. coal into the world market," Kirkland said, "is reasonable and measured: 40 percent aboard the vessels of our own fleet, 40 percent aboard the vessels of the importing country, and the remaining 20 percent on third-flag shipping," a formula that conforms to the recommendation of the United Nations.

Also addressing the MTD board meeting from the AFL-CIO were Research Director Rudy Oswald, Legislative Director Ray Denison, COPE Director John Perkins and Organization Director Alan Kistler.

Among other speakers were Sen. James Sasser (D-Tenn.), Rep. Joseph Moakley (D-Mass.), Rep. Leo Zeferetti (D-N.Y.) and Maj. Gen. K. R. Del Mar, president of the National Maritime Council.

ACTION TO REVISE the American merchant fleet was the focus of the Maritime Trades Dept. executive board meeting in Bal Harbour, Fla. Department president Frank Drozak announced plans for a series of seminars on port development in major port cities. Seated is MTD President Stephen J. Leslie.

Building Trades Move to Tap Pension Funds to Spur Jobs

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The Building & Construction Trades Dept. has announced a program to place some $500 million of union-negotiated pension funds in job-creating investments.

Dept. President Robert A. Georgine said the money would come from the various local, regional and national pension funds of the 15 building trades unions. There are about 10,000 building trades locals spread throughout the United States, and multi-employer pension plans in the construction industry have about $50 billion in assets, Georgine estimated.

HE SAID ABOUT $4 to $5 billion is being added to these funds each year.

The stimulation of construction activity, both residential and commercial, through the use of union pension funds is a self-help approach to an industry where the unemployment rate is 18 percent or more nationally and even higher in many areas of the country.

The new program will try to achieve its objectives, Georgine said, by making available coordinated investment opportunities. These will be presented at a series of two-day pension investment expositions to be held regionally, bringing together management and union trustees and their legal counsel. They would hear presentations from the sponsors of job-creating investment vehicles.

Large local trust funds could undertake projects by themselves, Georgine noted, while the pooling of investments would be appropriate for smaller funds. He said the program would operate within the framework of federal regulations.

IN ADDITION, the BCTD announced that it will undertake joint sponsorship with federal, state and local governments of a major cooperative pilot construction project, using capital from building trades pension funds. The development of a major coal port was cited as an example of the type of project being considered.

"Such cooperative ventures were contemplated by Congress when ERISA was enacted," Georgine said. "It is time for us to take the lead in bringing this on line."

The new investment program follows up on the BCTD's educational seminars conducted in six cities in late 1980 and early 1981. These were designed to help local unions control their pension fund assets and prepare them for investment opportunities and pitfalls.

A YEAR AFTER that initial program, Georgine said, the pension community is experiencing a "renaissance" that is changing the course of pension investments.

"In virtually every region of the nation," he said, "both public and private pension funds are insuring that investment strategies are not contrary to the overall needs and goals of organized workers."

Temporary Curb on Imports Asked To Halt Erosion of Nation's Industry

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO called upon President Reagan and Congress to impose a temporary curb on imports that are eroding the nation's industrial structure.

An Executive Council statement charged that job losses and production declines due to the current recession are being "aggravated by mismanaged trade policies and practices."

AS THE worldwide recession deepens, many nations are increasing thier barriers to imports of U.S. goods and further subsidizing their exports to the United States. The nation's trade balance grew to a record $40 billion deficit in 1981.

"The Reagan Administration is ignoring these facts," said the council. "The Administration's monetary policies have brought a high value to the dollar—up 16 percent against major currencies since 1980—encouraging imports and retarding exports.

"These monetary policies have thus dealt a double blow—a downturn at home and a disaster in trade from added imports and slackening exports," the council declared.

BASIC DOMESTIC industries, already in need of revitalization, have been severely injured by the impact of expanded imports on top of the current recession, the council observed. Steel has suffered import penetration of about 20-25 percent of the U.S. market since last August. Auto imports last year increased their share of a falling market to 31 percent in January. Apparel imports were over 33 percent of the market, and machinery and machinery parts imports caused new concern in a weakened market.

"With import pressure mounting, virtually every type of manufacturing and related services felt the brunt of lost orders both at home and abroad," the council said. "Even America's newest industries, the so-called 'high technology industries,' are beginning to be hurt by imports."

Imports of manufactured goods rose 13 percent in 1981, while exports of manufactured goods were up only 7 percent. Meanwhile, instead of continuing trade adjustment assistance for workers injured by imports, the Administration's 1933 budget proposal calls for a mere 1 percent of the 1981 outlays for trade adjustment assistance and a complete end to the program in 1984.

THE COUNCIL called for the following specific measures and remedies in the trade area:

- Temporary restrictions on "harmful" imports during the recession to prevent added penetration of U.S. markets by foreign producers.
- Enactment of domestic content laws to protect endangered U.S. industries such as auto manufacturing and supplier firms.
- Speedy action on pending dumping and subsidy cases in steel to assure the promised redress for these unfair trade practices.
- Ending the President's continued authority to negotiate further tariff reduction.
- Assurance that a portion of U.S. raw material exports be processed in this country so that export of products such as grain and logs is conditioned upon specific domestic processing.
- Establishment of bilateral shipping agreements and adherence to cargo preference laws.
- Extension of trade adjustment assistance to provide adequate compensation to those unemployed because of trade and improved training, job search and relocation aid to those displaced workers who need such help.
- Commitment that foreign grant, insurance and loan programs, such as the Export-Import Bank, are carefully managed to safeguard U.S. interests at home and abroad.
- Aid by the United States in the development of Caribbean nations, but rejection of proposals for "one-way" free trade and additional investment incentives to U.S. firms for investing abroad.
- Vigorous enforcement of reciprocity provisions of the Trade Act.

New Federalism Hit By Budget Coalition

President Reagan's "new federalism" proposal represents "a flight from responsibility" that ignores "the plight of the jobless and the needy," the Budget Coalition charged.

The coalition, speaking for more than 200 organizations that came together last year to protest inequities in the first Reagan budget, warned that the President's latest proposals will make matters worse.

Reagan's federalism, the coalition said, would "shrink the federal role of ensuring equal opportunity in education, health and safety protection, jobs, training and support for economic and community development."

Executive Council Warns

Backtracking Threatens Progress on Civil Rights

(Continued from Page 1)

The Administration's position opposing the House-passed bill extending the Voting Rights Act is "profoundly harmful to the effort to secure the needed extension of this vital legislation," the AFL-CIO charged.

Voting rights legislation is before Congress because of the scheduled August expiration of a critical provision of the measure—the requirement that jurisdictions with a history of discriminatory voting practices must "pre-clear" any changes in their voting laws or practices with the Attorney General. The House-passed bill, which was supported by the AFL-CIO as well as by other members of the civil rights community, extends this provision and makes clear that voting law changes that result in discrimination are unlawful, without the need to prove an "intent" to discriminate.

THE TAX exemption for private schools that discriminate resulted from President Reagan's recent reversal of a 12-year-old IRS ruling. After a storm of criticism hit the Administration, the President turned around and asked Congress to pass legislation denying that exemption.

In passing the Internal Revenue Code, the council said, Congress had determined that bona fide charitable and educational organizations should not be taxed. The IRS rule which denied schools that discriminate an exemption was in accord with the well settled legal understanding that institutions that violate public laws are not bona fide. This ruling had been upheld by the courts.

"We can only conclude that the Republican President's new dispensation to private schools that discriminate rests not on the allegiance to the separation of powers doctrine mouthed by the Administration but on allegiance to the doctrine of separate but equal schooling repudiated in Brown v. Board of Education, the council said. "Because the law on the statute books, correctly understood, denies the tax exemption the President would provide, there is no need for new legislation, only for proper enforcement of present law."

THE COUNCIL said it joined with groups such as the American Bar Association and the Chief Justices of the 50 States in viewing with alarm the attempts by right-wing extremists in Congress to undermine constitutional rights by curtailing the power of the federal courts to enforce civil rights.

"The Legislative Branch is empowered to change a Supreme Court decision based on the Constitution only by initiating a constitutional amendment," the council said. "The proponents of limiting federal court jurisdiction, knowing that they cannot achieve their goals by the two-thirds vote of each House needed to initiate a constitutional amendment, are attempting to shortcut the process through legislation requiring only a simple majority vote in Congress.

"Such legislation, which would profoundly alter our basic constitutional system and put at risk our most basic individual rights, should not be enacted."

The council noted also that the Administration has criticized as "wrongly decided" the Supreme Court's decision in Steelworkers v. Weber upholding the right of a union and an employer to negotiate a fair and effective affirmative action program and observed, "That criticism demonstrates a lack of understanding both of collective bargaining and of civil rights."

IN THAT case, the Steelworkers and the AFL-CIO argued that unions and employers can through collective bargaining take positive, constructive actions to accelerate the elimination of the vestiges of racial discrimination.

"The justice of that position seems to us to be beyond question," the council said. "As the court said, 'It would be ironic if a law . . . triggered by a nation's concern over centuries of racial injustice . . . constituted the first legislative prohibition of all voluntary, private, race-conscious efforts to abolish traditional patterns of racial segregation. . . .' " the three-year-long car sales slump. Fraser termed the closing of the two assembly plants was a "tragedy" that could have been averted, and said there was a danger of further shutdowns.

Job Gains, Pay Concessions Mark Ford, UAW Contract

(Continued from Page 1)

- UAW officials said that the union's American Motors Corp. Council will meet within two weeks to decide whether to open talks on the automaker's request for help.

THE PROFIT-SHARING plan at Ford would provide union members payments on a sliding scale if annual profits exceed 2.3 percent of sales of Ford's car and truck operations. Had the plan been in effect in the 1970s, payments during profitable years would have ranged from $117 to $513 for the average worker, UAW said.

Another job-security feature of the contract is Ford's promise to establish pilot lifetime employment plans in two plants to be chosen later. The experiment with "lifetime job security" would cover 80 percent of the workforce at those facilities, who would be protected against layoffs.

The guaranteed income program for employees with lengthy service would provide workers who have 15 or more years of seniority with 50 percent of their hourly wage rate until they reach age 62 or retire.

The company also pledged to reduce its workforce through attrition rather than further layoffs, approved early retirement provisions, strengthened the rights of senior workers who lose jobs to displace less experienced workers at other plants, and agreed to a reopening clause that allows for new contract negotiations in the event of an "unexpected major upturn in Ford sales" equaling the peak levels of 1978.

Gannon Elected President Of Fire Service Federation

Fire Fighters President John A. Gannon has been elected president of the Joint Council of National Fire Service Organizations.

The council, whose affiliates represent about two million members of national organizations concerned with fire problems meets regularly to discuss mutual concerns and promotes competency standards for positions in fire fighting and fire control.

2/20/82

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

Deregulation

Van de Water Called Unfit For Chairmanship of NLRB

Bal Harbour, Fla.—President Reagan's nomination of John Van de Water for chairman of the National Labor Relations Board should be rejected by the Senate because of his anti-union record, the AFL-CIO Executive Council urged.

Van de Water has been serving as NLRB chairman since August under recess appointments by the President, despite the failure of the Senate to confirm his nomination.

THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL said the Senate Labor Committee was correct in its previous refusal to approve Van de Water because he fails to meet the test of its chairman, Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), that an NLRB nominee be "perceived as objective and, most important, independent."

Despite the committee's refusal to recommend Van de Water, Hatch tried to bring the nomination directly before the full Senate, against all precedents. The threat of a filibuster by Van de Water opponents blocked action in the first session of Congress, however.

Reagan resubmitted the nomination last month and once again it was referred to the Senate Labor Committee for consideration. Since nothing has been presented to dispute the evidence against Van de Water, the council said, the committee and the Senate should reject his nomination.

The nominee's record of activities as an anti-union consultant is replete with declarations that unions are an evil which management should fight, the AFL-CIO charged.

"Such a view directly contradicts the very basis of the National Labor Relations Act, the law that Van de Water would be sworn to uphold if confirmed as NLRB chairman," the council declared.

Also, despite clear evidence of his activity as a so-called "persuader" in captive audience meetings, Van de Water failed to register as required under the Labor-Management Reporting & Disclosure Act, the council noted.

DURING Senate Labor Committee hearings, the AFL-CIO brought forth extensive evidence detailing Van de Water's anti-union activities. Most damaging was the fact that Van de Water established a California consulting firm which over the years advised scores of companies on how to resist legitimate efforts of employees to organize. In a 1973 speech, Van de Water boasted that he personally represented the employer in 130 union representation elections.

In nominating Van de Water as NLRB chairman, the council charged, President Reagan has chosen to abandon any pretense of impartiality in a government agency charged by law to help promote balanced, harmonious labor-management relations.

Tribute to FDR Stresses Defense of Achievements

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Americans can honor the memory of Franklin Delano Roosevelt by resisting attempts to turn back the clock "to the predatory era of a half century ago," the AFL-CIO Executive Council said.

The council's statement, in honor of the centennial of Roosevelt's birth, saluted FDR as "the greatest president of the 20th century" who led the nation out of the Depression that had gripped the country "while an incumbent Republican president watched hopelessly from the White House."

As president, Roosevelt "moved quickly to restore confidence in the nation," the council pointed out, stressing that he believed "the federal government had the responsibility for the welfare of all Americans, and he put his beliefs into practice."

Today, the council warned, the American people "are witnessing an attempt by another Republican president and a selfish segment of society to tear down the great structure of social benefits and legal protections which were his great legacy to the country."

The AFL-CIO called for early completion of a Franklin D. Roosevelt memorial in Washington, D.C. "to perpetuate the memory of this friend of the workers and the disadvantaged."

Reagan's 'New Federalism' Scored as Divisive Scheme

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII No. 8

Saturday, February 27, 1982

Budget Battle Taking Shape In Congress

By David L. Perlman

The battle of the budget began to take shape in Congress as Democratic members of the Joint Economic Committee outlined an anti-recession alternative to the Reagan Administration's program.

Committee Chairman Henry S. Reuss (D-Wis.) said both House and Senate Democrats on the panel are agreed on the need to bring down interest rates, channel credit into productive uses, modify the tax cuts enacted by Congress last year, and stimulate industrial growth.

THE REPORT accuses the Administration of ignoring the recession to stick with a "rigid economic ideology" and urges Congress to "stand fast" against the new round of cutbacks in social programs demanded by the President.

Committee Republicans came to the Administration's defense in a parallel report. But GOP leaders in Congress have already told the President bluntly they can't accept a budget that combines a projected deficit of more than $90 billion with program cuts that will worsen recession hardships.

Before the mid-February recess of Congress, Reagan had written GOP lawmakers that the message he has received from the American people is to "hold firm to the course we have charted." He urged them to go back to their districts and "listen to the real voices of the American people, not just the squeaky wheels."

It's the White House that needs new

(Continued on Page 8)

POLISH WORKERS welcome the AFL-CIO's staunch support for their Solidarity labor federation, Magda Wocjik told the AFL-CIO Executive Council. She is deputy director of Solidarity's Dept. of International Affairs and one of a small group of Solidarity leaders who were outside Poland when the military repression began last December. AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland listens to her report on the "state of war" in Poland.

Continued Repression Cited

Stiffer Sanctions Sought Against Polish Regime

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO called on President Reagan "to match his strong words with strong action" by stepping up U.S. sanctions against the Polish military junta and the Soviet Union until they end their suppression of trade union and human rights in Poland.

The Executive Council expressed deep disappointment at the response of the western governments, including the United States, in the two months since the Jaruzelski regime launched its "brutal" crackdown on Solidarity, the Polish free trade union movement, and imposed martial law.

THIS LACK of a firm, united response, the council said, "raises disquieting questions about the ability of the Atlantic Alliance to act in concert against Soviet violations of international law," the council observed.

It said Reagan's actions so far "signal Moscow that we are not prepared to endure inconvenience or sacrifice in freedom's defense. The President has misread the character of the American people."

The council adopted its statement on Poland after hearing a detailed review of events in that country by Magda Wocjik, deputy director of Solidarity's Dept. of International Affairs. She is one of the small group of Solidarity leaders who were outside Poland when the military repression began last Dec. 13.

WOCJIK CALLED the crackdown a technical success, resulting in the arrest overnight of thousands of Solidarity members. The fact that the union was so unprepared, she said, gives the lie to the junta's claim that Solidarity was seeking an open confrontation.

Wocjik conveyed Solidarity's thanks to the AFL-CIO and its affiliates for their support before and since the military crackdown and said the union's leaders inside Poland are well aware of that support despite the difficulty of maintaining contact with them.

She estimated that since the "state of war" began at least 15,000 Poles have been interned in at least 50 camps. Conditions in the camps vary, she said, with some set up for display to visiting Red Cross officials and church leaders, while in others the internees "are treated as convicts."

DESPITE THE Jaruzelski regime's claims that conditions in Poland are returning to normal, "it is obvious that they have found themselves in a dead end," Wocjik said, "and that the situation became incomparably worse than it was before Dec. 13," with resistance continuing to grow.

Sec. of State Alexander Haig, in a news conference following his meeting with the council the next day, explained the Administration's reasoning behind its decision to cover the $71 million owed by the Polish government to American banks. Haig said the action would give the U.S. more leverage and suggested that the proper path to pursue was to curtail future credits to Poland.

(Continued on Page 2)

Council Says Every State Would Lose

By John M. Barry

Bal Harbour, Fla.—President Reagan's "new federalism" plan to turn a host of federal programs over to the states is an "ill-conceived scheme to reduce anticipated huge federal budget deficits while neglecting the nation's most fundamental needs," the AFL-CIO charged.

The Executive Council said the President's plan is "inherently stacked against the best interests of the nation," and every state will be a "financial loser."

IT PLEDGED that organized labor will do "all within our power" to fight the proposal and "to preserve the constitutional obligation of the federal government for assuring all Americans, wherever they reside, of an opportunity for a decent level of living."

Questioned at a news conference as to labor's "blanket opposition" to the "new federalism" scheme, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland cited the reference in the Pledge of Allegiance to "one nation, indivisible."

"I want to live up to that pledge," he said, "and I want our government to live up to that pledge."

The statement on "new federalism" was one of a series of actions highlighting the second half of the Executive Council's winter meeting here.

THE COUNCIL heard a report on developments in Poland from Magda Wocjik, deputy director of international affairs for the Polish free trade union movement, Solidarity, and called on the Reagan Administration to carry out its promised sanctions against continued repression in that country. (Story, this page.)

Sec. of State Alexander Haig met the next day with the council for a discussion that covered a wide range of foreign policy issues relating to Poland, the Middle East, Central America, and the Persian Gulf.

Other visitors included Rep. Richard Bolling (D-Mo.), chairman of the House

(Continued on Page 3)

'Real Earnings' Of U.S. Families Down Over Year

The "real earnings" of full-time workers and of families with at least one paycheck continued to drop during 1981, as wage and salary increases again failed to keep up with the rise in living costs.

Among families, the decline in buying power from the last quarter of 1980 to the same period of 1981 was 2.6 percent. That came on top of a 5.1 percent decline in buying power the previous year. The Bureau of Labor Statistics measurement does not go back further than that in its present form, but pay has been slipping behind buying power since 1978.

FOR INDIVIDUALS employed full time, the decline in after-inflation earnings was less precipitous—down six-tenths of 1 percent last year after a drop of 2.7 percent the previous year.

Median earnings of full-time wage and salary workers rose 8.7 percent to $301 a week last year. But the consumer price rise for wage earners rose still more, by 9.4 percent.

The median weekly earnings for fami-

(Continued on Page 8)

Thatcherism, Reagonomics Linked by Common Failures

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The policies of President Reagan and British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher are based on a common ideology that has produced economic failure in both the United States and Britain.

That was the major conclusion of the economic committees of the federation and the British Trades Union Congress after two days of discussions here during the AFL-CIO Executive Council's winter meeting.

A JOINT statement issued by the participants noted that the labor movements of both countries have offered "clear alternatives" designed to achieve economic recovery and called on the two governments to change course.

The present governments of both the United States and Britain, the statement observed, have followed "policies of tax cuts benefiting primarily the wealthy, drastic budget cuts in protections for workers and the disadvantaged, and tight-money policies leading to high interest rates."

The result has been the highest levels of unemployment since the Depression—more than 12 million in the two countries, 9.3 million or 8.5 percent in the United States and 3 million or 12 percent in the United Kingdom. But the joint statement pointed out that these official statistics mask the true depths of the recession.

TAKING INTO account the number of discouraged workers who remain jobless but have stopped looking for work,

(Continued on Page 2)

CLOSE IDEOLOGICAL link between the policies of the Reagan Administration in the United States and the Thatcher government in Britain was noted by trade union leaders of the two countries as economic committees of the AFL-CIO and of the British Trades Union Congress met together during the Executive Council sessions.

Thatcherism, Reagonomics Linked by Common Failures

(Continued from Page 1)

plus those who are on part-time because they cannot find full-time work, the true levels of unemployment are about 13 million in the U.S. and 4 million in the UK, the committees said.

The joint statement took pointed notice that the Reagan Administration had failed to learn from the British experiment, adopting the very policies of the Thatcher government that had sent the UK's economy plummeting and had doubled unemployment since May 1979, while failing to stem inflation.

Although the drop in output has stopped in the UK, there is little prospect of any sustained recovery, the statement said. Meanwhile, in the United States employment and output are still declining "and there is great concern about the prospects for the U.S. economy now that the discredited and disastrous doctrines of Thatcherism have been translated into Reaganomics."

A SEPARATE statement issued jointly by the committees warned that the harmful impact of the tight-money policies pursued by both the Reagan and Thatcher governments is spreading to the rest of the western world, forcing other countries to raise their own interest rates and thus choking off economic growth and deepening the worldwide recession.

Both the TUC and the AFL-CIO pledged to seek changes in national policy to bring down interest rates and "assure the channeling of credit for production and necessary investment." The statement said this would help reduce inflation, expand employment and restore balanced economic growth. It called on the Trade Union Advisory Committee of the Organization for Economic Cooperation & Development to press for similar policies in OECD member countries.

The joint statement on "Thatcherism and Reaganomices" listed these key points common to the alternative programs proposed by the TUC and the AFL-CIO.

- Full employment and economic expansion must be the priority goals.
- Public expenditure programs must play a central role in reviving the two economies.
- Tax policies that reward the rich in both countries must be reversed.
- Social programs protecting the elderly, the unemployed and the disadvantaged should be sustained.
- Defense programs must not be financed by cuts in social spending.
- Monetary and credit policy should be designed to steer funds toward productive investment.
- The governments of both countries should take the lead in helping to promote worldwide recovery.

TAKING PART in the discussions that produced the joint statements were, from the AFL-CIO, President Lane Kirkland, Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue, members of the Economic Policy Committee chaired by Vice President John H. Lyons, Research Director Rudy Oswald and other staff economists.

Participants from the TUC included David Basnett, general secretary of the General & Municipal Workers and chairman of the TUC Economic Committee; David Lea, assistant general secretary of the TUC; Mostyn Evans, general secretary of the Transport & General Workers; Terence Duffy, president of the Engineering Workers; Frank Chapple, general secretary of the Electrical, Telecommunications & Plumbing Union; Geoffrey Drain, general secretary of the National & Local Government Officers Association; Clive Jenkins, general secretary of the Association of Scientific, Technical & Managerial Staff, and Bill Callaghan, head of the TUC Economic Dept. and secretary of the Economic Committee.

CONVENTIONS

The 1982 convention of the Marine Engineers will be held in New Orleans, Mar. 15-17.

The 1982 Illinois State AFL-CIO convention, which was originally scheduled for Sept. 20-23 at Rosemont, has been changed to Oct. 4-7 at Springfield.

UN Backed On Effort to Outlaw Runaway Ships

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO Executive Council called on the U.S. government to steer clear of any attempts to scuttle a United Nations effort to phase out the practice of "open registration" in international shipping.

The council noted that the governments of the United States, Greece and the United Kingdom are reportedly cooperating in a plan to block implementation of a UN policy that would lead to a ban on the practice of allowing a shipping company based in one country to register its vessels under the flag of another nation.

Searching out a "flag of convenience" permits U.S. shippers to avoid U.S. wage and hour laws and health and safety requirements, as well as taxes and equipment standards.

The UN Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) held in Geneva in June 1981 voted overwhelmingly in favor of phasing out open registries, the council pointed out. The conference stressed the "subhuman conditions" seafarers working on open registry ships often endure.

The UN has announced a meeting in mid-1982 of a group that will work out principles governing acceptance of ships on national registries, and the council urged the U.S. government to withdraw from any attempts to undermine development of that policy.

Support Pressed For Black Unions In South Africa

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The growth of strong unions of black workers in South Africa is the "best hope" for preventing bloody race war and bringing peace, justice and freedom to that racist country, the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared.

In a statement denouncing the "despicable conduct" of the South African government toward black trade unionists, the council pressed AFL-CIO affiliates to join "free labor movements everywhere" in support of peaceful democratic reforms sought by black trade unions in South Africa.

The council pointed to the death in detention of Dr. Neil Aggett, secretary of the African Food & Canning Workers Union in the Transvaal, and declared its rejection of the police accounts that his death was a suicide. Aggett was the 46th detainee to suffer a violent death in South Africa in the last 20 years.

THE AFL-CIO, the council said, joins with the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions "in condemning South Africa's continuing imprisonment, detention and harassment" of trade unionists and their supporters, actions taken by the government "to salvage the odious apartheid system" of nearly total racial discrimination and segregation.

The African American Labor Center, in coordination with the ICFTU, has established a special unit to provide training, technical assistance, equipment and supplies to help strengthen South Africa's black trade union's, and a workers' defense fund is being set up to give legal aid to black trade union leaders arrested or detained by the South African government, the council noted.

Stiff Sanctions Asked Against Polish Regime

(Continued from Page 1)

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, responding to questions at his own news conference, said the Secretary's explanation did not satisfy the council, and the Administration's position reflected "the influence of the banking community—the soft underbelly of freedom in the world."

THE COUNCIL statement said the decision to permit Poland to escape default on its loans means the American taxpayers must foot the bill to bail out the banks.

"The effect of calling in the Polish debt would be to dry up the flow of easy credit to the Soviet bloc, cripple the construction of the Siberian gas pipeline and stem the diversion of resources into Moscow's military buildup," the council said. "This is precisely the cost the West should impose on the Soviet Union; it is commensurate with the enormity of Moscow's suppression of Poland's free trade union movement."

Suggestions that calling in the Polish debt would cause grave disruptions of the international banking system are "exaggerated and self-serving," the council declared, adding:

"THEY ARE suspect coming from bankers who claim handsome rewards for risk-taking but immunity from the penalties of bad judgment."

The council also rejected the contention that a total embargo on sales of grain, technology and industrial materials to the USSR would hurt American farmers and businessmen more than the Soviets because the latter could find other suppliers.

"This argument assumes that we are powerless to influence the behavior of our allies and becomes a self-fulfilling prophecy," the council statement said. "Even if these arguments are accepted at face value, they only prove how far the West has traveled down the road to paralyzing dependence on commerce with the Soviet bloc and how urgent it is that we reverse course."

Kirkland, in his remarks to reporters, stressed that the situation in Poland has not improved—"it has gotten worse." He pointed out that Solidarity leader Lech Walesa remains under arrest and in isolation, thousands of unionists are held in concentration camps and the arrests continue.

"WE BELIEVE the time has come and is, if anything, overdue for added sanctions," Kirkland said.

Meanwhile, he said, humanitarian aid to the Polish people in the form of food and medical supplies should be sent through channels "we can trust," such as the Catholic relief agency, and not through the Polish government.

Msgr. Higgins to Receive AFL-CIO's Highest Award

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Msgr. George Higgins was chosen by the Executive Council to receive the AFL-CIO's 1981 Murray-Green-Meany Award, the labor movements highest honor for humanitarian service.

The $5,000 award will be presented to Father Higgins May 5 in Chicago at a banquet to be held in conjunction with the national Community Services conference.

FATHER HIGGINS, who has been involved in numerous labor struggles over the past four decades, retired in 1980 as secretary for special concerns of the U.S. Catholic Conference. He is currently with Catholic University in Washington.

He played a major role in the Farm Workers' organizing and bargaining breakthroughs during the 1960s and '70s. More recently, he was trustee of the federation's PATCO Family Fund for the striking Air Traffic Controllers who were discharged by President Reagan.

A fraternal delegate to Solidarnosc's first congress in Gdansk last September, Father Higgins delivered AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland's address to the convention. Kirkland had been invited by Solidarnosc Chairman Lech Walesa to make the address, but was denied a visa by the Polish government.

A NATIVE of Chicago, Father Higgins was ordained a priest in 1940 and joined the staff of the National Catholic Welfare Conference in 1944. He writes a weekly syndicated column, titled the Yardstick, that deals with labor and social issues.

The Murray-Green-Meany Award is presented annually as a memorial to William Green, Philip Murray and George Meaany, late leaders of the AFL, the CIO and the merged federation. Last year's winner was entertainer Danny Thomas. Other recipients have included President Harry S. Truman, Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir, Gen. Omar Bradley and A. Philip Randolph.

Council Hits 'New Federalism' Scheme

Warns States Would Lose Under Reagan's Proposal

(Continued from Page 1)

Rules Committee, who covered congressional strategies to deal with Reagan's proposals for more massive cuts in social programs, and John E. Jacob, the new president of the National Urban League, who warned of the especially severe impact those budget cuts are having on blacks and other minorities.

ACCEPTING the recommendation of its Community Services Committee presented by Vice President Joyce Miller, the council voted to present this year's Murray-Green-Meany Award to Msgr. George G. Higgins, who has worked closely with organized labor in many areas.

The council's statement on "new federalism" noted that Reagan's scheme would shift responsibility to the states for 43 programs in education, community development, transportation, health and social services, thus saddling state and local governments with huge costs previously borne by the federal government.

Under the President's proposal, the programs would be partially financed until 1987 from a trust fund drawing revenues from a number of federal excise taxes. But after that, the fund would be phased out at the rate of 25 percent a year. By 1991, all further financing would have to come from state funds.

EFFECTIVE NEXT Oct. 1, however, the states would be free to cut back any of the transferred programs—or to wipe them out altogether.

"Since the states have traditionally relied on regressive taxes for their revenues. the greatest burden would fall on low- and middle-income taxpayers," the council statement observed.

While thus crippling facilities and services on which all citizens depend, the "new federalism" would "jeopardize the health and welfare of millions of the poor and disadvantaged," the council said.

It noted that the Reagan plan also calls for a complicated swap that would assign to the states two major welfare programs —Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) and food stamps—while the federal government would take over total control of Medicaid, the program of medical assistance for the poor.

Among the consequences of the scheme listed by the council:

- Elimination of such federal protections as prevailing wage, job safety and minimum wage laws for workers involved in the defederalized programs since these federal laws do not apply to the states as employers.
- Sharply higher cost burdens for every state if the defederalized programs are maintained at current levels, contrary to the Administration's claim that the swap would be even.
- Elimination of the oil industry windfall profits tax as a source of revenue for non-oil producing states once the trust fund payments end.
- A bleak and uncertain future for needy families, with the Administration seeking to slash Medicaid before it takes over the program, and with prospects that the states will slash AFDC and food stamp programs rather than meet the higher costs.

THE COUNCIL statement was accompanied by an analysis of the effects of the program shift on each state prepared by the State, County & Municipal Employees.

The council pointed out that the Administration is using an inconsistent approach to cost estimates in its attempt to sell the "new federalism" program to the public. For example, it has minimized projected costs to the states by failing to apply an inflation factor and by assuming that its proposed cuts in all of the 43 programs will be enacted along with its proposed cuts in AFDC and food stamps.

On the other hand, to maximize the estimated costs to the federal government in the comparison, the proposal omits the cuts the Administration is seeking in Medicaid.

USING CONSISTENT estimates, the council said, the total loss to the states from the "new federalism" would be $17 to $20 billion or more in fiscal 1984 and at least $86 billion in fiscal 1991 when the trust fund runs out.

"With such added costs, the states would be under tremendous pressure to slash funds for the programs they would be expected to take over," the council said. "Some would undoubtedly be cut out altogether."

Meanwhile, the statement charged, "the real and most pressing problems the nation faces—massive unemployment, a huge tax giveaway to the rich, runaway interest rates and a depressed, stagnant, and inflation-prone economy"—remain neglected by the Reagan Administration.

The council statement stressed that existing federal responsibility for "all these programs reflects a national consensus" that all Americans have a right to certain minimum services and benefits, no matter where they live. Congress asserted national responsibility for these programs because the states were unwilling to meet their obligations, the council pointed out.

"BUT IF the federal government shucks off these fundamental responsibilities to the states," the statement continued, "there is no more guarantee today than in the past that they can or will properly discharge them. Education, transportation and community development will surely suffer. The existing disparity in the treatment of the poor and disadvantaged will worsen."

SEC. OF STATE Alexander M. Haig meets with the Executive Council to discuss the Administration's actions in the Polish crisis and other world issues.

The council rejected Reagan's "cynical advice" that people could adjust to his program by "voting with their feet" and moving to another state. This would further aggravate the existing disparities and create further burdens for states that have been more generous in programs for the needy, the statement pointed out.

"The AFL-CIO strongly opposes the 'new federalism' and we will not let it divert us from the more serious and immediate problems of Reaganomics," the council declared.

OTHER STATEMENTS on domestic policy, detailed elsewhere in this issue, stressed the need for expanded programs to train the jobless and the disadvantaged, called for reversal of cutbacks in unemployment insurance and the employment service at a time of rising joblessness, endorsed the concept of exclusive state funds to counter the escalating costs of workers' compensation coverage, pledged a vigorous effort to combat rising health care costs while opposing the Administration's "competition" proposal to limit employer-financed coverage, reaffirmed labor's opposition to further cutbacks in social security retirement and Medicare benefits to solve short-term financing problems, called on the government to back away from efforts to scuttle a United Nations effort to outlaw runaway shipping, and pledged a renewed effort to win ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment before the June 30 deadline.

On foreign policy issues, council statements urged that the international economic summit conferences scheduled in May and June give top priority to the worldwide unemployment crisis, opposed the sale of U.S. fighter planes and missiles to Jordan, and condemned South Africa's continuing oppression of trade unionists.

ON TRADE UNION matters, the council endorsed a nationwide boycott of Kosmos Cement products instituted by the Cement, Lime & Gypsum Workers, approved Kirkland's appointment of an Appeals Committee and a permanent mediator to deal with internal disputes, and voted a change in the bylaws governing state and local COPE operations to permit a new category of "limited" endorsement of political candidates.

Adopting the report of an ad hoc committee on two resolutions referred by the convention, the council called on the United Way of America to establish a national labor policy for the guidance of its local organizations and member agencies. It also acted on 10 other referred resolutions.

Reports were given by Vice President Glenn Watts on the impact of the AT&T divestiture, Vice President Douglas Fraser on the Auto Workers recently concluded Ford negotiations, Vice President William W. Winpisinger on the operations of the Citizens/Labor Energy Coalition which he heads, Vice President Lloyd McBride and Organization Director Alan Kistler on the Houston Organizing Project, and Education Director Dorothy Shields on a new school program on labor history developed in cooperation with the American Federation of Teachers.

SEC.-TREAS. Thomas R. Donahue presented a detailed report of the federation's finances and progress reports on the George Meany Memorial and Archives and the Pooled Investment Trust.

Contributions were voted to the Committee for National Health Insurance, No Greater Love, the New Leader, the Full Employment Action Council, International Rescue Committee, Samuel Gompers Papers, Southern Regional Conference, National Urban Coalition, National Housing Conference, National Low-Income Housing Coalition, Fund for an Open Society, National Urban League, Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, National Council of Negro Women, Joint Council on Economic Education, Public Forum Productions Ltd., Religion & Labor Council, National Consumers League, Consumer Federation of America, Consumers' Union Foundation, and the Conference on Economic Progress.

The next council meeting will be held May 26-27, 1982, in Washington.

Firm Fight Pledged to Preserve Social Security

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO will defend the social security system against further "unwarranted cuts" sought by the Reagan Administration under the guise of a "rescue operation."

At its winter meeting here, the federation's Executive Council pledged to fight any more slashes in the program and the "fundamental protections it provides for American workers, active and retired." The council promised to play a "constructive role" in helping put the system on a sound financial basis.

THE AFL-CIO'S resistance to cuts in the retirement programs will be matched by opposition to slashes in Medicare and disability benefits, also sought by the Administration, the council said.

While the system has some short-term financing needs, the problems are "manageable," the council's statement said and they should not "be used as an excuse to break faith with those depending on social security now or in the future."

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, at a press conference between council sessions, said the long-range projections for the social security fund are excellent once the short-term financing gap is bridged.

KIRKLAND scored as "inflammatory" and wrong suggestions by Reagan Administration officials that social security is facing "bankruptcy and collapse."

The council reaffirmed the AFL-CIO's long-standing position that removal of social security from the unified federal budget and partial financing from general revenues would strengthen the financial status of the system.

The statement pointed out that the Administration has already succeeded in cutting the social security program, largely through the budget reconciliation process. Among those cuts were phasing out of benefits for dependent children in college, elimination of the minimum benefit for new applicants, discontinuing some death and survivors' benefits and the imposition of social security taxes on sick pay.

AN UPROAR of public opposition forced the President to pull back proposals for even deeper cuts and to call for appointment of a 15-monute National Commission on Social Security Reform. That commission was subsequently named, and Kirkland is among its members. But the council warned out that the membership of the commission is heavily weighted with Administration supporters.

Shortly after the appointment of the commission, the council noted, Social Security Commissioner John A. Svahn said the Administration would reject proposals for adequate financing even if the commission were to recommend them.

It noted that in its fiscal 1983 budget proposals, the Reagan Administration has called for massive cuts in Medicare that would shift a greater cost burden to the elderly and disabled. It has also stepped up as efforts to eliminate as many as 20 percent of all disability beneficiaries from the rolls through tougher eligibility and case review procedures.

The council pointed out that Administration efforts to gut these programs have persisted in spite of overwhelming public opposition. Numerous polls have shown that the public would be willing to pay more to support the system rather than see benefits cut. The most recent example of public feeling on the issue, the council said, was the "emphatic rejection" of Administration proposals for cuts by delegates to the recent White House Conference on Aging.

Time for Action on Poland

IT HAS BEEN MORE than two months since the Jaruzelski junta, prompted by the Soviet Union, launched its brutal repression of Solidarnosc and human rights in Poland.

The response of western governments, including our own, has been deeply disappointing and raises disquieting questions about the ability of the Atlantic Alliance to act in concert against Soviet violations of international law.

The AFL-CIO welcomed the sanctions against Poland and the Soviet Union announced by the President, although they fell short of the steps we urged. But President Reagan publicly stated that stronger measures would be forthcoming if the situation in Poland did not improve.

The situation has not improved. Lech Walesa remains under arrest, thousands of Solidarnosc members are held in concentration camps, workers have been killed, beaten and sentenced to harsh prison terms, and the junta gives no evidence of ending martial law. Only this week, police arrested 194 demonstrators in Poznan. And only yesterday morning, news reports indicated 4,000 more Poles had been arrested.

THE PRESIDENT has not kept his promise. He has backed away from the two strongest actions that remain open to him—imposing a trade embargo on the Soviet Union and declaring the Polish debt in default.

The effect of calling in the Polish debt would be to dry up the flow of easy credit to the Soviet bloc, cripple the construction of the Siberian gas pipeline and stem the diversion of resources into Moscow's military buildup. This is precisely the cost the West should impose on the Soviet Union; it is commensurate with the enormity of Moscow's suppression of Poland's free trade union movement.

We are told that calling in the Polish debt would disrupt the international banking system, so large is its investment in the Soviet bloc. The estimates of the dislocation are exaggerated and self-serving; they are suspect coming from bankers who claim handsome rewards for risk-taking but immunity from the penalties of bad judgment.

WE ARE ALSO told that an embargo on the sale of grain, technology, and factories to the Soviets would hurt American farmers and businessmen more than the Soviets, who could find other suppliers. This argument assumes that we are powerless to influence the behavior of our allies, and becomes a self-fulfilling prophecy. Even if these arguments are accepted at face value, they only prove how far the West has traveled down the road to paralyzing dependence on commerce with the Soviet bloc and how urgent it is that we reverse course.

The President's response to the suppression of freedom in Poland has been tough talk. But his actions, so far, signal Moscow that we are not prepared to endure inconvenience or sacrifice in freedom's defense. The President has misread the character of the American people. It is time for the President to match his strong words with strong action. The AFL-CIO shall continue to do everything in its power to help restore Solidarnosc to its place in Polish life.

—From AFL-CIO Executive Council statement, Feb. 18, 1982, Bal Harbour, Fla.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
LANE KIRKLAND, President
THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward	Murray H. Finley
Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts	Sol C. Chaikin
Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco	Charles H. Pillard
J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride	David J. Fitzmaurice
Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps	Wm. W. Winpisinger
William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell	John DeConcini
Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss	William Konyha
Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney	Douglas A. Fraser
Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield	Barbara Hutchinson
Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto	Gerald W. McEntee

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman, James M. Shevis

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, February 27, 1982 No. 8

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

INTERNATIONAL LABOR PRESS AFL-CIO/CLC ASSOCIATION

Findings of a Reliable 'Source'

Progress of Black Americans Reversed Under GOP Policies

By Gus Tyler

IN "SOURCE," the official publication of the Republican National Committee, there appears an intriguing short piece under the title: "The Reagan Economic Program: An Agenda for All Americans." The brief item makes it clear that "all Americans" very specifically includes "black Americans."

Here is a word-for-word repetition of this most unusual story:

"BLACK UNEMPLOYMENT declined from 10.7 percent to 6.4 percent during the '60s, but increased from 6.4 percent to 11.3 percent during the '70s.

"Black unemployment declined faster than white unemployment during the '60s, but rose faster during the '70s.

"Between 1959-69, a decade of growth and private prosperity, median black family income, in constant dollars, rose 6.4 percent—from $7,200 to more than $11,800.

"Yet, between 1969-1979, the decade of public sector prosperity, real black median income declined by 3 percent."

THAT'S THE full account. It makes two points: first, that blacks did much better in the 1960s than in the 1970s; second, that jobs and income fell in the 1970s because of "public sector prosperity," whatever that means.

Now let's tap our memory banks. Who were the Presidents of the United States in the 1960s, when things were going better—jobs and income—for the blacks? For eight of the ten years, the Presidents were Democrats John F. Kennedy and Lyndon Baynes Johnson.

In the 1970s, Republican Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford were in the White House for seven of the 10 years. That decade of the '70s included the deep recession year of 1974-75.

IF ANY conclusion is to be drawn from the the GOP figures, Democrats do better than Republicans for black America.

Putting parties aside, the '60s, were characterized by expansionist policies, a desire to grow. The '70s were marked by restrictionist policies, a decision to create unemployment on the theory that, if people were out of work and could not buy, prices would not climb so rapidly.

As to that statement about "public sector prosperity," the implication that government was spending too much in the '70s seems strange since those years were dominated by Republican Presidents who were busy impounding funds and pinching pennies.

ACTUALLY, the government was tightening up on spending in that decade. Federal employment was 4.19 percent of all wage and salaried people in 1960, but at the end of the '70s was down to 3.16 percent. Government spending (purchases) fell from 10.60 percent of the gross national product in 1960 to 8.77 percent by the end of the 1970s.

This should not come as a surprise, of course, since all three Presidents in the '70s—Nixon, Ford and Carter—believed that "cooling the economy," including the public sector, was the way to check inflation. As we know, these painful policies did not hold the price line, but they did do much damage to America, including its minorities, as "Source," the voice of the GOP, so succinctly proves.

Copyright 1982, Gus Tyler Columns

New Cuts Jeopardize Social Security Lifeline

The economic security of most Americans depends on social security. They rely on it to safeguard themselves and their families against economic catastrophe when earnings stop because of old age, disability or death.

That economic security is now in jeopardy because the Reagan Administration has proposed further cutbacks in addition to those enacted at its insistence last year.

The AFL-CIO supports all efforts to deal with social security problems truly aimed at improving the financial stability of the system and safeguarding its basic protections. We oppose all efforts to make unwarranted cuts based on exaggerated funding problems.

We will fight any further cuts in Medicare. We will do everything possible to thwart the denial of benefits to the disabled.

—From AFL-CIO Executive Council statement, Feb. 19, 1982, Bal Harbour, Fla.

COPE Panel Clarifies Role In Coalitions

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The COPE Administrative Committee issued a clarification of the policy encouraging state and local AFL-CIO councils to work in community coalitions with other groups that share labor's objectives.

The committee, which includes the members of the AFL-CIO Executive Council and is chaired by President Lane Kirkland, made it clear that in the endorsement of political candidates no state or local AFL-CIO council may "in any way compromise its options, its freedom of action or its sole responsibility to make its own endorsement decision and act on behalf of candidates according to the Rules Governing Committees on Political Education of State & Local Central Bodies," as adopted by the council, Feb. 26, 1973.

THESE BYLAWS do not rule out consultation with other like-minded groups over candidate support, the committee statement noted, but they do require "that endorsement action and subsequent follow-up by any AFL-CIO body is to be made by the state or local AFL-CIO council on its own, not jointly with one or more non-AFL-CIO groups."

Within these strictures, the statement said, "AFL-CIO state and local councils may work with—but not under the direction or control of—other organizations which share our political goals."

The policy clarification was adopted at a meeting of the COPE Administrative Committee between sessions of the Executive Council's winter meeting here. About 150 officers and staff members of AFL-CIO unions took part in the discussions.

IN OTHER ACTION subsequently approved by the AFL-CIO Executive Council, the committee established a new category of "limited endorsements" by state and local AFL-CIO councils to take account of situations where the preferred candidate's commitment to labor's legislative goals is questionable and his or her record is "at best marginal" on key AFL-CIO issues.

The "limited endorsement" would allow a state or local council to express a preference "in a manner that indicates the endorsement carries with it a limit to the council's effort and funding for the candidates so endorsed."

LOCAL ENDORSEMENT guidelines were on the agenda of the COPE Administrative Committee, in a session held during the Executive Council meeting. Some 150 union officers and staff members took part in the discussions.

Goals, Structure Outlined For Public Affairs Institute

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO's new Institute of Public Affairs was set in motion by the Executive Council as it outlined the structure of the institute and defined its mission.

Creation of the institute was authorized by the council last fall, and financing was approved by the convention in adopting the increase in per capita payments by affiliates to the AFL-CIO.

THE COUNCIL approved a report of its Committee on Public Relations setting forth the goal of the institute "to improve the ability of the AFL-CIO and its affiliates to take full advantage of the rapidly expanding technology of modern electronic means of communication."

This will involve a program of direct communication with the union constituency and the general public "to increase and improve their appreciation of labor's point of view on the crucial economic, political and social issues of the day." A key objective is to counter the domination of the media by conservative, anti-union and big business interests with superior financial resources.

The institute will operate from AFL-CIO headquarters as a non-profit corporation governed by a board of 15 directors, 10 of whom will come from the AFL-CIO Executive Council with the federation president serving as chairman. Five public board members will be drawn from mass communications, public opinion research and allied fields.

TO PROVIDE coordination and continuity with the federation's overall communications program, the director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Information will serve as president of the institute and will be assisted by an advisory committee made up of the public relations directors of affiliated unions.

A small professional staff will be headed by an executive director with the experience and ability to deal with all aspects of modern communications technology, program production, marketing and public opinion research. The staff would be organized as a "mutually supporting triad" to provide specialization in these fields and assure that the institute's products will be effective and efficient.

"THE POLICY will be to achieve the greatest communication impact possible for the money spent," the report said.

Among the specific objectives outlined in the report are:

- A labor-oriented television program at a regular time and available to the maximum audience.
- Development of a new system for measuring public opinion, especially within labor's constituency, and its application to a broad spectrum of issues.
- The compilation of market information to provide a base for developing the most cost-effective ways of reaching the widest possible audience.
- The use of sub-contractors for all program preparation under the supervision of the executive director.
- The taping and distribution of activities at AFL-CIO headquarters and the George Meany Center for Labor Studies and the training of union officers and staff members to make the best use of the media.
- Organization of a library of materials produced for the institute and by affiliates, along with collections of video and audio tape, film and relevant printed materials.
- The availability of the services, expertise and counseling of the institute and its staff to all affiliates.

Boycott Called Against Struck Kosmos Cement

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The Kosmos Ce-Co. is the target of a new AFL-CIO national boycott sanctioned by the federation's Executive Council at the request of the Cement, Lime & Gypsum Workers.

Twenty-five years of "stable and fruitful" labor relations were disrupted in 1980 when the Kosmosdale, Ky., firm was sold to Moore McCormack Resources, Inc., and the conglomerate refused to honor the existing contract with CLGW, the council said.

DESPITE 18 bargaining sessions after Moore McCormack took over, the union was not able to reach a new agreement with the company by March 1981. The company then unilaterally put its "last offer" into effect, cutting wages, holidays, vacations and numerous work rules, the council reported. The Kosmos employees were cut off from the benefits of CLGW's master agreement.

The workers struck May 8, 1981, and day and night picket lines have been maintained since then. The CLGW launched boycott activities against four Kosmos products in July 1981: Kosmos Portland Cement, Kosmos High Early Cement, Kosmos Air Entraining Cement and Kosmortar Masonry Cement.

Moore McCormack is a conglomerate involved in the cargo shipping, coal, coke, oil and natural gas, iron ore and cement industries.

IN OTHER ACTION, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue presented to the council the annual audit of boycott activity prepared by the Union Label & Service Trades Dept.

Products shifted to the federation's "unfair list" include: Miss Goldy's Chickens, requested by the International Chemical Workers; Charketts, Grill Time and Star Grill charcoal briquettes and Sparky Lighter Fluid and Hickory Chips, requested by the Woodworkers; and Perdue Farms poultry products, requested by the Food & Commercial Workers.

The council urged continued boycott action nationwide against Coors Beer, Fabrege cosmetics, Marine Optical products, New Galax mirrors, Procter & Gamble soap products, Red Coach lettuce, R. J. Reynolds tobacco products, and Seattle-First National Bank.

State Fund Systems Backed For Workers' Compensation

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The best and cheapest way for states to handle the rising cost of workers' compensation is through exclusive state funds, not by punishing workers with benefit cuts, the AFL-CIO said.

American workers deserve "adequate and equitable" workers' compensation protection, the federation's Executive Council declared at its winter meeting here. But just when state systems need improvement, efforts are underway to gut existing state laws, the council pointed out.

THE DAMAGING "wage-loss" compensation system recently enacted in Florida is a particular concern and is being viewed as a model for other states, the council noted. Under the wage-loss concept, eligibility for permanent partial disability benefits is limited to those workers whose disability results in lost wages.

Most injuries that result in some form of permanent impairment would go uncompensated unless lost wages are involved.

The wage-loss system "fails to consider the total impact of permanent partial disability on the lives of workers and their families," he council said. It pointed out that even if there is no immediate wage loss, "these impaired workers often lose the ability to engage in their normal everyday, non-work activities and more often experience a reduction in their ability to earn wages in the future."

Employers favor the wage-loss system because they are facing escalating costs in workers' compensation premiums, the council observed.

But to lower premium costs this way, the council said, "million of workers with permanent impairments would be deprived of workers' compensation benefits to which they are entitled. The wage-loss system would force these workers to bear the cost of their injuries."

The best alternative is an exclusive state fund, the AFL-CIO said, pointing out that in the six states that have such funds, costs to employers are much lower than in states where private insurance companies handle coverage.

Exclusive funds are in place in Ohio, Washington, Nevada, North Dakota, West Virginia and Wyoming.

OHIO LABOR led a vigorous, successful fight in last November's elections to defeat a proposal that would have allowed private insurance companies to replace the state fund, the largest of its kind.

Another advantage of exclusive state funds, the council noted, is that investment income is retained to pay benefits and reduce employer costs. Overhead expenses and profit margins are unnecessary.

A sound workers' compensation system is "vital to the economic welfare of every worker," the council said, declaring that the "wage-loss" approach "violates the principles of adequacy and fairness" that are essential to such a system.

Dick Wilson Appointed Deputy COPE Director

Bal Harbour, Fla.—AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland has appointed Dick Wilson deputy director of COPE, serving under John Perkins, who held the post until his recent appointment as COPE director.

Wilson, 46, has been a staff assistant in the AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization & Field Services since December 1978. A native of Buffalo, he previously served on the staffs of several national unions, including the Auto Workers and the State, County & Municipal Employees.

Kirkland also announced two other staff assignments in COPE. Rufus R. (Butch) Foutz, secretary-treasurer of the Virginia State AFL-CIO was named COPE data processing coordinator and Frances Kenin of the COPE research staff will be on leave four days a week to handle labor liaison with the Democratic National Committee.

Foutz, 38, has been secretary-treasurer of the Virginia AFL-CIO since 1976 and helped bring the state federation into the COPE computer program. He was previously an organizer for the Food & Commercial Workers, AFSCME and the Laborers.

Kenin, 37, has worked in COPE research since 1977 and earlier was a COPE intern. She is a native of Vermont and a graduate of Trinity College.

OSHA Draws Sharp Protest On Shutdowns

Members of Congress have sharply criticized the Reagan Administration's plans to shut down 41 federal job safety offices and field stations, as well as its continuing attempts to break up the headquarters operations of the National Institute of Occupational Safety & Health.

At a Capitol Hill press conference, they joined the AFL-CIO in concern that the Administration's actions will have severe impact on worker safeguards—which had already been cut back last year by slashes in the Occupational Safety & Health Administration budget.

PARTICIPATING in the protest were Maryland Democrats Sen. Paul S. Sarbanes and Representatives Michael D. Barnes and Steny Hoyer and District of Columbia Delegate Walter Fauntroy.

AFL-CIO Occupational Safety Director George H. R. Taylor noted that a third of OSHA's enforcement offices will be affected by the proposed shutdowns throughout the country.

He said the closings mean that 372 enforcement positions will be eliminated, leaving fewer than 1,200 inspectors responsible for the health and safety of more than 50 million workers.

TAYLOR ALSO pointed out that despite a congressional prohibition, the Dept. of Health & Human Services has not backed off from its attempts to dismantle NIOSH.

Sarbanes, noting that he and Sen. Thomas Eagleton led an effort to block the use of federal funds to finance the NIOSH breakup, said he was "shocked that the Administration has now taken steps to transfer both individuals and functions from the NIOSH headquarters in the Washington area to Atlanta and Cincinnati."

Sarbanes said he expected the Senate Appropriations Committee to question Administration officials on the banned NIOSH shift next month.

While the Capitol Hill protest focused primarily on the impact in the Mid-Atlantic states, Taylor said unions are organizing similar protests in 15 other states affected by the OSHA closings.

NEW PROGRAMS for the AFL-CIO Food & Beverage Trades Dept., including a series of organizing conferences, are reviewed by FBTD President Robert F. Harbrant, seated left, and Sec.-Treas. Rhonda Allgaier with department Vice Presidents J. C. Turner, standing left, and John DeConcini.

Budget Proposals Threaten National Health Care Crisis

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Additional cutbacks in President Reagan's budget for fiscal year 1983 would turn America's mounting health care problems into a national crisis, the AFL-CIO warned.

Citing the sharp reductions in federal programs last year that stripped at least a million poor persons of Medicaid benefits and increased charges to the elderly for Medicare, the Executive Council noted that most of the proposed new budget cuts would come in health care and public welfare programs.

"IN THE FACE of large-scale deprivation of needed health care and rapidly escalating medical costs, the Administration has done nothing to control medical cost inflation or assure access to care," the council charged.

Adding to the problems, it noted, are the millions of workers and families who lose health care coverage as they lose their jobs.

The statement stressed that health care workers are not the cause of the escalating health care costs. Since 1972 real wages have fallen 5 percent for hospital workers and more than 12 percent for nursing home employees.

"Even before the Reagan Administration took office, some 40 million Americans lacked public or private health care coverage," the statement pointed out. "In the last year, the number of persons without protection for care financing has risen significantly."

THE COUNCIL said the Administration has gutted programs that provided a wide range of health care services that the jobless, the needy and the working poor depended on.

"To the disastrous health care crisis the nation faces, the Reagan Administration offers only one response—its so-called 'competition' proposal," the council charged.

This plan, through the use of tax gimmicks, would put a ceiling on employer payments for health insurance and thus build pressure to reduce health care coverage achieved through collective bargaining. Tax rebates would be offered to entice employees to choose the lowest cost plans with the worst health care cost protection.

WHILE SEVERELY restricting health care protection, the "competition" proposal would do nothing to expand affordable coverage to unprotected Americans or put controls on doctors' fees and hospital charges, the council pointed out.

It said the federation will continue to oppose the Administration's "competition" measure in Congress, declaring that "the only way to assure all Americans access to quality health care they can afford is through enactment of universal comprehensive national health insurance."

Until that goal is achieved, the council said, genuine health care cost controls would be beneficial through negotiated budgets with full worker and patient protections for hospitals and negotiated fair fee schedules for physicians.

"WE WILL fight any further cutbacks in Medicare, Medicaid and other programs which provide health care for the poor, the elderly, the disabled and other disadvantaged Americans," the council pledged. "We will strive for legislation maintaining health care protections for workers who lose their jobs."

The council also said it supports legislation that would permit states to restore coverage for the working poor who are deprived of Medicaid benefits when they are no longer eligible for welfare.

CORRECTION

A photo caption on Page 7 of the Feb. 20, 1982, issue of the AFL-CIO News incorrectly identified Maritime Trades Dept. Vice President Stephen J. Leslie as president of the department. The MTD president is Frank Drozak, who also appeared in the photo.

A caption on Page 6 of the same issue misspelled the name of George J. Francisco, president of the Firemen & Oilers.

Job Training Pressed To Aid Recovery

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Federal programs to train the jobless and disadvantaged should be expanded during this period of "rising unemployment, deepening recession and rapid technological change," the AFL-CIO Executive Council urged.

The council protested the Reagan Administration's dismantling of employment and training programs, abandonment of the federal government's mandate to promote full employment, and cutbacks in job placement services.

"THE AMERICAN workforce has been dealt a brutal one-two punch," the Executive Council charged. Its "trickle-down economic policy has sent unemployment toward record levels at the same time the Administration is reducing the programs which can help the jobless find work."

Congress will be considering legislation to replace the Comprehensive Employment & Training Act (CETA), which expires this September, and the council urged that any new national program should build on CETA's accomplishments.

IT SAID the costs of CETA training programs have been "repaid to the nation in the new skills, higher wages and consequent taxes paid."

The council stressed the importance of "stable, long-term financing by the federal government" for programs "aimed at providing the unemployed with marketable skills." It urged an equal partnership of labor, government and business in shaping effective programs.

"If necessary, the government must be the employer of last resort," it stressed.

The council statement cited the successful programs sponsored by various unions, by the AFL-CIO's Human Resources Development Institute and by civil rights organizations.

"THE EXPERIENCE of the various outreach programs should be translated into a greater effort to bring the most disadvantaged groups into the active workforce," it said.

Other recommendations included:

- Continuation of programs to provide basic literacy training to adults, and provisions for payments to participants.
- Federal standards for private-sector training programs to avoid exploitation of trainees and undercutting of wage, health and safety hazards.
- Rejection of "workforce" programs that require welfare recipients to work off their payments at minimum-wage jobs.
- Elimination of subsidies to employers through tax rebates or direct wage payments.

Council Pledges New Efforts for ERA Ratification

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO, its state federations and trade unionists will intensify efforts to win ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment in the crucial four months before the deadline for passage expires, the federation's Executive Council pledged.

The council urged stepped-up efforts for ratification in the states eligible to act on the proposed amendment. Three more states must vote in favor of ERA before the June 30, 1982, deadline.

At the council's winter meeting here, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland named a special subcommittee to work with labor federations in states where ratification is still possible. The members are AFL-CIO Vice Presidents John J. Sweeney, Gerald W. McEntee, Joyce D. Miller, Glenn E. Watts and Barbara Hutchinson.

The states whose legislatures will be pressed to approve the amendment include Alabama, Arizona, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Mississippi, Missouri, Nevada, Oklahoma, South Carolina and Virginia.

March Calendar Posted By Labor Studies Center

The George Meany Center for Labor Studies will offer four training institutes in March at its Silver Spring, Md. campus. The subjects are arbitration, labor law, issues for union women and media relations.

Six unions and the American Institute for Free Labor Development will use the campus for their own training programs during the month. The center will also sponsor two programs off campus. The schedule:

Arbitration: Preparation and Presentation, Feb. 28-Mar. 5—An opportunity to prepare a case for hearing and present it before a professional arbitrator. Selection of arbitrators and the law of arbitration are covered.

Labor Law, Mar. 7-12—A short course for non-lawyers covering statutes on internal union affairs, organizing, collective bargaining, duty of fair representation, equal opportunity, ERISA and OSHA.

Issues for Union Women, Mar. 14-19—A seminar for union leaders of both sexes who need to deal effectively with the concerns of women members.

Better Media Relations, Mar. 28-Apr. 2—A workshop for national and international union officers to help them deal more effectively with local television, press and radio. This program is co-sponsored by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Information.

Unions using the campus for their own leadership training during March are the Communication Workers, Feb. 28-Mar. 12 and Mar. 7-12; Flight Attendants, Mar. 1-5; Fire Fighters, Mar. 7-12; Railway & Airline Clerks, Mar. 14-19; Carpenters, Mar. 21- 26, and Service Employees, Mar. 28-Apr. 2.

AIFLD will bring to the campus on Mar. 15 its 101st class of Spanish-speaking trade unionists from Latin America. They will study here until Apr. 23.

Off campus, the center will sponsor an institute for building trades business agents, Feb. 28-Mar. 5, at the University of Oregon, Eugene; and a pension investment seminar, Mar. 10-12, in Los Angeles.

Information on these and other labor studies may be obtained from Fred K. Hoehler, Jr., executive director, George Meany Center, 10000 New Hampshire Avenue, Silver Spring, Md. 20903. Telephone 301/431-6400.

Worldwide Crisis

OECD Sessions Asked To Focus on Job Needs

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Resolving the worldwide unemployment crisis should be a primary concern of the Organization for Economic Cooperation & Development at upcoming summit conferences, the Executive Council urged.

The council called on the OECD Ministerial Council to work closely with the organization's Trade Union Advisory Committee in developing policies on full employment and job creation.

"UNEMPLOYMENT is a crisis not only in the United States, but throughout the world," the council statement observed. "National efforts to cope with this crisis must be paralleled by increased international cooperation."

Unemployment in the 24 OECD industrialized countries has increased to almost 30 million the council stressed.

At the first of two international conferences dealing with critical economic problems, the Ministerial Council will meet May 10 in Paris to adopt a policy paper that will be presented to the OECD summit conference in Paris June 4-6. Seven leading industrial countries—Britain, Canada, France, West Germany, Italy, Japan and the United States—will be represented at the June conference.

In a policy memorandum that the Trade Union Advisory Committee will present to the conference, the council said the AFL-CIO will emphasize the need for the OECD ministers to give priority to full employment policies.

"THE FIGHT against unemployment is not in conflict with the fight against inflation," the council said. "However, many of the policies adopted to curb inflation, particularly high interest rates, have not only created more unemployment but also resulted in higher inflation."

The council said job creation should be accelerated in a number of specific programs such as public employment, shorter working hours and increased investment in public infrastructure and productive industries.

Special attention should be directed to the construction industry, including new housing and rehabilitation of older homes; urban renewal, public transportation, energy conservation and development of alternative energy sources, problems of international trade, and the rebuilding of industrial bases.

THE COUNCIL urged that policies adopted by the OECD ministers be coordinated with trade unions, both on a national and international basis.

"Unless there is a comprehensive accord and continuous cooperation with trade unions in the solution of the problems as they arise," the statement said, "the governments of the industrialized countries are likely to pursue in the future—as they did in the past—policies which are dictated by abstract economic doctrines rather than by the need to put an end to the economic slump."

Calling the need for increased international economic cooperation "more urgent than ever," the council urged follow-up negotiations with industrial and developing countries that don't participate in the summit conferences.

RECOGNITION of support for programs benefiting public employees is conveyed to Rep. Claude Pepper (D-Fla.) by the AFL-CIO Public Employee Dept. at its executive board meeting in Bal Harbour, Fla. Making the presentation is PED President Kenneth Blaylock of the Government Employees, right. Others, from left, are PED Sec.-Treas. Albert Shanker of the Teachers, Department Director John Leyden, President John J. Sweeney of the Service Employees and President Vincent R. Sombrotto of the Letter Carriers.

Food Trades Set Spring Meetings On Organizing

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The Food & Beverage Trades Dept. announced plans for conferences in five cities this spring as part an "aggressive" organizing campaign.

Details of the program, which includes use of available corporate information to neutralize employer hostility, were discussed during a two-day meeting here of the department's executive board. The organizing conferences have been scheduled for Minneapolis, Denver, Kansas City, Detroit and Atlanta.

A major resolution adopted by the board expressed concern at the Reagan Administration's proposal to bring in 50,000 "guest workers" from Mexico "in a time of economic depression" and to allow foreign nationals to work in any type of employment.

The board resolved to "resist the addiction of this nation to a supply of guest workers through all possible public and legislative channels."

It reiterated continued support for "compassionate reform of our immigration laws, free from the blemish of exploitation, racial and social prejudice."

Internal Disputes Mediator, Appeals Committee Named

Bal Harbour, Fla.—AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland has appointed a nine-member Appeals Committee and a permanent mediator to deal with internal disputes under amendments to Article XX of the federation's constitution adopted at the last convention.

Besides Kirkland and Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue, the Appeals Committee will include Vice Presidents John H. Lyons, Lloyd McBride, John J. Sweeney, Gerald W. McEntee, William H. Wynn, Frank Drozak and John DeConcini.

DESIGNATED AS the permanent mediator is John N. Gentry, who was Under Secretary of Labor in the Carter Administration and before that a top adviser to the Council on Wage & Price Stability. He also held a number of posts in the Labor Dept. in the 1960s under former Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz.

The appointments follow through on actions taken by the convention to streamline the internal disputes procedures, based on the recommendations of the Executive Council.

The council said the availability of a permanent mediator would speed consideration of cases, and use of an Appeals Committee would conserve the time of the full council. While the rulings of the committee will be final, the council as a whole retains authority to issue policy statements "having prospective effect on the implementation of Article XX" for the guidance of impartial umpires, council subcommittees and the Appeals Committee.

UNDER THE constitution, no more than four vice presidents may be nominated for a second two-year term on the Appeals Committee and no vice president may serve more than two terms.

The council also received a report from Donahue on the operation of the internal disputes procedures through last Dec. 31. It showed that for the year 1981, 65 new cases were filed and 33 were pending at the start of the period. Of the total of 98 cases, mediation resulted in settlement of 49 cases, and 16 cases remained pending at the mediation level. Umpires' determinations found violations in 24 cases and no violations in eight, with a justification report issued in one case.

Twelve appeals were pending at the start of the period and 22 others were filed. At the subcommittee level, the determinations of impartial umpires were sustained in 12 cases; appeals were withdrawn in two; six cases were referred to the Executive Council, and 14 were pending at the end of the period. At the council level, one appeal was withdrawn; the determinations were affirmed in two cases, and set aside or modified in three.

THERE WERE 20 non-compliance complaints pending at the start of the period and 11 were filed during the year. Subcommittee action achieved compliance in six cases and found non-compliance in one. Eleven cases remained actively pending while 13 others were listed as non-active.

Three affiliates remain in non-compliance and currently are under Article XX sanctions: the International Typographical Union, the Graphic Arts International Union and the National Association of Broadcast Employees & Technicians.

United Way Urged to Adopt Labor Policy

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO called on the United Way of America to establish a national labor policy to provide guidelines for itself and its local United Ways in dealing with unions and their members.

Approving the report of an ad hoc committee considering two resolutions on the subject referred by the convention, the AFL-CIO Executive Council said the United Way should incorporate a statement setting forth the proposed national labor policy in its "Basic Guidelines for Local United Way Organizations."

THE COUNCIL noted that AFL-CIO unions whose members contribute millions of dollars to United Way campaigns to fund the work of voluntary service agencies often find themselves in bitter disputes with the very agencies they help to finance over employee organizing and contract rights.

"While the AFL-CIO recognizes that the United Way cannot dictate policy to its member organizations, it can establish —and promote—policies consistent with federal law, as it has done for many years in the area of civil rights," the council observed.

"A national labor policy that clearly supports the rights of all workers to organize and bargain collectively and provide for wage standards protection through such federal laws as Davis-Bacon and the Service Contract Act would establish the United Way's position on labor-management relations and set a standard for its local United Ways and member agencies."

The council also urged its members who serve on the United Way board of directors to work for the adoption of a national labor policy by the organization and to enlist the support of the federation and its affiliates to achieve that objective.

THE AD HOC committee was headed by Vice President Sol C. Chaikin and included as members Vice Presidents Joyce D. Miller, Glenn E. Watts, J. C. Turner, Gerald W. McEntee and John J. Sweeney.

Approving the report of a separate committee, the council dealt with ten other resolutions referred by the convention, adopting two (one with a minor amendment), referring three to other council committees, voting non-concurrence with two and finding that no action was necessary on two. The subject of another was considered covered by one of the adopted resolutions.

The two adopted resolutions call for:

- Reaffirmation of AFL-CIO policies on the licensing and regulation of broadcast facilities, the funding and control of public television, the application of the equal time and fairness doctrines, the breakup of newspaper chain ownership, and ownership of newspaper and broadcasting facilities.
- Appointment or election of qualified labor representatives to state humanities committees.

The council voted non-concurrence with a proposal to prohibit election projections or reports of voting results while polls are still open in some parts of the country. The council said the proposal raised questions concerning freedom of information "and fails to deal adequately with many of our concerns."

The other resolution subject to non-concurrence dealt with the "notch" or gap in benefits created by 1977 amendments to the Social Security Act. The council said the proposed remedy would be too costly and that other social security issues deserve greater priority.

NO ACTION was deemed necessary on measure calling on the AFL-CIO not to meet in Florida until the Equal Rights Amendment is ratified, with the council noting that Florida has been exempted from the boycott of the National Organization of Women because of the unanimous support of ERA by Dade County representatives.

The Executive Council also concluded that a resolution calling on the federation to mail parcels through the U.S. Postal Service was unnecessary because the AFL-CIO already uses the USPS for its mailings to the maximum extent feasible.

Members of the referred resolutions committee which submitted the report are Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue and Vice Presidents Sweeney, Watts and Martin J. Ward.

Otero Named to Panel On Hispanic Research Center

Chicago—Jack Otero, executive vice chairman of the Labor Council for Latin American Advancement, has been named to an advisory board to oversee a study on establishing a Hispanic research center at the University of Chicago.

The study will be conducted under a $250,000 planning grant from the Columbia Broadcasting System to the university's National Opinion Research Center.

Council Asks Restoration Of Jobless Aid

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Congress should rectify the "ill-considered cuts" it inflicted on the unemployment insurance system over the past two years, the AFL-CIO Executive Council urged.

Because of those cutbacks, it charged, large numbers of workers left jobless by the recession face serious hardships after having used up their maximum 26 weeks of state unemployment insurance payments.

IN PAST recessions, the national insured unemployment rate would have triggered-on additional weeks of extended benefits in every state. But the council pointed out that Congress both eliminated the national trigger and changed the rules so as to make it more difficult to trigger-on statewide programs.

The Executive Council statement noted also that jobless workers receiving extended benefits can now be compelled to take minimum-wage jobs, and that still further restrictions are scheduled to take effect in October.

It called on Congress to restore extended benefit protections to levels of past recessions and to finance the additional payments with general revenue funds "as the National Commission on Unemployment Compensation has recommended."

The U.S. Employment Service is "the primary resource for jobless workers in seeking employment," the council said. But the recent restoration of funds cut from the program in the last wave of Administration and congressional budget-slashing undid only part of the damage, and the funding level remains below that of 1980. "At the very least," the council insisted, appropriations should be brought back up to the 1980 level.

THE COUNCIL endorsed a reinsurance mechanism recommended by the national commissions "to restore financial solvency to the system."

It also suggested that Congress take the unemployment insurance system out of the unified federal budget, as was the case before 1968.

Unemployment compensation is basically financed by payroll taxes and administered by the states, the council noted. But because its expenditures are reflected in the federal budget, it has been a target for cutbacks "simply for budget-reducing purposes," it stressed.

UNION LABEL officers, elected at the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept.'s winter executive council meeting in Bal Harbour, Fla., are congratulated by Federation Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue. John E. Mara, left, president of the department since January 1980, will take office as secretary-treasurer Mar. 1 to fill the unexpired term of Earl D. McDavid. James E. Hatfield, right, president of the Glass Bottle Blowers, was elected as the department's new president. McDavid, who had been secretary-treasurer of the UL&STD since 1975, retired from that post and will remain on the department's staff as its West Coast regional representative. Mara is a vice president of the Food & Commercial Workers.

Dispute Procedures Adopted By Bricklayers, Contractors

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The Bricklayers and a national employer association have agreed on a disputes settlement plan designed to avoid work stoppages and resolve impasses at the bargaining table.

The agreement between the union and the Mason Contractors Association was based on a plan developed by Harvard Prof. John T. Dunlop, the former Secretary of Labor and an authority on construction industry union-management relations. It was an undertaking of the International Masonry Institute, a joint labor-management trust fund.

UNDER THE three-step process:

- The international union and the employers' association will set up procedures to monitor collective bargaining negotiations involving local affiliates, "to learn of the facts and the issues in dispute and to be informed of the proposals and steps local parties have taken to reach agreement."
- The union and the association will set up procedures for mediation of local-level disputes, "including resort to fact-finding with recommendations or voluntary arbitration." The national parties may use their own representatives, public mediators or private neutrals "as may be most appropriate."
- If these procedures do not resolve the dispute, the two organizations will utilize "in a limited number of cases of special significance" a procedure for final and binding arbitration.

AFL-CIO PRESIDENT Lane Kirkland termed the plan "another positive step forward by two organizations with a long history of labor-management cooperation."

He took part in a news conference dealing with the national agreement, along with Dunlop, Bricklayers President John T. Joyce and Contractors Association President Donald O. Leonard.

Joyce said the union supported the plan as a means of helping its locals "serve their members more effectively and, at the same time, contribute to the overall improvement of the masonry industry."

Bricklayers Executive Vice President L. Gerald Carlisle and George A. Miller, his counterpart in the employers group, will be in charge of day-to-day operations of the program.

DUNLOP STRESSED that the plan was designed to assist and improve local bargaining, not just avert work stoppages over contract terms.

The agreement allows other union or employer groups engaged in masonry construction to become parties to the plan or make use of its procedures in particular cases with the consent of the Bricklayers and the Masonry Association.

Real Earnings of Families Continue Decline over Year

(Continued from Page 1)

lies, including households with multiple earners, increased only 6.5 percent to $442 last year—leaving a greater gap in buying power.

Over the year, the number of families with one or more unemployed members rose 800,000 to 6.6 million. Of the total, 1.8 million had no wage earners and thus were not tallied in the determination of average earnings.

Among full-time individual workers, the BLS report showed white males with the highest pay levels, but with women and minorities of both sexes making some progress in narrowing the gap.

Based on census surveys, median earnings for men last year were $361 a week, down 1.3 percent in terms of buying power from the previous year. The median pay of women was substantially less, $232, but it represented a "real" increase of 0.7 percent.

BLACK MEN earned about 77 percent as much as white men, but gained 1 percent in "real earnings" over the year.

While the earnings of women were only 64 percent those of men, there was less of a racial gap with the median earnings of black women about 93 percent of the pay of white women. Among both sexes, the median pay of Hispanics slightly trailed that of blacks.

In family earnings, households where both a husband and wife were employed slipped 1.4 percent over the year in real earnings. But families not headed by married couples lost greater ground. Families whose only wage-earner was a woman lost 4 percent in buying power from the previous year.

GOP Spending in '80 Tops Democrats 5 to 1

Republicans outspent Democrats by nearly five-to-one in the 1980 congressional and presidential elections, the Federal Election Commission reported.

The final spending tallies show GOP expenditures totaling about $170 million for the 1979-80 period, compared to $35 million by the Democrats.

In the previous presidential-year election, the difference was less—$40.1 million for Republicans and $17.6 million for Democrats.

In separately tallied spending by political action committees, the top spender was the National Conservative Political Action Committee, which spent $7.5 million to help defeat liberal Democratic senators and elect Republican conservatives.

Budget Battle Taking Shape In Congress

(Continued from Page 1)

hearing aids, the returning representatives and senators said almost without exception.

In the Republican-controlled Senate, Budget Committee Chairman Pete V. Domenici (R-N.M.) saw "no significant chance" of the Reagan budget being accepted. Finance Committee Chairman Robert Dole (Kans.) said he will fight any further cuts in food stamp assistance, and Senate Republican Leader Howard H. Baker, Jr. (Tenn.) proposed a series of tax increases he thought Congress should consider despite Administration opposition.

But the general and bipartisan dissatisfaction with the deficit-laden Reagan budget didn't spell consensus on alternatives. Some proposals for bringing down the deficit focused on further cutbacks, rather than modification of the "supply-side" tax cuts Congress enacted last year to benefit chiefly wealthy individuals and the most prosperous corporations. Thus, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce called for additional cuts of up to $33.5 billion—on top of the Reagan proposals.

MAYORS AND governors, however, continued to hammer away at further damage threatened by the Reagan budget.

The U.S. Conference of Mayors issued a stinging indictment of the folly of ending training programs "when people most need job training," and reducing housing assistance "when people most need housing."

The mayors protested cuts in nutrition, health and education programs, in help for both young people and the elderly.

From the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office, which serves both the House and the Senate, came an assessment that five out of six households receiving food stamps would have their benefits cut or eliminated entirely under the Administration budget proposals. The new cuts would come on top of last year's reductions that dropped about one million people from the rolls. Ninety-two percent of the elderly receiving food stamps would be hurt.

THE WHITE HOUSE, meanwhile, sent conflicting signals as to the President's willingness to compromise with Congress.

For example, Budget Director David Stockman promised the House Budget Committee that the President "will look hard at a good-faith effort" by Congress to come up with an alternative. But hours later, White House aides were quoted as cautioning members of Congress against reading too much into Stockman's remarks. While Reagan is willing to listen, he has not changed his "no compromise" position, the White House indicated.

Arms to Jordan Viewed as Threat To Peace Efforts

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO opposes the sale of F-16 fighters and mobile Hawk missiles to Jordan, the Executive Council asserted.

The council called on the Reagan Administration to reaffirm its support for Israel, "America's reliable friend and ally in the Middle East," and to curtail the "dumping of additional sophisticated weapons into countries unfriendly to Israel and the Camp David peace process.

Conflicting statements from Administration officials, including some attributed to Defense Sec. Caspar Weinberger urging the sale, are "detrimental to the purposes and spirit" of the Camp David process and "give evidence of disarray and confusion in American foreign policy," the council statement said.

Supplying "formidable weapons to those who have adamantly refused to join the peace process can only undermine that process as it enters a crucial and delicate stage, the statement said, stressing that Israel justifiably views such sale to Jordan as a "serious threat" to its security.

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

2/27/82

Kirkland Warns U.S. Losing Time on Recession

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII Saturday, March 6, 1982 No. 9

By Susan Dunlop

America is losing "precious time" in starting "on the road back" from the Reagan recession, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland warned in a speech to the National Press Club.

Kirkland asserted that "this country has been living off its capital, consuming its resources, allowing its infrastructure to decay and rot and is now in the process of dismantling its capacity to deal with these problems and with the responsibilities of an organized human society."

AFTER A YEAR under the Reagan Administration's economic and social policies, "we are deeper in the wilderness than ever," he told the Press Club luncheon audience.

Kirkland pointed to statistics showing industrial production down sharply, new private investment—"which was supposed to be the engine of recovery"—down by $5 billion, and bankruptcies up 43 percent since President Reagan took office.

In "the numbers that mean people," Kirkland said, the true rate of unemployment—some 12 percent—is "the highest this nation has faced since the Great Depression of the 1930s."

The tax breaks "that were to lubricate recovery have stuck to the grasping hands that won them," he charged.

Kirkland challenged the Administration's claims that "prosperity is just around the corner," and that its policies are "beating inflation."

That "plea for patience" was used 50 years ago "under a similar political creed," he said.

The Administration "is not beating inflation," he insisted. "They are coasting on the breaks of a worldwide oil glut and a good harvest," and the rest of their "victory" has been achieved "at an excessive and soaring price . . . by putting people out of work, a callous and destructive strategy rejected by every previous Administration since the Depression, and piously forsworn in their own campaign rhetoric."

ALTERNATIVES to the Administration's programs are coming from all sides, Kirkland noted, but most would do little to reduce unemployment or "give hope

(Continued on Page 3)

THREE THOUSAND demonstrators march outside the Iowa capitol in Des Moines as President Reagan addressed the state legislature promoting his "new federalism" scheme. The protest rally was organized by the Iowa Progressive Coalition, which includes the Iowa AFL-CIO. (Another photo, Page 2.)

Economic Reports Show Deep Impact Of Reagan Slump

By James M. Shevis

A barrage of grim government statistics on economic performance gave clear evidence that the Reagan Recession is far from bottoming out.

Particularly significant was the decline of six-tenths of 1 percent in the Commerce Dept.'s index of leading economic indicators for January. The decrease would have been much sharper—2.8 percent—if the department had not omitted one of the index's regular components, the length of the average workweek.

THE INDEX, which signals future changes in the economy's direction, now has dropped nine months in a row. The December index, which originally was reported to have increased six-tenths of 1 percent, was revised by the Commerce Dept. to show a decline of three-tenths of 1 percent.

For January, the department took the unusual step of leaving out the average workweek length from the composite index. Officials said they removed the workweek figure—which declined sharply to 36.9 hours from 39 hours in December—because it had been distorted by severe winter weather during the reporting period, the week of Jan. 10. This was the first time in recent years that one of the index's 10 components had been dropped.

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland questioned the Administration's rationale for eliminating the figure.

"I don't question that it was cold, but I do question that there were not economic factors involved as well" in the continuing downturn of the index, he told a National Press Club audience.

"These figures simply add force, I think, to the concerns that we have repeatedly expressed and have been expressing for some months past," said Kirkland.

Private analyst Michael Evans expressed amazement that the workweek figure was omitted intentionally. "When the bad news is coming out, they say 'not available.' You can't do that," said Evans, whose economic forecasting firm had predicted a 2.5 percent drop in the index for January, including the effects of the weather.

"Excluding the effects of the weather, the index was probably down 1 percent," he said. "It is a reasonable amount of evidence the recession is getting worse."

THE INDEX of leading indicators usually gives advance warning of economic turning points by two months or more. Deputy Treasury Sec. Richard McNamar candidly acknowledged that the latest drop shows that the economy is still declining, and that unemployment "may yet go to 10 percent before we get things turned around." The nation's jobless rate was 8.5 percent in January.

Of the nine indicators available for the January index, six contributed to the overall decline, with new orders adjusted for inflation and stock prices falling the most. Also unfavorable were new claims for unemployment insurance benefits, contracts and orders for plant and equipment, changes in raw materials prices, and changes in total liquid assets. The three indicators that showed improvement were the pace of deliveries, building permits, and the money supply.

ANOTHER reflection of the continuing deep recession was the Federal Reserve Board's report that the nation's industrial

(Continued on Page 7)

Auto Content Standard Pressed to Spur Jobs

A domestic content law for automobiles sold in the United States would mean hundreds of thousands of jobs for American workers, labor witnesses told Congress.

At House hearings, AFL-CIO Legislative Director Ray Denison and Industrial Union Dept. President Howard D. Samuel joined Auto Workers President Douglas A. Fraser in supporting a measure that would peg local content requirements to sales volume.

THE BILL, co-sponsored by 115 House members, would phase in over three years. Its domestic content requirements would be based on a percentage of the wholesale value of the vehicle, and could be met either by manufacturing the entire automobile or light truck in the United States or by using enough American-manufactured components to meet the test.

When fully effective, the domestic content minimum would be 25 percent for sales of 100,000 to 150,000 vehicles a year. It would rise to 50 percent on sales of 150,000 vehicles, with step-ups to 90 percent domestic content for firms selling more than 500,000 vehicles in the United States. Foreign firms would also have to allow use of American-made replacement parts that meet performance specifications for servicing their vehicles.

Hundreds of laid-off auto workers from a General Motors plant in Baltimore filled the hearing room of the House Commerce subcommittee considering the legislation. Their presence symbolized the severe cutbacks in auto industry employment and in the many related supplier industries.

BUT DEPUTY Trade Ambassador David MacDonald and Assistant Commerce Sec. Robert Dederick said the Ad-

(Continued on Page 2)

Reagan Accused Of Turning Back Rights Progress

The Reagan Administration is actively trying to turn back the clock on 25 years of civil rights progress, the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights charged at its 32nd annual meeting.

In a keynote address to the two-day meeting, National Urban League President John E. Jacob declared that "by its civil rights record alone, this Administration must go down as the most retrogressive in memory."

THE LEADERSHIP Conference — made up of 157 organizations representing minorities, women, religious groups, the handicapped, the elderly and labor, including the AFL-CIO—released a 75-page report during the Washington meeting

(Continued on Page 3)

Coalition Urges Rejection Of 'Harsh' Budget Slashes

Leaders of the Budget Coalition that includes the AFL-CIO and some 200 other concerned organizations joined in a letter to House and Senate members asking rejection of the Reagan Administration's "harsh and unworkable economic program."

At a time of record unemployment, they protested, the Administration is proposing severe new cutbacks on top of excessive reductions Congress made last year in "vital, social, educational and economic programs."

THE BUDGET Coalition Steering Committee, including AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, asked House and Senate members to "support congressional initiatives that create jobs, restore essential programs and revive the American economy."

It said the organizations in the coalition intend to "watch carefully the actions of the 97th Congress on these important issues this year."

Steering committee members, in addition to Kirkland, are Rev. Robert Drinan, president of Americans for Democratic Action; Stephen Brobeck, executive director, Consumer Federation of America; Ruth Hinerfeld, president, League of Women Voters; Benjamin Hooks, executive director, NAACP; Jacob Clayman, president, National Council of Senior Citizens; Willard H. McGuire, president, National Education Association; Carl Holman, president, National Urban Coalition; John Jacob, president, National Urban League; Kathy Wilson, chair, National

(Continued on Page 6)

IOWA COALITION of farm, labor, religious and community groups protests the Reagan Administration's economic policies and sharp cuts in social programs. Thousands of demonstrators turned out for the rally in below-zero temperature during Reagan's address to the state legislature. Iowa AFL-CIO President James J. Wengert told the crowd that "if the President came to Des Moines to sell his recycled trickle-down program, we're not going to buy it."

Auto Workers Approve Pact With Ford by 3-to-1 Margin

Dearborn, Mich.—The Auto Workers overwhelmingly approved a new 31-month contract with the Ford Motor Co. that trades wage and benefit concessions for assurances of greater job security.

The pact, which went into effect Mar. 1, received 43,683 favorable votes as against 15,933 opposed to it, a 3-to-1 majority for ratification. The contract replaces an agreement that was to have expired Sept. 14 and covers some 105,000 Ford blue-collar workers on the job and 55,000 on indefinite layoff if they are called back to work.

UNDER THE new agreement, workers will give up the equivalent of two weeks of paid time off a year and annual 3 percent raises. Certain inflation-related pay increases are to be deferred for 18 months. In return, Ford has promised to share profits, not to close any plants as a result of shifting work to outside suppliers for two years, and to guarantee an income until retirement for workers with over 15 years' seniority who are laid off.

Ford, which has reported losses exceeding $2.5 billion for 1980 and 1981, had sought labor concessions for some time to maintain competitiveness with auto imports. Ford Chairman Philip Caldwell said the pact will help restore the U.S. auto industry, which is in its worst slump in 21 years.

UAW President Douglas A. Fraser praised the negotiators for their "imagination and ingenuity." In a statement issued at UAW headquarters, Fraser and Donald Ephlin, head of the union's Ford Dept., said:

"WE ARE extremely pleased at the majority of ratification. It is clear evidence that our members at Ford understood and supported the historic breakthroughs contained in the agreement, which lead to greater security for themselves and their families."

The most immediate impact of the new Ford contract is the resumption of supplemental unemployment benefit (SUB) payments to laid-off Ford workers with less than 10 years of service. The company agreed to contribute $70 million to fund these payments immediately.

With bargaining completed at Ford, the union shifted its attention to two other struggling auto manufacturers that have requested contract renegotiation. Upon signing the new agreement with Ford, Fraser said that the union will begin polling local UAW leaders at General Motors Corp. to determine whether sentiment now exists for reopening negotiations. Meanwhile, the UAW's American Motors Corp. council agreed to meet with company representatives on Mar. 8 in Milwaukee to discuss the firm's proposals to reopen bargaining.

Negotiations with GM already have broken down twice this year.

UAW members made significant concessions at Chrysler last fall as part of the federal government's loan guarantee to save the company from bankruptcy.

Gobel Cravens Dies, Retired Field Staffer

Oklahoma City—Gobel F. Cravens, who retired in 1969 as an AFL-CIO assistant regional director, died Feb. 25 of black lung disease. He was 77.

At various times throughout his trade union career, Cravens was a member of the Mine Workers, Auto Workers, Maintenance of Way Employes, Hotel Employees & Restaurant Employees, as well as an organizer for the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers. He became a CIO field representative in 1945 and went on the AFL-CIO organizing staff in 1955.

Survivors include his wife Lucille and three children. Services were held Mar. 1 in Oklahoma City.

'Devastating' Impact

Sharp Postage Jump Blow to Labor Press

The recent doubling of second-class postal rates for non-profit mailers has labor publication budgets reeling and unions considering sharp cutbacks, the International Labor Press Association told a congressional committee.

James M. Cesnik testified for the ILPA at a joint session of the House subcommittees on postal operations and services and on personnel and modernization. He is the association's immediate past president.

The "devastating and precipitous increases" instituted by the Postal Service on Jan. 10 have caused "the majority of ILPA's members to seriously consider cost-cutting measures," most often cutting back frequency of publication.

ILPA IS concerned, Cesnik said, that smaller labor publications will decide to stop publishing completely in the face of rate hikes that virtually doubled postage bills overnight. Many publications, he pointed out, are planning to switch to third-class service where rates are slightly lower, but delivery is often less prompt.

Both factors could lead to a substantial drop in postal volume, Cesnik told the committee, with ILPA estimates showing as much as a 40-percent cut in labor press volume in second class alone.

Cesnik, who is editor of the Guild Reporter, published by the Newspaper Guild, pointed out that the religious press and organizations such as farm, veterans and conservation groups as well as charitable organizations are all being hurt by the postal increases.

The sharp boost in non-profit second-class postage rates occurred in January after Congress failed to appropriate the needed subsidy funds in its Dec. 15 continuing budget resolution. The subsidy permitted a step-by-step system of increases in non-profit rates that was supposed to have phased-in rate hikes gradually until 1987. Without the funds, the Postal Service was obligated to jump to the final step of the system immediately, virtually doubling many of the rates.

THE REAGAN Administration's fiscal 1983 budget proposes deeper cuts in subsidies to USPS which could mean even higher rates for non-profit mailers, ILPA has warned.

This budget proposal will "effectively eliminate the distinction between regular and non-profit rates," Cesnik told the committee. He called on Congress to "continue rate differentiation through the appropriations process—or through a law which guarantees non-profit mailers a fair, affordable rate structure" that does not require constant and expensive legal battles to maintain.

Cesnik told the committee that since 1975 ILPA has been forced to spend "over $100,000 of its slim resources" so that labor papers could have a voice "in the legal and administrative proceedings before the Postal Rate Commission."

Since the passage of the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970, he said, "non-profit organizations have already absorbed the largest percentage of increases of any class of mailers," as much as 1,800 percent.

Non-profit mailers must look to Congress for help in establishing a fair, affordable rate structure, Cesnik declared.

Congress should also reject the Reagan Administration's contention that a preferred rate for non-profit mailers promotes "inefficient use of the postal system," he said.

The non-profit press had to fight for the right to pre-sorting discounts granted to for-profit mailers, Cesnik pointed out, and the recent rate escalation will set back the installation and use of expensive equipment necessary to take advantage of more efficient mailing procedures.

BUT THE lower rate structure for non-profit mailers also serves a very important purpose in a democratic system, Cesnik said, because it "serves the public interest in ways that cannot be measured with a calculator."

The second-class non-profit structure, Cesnik said, "was specifically set up by Congress to ease the flow of information vital to the democratic process."

Accord Reached On Pact for Radio, TV Commercials

Los Angeles—The Screen Actors Guild and the Television & Radio Artists jointly approved an agreement with the advertising industry that will provide substantial wage and benefit increases for members involved in producing commercials.

The pact with the American Association of Advertising Agencies and the Association of National Advertisers must now be ratified by members of the two unions. Informational meetings are being scheduled and a mail referendum is being prepared.

The three-year commercials contract includes the following key provisions:

- A 15-percent across-the-board wage boost for members who make "wild spot," or regional, television commercials; a 5-percent increase for those in national network program TV commercials, plus cost-of-living adjustments. Payment for commercials made for cable TV will be based on a session fee, with additional payments based on use.
- A 1-percent increase in pension and welfare contributions, from 9 to 10 percent, to help fund a dental plan.
- Increases in radio commercial use fees for wild spots of 10 to 12 percent in major cities and up to 25 percent in other markets. Also, the contract calls for increases of up to 12 percent in network radio commercials, plus cost-of-living adjustments.

Content Standard Pressed to Salvage Auto Jobs

(Continued from Page 1)

ministration opposed the legislation as harmful to international trade.

Denison, testifying for the AFL-CIO, said the ripple effect of automobile imports has spread unemployment to all segments of the U.S. economy, "where one out of every five jobs is related to the auto industry."

Enactment of the labor-backed bill would have an opposite ripple effect, he stressed, spreading employment and strengthening the nation's industrial base.

HE CITED Australia, Brazil, Mexico, South Korea and Spain as among the nations that have domestic content requirements for motor vehicles, while other nations have tariffs or some form of quota "to keep out a flood of car imports."

Samuel, testifying both for the IUD and for a coalition of 31 unions representing workers most directly affected, also stressed the auto industry's central role in the American economy.

In 1979, he noted, the auto industry used 21 percent of the steel consumed in the U.S., over 50 percent of the malleable iron, 34 percent of the zinc, 12 percent of the primary aluminum, 13 percent of the copper and 60 percent of the synthetic rubber.

SAMUEL NOTED that American manufacturers are using a larger share of foreign-built components in cars assembled in the United States—in some cases in response to trade requirements imposed by other nations.

"It makes no sense for the U.S. to maintain virtually unlimited access to our markets while our access to the markets of other countries is restricted, at a cost of hundreds of thousands of American jobs," Samuel said.

FRASER TOLD the panel that enactment of the legislation could put nearly 870,000 unemployed persons to work.

He cited a UAW study that by 1985, assuming current import trends continue, a domestic content law would mean an additional 116,000 more persons employed by the Big Four U.S. auto companies and 146,000 more jobs in North America by foreign vehicle manufacturers. Bureau of Labor Statistics estimates on supplier firm employment indicate the legislation would lead to an additional 605,000 jobs at independent suppliers, Fraser said.

A content law would not curtail competition among the world's auto companies "to provide the American consumer with a wide variety of innovative products built with the most efficient technologies," Fraser told the subcommittee.

As to the Administration's concerns that a local content requirement might run afoul of international trade agreements, Fraser noted that none of the other nations imposing such restrictions has been challenged.

STRESSING THE importance of early action, Fraser said the value of auto parts imported into the United States from countries other than Canada has grown at an annual rate of 24 percent over the past decade.

Without government action, he warned, the current levels of imports will amount to merely "the tip of the iceberg."

Wilderness of Recession

Kirkland Warns Nation Losing 'Precious' Time

(Continued from Page 1)

to those distressed Americans punished by the Reagan budget."

He stressed that the AFL-CIO's alternative proposal is keyed to solving the "basic problem" of unemployment. "If we can get people back to work, many of the other problems in the economy will solve themselves," he observed.

Further, he said, the AFL-CIO wants "safety nets" of unemployment compensation, Medicaid, relief and food stamps preserved "so that the recession will not dip deeper into depression."

THE AFL-CIO is urging rejection of all the new budget cuts in the Administration's fiscal 1983 proposals, Kirkland said. Instead, the federation has called for new construction and repairs of public facilities, transportation facilities and other resources.

Also, he noted, the AFL-CIO wants "more and better" job training programs and extended unemployment benefits, especially "for those who are forced onto the jobless rolls through no fault of their own."

The federation's alternative program, Kirkland said, calls for increased aid for low- and moderate-income housing, limits on imports that hurt already weakened domestic industries, and establishment of a new Reconstruction Finance Corp. to help revitalize the nation's economic base.

HE POINTED OUT that these programs can be paid for "by restoring some equity to the tax structure" and repealing the "worst aspects of the 1981 tax giveaways such as the leasing of tax credits by corporations, capping personal tax cuts and closing other glaring tax loopholes available only to large corporations, the oil industry and wealthy individuals."

Kirkland also cited the AFL-CIO's position that "close scrutiny" should be given to the "immense" defense budget and that necessary increases in defense spending be paid for with a progressive income surtax on corporations and individuals "to assure that all bear a fair share of the common burden of defense."

He said the Federal Reserve and the President bear responsibility for "all the painful consequences" of tight money and high interest rate policies that "wrap and twist the economy out of balance."

He called on both the Fed and Reagan to exercise their authority to "ration and allocate credit" to make sure that the most productive sectors of the economy get the benefit of available investment capital.

"THE NATION cannot afford to have more billions and billions of capital used for big mergers that do not create jobs, or burned up in commodity speculation, or shipped out in overseas ventures which export jobs that can be performed here," Kirkland declared.

In a question and answer period following his speech, Kirkland expressed concern that the economy is in an exceedingly vulnerable condition in which "severe, unanticipated economic shocks" such as collapse of one or two major corporations, could set off shockwaves that might lead to "irrational panic."

He declined to give President Reagan a grade on his performance since his election, observing that "the citizens of America will pass out grades in November of '82 and '84."

ALTHOUGH the Administration has indicated it wants to keep open channels of communication with the labor movement, "if those channels are to be used, they can't very well expect it all to be Tootsie Rolls that come flying through from our side," Kirkland observed.

Listening to all points of view is part of the role of leadership, he said, adding that the labor movement's point of view is strong and consistent and that it will be asserted "as forcefully as possible in this democratic society of ours."

Kirkland said the recent ratification by the Auto Workers of a new contract with Ford Motor Co. that cut back some wage increases and holidays reflects the way the collective bargaining process makes it possible for organized workers to respond realistically and practically to difficult economic problems.

It also underscores the value of a union to workers, he pointed out, since an effective trade union can bring the interests of workers to bear "in times of adversity as well as times of prosperity," unlike unorganized workers "subject to the unilateral whims or pressures" of employers.

LABOR'S ALTERNATIVE to Reaganomics was put forth by AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland in a speech to the National Press Club carried on the public radio network. Seated are NPC President Vivian Vahlberg and AFL-CIO Vice President John H. Lyons.

Consumer Price Rise Continues Moderate Pace

Consumer prices rose a seasonally adjusted three-tenths of 1 percent in January, their smallest increase in a year and a half, as declines in the price of gasoline, new cars, and houses helped offset a spurt in the price of food.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics said its consumer price index for January was 8.2 percent higher than it was a year earlier. The CPI rose by four-tenths of 1 percent in December, five-tenths of 1 percent in November.

FOOD PRICES increased sharply in January, up eight-tenths of 1 percent—about 10 percent on an annualized basis—the highest in four months. Large price hikes for fresh vegetables and fruits led the way. Prices went up for sugar, cereal, pork, fish and bakery products, while beef and eggs were cheaper.

Rising at the same rate were medical prices, keeping up the skyrocketing increases of the past year. Medical care prices have risen faster than any other category in the past 12 months and were 10.9 percent higher in January than a year earlier.

The housing component of the CPI increased an adjusted two-tenths of 1 percent following a rise of four-tenths of 1 percent in December. Homeownership costs declined one-tenth of 1 percent.

BESIDES HOUSING, which represents 46 percent of the overall CPI, transportation contributed most to the price moderation in January.

Transportation costs fell by two-tenths of 1 percent over the month after rising six-tenths of 1 percent in December. The main factor in the decline was a 1.7-percent drop in gasoline prices. Prices of new cars were also lower as a result of automaker-dealer rebates.

Congress Urged to Restore Full Trade Adjustment Aid

The AFL-CIO urged Congress to reestablish trade adjustment assistance as a "meaningful" program and to reject an Administration budget proposal that would wipe out almost all remaining assistance to workers left jobless because of imports.

Legislative Rep. Stephen Koplan told a House Ways & Means subcommittee that the damage inflicted last year through the budget-setting process had left the program only a skeleton of its original intent. Acting at the Administration's urging, Congress cut back cash benefits from 70 percent of lost pay to the level of state unemployment insurance and imposed new restrictions on eligibility.

THIS YEAR, the Administration proposes to end cash assistance to displaced workers in approved training programs. Its budget proposes only 1 percent of 1981 funding levels for trade adjustment assistance in the coming fiscal year and a complete end to the program in 1984.

The subcommittee is preparing funding recommendations for the House Budget Committee as non-binding advice in the shaping of the first congressional budget resolution.

Koplan told the panel that the impact of trade on workers and on the economy is "too important to be left in the hands of the budget cutters."

He urged the subcommittee, in addition to resisting new cutbacks, to recommend:

- Return to the language of the 1978 Trade Act which made workers eligible for trade adjustment assistance if rising imports "contributed importantly" to their unemployment. The substitute language adopted last year was intended to reduce eligibility.
- Giving workers a legal entitlement to training assistance to help them prepare for new jobs instead of making training conditional on funds appropriated by Congress.
- Extension of trade adjustment assistance coverage to employees of independent suppliers of parts and services who are laid off because the firms they have been supplying have been forced by imports to close plants or reduce operations.
- Changing standards that now can disqualify workers who had been temporarily disabled during part of the qualifying period for benefits and that can deny benefits or training to a displaced worker who does not accept any job available at the minimum wage.

The AFL-CIO testimony also urged restoration of the 70 percent lost pay standard for cash benefits. And it asked adequate funding for the Customs Service to monitor imports as they arrive in the United States.

Civil Rights Alliance Protests Rollbacks

(Continued from Page 1)

charging the Justce Dept. with failure to enforce civil rights laws and with "seeking to close the doors of opportunity only recently opened to people who have suffered discrimination."

NAACP Executive Director Benjamin Hooks said the Justice Dept. under the Reagan Administration has become a "travesty." At a news conference held to release the report, Hooks stressed that the responsibility for the Administration's "attack" on civil rights rests with the failure of Atty. Gen. William French Smith and his deputies to enforce the laws of the land.

The report, titled "Without Justice," was based on a review of the department's civil rights activities during the first year of the Reagan Administration.

IT CHARGED that at the Justice Dept. "political considerations" have been allowed to "corrupt fair administration of the law," and "power and prejudice hold sway."

Ultra-conservative members of Congress and the Administration's political advisers "have boldly and successfully pressured the leaders of the department to change and weaken positions in civil rights cases," the report charged. It cited as an example the Administration's contention that the Internal Revenue Service had no authority to deny tax exemptions to private schools that practice racial discrimination.

The report pointed out that the Justice Dept. has also turned away from its former leadership role in pressing for equality and fairness in hiring and promotion of minorities and women and in vigorous prosecution of job discrimination cases.

REPORTS presented at the meeting repeatedly accused the Reagan Administration of backtracking on fair housing, equal employment opportunity, legal services for the poor, human needs, ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment, health care and education.

The meeting included a Capitol Hill briefing session on the renewal of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 followed by lobbying for Senate enactment of the same strong extension bill recently passed by the House.

In his keynote speech, Jacob charged that the Reagan Administration's budget-slashing and "new federalism" plans are "part of an effort to roll back the very limited gains minorities have won"

The so-called new federalism, Jacob said, is "a prescription for inflicting further misery on the poor and for splintering national issues."

It is "the old notion of states' right," Jacob said, stressing that many federal programs were enacted because of states' abuses or failure to act, and "turning them back to the states is bound to lead to new abuses."

"THE NEW states' rights," Jacob charged, "practically invites states to export their poverty by making conditions so tough for the poor that they'll want to move elsewhere."

But despite the Reagan Administration's retreat, Jacob told the meeting, the civil rights movement can look for new support as more and more Americans, including the middle class, "are finding themselves standing in line at the unemployment office, the welfare office and the public health clinic" as a result of Administration policies.

The Road Back

THE REAGAN Recession is getting worse. Those great big tax breaks that were to trickle down to lubricate recovery have stuck to the grasping hands that won them.

When someone points to the long lines of the unemployed, and the distress of the small businessmen, homebuilders and farmers, the Administration says, "but we are beating inflation." But they are not beating inflation—they are coasting on the breaks of a worldwide oil glut and a good harvest. The rest of their claimed victory has been achieved by putting people out of work.

Give us an alternative, the President says, or "shut up." Well, the alternatives are now tumbling out so fast it is hard to find anyone still following the original Republican roadmap.

One suggestion is for the Congress to freeze spending where it is. This concept has the virtue of being simple, but it would do nothing to solve the real problems of our economy. There is no chance that such a stopgap plan would reduce unemployment or give hope to those distressed Americans punished by the Reagan budget cuts.

Another suggestion calls for a modest tax increase to reduce the immense budget deficit. Some of this income would be raised by hiking excise taxes which weigh most heavily on individuals of low income. The proponents of this scheme have their priorities backward—they simply want to reduce the deficit without reducing the heavy penalty on the jobless and disadvantaged.

A third proposal has come from big business. These generous souls have proposed to reduce the deficit by postponing the scheduled reduction in personal income taxes while they continue to enjoy the fruits of the tax giveaways the corporations won last year.

IN PROPOSING the AFL-CIO alternative to Reaganomics, we start with the basic problem of unemployment. If we can get people back to work, many of the other problems in the economy will solve themselves. We want the safety nets of unemployment compensation, Medicaid, relief and food stamps preserved so that the recession will not dip deeper into depression.

We urge the rejection of all the new budget cuts written in the President's budget proposal.

To create jobs and improve life in all of our communities, we propose a program of construction and repairs to public facilities.

We want more and better training programs and extended unemployment benefits for those who are forced onto the jobless rolls through no fault of their own; we want increased public support for low- and moderate-income home building. We want to limit those imports that damage already weakened domestic industries. And we want a new Reconstruction Finance Corp. which would start the rebuilding of the essential economic and urban base of this country.

THE COSTS of these proposals would be paid for by restoring some equity to the tax system that was undermined last year.

We also ask that the immense defense budget be given close scrutiny. Each new dollar spent should be financed by a progressive surtax levied on corporations and individuals.

We reject the Reagan concept of making the poor and the disadvantaged pay the costs of defending our society.

—From AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland's speech to the National Press Club, Mar. 1, 1982.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
LANE KIRKLAND, President
THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward	Murray H. Finley
Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts	Sol C. Chaikin
Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco	Charles H. Pillard
J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride	David J. Fitzmaurice
Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps	Wm. W. Winpisinger
William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell	John DeConcini
Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss	William Konyha
Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney	Douglas A. Fraser
Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield	Barbara Hutchinson
Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto	Gerald W. McEntee

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop John R. Oravec
David L. Perlman James M. Shevis

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, March 6, 1982 No. 9

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

INTERNATIONAL LABOR PRESS AFL-CIO/CLC

'That's How I Spell Relief!'

Legislated Giveaway

Corporations Siphon Treasury Through Tax Credit Leasing

By Gus Tyler

TO ALLOW corporations to play a complex game that benefits nobody except the corporations involved, the federal Treasury will be losing an estimated $27 billion in the next five years.

The game isn't easy to follow but, with a little effort, you can get the general idea, and you will see how the government is busy subsidizing corporations at a time when Uncle Sam is at his wit's end trying to figure out how to balance the budget.

THE STORY begins with the new tax law that allows a corporation a 10 percent tax credit on a new investment and an accelerated depreciation on new equipment. A "tax credit" allows the corporation to deduct the sum of the credit from the taxes due Uncle Sam; "accelerated depreciation" allows the company to write off the cost of a piece of equipment in—let's say—five years although the equipment may last for 25 years.

But here is a fairly big corporation—like Chrysler or Pan Am—that is unable to take advantage of these subsidies from Uncle Sam because these corporations show no profits for the year, hence have no taxes to pay, and therefore can not make any deductions from their tax bill. They are entitled to a handout from Washington that they can not use.

Sensitive to their plight, a few smart lobbyists—a couple of whom got their training in high posts they once held in the Treasury Dept.—came up with a clever concept. Why not change the law so that these companies that did not show enough profits to get the subsidy would get the subsidy anyhow? Let Uncle Sam simply give these corporations the money that they would have withheld from taxes if they had been profitable.

THE IDEA WAS simple, too simple to be accepted: this was a raw giveaway to corporations that were not making it on their own. So the same idea was unsimplified, was complexified, so that most people would not see the handout for what it was.

Here's how it works. Corporation A (not very profitable) invests $100 million in equipment. It is entitled to $10 million in tax credits plus additonal millions over five years in depreciation. But it can not use either.

So Corp A sells the equipment to Corp B that now has title to the equipment. Corp B gives Corp A a $15 million down payment with a promise to pay the rest in five years. So Corp A is $15 million ahead. Corp B leases the equipment to Corp A for a sum exactly equal to what B owes A for buying the equipment. So no money changes hands. At the end of five years, A buys back from B for $1.

IN THE PROCESS, Corp B gets the $10 million tax write-off plus several additional millions for depreciation. So that it ends up ahead by a couple of million the first year. The next five years Corp B gets more write-offs for depreciation.

In this game, both Corp A and Corp B profit. So who loses? You do, because your tax dollars go to paying both the players in this game—in return for which you and the nation get nothing.

Copyright 1982, Gus Tyler Columns

Fate of Auto Industry Critical to the Nation

Year after year, the strong, broad-based industrial machine that was America has been weakened and its workers displaced.

Now we face an emergency situation involving an auto industry that is basic to our economy and whose fate could decide whether this nation will regain its productive health.

The AFL-CIO represents 14.5 million workers who are important to our society as breadwinners, consumers and taxpayers. Many of these members are in jobs threatened by the massive imports of foreign-made automobiles, trucks and parts. Already tens of thousands have lost their jobs in rubber, steel, aluminum, glass, textiles, paper, electronics and plastics—as well as directly in the auto industry.

Domestic content legislation is based on the concept that multinational auto companies should provide the United States with jobs and production when they enjoy the advantages of the U.S. market.

—From AFL-CIO testimony at House hearings, Mar. 2, 1982.

Passing the Buck

'New Federalism' Puts Burden Of National Programs on States

The following are excerpts from a statement adopted by the AFL-CIO Executive Council in Bal Harbour, Fla., Feb. 18, 1982.

THE PRESIDENT'S proposal for a "new federalism" would turn the nation's back on its historic resolve in the words of the Constitution more than 200 years ago: "to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity."

The "new federalism" would cripple facilities and services on which all Americans depend and jeopardize the health and welfare of millions of the poor and the disadvantaged.

It would shift responsibility to the states for a host of federal programs established by Congress to meet recognized national needs. This ill-considered proposal would transfer to the states 43 programs in education, community development, transportation, health and social services.

UNTIL 1987, a trust fund made up of revenues from a number of federal excise taxes would partially finance these programs, and even that fund would decline 25 percent each year and be phased out completely by fiscal year 1991. Any subsequent financing of such programs would have to come solely from state funds.

By Oct. 1, 1982, the states would be free to cut or even eliminate altogether the programs transferred to them.

This Republican proposal would shift the tax burden for these programs from the federal government to the states and their taxpayers. Since the states have traditionally relied on regressive taxes for their revenues, the greatest burden would fall on low- and middle-income taxpayers.

The proposal also calls for a complicated swap involving assignment to the states of the two major welfare programs, Aid to Families with Dependent Children and food stamps, while the federal government would take over complete control of Medicaid.

EXAMINATION OF the proposal reveals that it is inherently stacked against the best interests of the nation.

- Many federal protections for workers, such as the prevailing wage laws (Davis-Bacon, and Urban Mass Transit, etc.), safety laws (OSHA), and minimum wage laws (FLSA), would be eliminated for the workers engaged in these defederalized activities as these federal laws do not apply to state employers.
- Contrary to the Administration's claim of an even swap between the federal government and the states, under reasonable and consistent assumptions, every state will be a financial loser if the programs are maintained at current levels.

Using consistent estimates, the total loss to the states would be $17 to $20 billion or more in fiscal 1984 and at least $86 billion in fiscal year 1991 when the trust fund runs out. With such added costs, the states would be under tremendous pressure to slash funds for the programs they would be expected to take over. Some would undoubtedly be cut out altogether.

- One of the major funding sources for the transition trust fund is the oil industry windfall profits tax. Once trust fund payments end, non-oil producing states would have no access to oil revenues.
- Since Medicaid services and eligibility rules now vary greatly among the states, the exact impact on the poor and elderly is not clear. But the fiscal 1983 budget would slash the program in advance of the transfer to complete federal control. After that, the current budget-focused Administration could be expected to reduce services still further for the majority of Medicaid recipients. In many states, especially the poorest states with the most abysmal welfare levels, the meager incomes of the poor would be still further slashed as these states are required to meet all AFDC and food stamp costs out of their own funds.

FEDERAL RESPONSIBILITY for all these programs reflects a national consensus that all Americans, regardless of the state in which they live, have the right to certain minimum services and benefits. Only nationally established standards can assure that essential programs are available to the entire country.

Congress asserted national responsibility for these programs in the first place because the states were unwilling or unable to meet these obligations. But if the federal government shucks off these fundamental responsibilities to the states, there is no more guarantee today than in the past that they can or will properly discharge them. Education, transportation and community development will surely suffer. The existing disparity in the treatment of the poor and disadvantaged will widen.

The President's proposal is an ill-conceived scheme to reduce anticipated huge federal budget deficits while neglecting the nation's most fundamental needs. It would shift huge costs to state and local governments. It does not address the real and most pressing problems the nation faces —massive unemployment, a huge tax giveway to the rich, runaway interest rates and a depressed, stagnant and inflation-prone economy.

The AFL-CIO strongly opposes the new federalism and we will not let it divert us from the more serious and immediate problems of Reaganomics.

Public Outcry Builds

Congress Seeking Alternatives To New Round of Budget Cuts

THE MOUNTING wave of constituent protest against the Administration's economic policies leaves few members of Congress with any heart for the new budget proposals, AFL-CIO Legislative Rep. Peggy Taylor said.

Taylor noted that senators and representatives on both sides of the political aisle—most of whom went along with the President last year—are now "clearly looking for alternatives" to his new budget plan, which will slash even deeper into vital social programs and send the deficit soaring to new highs. She stressed that while the economy is struggling with depression-level unemployment rates, the 1983 Reagan budget has "no new job-creating impetus" and will, in fact, "cost the nation 700,000 jobs in the first year."

THOSE KINDS of proposals aren't likely to win the approval of a Congress that is already "very concerned about winning election in a recession year," Taylor asserted on the network radio interview Labor News Conference.

Taylor said the economic plan outlined recently by the AFL-CIO Executive Council "offers viable recommendations that can be incorporated into budget alternatives that are developed by the Congress." She pointed out that the major points of the AFL-CIO plan include:

- An effort in this time of almost unprecedented high unemployment to create new jobs.
- A pullback from radical reorientation of the role of the federal government away from helping people.
- Recouping the extra tax benefits given to wealthy individuals by the across-the-board tax cut adopted last year.

Since the AFL-CIO alternative program has just been sent to Capitol Hill, "we have not yet had many explicit discussions" of its specifics, Taylor said. But, she added, there is rising interest in "scaling back the tax cut that was passed last year" and reducing the resulting revenue loss, and an increasing "concern about further cuts in social programs."

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

PRESIDENT REAGAN'S selective nostalgia for the bygone days when unconstrained business supposedly made America great may raise cheers and campaign funds in the business community but it brings back nightmares for informed consumers.

For them, these past days of supposed glory may best be recapitulated in the familiar sayings: "Let the buyer beware" and "the public be damned."

This old nightmare is again becoming reality, according to "Warning: Reaganomics Is Harmful to Consumers," a new report prepared by a coalition of seven consumer groups representing 33 million members.

The Administration's drive for budget cutbacks and deregulation have had a devastating impact on consumer interests, eroding decades of steady progress after just one year in office, according to the coalition.

THE ORGANIZATIONS pooled their expertise to detail the back-sliding in a dozen areas, ranging from food, drug and product safety to housing, energy, credit and health care. The organizations included the National Consumers League, National Council of Senior Citizens, Consumer Federation of America, Consumers Union, Center for Science in the Public Interest, Congress Watch and the Community Nutrition Institute.

Federal budget cuts took their toll in almost all consumer areas, according to the report.

Public health and disease prevention program funds were cut and the programs were folded into block grants to the states, where they will have to compete with a broad range of other needs. Prevention programs included home health services, fluoridation, emergency medical services, health education and hypertension prevention programs, and a program to prevent lead paint poisoning of children.

Cuts in Medicare have forced up medical insurance deductibles for the elderly from $60 to $75 and increased hospital deductibles from $204 to $260.

Medicaid, which provides health care for the poor was cut by about $3 billion. The coalition said the Medicaid cuts also will reduce access, eligibility and quality of care for senior citizens in nursing homes.

OTHER AREAS of budget cutbacks which have seriously affected consumers, according to the report, include mass transportation, low-income housing, low-income fuel assistance and home weatherization and legal services for low-income persons.

The Administration's campaign to "get the federal government off the backs of the people" through deregulation has dealt blows to food, drug and product safety and quality. Examples are the withdrawal of regulations for ingredient labeling for alcoholic beverages, mechanically deboned meat and improved labeling for meat and poultry packages. The Administration also has proposed to lower the quality grade standards for beef and to rescind a proposed regulation requiring information inserts about storage, handling and possible side-effects of common prescription medicines.

Among the many other blows the Administration inflicted on consumers last year are the elimination of rules limiting interest rate jumps on adjustable home mortgages and the failure to enforce existing regulations or proposed ones for dangerous toxic substances, such as formaldehyde.

The list could go on and on, but the message is very obvious.

As summed up by Ellen Haas of the Community Nutrition Institute during a press conference announcing the report, it is simply, "In 1981, Ronald Reagan rode roughshod over the legitimate needs and concerns of American consumers."

ALTERNATIVES TO REAGANOMICS are being considered by members of Congress from both parties at the behest of their constituents, AFL-CIO Legislative Rep. Peggy Taylor said on Labor News Conference. She was questioned by Jerome Cahill, left, of the New York Daily News and Michael Posner of Reuters News Agency. The program is produced by the AFL-CIO as a public service and is broadcast on Mutual radio.

Budget Group Scores New Reagan Cuts

(Continued from Page 1)

Women's Political Caucus, and Auto Workers President Douglas A. Fraser.

THEIR LETTER noted the depression-level slumps of automobile production and housing starts, the elimination of school lunch programs that have already taken place, and the apprehension of the elderly "about decreasing benefits and increasing out-of-pocket Medicare expenses."

President Reagan's budget proposes "more of the same," the coalition leaders said. Medical and nutrition services face severe cuts, they protested, and educational assistance would be sharply curtailed. "The working poor increasingly will be forced onto public assistance, and the unemployed will be denied opportunities for training and worker retraining," the coalition observed.

In a related area, the AFL-CIO asked its state and local central bodies to join with other organizations in the Budget Coalition to set up local counterparts.

A JOINT letter from Legislative Director Ray Denison and Organization & Field Services Director Alan Kistler suggested that "the mood has changed" in Congress and "the Budget Coalition effort—nationally and locally—can make a difference this year."

The budget and tax cuts enacted last year "proved to be disasters," Denison and Kistler noted. They cited "a growing understanding in the country that the President's economic proposals lack compassion for working people, favor the wealthy and are basically unfair."

Court Overturns Aid to Jobless on Rock Island Line

The Supreme Court struck down a union-supported law that Congress passed in an effort to protect the interests of railroad workers left jobless by the shutting down of the Rock Island Railroad two years ago.

When the railroad's collapse appeared imminent in 1980, Congress sought to assure partial rail service over its routes by other carriers. The bill included a $75 million loan guarantee so that the bankrupt line could provide relocation assistance and other benefits to some 5,000 of its former employees not hired by other railroads.

UNDER THE legislation, the money advanced by the government for employee protections was to be repaid from the assets of the defunct railroad as an administrative expense, a category that gave it priority over most other debts.

Trustees of the bankrupt railroad challenged the legislation and also contested an amended version passed later that year to remove a legal impediment and provide quick court resolution of disputed issues.

At the Supreme Court level, all nine justice held that Congress had unconstitutionally passed a bankruptcy law that was too narrowly addressed to the problems of a single enterprise.

THE CONSTITUTION empowers Congress to establish "uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States."

The court opinion, by Justice William H. Rehnquist, was that the law was too limited in its applicability to pass the constitutional test under the bankruptcy clause.

A separate opinion by Justice Thurgood Marshall, joined by Justice William J. Brennan, Jr., concurred in the outcome but said there could be situations where the public interest justified legislation applicable to only a single enterprise. The substantially larger Conrail operation might be such a case, they suggested.

STEELWORKERS DISTRIBUTE leaflets to alert securities analysts meeting in Cincinnati to the union's long-running dispute with Procter & Gamble Co. To reinforce its collective bargaining efforts, the USWA is stepping up pressure on P&G through an investor strategy. USWA District Director Buddy Davis, foreground, explains the union's position in a television interview.

Steelworkers' New Strategy Focuses on P & G Investors

Cincinnati—The Steelworkers have initiated a new strategy directed at Procter & Gamble investors to reinforce the union's efforts to win a fair contract for some 500 members at a P&G soap plant in Kansas City.

The project was launched at a recent get-together for securities analysts and institutional investors who came to hear John G. Smale, P&G's chief executive, talk about the company's outlook.

AS THE analysts arrived at the posh Queen City Club, they were greeted by about 60 Steelworkers distributing information on the union's long-running dispute with the company.

Although the USWA won representation rights for the 485 Kansas City P&G workers in May 1980, no agreement has been reached with the company in 60 bargaining sessions.

In a message to the analysts, USWA President Lloyd McBride said the union's members, with the support of the entire labor movement, intend to throw their "full weight into the marketplace to inform all stockholders, investors, and the general public that P&G is not a good buy."

It will not be, he said, "until it clears its name with American labor."

McBride stressed in his message to the analysts that the union's boycott efforts will be stepped up to include a broad coalition of religious, student and minority groups. Last November, the AFL-CIO placed P&G soap products on labor's national boycott list.

He also noted that the investor strategy is focusing on union pension fund investments in P&G. In recent years, McBride said, holdings by unions have amounted to several million shares of P&G stock, making labor the largest single stockholder in the Cincinnati-based conglomerate.

Of P&G's 41 plants throughout the country, only the workers at the Kansas City plant are represented by an AFL-CIO affiliate. Workers at the other facilities are members of "independent" or company unions, the USWA said.

P&G WORKERS at Kansas City voted for USWA representation by a 3-to-1 margin. Not only has the company refused the workers a pay raise since November 1979, the union said, but it has also penalized them by withdrawing bonuses from the pay system and forcing them to pay for medical insurance premiums.

The USWA campaign is similar to the strategy employed by the Clothing & Textile Workers in bringing the J. P. Stevens & Co. to the bargaining table.

Tight Money Termed Drag On Recovery

The tight-money policy embraced by the Reagan Administration and the Federal Reserve Board is stifling economic recovery and pushing up costs to consumers and taxpayers, the AFL-CIO charged at Senate hearings.

Excessive reliance on monetary policy to cure the nation's economic ills has proved "counterproductive," Economist Henry B. Schechter testified.

SCHECHTER, who is director of the AFL-CIO Office of Housing & Monetary Policy, cited these byproducts of high interest rates resulting from deliberate curtailment of the money supply:

- Home sales plummeted and new housing starts during 1981 were at the lowest level in 35 years. Unemployment in the construction industry reached 18.7 percent in January, with 946,000 construction workers jobless.
- High rates for consumer financing were a major factor in pushing new car sales one-third below 1978 levels, with rippling effects on unemployment.
- Business failures rose 44 percent in 1981, with further sharp increases taking place in early 1982.

IN THE distribution of wealth, high-income households with money to invest have been able to profit from double-digit interest income, Schechter noted, and to pay higher prices for luxury-type goods and services.

The result has been a two-tier economy, he stressed. "Basic industries, such as steel, glass, aluminum and lumber, which must supply mass market products such as housing and automobiles, cannot be sustained or modernized because they cannot pay competitively high interest rates," he pointed out.

Schechter reiterated the AFL-CIO's strong support for turning to credit controls as "a viable alternative to slowing down the money supply."

HE NOTED that the nation's brief implementation of standby credit controls in 1980 helped bring interest rates down and reverse a decline in home building.

Schechter cited the successful use of credit controls by Japan "to help keep inflation and unemployment at levels below those of the United States and guide capital flows into high priority industrial investments." He contrasted this with the "poor economic record" of Britain, which, under the Thatcher government, "has been following a monetarist policy similar to that of the United States."

Busing Curb Heads for House Roadblock

By David L. Perlman

A battle over busing as a remedy for school desegregation has been transformed by a 57-37 Senate vote into a potential constitutional clash between the legislative and judicial branches of government.

House leaders hope to head off such a confrontation by burying an appropriations bill that contains the Senate-added amendment restricting the power of federal courts.

THE HOUSE last year sent the bill carrying funds for the Justice Dept. to the Senate with restrictions on use of federal funds to promote school busing. But the Senate, after breaking a filibuster, adopted a court-curbing amendment that has alarmed some conservative legal scholars as well as civil rights groups.

It would prohibit courts from requiring the assignment of any student for racial purposes to a school more than five miles from home or more than a 15-minute bus ride.

In effect, Congress would seek by legislation to limit the judicial branch's powers to remedy constitutional violations. School desegregation was mandated by a unanimous 1954 Supreme Court decision on constitutional grounds.

The amendment, which also curbs the power of the Justice Dept. to act in school segregation cases, was sponsored by Senators J. Bennett Johnston (D-La.) and Jesse Helms (R-N.C.).

Support and opposition split party lines, and in some cases ideological divisions.

Most Senate Republicans supported its passage, but Republican Sen. Lowell P. Weicker, Jr. (Conn.) led filibusters that delayed action for eight months.

Democrats split almost evenly, with most southerners supporting the measure. But a southern Democrat, Sen. Dale Bumper (Ark.) made the most impassioned speech against its passage.

"Busing is not the issue," he told his colleagues. "The issue is whether we are going to remain a free nation, devoted to the sanctity of the Constitution." If courts can't act on constitutional violations, he contended, it would mark "the beginning of the end of constitutional guarantees."

A similar warning was issued by the president of the American Bar Association, David Brink. With this precedent, he said, "a future Congress could strip the courts of authority to protect and preserve other constitutional rights."

Despite the long and bitter debate over the issue, Atty. Gen. William French Smith said at a congressional hearing on the Justice Dept.'s new appropriations request that he was not prepared to comment on such a "complicated" issue as restricting the power of courts on busing.

NORMALLY, the measure would go to a House-Senate conference since it is an appropriations bill passed in different forms by both bodies. Instead, it is being handled as a Senate-passed bill, with an option for the Speaker of the House to assign it to a committee for consideration. House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr. (D-Mass.) said he will "take no action" on the Senate bill unless the chairmen of the Judiciary or Rules Committee request it.

That is not likely, since both Judiciary Committee Chairman Peter W. Rodino, Jr. (D-N.J.) and Rules Committee Chairman Richard Bolling (D-Mo.) oppose the measure.

And Weicker has served notice that he is prepared to lead another filibuster if the bill ends up back in the Senate for final passage with the Johnston-Helms amendment still attached.

Meanwhile, funding for the Justice Dept. and a number of other agencies whose appropriations have not passed Congress is provided through what is called a "continuing resolution."

Grim Reports Show Spread Of Recession

(Continued from Page 1)

output in January plunged a seasonally adjusted 3 percent, the sharpest decline since May 1980 and the sixth consecutive monthly drop. The drop in production was pervasive, with the largest declines occurring in autos, construction supplies, and durable and nondurable goods.

January's dramatic decline in housing sales—a 22.8 percent plunge from December and the second lowest sales figure on record—also indicated the extent of the nation's eighth post-World War II recession. The sales slump was attributed to the recession, high interest rates, and bad weather.

Meanwhile, the Commerce Dept. reported a 1.5 percent decline in new factory orders for durable goods in January, suggesting that industrial production and employment will stay weak. The January orders decline was the fifth in six months, and would have been greater if orders for defense products had not risen 24 percent from December to a record $7.48 billion.

ORDERS FOR durable goods—items such as autos and home appliances that have a usefulness of three years or more—have been weak since the recession began last July. An increase generally signals a rise in factory production and employment, while a decline signals the opposite.

Going hand in hand with the declining orders, factory capacity use fell 2.6 percentage points in January to 70.4 percent, the lowest level since the severe recession of 1973-75. Among the worst hit was the auto industry. Its operating rate slid to the lowest level in at least 34 years, the Federal Reserve Board reported.

MORE BAD economic news came in the Commerce Dept.'s announcement that the nation's merchandise trade deficit widened in January to a seasonally adjusted $5.13 billion as exports continued to decline and imports surged. The deficit was the largest since last August, and the third largest since the department began the statistical series in 1974.

Deficits are watched closely because they mean that dollars are flowing out of the United States, making less money available for domestic purposes. The nation's trade deficit last year was $39.68 billion, and experts predict the 1982 deficit will be wider than last year.

SEIU Sponsoring College Festivals Of Labor Films

The Service Employees will sponsor 10 labor film festivals around the country in cooperation with university labor studies programs.

The festivals will include the award-winning films in "The Union Makes Us Strong" series co-sponsored in 1981 by SEIU and the Smithsonian Institution in Washington. Two of the films, "With Babies and Banners" and "Union Maids," have received Academy Award nominations in recent years.

SEIU President John J. Sweeney said the films "celebrate the history, culture and accomplishments of working people," and provide an opportunity for students and the public "to see a side of the labor movement that is often overlooked."

THE FIRST in the series of festivals was held Feb. 26 in Milwaukee and Kenosha with the University of Wisconsin's School for Workers. The second, keyed to Women's History Week, will run Mar. 8-12 at eight campuses in Massachusetts including Mt. Holyoke, Amherst, Smith and the University of Massachusetts, whose Labor Relations and Research Center is the co-sponsor.

Plans for the other festivals are now being completed in eight major cities and dates will be announced as they are confirmed, the SEIU said.

UPHOLSTERERS SKILLS are symbolized in an original work by sculptor Norman Poirier commissioned by the Upholsterers to mark the union's 100th anniversary. When completed, the 7½-foot concrete and steel sculpture will stand before the union's headquarters in the historic Independence Mall area of Philadelphia.

NABET Posts Major Gains in Network Accord

The National Association of Broadcast Employees & Technicians ratified a new four-year agreement with the American Broadcasting Company providing a wide range of pay and benefit improvements for some 2,700 members.

Twenty units in six NABET locals representing employees of ABC-owned and operated stations in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, Washington, and San Francisco, and at the network's headquarters in New York City are covered by the pact. The units consist mainly of broadcast engineers and technicians, about 1,600 in all. Other job classifications account for another 1,100 members in the units.

NABET PRESIDENT Edward Lynch said the four-year master agreement, retroactive to Apr. 1, 1981, provides increases of 9.35 percent in the first year, 8.5 percent in the second, 7.8 percent in the third, and 7.7 percent in the final year.

In addition to pay increases, the contract provides for a new dental plan. The union has the option of setting up its own plan established through company contributions or of participating in the company's plan.

The contract also makes a stock option plan available to NABET members for the first time. Lynch said the plan provides that for every dollar an employee pays toward company stock, ABC will pay 40 cents up to 5 percent of the employee's base pay.

Other improvements include an $11 increase over the life of the contract in the per diem rate paid members for "remotes," assignments away from their normal work sites. The former rate was $25. The new rate will rise to $34 on Apr. 1, $35 in the second year, and $36 by the contract's final year.

PENSION contributions increase by 1 percent over the contract term. Previously set at 9 percent of base pay, the contribution rate will rise by one-half percent next year and by another half-percent a year later. ABC also agreed to continue medical benefits for retirees' surviving spouses after the retiree dies.

Under the pact, employees who have been with the company four years or more will have their pay increased from the current $585 a week to $735 a week by the final year of the agreement.

Upholsterers Celebrate Century of Progress With Exhibits, Events

Philadelphia—The Upholsterers' International Union marked its 100th anniversary in February with a series of events highlighting the union's place in labor and American history.

UIU's founding in Philadelphia by a handful of upholsterers who met here on Feb. 5, 1882, was commemorated in a ceremony at the union's headquarters in the historic Independence Mall area of the city.

THE EVENT included the dedication of a sculpture by Norman Poirier that symbolizes the upholsterer's trade. It will be placed in front of the headquarters building.

At the centennial observance, UIU President Martin L. Garber emphasized the union's "pride in achieving 100 years of service to our members and all working people" in spite of often difficult economic times and stiff employer opposition to unions.

He urged young trade unionists to remember "where they came from" and to recall that "the labor strife of the old days" produced many of organized labor's biggest victories for working people, including conditions that most working people, union and non-union alike, take for granted today.

JOSEPH COLEMAN, president of the Philadelphia City Council, along with Councilmen Lucien Blackwell, John C. Anderson and David Cohen, presented the union with a special resolution adopted by the council to mark the centennial.

The city of Philadelphia was a co-sponsor of the ceremonies as part of its own celebration of the 300th anniversary of its founding.

The council praised the UIU for its commitment throughout its history "to securing and maintaining the basic human and economic rights of all people which is at the very heart of our democratic society."

The events included the first Philadelphia showing of an exhibition of five decades of original cartoons by Bernard Seaman, highlighting issues of concern to working people.

THE UNION also unveiled its own "Centennial Story," a slide show on the history of the UIU and its members.

Among the speakers at the centennial ceremony were AFL-CIO Vice President Lloyd McBride, president of the Steelworkers; Pennsylvania AFL-CIO President Harry Boyer; Philadelphia AFL-CIO Council President Edward F. Toohey; and Elmer Chatak, secretary-treasurer of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.

Garber announced that other events planned for the centennial year will include a rededication, during the UIU's convention in June, of its plaque at the Betsy Ross Memorial House in Philadelphia. The plaque, first placed at the landmark in 1957, honors Betsy and John Ross for their trade as upholsterers.

A special centennial series in the union's newspaper, the UIU Journal, traces the roots of the union to fledgling organizations as early as 1853.

ECONOMIC conditions and employer opposition foiled those early attempts, and even the 1882 union declined until it was reorganized in 1892 with the help of its vigorous midwestern locals. Their successes helped revitalize locals in the East. The first Canadian local was chartered in Toronto in 1894.

The UIU adopted its union label in 1897, and it received its charter from the American Federation of Labor in 1900.

As more shops were organized, the UIU also expanded its jurisdiction to include such crafts as mattress and spring makers, drapers, carpet sewers and layers, casket makers, carriage and auto trimmers and eventually window trimmers and flag and bunting makers.

AT THE SAME time, the union shifted its focus from craft-by-craft organizing to organizing by shop.

The union was an early supporter of the eight-hour day, and its first legislative push was for sanitary working conditions through support of labeling laws for mattresses, pillows and similar products. Manufacturers required to guarantee the sanitary condition of these products had to clean up the shops where they were made.

The UIU points with pride to its 1919 convention, when it seated its first women delegates and adopted a resolution requiring the addition of women members to the union's executive board, since 20 percent of the membership was female.

Other early resolutions demanded that contracts pay men and women equal wages for equal work. The UIU also claims the honor of being the first national union to establish the concept of vesting and portability of workers' pensions.

ONE OF THE union's most successful organizers, Sal B. Hoffman, formed the first integrated local union in the South in Birmingham, Ala. in 1930. In the same year, he organized a local in High Point, N.C., which conducted one of the nation's earliest sitdown strikes.

Hoffman was elected president of the UIU in 1937 and he held the post for 44 years until his death in 1981.

CENTENNIAL CEREMONIES marking the anniversary of the founding of the Upholsterers in Philadelphia featured a series of displays and events at UIU headquarters, including an exhibit of labor cartoons by Bernard Seaman. At the exhibit are, from left, UIU President Martin L. Garber, Executive Vice President John Serembus and Elmer Chatak, secretary-treasurer of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.

Reagan Budget Proposal

Rail Unions Fight Move To Abolish Pension Plan

Railroad unions have pledged an all-out fight to prevent President Reagan's budget proposals from abolishing the railroad retirement system that has existed for almost half a century.

As part of his fiscal 1983 budget, Reagan has called for the direct abolishment of the Railroad Retirement Board by Oct. 1, 1982, merger of Tier I retirement benefits with social security, administration of Tier II benefits by a private corporation, and fragmentation of railroad unemployment benefits into 50 different state plans.

THE RAILWAY Labor Executives Association promised to fight the Reagan moves across the board. It noted in a statement that the proposals came as a complete surprise to rail labor, which was neither consulted nor notified that such changes were to be included in the President's budget.

Charles J. Chamberlain, labor member of the Railroad Retirement Board and former president of the Signalmen, strongly protested the Administration's proposals in testimony before a Senate Appropriations subcommittee.

"We spent our entire working lives building this (retirement) program," Chamberlain said in an interview following the subcommittee hearing. "We're not going to let them take it away from us."

Retirement benefits for railroad workers are derived from two sources, known as Tier I and Tier II. Tier I benefits are comparable to social security benefits paid retired workers in other industries and are financed by worker and employer taxes at the same level.

Tier II benefits are paid under a program financed entirely by the carriers and administered along with the Tier I program by the Railroad Retirement Board.

Under the Reagan plan, designed by Director David Stockman of the Office of Management & Budget, the Social Security Administration would take over Tier I benefit payments, but only for those who would qualify under social security, while Tier II benefits—including early retirement benefits, widow's benefits, and occupational disability benefits—would be turned into a private plan administered by some type of private corporation.

DETAILS OF the proposed corporation have not been spelled out.

"Presumably, rail labor and management would have to agree on something and literally put it together overnight," the RLEA statement said. "Two things are clear, however: all board field offices would be closed almost immediately, and Tier II benefits would be subject to income tax."

Chamberlain pointed out that the already weakened social security system would only be made worse if it were burdened with another million retired railroad worker recipients.

He also criticized the Administration recommendation that a new private railroad pension plan to replace Tier II be exempt from the protection of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act. Without that protection, he said, some retired workers could find themselves with reduced benefits or could even end up with no benefits at all if the railroads they had worked for ran into serious financial difficulties.

ON THE proposal that railroad unemployment insurance be eliminated and parceled out to the states, Chamberlain pointed out that the present system is now uniform across the nation and added:

"This is going to push it into 50 different programs, most of which already exhausted their funds and are now tapping into the federal government for additional money."

'I Thought You Were Getting OFF Our Backs!'

Trade Code Violations Laid To Lax Monitoring Efforts

The United States should take a closer look at the impact of the last round of tariff agreements before entering into new multilateral trade negotiations, AFL-CIO Research Director Rudy Oswald testified at Senate hearings.

Trade ministers of the 86-nation General Agreement on Tariffs & Trade (GATT) will meet in November, and Oswald cautioned against steps that could result in further erosion of U.S. industries.

THE VARIOUS trade codes negotiated under GATT auspices and implemented by Congress in 1979 need "constant monitoring and enforcement" of U.S. rights. "But no such monitoring has taken place," Oswald protested. The result has been that U.S. exports lose out, he said, while foreign suppliers have access to the vast U.S. market.

Oswald cited the millions of Americans now without jobs and stressed that imports have compounded unemployment pushed up by the recession and tight money.

"U.S. negotiators should not continue to ignore the cost of trade on this economy while ballyhooing its benefits," he said. The "onesidedness" of the seven rounds of tariff-cutting negotiations that have taken place since 1974 has cost the nation heavily in lost jobs and production, Oswald charged.

"NO MORE codes should be completed and brought to Congress for approval until there is some understanding of the massive agreements reached less than three years ago," Oswald said.

He noted, for example, that the agreements adopted in 1979 prohibit nations from subsidizing their manufactured exports. But the problems of subsidized trade still exist.

Oswald pointed out that U.S. imports of manufactured goods rose 13 percent last year, while exports of manufactured products were up only 7 percent.

And he stressed that there's more to trade than the dollar value of exports.

"The United States exports much raw material involving relatively little labor instead of manufactured goods and processed foods which require considerable labor output."

AT THE urging of its trading partners, the United States in 1979 changed its law that had required imposition of countervailing duties on imports that had been subsidized by foreign governments, Oswald recalled.

The outcome, he noted, has been that "subsidized steel products are entering the United States at an even greater rate."

He told the Senate Finance Subcommittee on Trade that promises made to Congress on subsidized imports from developing countries have been broken.

"The posture of the U.S. as an inept negotiator, turning industry after industry over to foreign producers who ship subsidized exports to the United States had a devastating effect on American firms," Oswald said, and on "workers whose production and jobs are lost as a result."

MEANWHILE, the United States is held to the strict letter of the trade agreements "as if fixed in concrete. That is a one-way street," he warned.

A similar one-way street has existed in the government procurement code, Oswald protested. The promised massive U.S. exports have not materialized. But "massive U.S. imports have been encouraged," he said.

Maritime Unions Blast Denial of Veterans' Status

The AFL-CIO Ad Hoc Maritime Committee has strongly condemned a Pentagon official's refusal to grant veterans' status to U.S. merchant seamen who served during World War II.

The AFL-CIO committee pledged that it would take "all appropriate legal action to secure the recognition to which these men are entitled under the law."

In a statement issued by Committee Coordinator Dale Good, the group charged that Tidal W. McCoy, Assistant Secretary of the Air Force for Manpower, Reserve Affairs & Installations, "displayed the usual prejudice held by many members of the regular armed forces" in stating that "the service of the merchant marine has remained basically the same over the last several hundred years," and in his contention that the U.S. merchant marine was not a "unique wartime institution."

It is "shocking and absurd," the committee said, that McCoy conferred veterans' status on "clerical employees, therapists and dieticians, among others, who did not risk their lives and limbs," while rejecting the claims of seamen who were treated and used as a branch of the armed forces.

The committee pointed out that the merchant fleet during World War II sustained higher casualties than any other branch except the U.S. Marines.

Kirkland Condemns Slaying Of Chilean Labor Leader

The AFL-CIO condemned the slaying of a long-time free union leader in Chile, charging that his murder was politically motivated, and called on President Reagan to withdraw his request from Congress for military aid to the Pinochet dictatorship.

In a letter to Reagan, Federation President Lane Kirkland said withdrawal of the request for aid would send "a clear message that this government rejects the use of political murder as means of destroying free unions."

KIRKLAND TICKED off a list of names of slain Latin American trade unionists in recent years, including those of two AFL-CIO staff members, Michael Hammer and Mark Pearlman, and noted that hundreds more labor leaders struggling for democracy and freedom have been "wantonly slaughtered" by dictatorial regimes ranging from Pinochet's autocratic Chile to Castro's communist Cuba.

Kirkland deplored the Feb. 26 killing of Tucapel Jimenez, leader of the Democratic Union Confederation of Chile, as "perhaps the most heinous in the long list of these terrible murders."

Jimenez's body was found beside the taxicab he drove to supplement his living with his throat cut to the point of near-decapitation and with two bullet holes in his head. He had just issued a call for greater trade union solidarity on Feb. 23, to confront the economic, social, and political injustices of the Pinochet dictatorship.

Joseph Campos of the American Institute for Free Labor Development, who spoke at Jimenez's funeral as Kirkland's special representative, observed that only a few days before his voice "pioneered the call for trade union unity, barring nobody. It is painful to say this, but your call was like the song of a dying man."

THE LATIN AMERICAN free trade union movement has paid dearly with the loss of the lives of many of its leaders in the past two decades, Kirkland pointed out in his letter to Reagan. He charged that Jimenez's death was designed to intimidate all Chilean labor leaders into submission to the Pinochet regime.

"We demand a complete and impartial investigation of this crime by the human rights commission of the Organization of American States (and) we request that the International Labor Organization activate its full scope of legal and moral authority against the Chilean government," Kirkland said.

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

3/6/82

Layoffs Trigger Surge in Jobless Rate

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII — Saturday, March 13, 1982 — No. 10

8.8% Mark Reflects Sag In Economy

By James M. Shevis

The nation's jobless rate moved back up to 8.8 percent, approaching the peak post-World War II level, as layoffs in February mounted in industry after industry.

The February unemployment rate, up three-tenths of 1 percent from the January level, provided fresh evidence that the economy continues to weaken under the burden of high interest rates, the AFL-CIO pointed out.

THE HIGH unemployment figures "prove again that economic conditions are getting worse, not better," declared Federation President Lane Kirkland. The post-war record rate was 9 percent, set in May 1975 during one of the nation's most severe recessions.

"It is no consolation to those looking for jobs for President Reagan to say his economic plan will begin to work at some indefinite time in the future," Kirkland added. "The plight of the jobless is being made much worse by the Reagan budget cuts. Those cuts must be reversed."

The Bureau of Labor Statistics attributed the February rise in joblessness to an increase in the size of the labor force, as employment failed to increase for the third straight month, and to a sharp rise in unemployment among adult women. The jobless rate for this group increased from 7.2 to 7.6 percent, its highest point since 1976.

SOME 9.6 MILLION Americans were out of work last month, an increase of 280,000 over January. Since last July, when unemployment stood at 7.2 percent, 1.8 million workers have lost their jobs.

"It is time to put the jobless to work," Kirkland said. "American labor has proposed an alternative program that will revive and rebuild our economy. It is now up to the Congress to act."

BLS Commissioner Janet L. Norwood told the congressional Joint Economic Committee that non-farm payroll jobs have decreased by 200,000 since December. She said manufacturing employment, down more than a million since last summer, continued to decline in February although at a slower rate. Among specific industries affected were metals, rubber and plastics.

CONSTRUCTION employment rose in February after seasonal adjustment, but the over-the-month change was distorted by severe weather in January, Norwood said. Since December, nearly 50,000 jobs have been lost in the construction industry. Mining jobs edged down for the second month in a row.

As many analysts had cautioned, the January unemployment figures, which showed a dip in the jobless rate from the December level of 8.8 percent to 8.5 percent, were skewed by unusually bad weath-

(Continued on Page 6)

Kirkand Asks Reversal Of Tax, Budget Policies

LABOR'S ALTERNATIVE to the Administration's recession-breeding program is presented by AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland at House Budget Committee hearings. From left: AFL-CIO Assistant Research Director Arnold Cantor, Kirkland, Legislative Director Ray Denison and Legislative Rep. Peggy Taylor.

Terms Job Creation Key To Recovery

By David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland pressed Congress to make a full 180-degree turn away from the Reagan Administration's economic course and shape a budget that will reduce deficits by lowering unemployment and plugging tax giveaways.

Kirkland's appearances before the House Budget Committee and the Senate Finance Committee came amid signals that congressional support for Reaganomics is crumbling under the pounding of a recession that has afflicted nearly every congressional district.

HOUSE AND SENATE committees have been ignoring the Administration's rigidly ideological budget blueprint in shaping recommendations for a congressional budget resolution. But Congress is far from agreement on the ingredients of an alternative budget, and Kirkland cautioned against some of the "trial balloons" being floated on Capitol Hill.

Most such proposals call for a spending freeze as well as tax cut deferments, Kirkland noted, "and do not address the fundamental problems of jobs, programs and tax justice."

He stressed the AFL-CIO's conviction that "getting people back to work is the key consideration." To bring that about, Kirkland insisted, requires "a total renunciation of the tax and budget policies of this Administration."

IN HIS Senate testimony and in response to questions at the House budget hearings, Kirkland criticized both Admin-

(Continued on Page 3)

ILO Bids Poland Free Jailed Trade Unionist

Geneva—The Governing Body of the International Labor Organization called on Poland to free imprisoned leaders of the Solidarity trade union and to permit an ILO fact-finding mission to visit Poland.

The action came over vehement Soviet objections, with the USSR's representative accusing the Governing Body of pursuing a double standard by "interferring in the internal affairs of Poland" while refusing to take a stand last year on President Reagan's decision to fire striking members of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization in the United States.

Poland's military regime, headed by Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, clamped martial law on the country last Dec. 13, charging that Solidarity leaders threatened to take power into their own hands. Solidarity activities remain suspended to this day.

ROBERT W. SEARBY, chief government delegate for the United States, told the ILO Governing Body that "because a trade union is democratic and represents a large part of the workforce does not mean it is dangerous and illegal.

"If so, all unions everywhere could be called political and be suppressed. The issue was not one of politics but of internationally defined human rights. The suppression of Solidarity violated freely ratified conventions and the ILO constitution."

Searby noted that ILO conventions are designed to prevent the very type of action taken in Poland, where a so-called "workers' state" suppressed a workers' movement of 10 million people.

AFL-CIO EUROPEAN Rep. Irving Brown, reinforcing Searby's argument, said that Solidarity was not to blame for what went wrong in Poland three months ago.

"There was no civil war, no para-military preparations by the union. Solidarity was a consequence of economic chaos and not the cause of it. Arguments defending martial law are specious," Brown charged.

"The 'high crime' of Solidarity was to want participation in economic control," he said. "It was a movement for freedom and peace which held promise of bridging different world economic systems, and

(Continued on Page 7)

Credit Pressure, Sanctions Urged Against Soviets

Economic pressure by the United States and its allies is the most effective way to make the Soviet Union and its satellites live up to international agreements, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland said.

Kirkland was asked at a House Budget Committee hearing about his advocacy of strong economic sanctions in response to the suppression of Poland's workers and other Soviet bloc actions flouting international agreements.

HIS RESPONSE noted the long trail of Soviet bloc violations of international treaties, of which the disregard of the human rights obligations of the Helsinki Agreement and the violation of International Labor Organization conventions on

(Continued on Page 7)

No Matter What the Job, Women's Earnings Lag

By Susan Dunlop

No matter what the job, women still get paid less on the average for doing it than men, a new survey by the Bureau of Labor Statistics confirms.

The Labor Dept.'s statistical arm compared the usual weekly wages of full-time employees in its Current Population Survey of households and found no job classifications in which men and women doing the same work were paid equally. Overall, women get paid less than 65 percent of what men take home in weekly wages from most jobs, the BLS study found.

IN ITS comparison of the 20 highest-paying jobs held by men or women, even the highest-paying category for women was still below the lowest of the top 20 jobs held by men.

The study also underscored the evidence that women are concentrated in lower-paying clerical and service occupations and are underrepresented in higher-paying job classifications such as engineers, lawyers and managers.

The BLS survey excluded most self-employed workers and covered only those occupations in which there are at least 50,000 workers employed. But the agency pointed out that even with these restrictions, the data cover nearly 95 percent of the workforce of full-time wage and salary earners in 1981.

ABOUT 40 PERCENT of the 73 million workers covered by the survey were women. The median weekly wage overall for women was $224, or 64.7 percent of

(Continued on Page 8)

Senior Citizens Protest Deep Cuts in Medicare

President Jacob Clayman of the National Council of Senior Citizens told a House Ways & Means subcommittee that the Administration's 1983 budget proposals "will cut into the bone, indeed, into the marrow, of health care for the aged."

Clayman excoriated President Reagan's plan to cut approximately $2.5 billion from Medicare in fiscal 1983, charging that the elderly "will pay more but get less."

"WE BELIEVE that the budget proposals will impose unreasonable financial burdens on the elderly and will threaten their health status," Clayman said. "The Administration proposals offer no improvement in the health care system."

The short-sighted proposals, he warned, "ignore the critical problems of delivery and reimbursement, and are designed simply to shift increasing health care costs away from the federal budget to the senior citizens and to the private sector."

Clayman detailed the damaging effects that health care inflation has on the elderly.

As costs increase, the elderly must pay higher co-payments and deductibles, he told the subcommittee, with Medicare now paying only 38 percent of an older person's total medical bill.

"Current hospital room rates are directly reflected in the $260 deductible that beneficiaries now pay for each benefit period under Medicare Part A," he said.

"In addition, as inflation causes the federal government to pay disproportionately more for services such as hospital care—which has a 17 percent inflation rate—coverage for other needed services, such as chronic care, must be foregone," he noted in the testimony.

"THE ELDERLY need reimbursement reform, such as a prospective system, and are offered no reform. We need development of non-institutional long-term care and are offered reduced benefits for home health care.

"We need more physicians to accept Medicare's reimbursement levels and are offered strategies which will reduce assignment and increase our costs.

"We need proposals that will help moderate health care costs, but are offered increased deductibles and higher levels of cost sharing.

"We need what all Americans need," Clayman concluded, "access to an affordable, comprehensive range of services that truly meet our needs. We have not been offered such access by the Reagan Administration."

Stockman's 'Cure' Prostrates Economy

Unemployment and high interest rates are good for you, according to David Stockman, President Reagan's chief budget adviser.

Stockman told a U.S. Chamber of Commerce audience that high interest costs, heavy unemployment, lost output from recession and large federal deficits are not cause for changing the Reagan Administration's economic policies.

These calamities, he insisted, "are part of the cure, not the problem."

The Administration is following "the only course that's right for the country," he said.

James Sampson Dies, Stereotypers' Leader

Glenview, Ill.—James H. Sampson, president of the Stereotypers & Electrotypers from 1955 until the union merged with the Printing & Graphic Communications Union in 1973, died Mar. 2 of a heart ailment. He was 73 years old.

Following merger, Sampson served as a vice president of the IPGCU. He retired in 1980. Sampson had been a member of the union's Local 4 in Chicago for 55 years.

Survivors include his wife Ann and two sons. Services were held in Glenview.

Rubber Workers Open Talks with Tire Producers

The Rubber Workers opened negotiations with the nation's tire industry, seeking new contracts to replace current agreements that expire Apr. 20.

Both sides expressed optimism over reaching a timely settlement, pointing out that communications between them have improved over the past five years.

THE UNION initiated bargaining with Firestone officials in Cleveland, B. F. Goodrich in Columbus, Ohio, and with Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. in Dayton. Uniroyal Inc., the other major tire-maker, agreed last December to accept the master agreement approved by the other three companies.

URW President Milan Stone, who was elected last October to succeed the retired Peter Bommarito, said some 45,000 members of the union will be affected by the bargaining.

Union goals include improvements in wages, benefits and protections, particularly in the areas of pensions, safety and health, and cost-of-living allowances after retirement. Also, the union will be looking for greater worker protection in the event of plant closures.

All four major firms are in solid financial condition, making good profits last year, Stone observed.

'Union Angels' Renovate Cleveland Aid Center

Cleveland—Laid-off union building tradesmen here are having a rough time making ends meet. But that's not stopping them from working without pay to convert an old bar and bowling alley into an emergency aid center to feed and clothe people whose circumstances are worse than their own.

The building trades volunteers are called "union angels" by Sister Kathleen Kilbane, who is director of the West Side Catholic Center.

THE CENTER has been providing daily lunches for 200 needy persons and clothing for as many as 1,200 monthly in its old quarters, a former funeral home. But the center has run out of room, so it is expanding.

"We put out a plea for help and these wonderful union members and their leaders responded," said Sister Kilbane, who said she operates the center on the biblical philosophy of the loaves and the fishes. "What we receive from donations, we give out," she said. "Somehow it just seems to work out."

The Cleveland AFL-CIO and the Building & Construction Trades Council had heard of the need and recruited the unions.

A DOZEN members of Cement Masons Local 404, Laborers Local 310 and Teamsters Local 436 worked two days to complete a cement floor over the former bowling lanes.

Tile Setters Local 36 moved in with a dozen men and secured donated tile to completely turn the former bar into an eating and recreation place for the many needy persons who live in the neighborhood. Members of Electrical Workers Local 38 and Plumbers Local 55 donated their time installing new wiring and plumbing. The second floor will be used for an emergency shelter for abused women.

"It is beautiful what these nuns and volunteers are doing here to feed and clothe really needy people," said Peter J. Oliver, 58, a 32-year veteran of the cement finishing trade who has been off work since November. He said it was just good to be working with cement again.

Herman Panigutti, business agent of the Cement Masons local, said that when the story about the work hit the newspapers, the union received a dozen calls or more from other members volunteering to help.

SISTER KILBANE, whose center serves all religious denominations, said the building was purchased for $135,000 with donations from 18 West Side Catholic churches. Money for renovation ran short.

"Without the union members and the contractors, we'd be dead ducks," she said.

She said it would cost an estimated $10,000 for the floor and another $10,000 for the tile work.

She also got a surprise $900 food donation from the Food & Commercial Workers District 427 after its president, Frank Cimino, saw the renovation. A major supermarket joined the union effort in making the food available.

"Because of the unions it looks like we will be able to open in May as we earlier planned," Sister Kilbane said.

EMERGENCY AID CENTER that serves the needy on Cleveland's West Side is being renovated by unemployed building trades craftsmen who are working on the project without pay. Patrick Kilbane of Cement Masons Local 404 works the trowel as Sister Kathleen Kilbane, center director, and Local 404 Business Agent Herman Panigutti observe the progress. The Kilbanes are not related. Above, Cement Masons discuss the project. Included are Local President Daniel Owens and members Geno Zaccardella, Samuel Scarpelli, Louis Sandera and Patrick Kilbane. Sister Kilbane is with the Sisters of St. Joseph.

Jobs Key to Recovery

Kirkland Asks Reversal Of Tax, Budget Policies

(Continued from Page 1)

istration and congressional proposals to cut back "entitlements" under government programs and to abolish or limit cost-of-living indexing of various retirement benefits.

The victims of such cutbacks will be those who have already been hardest hit by last year's retrenchments and the many workers pushed out of their jobs, Kirkland protested.

"These people are placed in an unprecedented double jeopardy of having their jobs destroyed by the Administration's blind adherence to dismal economic theory, and then having their subsistence threatened by budget cuts," he testified.

AT HOUSE hearings, Kirkland was asked whether union contracts in depressed industries that postponed cost-of-living adjustments set a precedent for "reducing the impact of indexing" on the federal budget.

Kirkland rejected the analogy, stressing that union contract concessions are negotiated, and workers affected receive in return provisions that will strengthen their job security.

He reminded Congress that it turned to an automatic cost-of-living adjustment for social security to get off a pattern of political pressure to vote big increases in benefits in election years.

"IT IS WELL to remember when one tears down a structure why it was built in the first place," Kirkland suggested.

Indexing tied to the cost of living "is a messenger," Kirkland said. "It is not a cause of the problems that we have. It brings the message of what is happening in our economy."

A "far more fruitful area for Congress to address," Kirkland suggested, "would be this terribly destructive, lethal tight-money policy which is locking us into high interest rates."

At both hearings, Kirkland put forth the AFL-CIO's alternative to the Administration budget. He called for job-creating investments in public facilities, revival of the housing industry, restoration of job training programs, curbs on economy-destroying imports, and establishment of a Reconstruction Finance Corp. "to start the rebuilding of the economic and urban industrial base that is the economic lifeblood of the nation."

KIRKLAND termed the Administration tax bill that Congress enacted last year "irresponsible" and reiterated the AFL-CIO's proposal to repeal the most unjustified business giveaways and limit the individual tax reductions this year and next to a maximum of $700 a family—a ceiling that would affect only about 15 percent of taxpayers.

He said the surtax the AFL-CIO has proposed to pay for any defense spending increase Congress deems necessary should tap the income of corporations before tax-avoidance loopholes, as well as individual incomes.

Again and again, Kirkland hammered across the point that a healthy economy pointed toward full employment is the only path to a balanced budget.

HE REMINDED the House Budget Committee that last year it had adopted what was supposed to have been a balanced budget. It turned into a huge deficit instead, with the help of a "fiscally irresponsible" tax cut and the Administration's "crackpot" economic theories.

Kirkland likened the destructive effect of the Administration's tight-money policy to wartime devastation.

In effect, he said in response to a question, "we have destroyed something over a million houses a year that ought to have been built and would have been built, sold and occupied" if interest rates hadn't been kept so high. "We probably didn't bomb that many houses in a year in World War II."

AND HE spoke repeatedly of the people in every part of the country who are the victims—of a South Carolina cotton mill town where he lived as a youth, where unemployment is now about 20 percent and "the last mill in that town closed down."

In Senate testimony, Kirkland noted the multiple battering that the poor and unemployed are taking.

When unemployment insurance is cut back, it's a cut also in food and health care for the children "whose parents are able to provide for them only because of jobless benefits."

Families that are hit by reductions in AFDC welfare benefits are further punished by "cuts in child health programs, community medical care programs, day care and the like—all of which were designed to make it possible for children born in poverty to have a chance to end the cycle of deprivation being passed on from generation to generation."

HE URGED the committee, in considering Administration demands for new retrenchments, "to look at those cuts not as separate, isolated programs, but as another door being slammed on people" who have already borne the heaviest burden.

"No more sacrifices can be made by these Americans of all ages who were battered by last year's cuts and now face further erosion of their meager life support programs," Kirkland insisted. "No more sacrifice."

Caplan Elected to Head Area Histadrut Group

Marvin Caplan, who served as legislative director of the Industrial Union Dept. and director of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights before his retirement last year, has been elected chair of the Washington Area Friends of Histadrut.

The organization has helped Israel's trade union federation provide scholarships for young workers, among other activities.

AS LAID-OFF AUTO WORKERS jammed a Capitol Hill hearing room, UAW President Douglas A. Fraser told a House Commerce subcommittee that a domestic content law would help revive the ailing U.S. auto industry and create thousands of new jobs. Fraser was joined by UAW Research Director Sheldon Friedman, left, and Legislative Director Richard Warden.

UAW Drawing Up Proposals For American Motors Pact

The Auto Workers voted to open talks with the financially ailing American Motors Corp. over the company's four-month-old request for wage and benefit concessions to see it through its current sales slump.

But at a caucus of its 42-member American Motors Council in Milwaukee, the union rejected an updated version of the firm's original "employee investment plan," and said it would come up with a counterproposal.

UAW PRESIDENT Douglas A. Fraser said following the vote that while the original AMC plan "demanded too much of the American Motors worker," the idea of investing in the firm was "constructive, innovative and we're interested in it."

AMC is the third auto company with which the UAW has agreed to enter into early contract talks this year. Negotiations with Ford Motor Co. produced an early settlement, while bargaining with General Motors Corp., ended in failure. The GM talks are expected to resume shortly, however, and the union has also agreed to begin early talks with International Harvester Co., which makes farm machinery, trucks, and construction equipment.

Under AMC's original proposal, wages would revert to the level in effect prior to the last general increase in September 1981 and remain frozen for 22 months until January 1984. Employees would also give up certain paid time-off provisions and some additional vacation time.

IN RETURN, workers would have their deferred pay increases placed in individual accounts, and the company would repay the amount with 10 percent interest beginning in 1984.

AMC officials said the plan would generate $150 million toward a $1 billion product development program.

UAW Sec.-Treas. Ray Majerus told AMC officials that "we will put together a counterproposal as quickly as we can." He said "the whole thrust of the plan is to provide job security."

Bank Descriptions of IRAs Challenged as Misleading

Bank advertisements claiming spectacular returns from Individual Retirement Accounts (IRAs) are "grossly misleading" and could lead to loss of confidence in the nation's social security system and pension programs.

These charges are leveled by Milton Gwirtzman, former chairman of the National Commission on Social Security, who has asked Chairman Paul Volcker of the Federal Reserve Board to investigate the matter.

IN A LETTER to Volcker, Gwirtzman said banks under the Fed's jurisdiction are running ads almost daily in major newspapers claiming that a couple investing $2,000 each in an IRA for 30 years will become millionaires. The ads are deceptive and misleading in two respects, Gwirtzman points out.

First, at the bottom of the ads in very small type, the banks admit that their calculations result from applying an average interest rate on the deposit of 12 percent, compounded daily. The actual rate to be paid, however, will be based on the going rate for six-month certificates of deposit, Gwirtzman notes. And the average interest rate paid by banks on six-month certificates over the past 30 years has not been 12 percent, but 5.5 percent. The only year in which the certificate rate hit 12 percent was in 1981, he points out.

The other misleading aspect of the bank ads, Gwirtzman says, is that to arrive at their claims, they "must assume double-digit inflation will persist for the next 30 years. (Banks do not pay 12 percent for six-month certificates if general inflation is only 6 or 7 percent.) If that happens, a $652,000 balance in an IRA 30 years from now will be worth only $37,000 in today's dollars.

"This assumes only 10 percent inflation each year. If inflation proves to be higher, it will be worth less. The buying power of the nest egg will have shrunk because, under the inflation the ads do not warn about, prices will be astronomical.

Gwirtzman pointed out that the reason the allowable yearly contribution to an IRA was doubled by last year's tax legislation was to coax additional money into the savings stream, where supposedly it would be invested to help increase the nation's productivity.

"The bloated figures contained in these ads assume the program will fail and inflation will continue unchecked," he observed. "If this happens, IRA depositors will discover to their horror that being a millionaire is a long way from living like one."

Now a Boston attorney, Gwirtzman served as chairman of a bipartisan commission established by Congress to review and recommend retirement options. The panel submitted its final report in March 1981, concluding that social security and expanded private pensions negotiated between workers and employers were vital to America's retirement security.

GWIRTZMAN SAID he was concerned that the "deceptive IRA advertising campaign" being run by the banks will persuade the public that programs like social security and company pensions are unnecessary in view of the promised "bonanza" available from the IRAs.

He asked Volcker and the Fed's board of governors to order all banks subject to its regulatory powers to halt the "misleading" IRA advertising, or alternatively to make it very clear what the real buying power of the yield will be upon retirement.

Stock Exchange Accord to Boost Pay, Benefits 32%

New York—The Office & Professional Employees have negotiated a three-year agreement with the New York Stock Exchange employers group that increases wages and benefits 32 percent for some 2,700 workers.

The agreement, retroactive to last Nov. 1, provides for a 9-percent wage increase the first year; 8 percent next Oct. 31, and 8.5 percent effective Oct. 30, 1983.

OPEIU President John Kelly, who is also business manager of Local 153 which represents the Big Board employees, said the improvement in fringe benefits is valued at 6.5 percent.

Under the agreement, employers assume payments to the retirement funds of 3 percent of each worker's salary, and beginning in October 1983 health plan coverage will be extended to retirees.

The contract covers NYSE workers, as well as the exchange's three subsidiaries: Deposit Trust Co., Securities Industry Automation Corp. and the New York Futures Exchange.

'Stop The Massacre'

A THREE-TERM Republican congressman from western Pennsylvania stood before the House on the afternoon of Mar. 9 to tell his colleagues that the emperor had no clothes.

The Reagan Administration economic program that he and other Republicans had loyally followed has been a disaster. Fifteen percent of his constituents are unemployed. Good and needed programs have been destroyed.

"The time has come to stop this massacre," Rep. Marc Lincoln Marks urged.

He spoke in sorrow "as one who voted for every major program that Ronald Reagan and this Administration had put forth." He had swallowed his doubts because, "like so many of you, I believed this Administration's plan should be given a chance to work."

BUT IT CLEARLY hasn't worked, Congressman Marks said. His jobless constituents are owed "not only an explanation" but a restoration of their jobs and self-respect. There's only "more misery" ahead, he warned, if the Administration doesn't acknowledge that its "voodoo economics" hasn't worked and doesn't start making "the necessary corrections."

The Pennsylvania congressman voiced his agreement with the sharp criticism leveled against the President a week earlier by Sen. Bob Packwood of Oregon, the chairman of the Republican Senate Campaign Committee.

Packwood said President Reagan appears to have "written off" working women and minorities, and has a concept of America that doesn't square with reality.

To smooth ruffled feathers, Packwood subsequently apologized to the President. But he pointedly did not take back the substance of his remarks.

Congressman Marks, who is not seeking re-election, wondered aloud at the Administration's failure to respond to the concerns of labor "to avoid the acid rain of economic disaster."

HE CAUTIONED his GOP colleagues that "if present policies persist, the American people will choose new leadership—and how can we blame them?"

On the facing page of this issue is comparably dramatic testimony from the business community, at least from one of its more responsible leaders.

It's worth reading in full, and it makes this unanswerable point: "The biggest weakness of the Reagan Revolution is that it is just plain unfair."

The president of Time, Inc., J. Richard Munro, concedes that the economic fallacies of the Reagan program "were obvious from the start. We all knew that, but we went along anyway."

And the burden of sacrifice, he reminds us, has fallen on the poor, "who had less to do with this mess than anyone else."

OTHERS, in and out of Congress, have been coming to the same conclusion.

Obviously, it is still an uphill battle to persuade this Congress to make the sharp turn that is necessary to get us on the road back. A few mea culpas do not a Senate majority make.

But America's voice is beginning to penetrate—even to Capitol Hill.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
LANE KIRKLAND, President
THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward	Murray H. Finley
Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts	Sol C. Chaikin
Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco	Charles H. Pillard
J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride	David J. Fitzmaurice
Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps	Wm. W. Winpisinger
William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell	John DeConcini
Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss	William Konyha
Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney	Douglas A. Fraser
Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield	Barbara Hutchinson
Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto	Gerald W. McEntee

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop, John R. Oravec
David L. Perlman, James M. Shevis

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, March 13, 1982 No. 10

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

International Labor Press AFL-CIO/CLC Association

Deeper and Deeper . . .

Tenets Still Apply

Reagan Has Much to Learn From Madison's Federalism

By Gus Tyler

ONE NIGHT, as Ronald Reagan was contemplating the "new federalism," his eye—or his mind's eye—fell upon the figure of an ancient man, with powdered wig topping a solemn mien.

"And who may you be?" asked RR in his usual amiable manner.

"I am James Madison," said the figure in a Virginia accent.

"And what may I do for you?" asked RR.

"You could do me a favor by reading Federalist Paper No. 10 that I had the honor to write almost 200 years ago."

"Isn't it out of date?" asked RR.

"It will be out of date just as soon as human nature is out of date," grunted Madison.

"OH, I KNOW all about human nature," smiled RR. "That's why I am promoting my new federalism. The only people you can trust are those who are part of your small circle, whether it be your state, your country, or your town. The less interference from the federal government the better. Right?"

"No," snorted Madison, "wrong. Let me read you a few words from my No. 10. 'The smaller the society, the fewer probably will be the distinct parties and interests composing it; the fewer the distinct parties and interests, the more frequently will a majority be found of the same party; and the smaller the number of individuals composing a majority, and the smaller the compass within which they are placed, the more easily will they concert and execute their plans of oppression.' "

"Oppression?" asked RR. "Why should a majority want to oppress a minority?"

"BECAUSE THAT'S the way of human nature," continued Madison. "To quote myself again. 'The latent causes of faction are sown in the nature of man. . . . [They] have divided mankind into parties, inflamed them with mutual animosity, and rendered them much more disposed to vex and oppress each other, than to cooperate for their common good.' "

"But, if that is so," said RR sorrowfully, "we are all lost. We will all be the victims of prejudice and oppression. How can we wipe out these causes of faction?"

"You can't," replied Madison flatly. "If you had read No. 10, you would see that I said so bluntly. But don't despair. There's a way to handle it. Put only limited power in local governments, in towns and states. Put more power in the federal government because the bigger and the more diverse the power center, the less likelihood will there be that any one interest will be a majority. Indeed, that's exactly why we created a United States in the first place."

"It doesn't say so in the Constitution," demurred RR.

"THAT'S WHY you ought to read No. 10. Just one final quote: 'Extend the sphere (roll the states into one big government) and you take in a greater variety of parties and interests; you make it less probable that a majority of the whole will have a common motive to invade the rights of other citizens."

"Are you trying to tell me that the rights of citizens are more secure with the federal government than with the states?" asked RR.

"You're a quick study, lad. You'd get a lot out of reading No. 10."

Copyright 1982, Gus Tyler Columns

A Society's Obligation To the Unemployed

One in ten American workers is currently looking for a job. When unemployment strikes, it is the duty of a responsible and a civilized society to:

- Assist the unemployed in their job search through effective employment services.
- Improve the skills of the unemployed through realistic job training programs.
- Maintain a decent quality of life through unemployment insurance.
- Develop a strategy for relieving the burdens of the unemployed by creating jobs.

The Administration has failed to perform these four basic tasks.

—Rep. George Miller (D-Calif.) in House debate on funding for employment services.

'Just Plain Unfair'

A Business Leader Speaks Out On Reagan's Harmful Policies

The following is excerpted from a speech by J. Richard Munro, president of Time Inc., to the Association of National Advertisers in New York, Feb. 25.

THE REAGAN REVOLUTION is doing grave danger to the quality of life in America.

And I'm concerned at the silence about this from my fellow business executives. Is it because we don't realize what's happening?

Perhaps we're still dazzled by the goodies from Washington for business, especially the tax cuts. We got 10-5-3 and other corporate tax cuts we didn't imagine getting in our wildest dreams.

Also, we've just seen the 1983 fiscal year budget go to Congress, with plenty of programs to benefit business, especially if you can tap the defense budget. And we've seen one business regulation after another slip away.

THIS HAS BEEN a good year for business. But for everyone else, it's been a year of great uncertainty—for the poor, a new host of sacrifices—and for us all, a decline in the ethic of common obligation.

Last year, 70 percent of the $35 billion in cuts came from programs which affect the poor. This year, roughly 90 percent—about $23 billion of the $26 billion total cuts—come from these programs.

To detail some of those proposed cuts:

- With the highest U.S. unemployment since the Depression, and headed higher, the public service jobs program is all but wiped out. The Job Corps, our most successful long-term training program, is cut by one-third. The employment service—which helps the jobless find work—is cut again sharply—to half its 1981 level.
- The poor served by Medicaid will have to begin paying a share of their bills. When I say poor, I mean poor. To qualify for Medicaid, a family of four has to earn less than $6,000 in New York, $3,700 in Delaware, and $1,700 in Texas—four people living on $1,700 a year.
- Aid to families with children is cut by 30 percent, on top of a 1982 cut of half that amount.

One of the proposals to cut costs in this program is astounding—rounding the cents on each check to the next lowest whole dollar. The budget proposes the same "rounding down" for unemployment checks.

- Food stamps for the elderly and disabled families will be cut an average of 25 percent. Child nutrition programs will get a 15 percent cut. Already because of 1982 cuts, an estimated one million fewer needy children now get a school lunch.
- As for legal aid to the poor—all funds are eliminated.

Hand-in-hand with these deep cuts—and just as disturbing—is the "new federalism."

The social programs proposed for return to states will bring huge new costs with them. The states will also start cutting programs.

BESIDES THE budget cuts and "new federalism," there is a third area that concerns me—the hasty retreat from government regulation.

Highway safety, job safety and health environmental quality, and consumer protections are being severely weakened—far more than justified by the need for greater efficiency.

Since the mine safety budget was cut sharply last year, deaths in the mines are already higher than any year since 1976.

A special concern is the retreat from civil rights enforcement. The equal employment agency and Labor Dept. have exempted so many employers that the heat's off for affirmative action—companies can go back to business as usual.

Also, the Administration recently—and shamefully—reversed a long-standing denial of tax exemptions to segregationist private schools.

THERE IS a crying need in our country for improved productivity—for new investments—for greater incentives to take risks—and for economies that pay long-term dividends.

Yet the program begun last year has chosen short-term economies that either shift large costs elsewhere or ignore needed long-term investments.

An Illinois congressman told of what happened when federal CETA job program funds stopped for one employee of a small day-care center:

"When that CETA employee was cut off, the center couldn't function. It folded.

"The result: The former CETA employee is now drawing unemployment compensation; the four women who were full-time employees of the day-care center are drawing unemployment compensation; four of the women who were able to work because they had a place to leave their children have had to quit jobs and go on welfare."

THE BIGGEST weakness of the Reagan Revolution is that it is just plain unfair.

Deficits are soaring because of internal contradictions in the Administration's program—that were obvious from the start. We all knew that, but we went along anyway.

There's no way we could spend $1.5 trillion for defense, cut taxes by three-quarters of a trillion, hold social security steady, balance the budget, go through a deep recession, and have money left over for anything else.

Yet who gets the blame? The poor. Who makes the sacrifices? The poor. And who has less to do with this mess than anyone else? The poor.

Contradictory Stands

White House Undercuts Drive To Extend Voting Rights Law

CONTINUATION of a strong federal voting rights law and wider opportunities for qualified voters to register are critical to assuring all Americans the guarantees of the Constitution, AFL-CIO Civil Rights Director William E. Pollard said on Labor News Conference.

Achieving that goal is made doubly difficult, Pollard said, by the policies and practices of the Reagan Administration and conservatives who hold key leadership positions in the Senate. The President's actions in civil rights areas often contradict his public positions, stemming from the positions taken by White House advisers, he observed on the network radio interview.

Pollard pointed out that while the President was saying that he would "enforce voting rights at the point of a bayonet, if necessary," his Attorney General was on Capitol Hill urging Congress to weaken proposals to extend the Voting Rights Act beyond its August expiration date.

Noting that the Voting Rights Act has been in effect only 17 years and provides less than "a complete remedy," Pollard said it is not enough to offset "a hundred years of discrimination and denial of blacks, in particular, the right to vote." He pointed out that blacks hold only 18 of the 535 House and Senate seats, a ratio far out of line with the "eligible black voter population in a number of congressional districts."

WHILE BLACKS have been elected to many more state and local offices since adoption of the 1965 law, they still hold "less than 1 percent of the total elected public offices in the United States —and that is not enough," he stressed.

Pollard said the AFL-CIO will work closely with the major civil rights organizations and other public interest groups as they focus on "expanded voter registration and increased black voter participation as a number one priority, beginning in 1982."

That, he declared, will be "a major weapon in changing the attitudes of this Administration."

By Press Associates, Inc.

"THERE ARE THOSE who will always require help from the rest of us on a permanent basis and we'll provide that help. To those with temporary need, we should have programs that are aimed at making them self-sufficient as soon as possible."

President Reagan, in that speech before the Conservative Political Action Conference, was trying to defend himself against "sob sister attempts" to portray his new budget cuts "as a hard-hearted attack on the poor people of America."

The famous "safety net" by now is badly shredded. There are those in the Administration who believe the latest phrases in use by the White House—the "totally dependent" or the "permanent" needy—apply only to the helpless elderly and the truly disabled who cannot work.

DESPITE THE President's expressed concern about helping people help themselves up the ladder, the fact is his budget cuts are driving the working poor into poverty and the very poor into permanent poverty.

When the Administration was in hot pursuit of its balanced budget goal last year, it won $25 billion in social program cuts from Congress. Now it is seeking billions more in cuts to deal with runaway deficits.

In analyzing the effects of last year's budget cuts and Reagan's proposed new cuts, the University of Chicago Center for the Study of Social Policy found that the heaviest burden falls on the "working poor" — those families with a part-time or full-time wage earner whose incomes are still below the subsistence level.

It is ironic, wrote Tom Joe, the center's director, that a program claimed by the Administration to help the poor work their way out of need rather than remaining dependent on government does just the opposite.

THE CENTER'S analysis found that Reagan new budget cut proposals would force some 14 million of the neediest individuals—those with no income other than public aid—deeper into poverty. This group includes children, the disabled, the elderly and mothers unable to work.

But the brunt of the cuts now in effect and those proposed for fiscal 1983 would fall on low-income families trying to work their way out of poverty.

The center points out that, according to the 1980 census, half the 6 million families in poverty worked at least part of the year. About 16 percent of those receiving Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) or 600,000 individuals, and 20 percent of those getting food stamps, or 4.4 million persons, work at any given time.

Of the 2.9 million female-headed families in poverty, 1.1 million worked in 1980. What's more, the number of poverty families working rose by 19 percent to 3.1 million between 1978 and 1980.

ON A NATIONAL average, the income of an AFDC working mother and two children would fall from $595 a month at the poverty line to $432 a month, or 73 percent of the poverty line, just from cuts in AFDC and food stamps.

The Reagan proposals have the effect "of locking low-income workers into poverty by making it more profitable for the majority of families to remain unemployed," the center said.

The nation's collection of social welfare programs is inadequate, yet it has been reasonably responsive, the center noted. Now the Administration is changing an unsatisfactory system into one that is less flexible and "more likely to permanently entrap low income families in poverty." Instead of breaking the cycle of dependence from generation to generation—a bipartisan goal—the new Reagan proposals may actually promote it, the center concluded.

STRONG PROTECTIONS for the right to vote and wider opportunities for qualified voters to register are the key to assuring all Americans the guarantees of the Constitution, AFL-CIO Civil Rights Director Williiam E. Pollard, center, declared on Labor News Conference. He was questioned by Peggy Simpson of the Boston Herald-American and Marc Gibson of the Sheridan Broadcasting Network. The AFL-CIO-produced public affairs program is aired weekly over Mutual radio network.

Jobless Rate Approaches Postwar High

(Continued from Page 1)

er conditions as two-thirds of the nation experienced one of the harshest Januarys on record. BLS regarded the February data, with the rate back at 8.8 percent, as a kind of "correction" of the January figures.

Every general category of workers posted an increase in unemployment in February. The jobless rate for adult men, the most closely watched figure, edged up from 7.5 to 7.6 percent over the month. The rate for full-time workers went from 8.4 to 8.5 percent.

HISPANICS AND teenagers both showed increases of six-tenths of 1 percent. The rate for teenagers rose to 22.3 percent and for Hispanics to 12.6 percent. There were also increases in joblessness among white collar workers.

Black workers continued to face the greatest problems in the job market. Comprising 10 percent of the labor force, they constituted 20 percent of the unemployed last month. Since July, the black jobless rate has risen from 14.9 to 17.3 percent. Over the same period, the jobless rate for whites has gone up from 6.3 to 7.7 percent. The rate for black teenagers rose to 42.3 percent from 41.2 percent in January.

Other signs of the long-term effects of the recession:

- Workers who have been unemployed for three months or more increased by about 325,000 to 2.7 million in February.
- The percentage of Americans holding jobs slipped to 57.3 percent last month, the lowest level in four and a half years.
- The number of persons working part time for economic reasons—sometimes referred to as the "partially unemployed"—rose by nearly a half-million in February to a record 5.6 million.

CURRENT ECONOMIC CONDITIONS have borne out labor's warnings of a year ago that the Reagan budget for fiscal 1982 was unworkable, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland told the Longshoremen's special convention. He cited the nation's deepening recession, mounting unemployment, increasing bankruptcies and spreading poverty.

Unions Growing In Public Sector, Census Reveals

Nearly half the nation's 10.3 million full-time state and local government workers belonged to unions or associations that function as unions in 1980, the Census Bureau reported.

The bureau's annual survey showed that union membership in the public sector workforce increased to 5,030,564 from 4,881,246 in 1979. On a percentage basis, 48.8 percent of the sector's full-time workers held union cards in October 1980, compared with 47.9 percent a year earlier.

THE LARGEST concentration of organized employees was at the local government level—municipal, county and township—which accounted for 51.9 percent of the total. Union membership at the state level was 40.5 percent.

Fire fighters were the most highly organized group of public sector workers, with 70.6 percent holding union cards, followed by teachers, 64.9 percent; police, 52.7 percent; highway workers, 45 percent; welfare employees, 41.8 percent; sanitation workers, 40.2 percent; hospital workers, 40 percent, and non-teaching school employees, 38.1 percent.

Teachers, however, represented the largest block of organized public employees with 2,031,218 holding union cards in October 1980. They accounted for 40 percent of all organized workers in the sector.

During the 12-month period ended October 1980, there were 34,751 labor-management agreements in effect, including 12,157 new settlements and 12,157 renegotiated agreements.

There were 502 work stoppages during the 12-month period, with 480 coming at the local government level. School employees were involved in 252 walkouts, municipal workers in 125, county employees in 63 and township workers in 17.

Back Pay Won For 600 in IUE Sex Bias Suit

Trenton, N.J.—The Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers have successfully settled a sex discrimination suit against Westinghouse Electric Corp. that will mean promotions and back pay for some 600 present and former workers at the company's lamp-making plant here.

The case, which had been reviewed by the Supreme Court, was considered a key test of the issue of equal pay for work of comparable value.

The class action suit brought by the IUE and its Local 449 charged Westinghouse with paying women lower wages than male workers for doing jobs which, though different, required equal skills.

IN 1981, the Supreme Court upheld IUE's contention that the practice was a violation of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. The high court sent the case back to the U.S. District Court here for action. The court approved the settlement terms Feb. 26.

Under the settlement, the jobs of some 85 current workers will be upgraded, and they'll get hourly raises of 7.5, 10.5 or 22 cents, depending on the grade level. The company will also set aside a $75,000 backpay fund to be divided among former employees covered by the suit. Amounts paid will be based on hours worked.

Most of the workers in the jobs being upgraded are held by women, but men in these positions will also benefit, IUE said.

Parts of the case had been settled in 1980 when Westinghouse, in another court-approved settlement, provided back pay and promotion opportunities to 49 women workers in settlement of specific sex discrimination charges.

Longshore Delegates Adopt New Political Action Program

Hollywood, Fla.—A special convention of the Longshoremen launched a new political action program to stem the tide of government incursions in its affairs that have left the union and the longshoring industry weakened.

"Government interference has been a major cause of disputes and confrontations in the industry," ILA President Thomas W. Gleason told the 400 delegates assembled for the convention. "The longshore industry is becoming the subject of ever-increasing regulation by federal, state, municipal, and bi-state agencies.

"ANTI-LABOR attitudes on the part of powerful government officials as well as the introduction of anti-labor bills in Congress have introduced an added burden at a time when the country's and the industry's competitive positions are under stress. What is really necessary to maintain the gains made until now, and industry progress in the future, is understanding and cooperation, not obstacles."

Delegates voted unanimously to establish a political education committee to be known as ILA-COPE, which will campaign in behalf of candidates for political and party office, and legislative, executive and judicial positions that are supportive of ILA goals.

The political education program will be funded through voluntary payroll checkoff of contributions.

At the same time, the special convention approved a constitutional amendment to reduce per capita payments by 10 percent. All members will benefit from the per capita decrease whether they agree to the checkoff or not. The plan will take effect on July 1.

GLEASON LAUDED the action, citing particularly the need to combat congressional attacks against the 1972 amendments to the Longshoremen's & Harbor Workers Compensation Act, which conferred long overdue coverages and benefits on dockworkers.

"Instead of promoting safety to prevent accidents and their aftermath, attempts are under way to disembowel the act," he charged.

Delegates also voted to fill six major union offices which have been vacant, and heard from a number of speakers, including AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, who lashed out at the Reagan Administration's handling of the economy and its failure to take a stronger stand against the Polish and Soviet governments for repressing Poland's Solidarity free trade union movement.

"A year ago, we warned that the President's budget was unworkable," Kirkland recalled. "We said it would lead to a deep recession, massive unemployment, business bankruptcies, and increasing poverty.

"OUR ECONOMIC predictions have been borne out, while the President's economists have been hemming and hawing—when they haven't been cooking the books."

Other speakers were Rep. Mario Biaggi (D-N.Y.), Rep. Claude Pepper (D-Fla.), President Daniel J. Miller of the Florida State AFL-CIO, President James J. Dickman and Atty. Peter Lambos of the New York Shipping Association, and Executive Vice President David J. Tolan of Sea-Land Industries.

Elected to fill union vacancies were Joseph Kenny, Benny Holland, Jr., Al Cernadas, and Frank Lonardo as vice presidents, Donald Carson as general organizer, and Alexander Talmadge, assistant general organizer.

NLRB Upheld on Union Rights of Aliens

Chicago—The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit upheld a National Labor Relations Board decision that a Chicago firm that turned in several of its workers as illegal aliens after losing a representation election constructively discharged them and violated federal labor law.

"There seems nothing like a successful union election to concentrate an employer's mind on the color of its workers' visas (if they exist) and on its moral obligations to expel its (once faithful) employees from the country," Judge Richard D. Cudahy observed.

IN ORDERING enforcement of the NLRB's reinstatement and backpay order for the five workers involved, the court held that the remedy does not flout the immigration laws. The workers were allowed to return to their native Mexico voluntarily rather than be deported by the Immigration & Naturalization Service, and the court directed that the reinstatement remain open for four years to allow them time to re-enter the United States legally. It approved a minimum of six months' back pay liability.

The court acknowledged that the workers might be tempted to re-enter the country unlawfully to claim reinstatement and back pay, but added that, "as a practical matter, we believe it unlikely that a discriminatee would attempt to illegally enter the United States primarily to pursue his remedies and thus draw attention to his illegal alien status."

The case dates back to 1976 when Chicago Leather Workers Local 431 won an election among 11 employees, including the Mexican illegal aliens, at Sure-Tan, Inc., and Surak Leather Co. The two companies are considered to be a single integrated employer owned and operated by Steve and John Surak.

THE NLRB found that John Surak violated the National Labor Relations Act by interrogating and threatening employees whom he suspected of favoring the union. After the election, Surak determined that the workers did not have proper immigration papers, and after the union was certified as bargaining agent he notified the INS of the workers' immigration status.

The appeals court rejected the employer's argument that it did not constructively discharge the workers because it was under a legal obligation to report illegal aliens to the INS. The employer's notification to the INS was the reason the workers returned to Mexico, the court pointed out.

The evidence supports the NLRB's conclusion that Surak was aware that his employees were illegal aliens, the court held, rejecting Surak's claim that he was merely performing a civic duty in reporting suspected violators to the INS.

AN EMPLOYER is not required by law to report illegal aliens to the INS, Judge Cudahy ruled, and "has no right to rely on a 'moral obligation' to report illegal aliens merely to sanctify an otherwise unjustifiable violation" of federal labor law.

The court also rejected Sure-Tan's argument that under the circumstances of the case an award of reinstatement and back pay cannot be reconciled with the laws and policies governing both immigration and labor relations.

Because these workers were not deported, it remains possible for them to return lawfully to the United States to accept reinstatement, the court pointed out.

Supreme Court Bars Tampering with Contracts

The Supreme Court ruled unanimously that federal courts may not tamper with the collective bargaining process by rewriting contracts, a position that had been urged by the AFL-CIO.

The case that reached the Supreme Court stemmed from a lawsuit that challenged as "unreasonable" a section of the United Mine Workers contract with the bituminous coal producers dealing with continuation of health benefits for survivors of UMW members.

A DIVIDED U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit had upheld the suit brought by a group of widows against trustees of the health and welfare plan. The suit sought to overturn a contract provision that gave lifetime health benefits to the widows of retired miners but only limited continuation of benefits for widows of members who died before retirement.

Although the UMW is not an affiliate, the AFL-CIO filed a brief with the Supreme Court because it viewed the appellate court decision as an infringement on collective bargaining.

The unanimous Supreme Court decision, written by Justice John Paul Stevens, noted that the disputed contract provision stemmed from give-and-take collective bargaining and did not conflict with Taft-Hartley Act obligations for administering trust funds for the benefit of employees.

THE SUPREME COURT conclusion, along lines that had been urged by the AFL-CIO, was: "When neither the collective bargaining process nor its end product violates any command of Congress, a federal court has no authority to modify the substantive terms of a collective bargaining contract."

Two appellate court decisions generally favorable to the union position became final as the Supreme Court refused to review them.

One ruling allows the Labor Dept. to obtain information about the financing and real sponsorship of so-called employee committees set up to resist union organization.

THE INVESTIGATION, initiated under the Carter Administration, sought to determine whether two such committees at J. P. Stevens should be required to register and submit reports of "persuader activity" under the Labor-Management Reporting & Disclosure Act.

The Labor Dept. had sought membership and financial contribution data from the J. P. Stevens Employee Education Committee and a group called Stevens People and Friends for Freedom.

The 4th Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals held the Labor Dept. had the right to such information about anyone involved in the committees who was not a nonsupervisory employee of the company. That decision is now binding.

IN ANOTHER case, involving continuation of disability benefits during a strike, the decision of the 3rd Circuit Court of Appeals became final.

That case involves a strike by a Pittsburgh local of the Auto Workers in late 1977 against the E. L. Wiegand Division of Emerson Electric Co.

When the strike began, the company discontinued sickness and accident benefits to workers then disabled, as well as stopping payments of premiums for future health protections.

An NLRB law judge held that the company was obligated to continue benefits to those already receiving them, and that is the position the federal appellate court upheld. The NLRB, in a split decision, had taken the position that the company didn't have to continue benefits to disabled workers who had expressed their support for the strike but was obligated to continue benefits to any disabled employees who had not done so.

THE APPELLATE court saw no reason for such distinction, holding that disability payments are "accrued benefits" for past work and are payable within the period of the strike to disabled employees.

The Supreme Court also let stand a 7th Circuit decision on labor protection provisions for employees of the bankrupt Milwaukee Railroad that had been challenged by the Railway Labor Executives' Association.

The appellate court, over union objections, had allowed the bankruptcy trustee of the railroad to modify and defer labor protection provisions enacted by Congress as part of the Milwaukee Railroad Reorganization Act.

Pinochet Regime Denounced For Attack on Chile's Unions

The AFL-CIO joined the Chilean labor movement in a new denunciation of the repressive economic and social policies of the Pinochet regime and pledged its continuing support of Chilean workers represented by free trade unions.

In a joint statement following a meeting in Washington between Federation President Lane Kirkland and President Eduardo Rios of the Democratic Confederation of Workers (UDT) of Chile, the two called international attention to the latest and most vicious effort of the Pinochet regime to intimidate and throttle union activity in that South American country.

Days after calling for trade union unity, UDT leader Tucapel Jimenez—active alongside Rios and president of the National Federation of Government Employees—was murdered and left lying along the roadside next to the taxi he drove to supplement his living. His throat was cut to near decapitation and he was shot twice in the head.

RIOS IS ALSO president of the Confederation of Maritime Workers of Chile, recently closed down by the regime for its outspoken opposition to its rule.

While in Washington, Rios scheduled meetings with the Human Rights Commission of the Organization of American States, the International Labor Organization, and government representatives to bring them up to date on the "disastrous" situation in his country.

Earlier, Kirkland told a group of Latin American union leaders graduating from a leadership training course of the American Institute for Free Labor Development that extremists of both the left and right are threats to free trade unionism in the Western Hemisphere because they seek "to debase trade unionism by linking it to the question of who owns the means of production."

TRADE UNIONISTS do not care whether the boss is a capitalist or a commissar nor about other "esoteric theories of social organization," Kirkland said. Instead, it is the union's role to humanize the workplace and the system of government, regardless of its origin, he said.

"We insist only that the workers of any country have the right to choose and run the affairs of their own unions without interference from the state or the employer," Kirkland declared. "The refusal to grant that right—as in Poland today—tells us all we need to know about the character of a government and its attitude toward human rights."

The Latin American unionists comprised the 100th graduating class of AIFLD, the AFL-CIO's foreign affairs arm that works to develop free trade unions in Latin America and the Caribbean. Kirkland noted that many of the graduates were returning to difficult and dangerous jobs as the tide of violence in recent months has been rising in Central America.

"WE CANNOT advise you how to do your job under conditions which most of us do not have to face," he said. "But we do want you to know, and hope that you have learned here, that we share common ideals and hopes, which bind us in fraternal solidarity.

"Your struggle is our struggle. There are no national boundaries in the cause of free trade unionism."

CHILEAN LABOR LEADER Eduardo Rios greets AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland at ceremonies for recent graduates of the American Institute for Free Labor Development. Rios, who is president of a Chilean maritime union as well as head of the Democratic Confederation of Workers in Chile, joined Kirkland in a statement denouncing the repressive economic and social policies of the Pinochet regime and its attempts to stifle free trade unionism in Chile. AIFLD Executive Director William C. Doherty, Jr., is at left.

Credit Pressure, Sanctions Urged Against Soviets

(Continued from Page 1)

trade union rights are among many examples.

Only when it serves the self-interest of these countries are treaty commitments observed, Kirkland stressed.

"We must have a way of affecting that interest, short of military. If we aren't prepared to do that economically," he said, military power becomes the "only other recourse." And "I guarantee you, I much prefer an economic means."

THE WESTERN nations have extended some $80 billion in credits to the Soviet bloc, Kirkland noted. And these easy credits have shored up the economies of the eastern nations, freeing their governments to build up military machines.

Ironically, he noted, western economic aid enables countries hostile to the United States to avoid the "hard choice" between building up military strength and meeting the needs of the people.

In the face of this, Kirkland suggested, the business-as-usual elements in America who would give "cheap and easy credit to the Soviet bloc to acquire more tanks and missiles" amount to "an economic fifth column . . . serving the interests of our enemies."

KIRKLAND reiterated the desirability of continuing to seek agreements and treaties with the Soviet bloc that point toward a reduction of armaments and world peace. "No sane man would prefer continued arms buildup on both sides" if there were "a feasible alternative," he said.

But the agreements reached can be relied on only if violations will bring penalties strong enough to act as a deterrent, Kirkland insisted.

ILO Calls on Poland to Free Imprisoned Trade Unionists

(Continued from Page 1)

breaking down fictitious notions on ownership and how to run an economy."

DESPITE THE Soviet rhetoric, the recommendation of the Governing Body's Freedom of Association Committee was passed by consensus and without objections. The measure is not binding upon the Polish government, which cannot be forced to accept it.

The resolution calls on the ILO—a specialized agency of the United Nations—to send a fact-finding mission to Poland "entrusted with collecting information on all aspects, both legal and factual, of the present case, which would make it possible to establish the facts and facilitate a constructive development of the situation," and calls on Poland to accept such a mission.

Poland, which is not represented on the ILO Governing Body, attempted to address the meeting to advance its side of the case but was ruled out of order by Chairman Gabriel Ventejol of France. The Polish argument was, however, put forth by Cuba, Outer Mongolia, Bulgaria, East Germany, and Hungary as well as the USSR.

"SOLIDARITY IS a criminal organization," Soviet delegate Leonid Kostine charged. "We are not here to support opposition organizations in member states, which have tried to overthrow the elected government of the country. Solidarity took the road of confrontation, right up to the door of civil war."

Searby and Brown rejected Kostine's charges. They pointed out that the Polish people had supported Solidarity in an overwhelming movement to achieve dignity for Polish workers. Searby called on the Polish government to let the ILO mission enter the country "so they (the communists) can show us all these so-called armed divisions that the Polish workers are supposed to be hiding somewhere."

THE FREEDOM OF Association Committee expressed the hope that "the trade union organizations existing in Poland, which were legally recognized by the authorities, may resume their activities as quickly as possible on the basis of trade union legislation consistent with (ILO) Convention numbers 87 and 98, which have been ratified by Poland." The conventions guarantee the right to form trade unions independent of the government.

Continued detention of the Solidarity leaders is "a serious interference with civil liberties and trade union rights," the panel charged.

Neither the United States nor the Soviet Union is represented on the Freedom of Association Committee. Member nations are India, France, Venezuela, Australia, Belgium, Mexico, Ghana, Austria.

CORRECTION

A story on railroad retirement benefits in the Mar. 6 issue of the AFL-CIO News mistakenly reported that Tier II benefits are paid under a program financed entirely by the carriers. As of Oct. 1, 1981, workers covered by the plan have been paying 2 percent of earnings up to $1,850 a month into the Tier II fund. At the same time, the employer contribution was raised from 9.5 to 11.95 percent.

65 Percent of Men's Pay

No Matter What the Job, Women's Earnings Lag

(Continued from Page 1)

the men's median wage of $347 a week.

The greatest disparity was found in the overall sales classification where 33 percent of the workforce is female, but men earn a median weekly paycheck of $366 compared to $190 a week for women, only about 52 percent of the men's wage.

In the retail sales category, about 79 percent of the workers surveyed were women. They earned a median wage of $220 a week against $328 for men. Women's earnings here were only 67 percent of men's.

ONLY IN the category of postal clerks did BLS find nearly comparable earnings. Men's median weekly wages in 1981 were $407 and women's $382 or about 94 percent of the men's wage. In this category, 33 percent of the workers covered by the data were women.

Even in job classes where female workers are in the majority, the BLS study found substantial differences between men's and women's pay. Only in a few categories were the differences less acute.

Women accounted for about 68 percent of the elementary and secondary school teachers, and their median weekly wage of $311 was about 83 percent of the men's median wage of $379.

SOME 91 PERCENT of the registered nurses, dieticians, and therapists in the study were female, and women in this classification made $326 compared to men's wages of $344, about 95 percent of the men's wages for the same work.

Other workers in health service categories, such as nurses' aides, orderlies and practical nurses, posted median weekly earnings for men of $216 compared to women's pay of $185 or about 85 percent of the men's wage. In this category, over 87 percent of the workers were women, the BLS data said.

Service industry workers overall, with a 50.5 percent female workforce, had a median wage of $238 a week for men against $170 for women, or about 71 percent of the men's pay.

In the overall data for manufacturing, men's median weekly wages were $298 in 1981 compared to $187 for women, BLS found. Although some 39 percent of this workforce was made up of women in 1981, they earned only about 63 percent of men's wages for performing the same jobs.

IN FACTORY assembly jobs, 53 percent of the workers surveyed were women, and the BLS data show they made only 69 percent of men's earnings in this category, a median weekly wage of $205 compared to $297 for men.

Only about 28 percent of the managers and administrators covered by the survey were women, the BLS reported. Their median earnings were 61 percent of those for men, $283 compared to $466.

In crafts and related skilled jobs, including many building trades, the BLS survey found less than 6 percent female employment in 1981. Women who did hold those jobs earned only 66 percent of men's wages, a median of $239 a week against $360 for men.

LESS THAN 5 percent of the engineers covered by the study were female, and those women made only 67 percent of wages for men in the same jobs.

In lists of the 20 top occupations for men and for women, male earnings were highest for aerospace engineers, at a median $619 a week, and female earnings were greatest, at $422 a week, for operations and systems researchers. But even that wage ranked below the lowest of the jobs on the men's top 20 list, and it ranked only seventeenth on the men's list. Even then, men made $515 a week for similar jobs.

Elementary and secondary school administrators appeared on both top 20 lists for men and women, ranking tenth in highest pay for women and sixteenth for men. Although 33 percent of the administrators in the study were women, they earned a median $363 a week, or about 70 percent of the $520 median for school administrators, BLS said.

OTHER HIGH-PAYING jobs held by men included stock and bond sales agents at a median $589 weekly; chemical engineers at $583; economists at $580, and lawyers at $574.

For women, other high-paying categories were computer systems analysts at a weekly median of $420 with men in the same jobs making $546, lawyers at $407 with men making $574; physicans at $401 with male doctors making $555, and social scientists at $391 in jobs where men are paid $522.

SOAP OPERA STARS urge public support in the drive for ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment at a press conference in New York called by the Radio & Television Artists. AFTRA ERA Task Force Chair Rita Morley Harvey, at podium, explains that AFTRA members who star in the 10 daytime dramas produced in New York will lobby for ratification of ERA in cities throughout the East, South and Midwest as part of the countdown campaign between now and June 30. Three more states must approve ERA by that deadline for it to become part of the Constitution.

Senate Pressed to Approve Stronger Voting Rights Bill

Any election law that results in discrimination should be clearly prohibited by federal law, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland urged in a statement to a Senate Judiciary subcommittee.

The subcommittee, headed by Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah), is considering legislation to extend key provisions of the Voting Rights Act, which Kirkland termed "the most successful of this country's civil rights laws."

LABOR AND CIVIL rights groups support the bill the House passed during the first session of Congress, which includes language to overcome a Supreme Court decision that weakened enforcement of the law. The Reagan Administration opposes any strengthening amendment.

A plurality decision by the Supreme Court held that groups challenging an at-large election procedure for the Mobile, Ala., City Commission had to prove that the election law had been adopted with the "intent" to discriminate.

Kirkland urged the Senate to specify that election procedures resulting in abridgement of voting rights are illegal regardless of intent.

He said the Administration's objections that this would lead to a "quota" system for elective office are fully overcome by a sentence in the labor-supported bill specifying: "The fact that members of a minority group have not been elected in numbers equal to the group's population shall not, in and of itself, constitute a violation of this section."

KIRKLAND ALSO urged retention of a House-passed provision specifying how jurisdictions now required to obtain advance Justice Dept. approval for changes in voting laws may obtain exemption from the pre-clearance requirement.

The proposed new "bail-out" provisions would enable a substantial number of counties to be released from pre-clearance requirements in 1984, but would retain the requirement for those that have not demonstrated their compliance to national policy, he pointed out.

The AFL-CIO statement noted that the Voting Rights Act, first adopted in 1965 and strengthened in 1975, has led to greatly increased participation by blacks and Hispanics in the nation's political life. But "much remains to be done," Kirkland observed, and the new legislation "will provide the means for further accomplishment."

Bill Pollock Dies At 82, Headed Textile Workers

Ocean City, N.J.—William Pollock, president of the Textile Workers Union of America for 12 years and a former vice president of the AFL-CIO, died Mar. 3 after a heart attack.

Pollock, who was 82, retired in 1972, four years before the TWUA merged with the Clothing Workers to form the Clothing & Textile Workers.

He began his trade union career with the United Textile Workers, serving in the early 1930s as a business manager of Local 25 in his native Philadelphia. He later was a representative with the CIO's Textile Workers Organizing Committee and became secretary-treasurer of the TWUA when it was chartered in 1939.

POLLOCK SERVED the TWUA in that post until 1953 when he was elected executive vice president. He became president of the union three years later. Pollock also served on the AFL-CIO Executive Council from 1967 to 1972.

In a message to his family, Federation President Lane Kirkland and Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue said Pollock's death brings sorrow to thousands of trade unionists, especially those who worked closely with him.

"Throughout his long lifetime, Bill gave the best that was in him to his union and its members, and he was in return loved and trusted by all who knew him," Kirkland and Donahue said.

Survivors include his wife Anna, two sons and five grandchildren. Services were held in Philadelphia Mar. 8.

The family requested that expressions of sympathy be in the form of contributions to the Rieve-Pollock Foundation, c/o ACTWU, 15 Union Square, New York, N.Y. 10003.

Reagan Expected to Veto Standby Oil Allocation Bill

Congress voted to give President Reagan emergency powers to deal with serious oil shortages, but the President is expected to veto the legislation.

Despite a bluntly worded veto warning, the Republican-controlled Senate voted 86-7 for final passage of the bill. But the 246-144 majority in the House was less than the two-thirds that would be needed to override a veto.

THE LEGISLATION is a compromise measure, with bipartisan sponsorship, to replace the Emergency Petroleum Allocation Act, which expired last September.

It would require the President to send to Congress within six months standby petroleum allocation regulations, which could include temporary price controls but could not include rationing or additional taxes.

Before such regulations could be implemented, the President would have to declare that there was a "severe petroleum supply shortage" that threatened the nation's security or economic stability.

THE AFL-CIO, which had urged stronger standby powers, supported the legislation as the minimum needed to deal with major oil shortages. But the Administration was adamant, even though the Senate bill was sponsored by Energy Committee Chairman James A. McClure (R-Ida.) and co-sponsored by the committee's ranking minority member, Sen. Henry M. Jackson (D-Wash.)

After the previous standby legislation had expired, the President sent a personal letter opposing any extension of emergency powers. And before final passage of the bill, members of Congress received a "statement of Administration policy" which served notice that "the Secretary of Energy and the President's senior advisers will recommend that the President veto the measure."

Furniture Pact Won After Boycott Warning

Laurinburg, N.C. — The Furniture Workers hammered out the first labor agreement for 180 employees of the Lee L. Woodard division of Wickes Corp. after more than a year of negotiations. The UFWA has represented the Woodard workers since June 1980.

The two-year contract provides for a 6-percent wage increase retroactive to last October, a wage reopener clause set for next November, union security guarantees, and pension and medical coverage.

UFWA President Carl Scarbrough said the agreement with Woodard is the first union contract ever negotiated in North Carolina's Scotland County. He said the company abandoned its delaying tactics in negotiations after the union announced plans to initiate a boycott against Woodard furniture products.

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

3/13/82

Regional Conferences Gear Up for '82 Elections

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII Saturday, March 20, 1982 No. 11

By Susan Dunlop

Dearborn, Mich.—The labor movement has an opportunity to help "turn this country around" as American voters take a critical second look at the Reagan Administration's "grossly unfair" policies, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland declared here.

Determined political action between now and Nov. 2 can help elect public officials "who share our view of a compassionate society," Kirkland told the nearly 600 participants in the first of seven AFL-CIO regional conferences scheduled this spring to develop grass-roots discussion among leaders and staff.

DELEGATES FROM six states—Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Ohio and Wisconsin—took part in the first 1982 conference here, Mar. 16-17.

A full day of workshops focused on the major economic and social campaign issues, on effective grass-roots lobbying techniques, and on improving labor's communications with members and the public. Technical workshops got down to the details of political activity and getting out the vote.

At a rally winding up the conference, COPE Director John Perkins stressed that Election Day is "Solidarity Day '82."

He outlined programs and materials the national COPE office is preparing to help spur voter turnout to elect labor-backed candidates.

Kirkland told the delegates there is a growing realization in the nation that "the country is in deep trouble and that the Administration is floundering."

By itself, this disenchantment doesn't mean that labor's arguments for a more compassionate and humane government will prevail, he observed, but it does mean that more people are now listening to the alternative policies that organized labor has been advocating.

The AFL-CIO has met the Reagan Administration's challenge to come up with an alternative economic policy "every day since the first day they asked for one," Kirkland told reporters at a press conference between sessions.

"MANY PEOPLE who thought of themselves as governed by other forces" are learning a lesson in economics, he

(Continued on Page 2)

Labor Spells Out Tax Package

SEVERAL THOUSAND union members and their families march on the Maryland State House in Annapolis with a message for legislators to repudiate Reagan economic and anti-workers policies. The Mar. 13 state Solidarity Day demonstration was spearheaded by the Maryland-District of Columbia AFL-CIO. (Additional photos on Page 3.)

Plan Offers Alternative to Reaganomics

By David L. Perlman

A tax package that would reduce budget deficits, provide funds for needed programs and make the tax burden more equitable was put forth at Senate hearings as the AFL-CIO's alternative to Reaganomics.

Legislative Director Ray Denison, joined by Research Director Rudy Oswald, contrasted labor's proposal to the tax legislation the Reagan Administration pushed through Congress last year. That measure "showered huge tax cuts on the wealthy, rewarded well-to-do companies and gave a relative pittance to the rest of America," he testified.

LABOR'S PROPOSAL would put a $700 a year ceiling on the tax cut that any individual could receive. In practice, Denison said, it would result in the full scheduled tax reduction for taxpayers earning up to $40,000 a year and a flat $700 reduction for those with higher incomes.

Along with other tax changes urged by the AFL-CIO, he said, the plan would avoid the further program cuts the Administration has proposed "as well as providing funds for programs to put jobless Americans to work."

The Senate Finance Committee is holding hearings on the Administration's budget proposals for an assortment of user taxes and other revenue raisers. The President has strongly opposed tampering with the "supply-side" tax cuts enacted last year which were supposed to stimulate private investment.

DENISON dismissed the Administration's new tax proposals as "a melange of

(Continued on Page 8)

41 States Suffer Steady Increase In Jobless Rates

Joblessness increased in 41 states and the District of Columbia during Ronald Reagan's first year in office as the nation plunged into its eighth post-World War II recession, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

Comparing state-by-state unemployment levels in January with jobless rates a year earlier, BLS also reported that in 19 of the 41 states the rate of unemployment exceeded 10 percent. This compared with 10 states in December 1981 and only six a year earlier.

TWELVE STATES reported over-the-year increases in their jobless rates of 2 percent or more in January, while no state reported a decline as large as 1 percent.

State and local area unemployment data are not adjusted for seasonal variation. Without seasonal adjustment, BLS said, the national jobless rate rose to 9.4 percent in January. Applying seasonal adjustments the rate was 8.5 percent in January and 8.8 percent in February.

Six of the 12 states with the largest jobless rate increases—2 percent or more over the year—were in the South—Alabama, Arkansas, Kentucky, Mississippi, Tennessee, and South Carolina. The others included three north central states, Indiana, Iowa, and Michigan; and two western states, Idaho and Washington, and one in the Northeast, Pennsylvania.

Employment declines in these 12 states were widespread throughout the manufac-

(Continued on Page 2)

Housing Coalition Calls Federal Role Essential

By James M. Shevis

A "Save-Housing" coalition of national organizations, including the AFL-CIO, called on Congress and the Administration to "get down to basics" and keep the federal government in the housing field to help the needy.

"Shelter is basic. It is a basic human need that cannot long be ignored if life and community are to be sustained," the coalition said in a statement at a news briefing announcing its formation.

"IT PROVIDES productive employment for millions of workers directly—and an even greater number in allied materials, equipment, and furnishings manufacturing. We believe that housing needs should not be ignored, and that building capacity should not be wasted."

The two dozen coalition members said they were deeply concerned by President Reagan's plan to terminate existing federal subsidy commitments for housing, rescind already appropriated housing funds, raise rents for low-income housing, curtail homeownership loans, cut back on public housing and rental assistance, and eliminate housing production and rehabilitation programs.

"Such proposals would adversely affect the elderly and the handicapped, the rural poor and lower-income urban families—groups that have already taken more than their share of budget cuts," the coalition warned. "We believe that this nation needs and can support housing programs that will provide adequate levels of production and assistance.

"We call upon the Congress and the Administration to preserve this nation's commitment to the goal of decent, affordable housing for all Americans."

Announcement of the new coalition followed the conclusion of the National Housing Conference's 51st annual convention in Washington. The NHC comprises groups and individuals in the construction industry, building trades unions, government officials, and others.

(Continued on Page 7)

OSHA Accused of Putting Profits Before Job Safety

The AFL-CIO accused the Reagan Administration of putting corporate profits ahead of worker safety and reneging on a national commitment to safe and healthy workplaces.

Regulatory review procedures installed with the change of administration have been used to sidetrack new worker safeguards and to weaken existing protections, AFL-CIO Safety Director George H. R. Taylor testified at House hearings.

TAYLOR ALSO reduced enforcement of the Occupational Safety & Health Act. He pointed to a 21-percent decline in workplace inspections and a 72-percent drop in follow-up inspections since the Reagan Administration took office, along with a 75-percent decline in citations for "willful violations" of the law and a 48-percent decline in proposed penalties for violators.

"Since taking office, this Administration has not initiated a single new proceeding that would improve worker safety and health," Taylor testified. Instead, he charged, the Office of Management & Budget (OMB) and the Labor Dept. "are cooperating in a process of delay and destruction of the protections in force" prior to the change in administration.

"These two agencies act as if their mission is to enforce the Corporate Short-Term Profits Act rather than OSHA," Tay-

(Continued on Page 3)

POLITICAL ACTION to achieve the election of labor-backed candidates on Nov. 2 is the central theme of the seven 1982 AFL-CIO regional conferences, Federation President Lane Kirkland tells reporters during the first meeting Mar. 16-17 in Dearborn, Mich. Some 600 delegates from six midwestern states took part in the two days of workshops and a wind-up rally.

To 'Turn This Country Around'

Regional Conferences Gear Up for Elections

(Continued from Page 1)

said, citing as an example the small businessman "who is finding that his fate is linked to that of working people."

While the AFL-CIO continues to build support for its alternative proposals, it was evident in the last session of Congress that "we didn't have enough votes, and that is why we have to engage in political action," Kirkland said.

Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue told the wind-up rally that in the year since the first regional conferences were held—"in the worst of times"—organized labor has been a lonely voice against the "four-headed monster" of tight money, unfair tax cuts, harmful budget cuts and a "primitive" approach to federal regulations.

SOLIDARITY DAY 1981 confirmed that the labor movement does indeed represent the interests of its members, Donahue declared. He said the increasing support of other Americans for labor's protests against the Reagan Administration's policies reflects a growing recognition that "we were right and the President was wrong."

Donahue pointed out that one of the goals of the regional conferences is to cement the labor movement's solidarity and develop political action that will bring about change—"not in our message, but in the people who receive the message."

Sen. Donald W. Riegle, Jr. (D-Mich.) told the rally he "resented" President Reagan's swing through Sunbelt states to urge support for his economic policies, and he challenged the President "to come to Michigan to try to sell the message of how well his policies are working in the state with the highest unemployment in the nation."

DELEGATES to the conference took part in 54 workshop sessions geared to improving political action within their state and local central bodies and local unions. The sessions were conducted by AFL-CIO department heads and staff.

Workshops on economic issues centered on the AFL-CIO's alternative tax and budget programs, contrasting their potential benefits to the nation with the impact of the Reagan Administration's one-sided policies.

Other sessions dealt with lobbying on issues critical to labor, with special emphasis on successful grass roots networks, like the 11-state pilot program introduced in 1981, that are vital in building congressional support for labor's positions.

THE AFL-CIO'S communications program, including the new Labor Institute for Public Affairs, was outlined in a workshop on effective press relations and coverage of labor's activities by the electronic and print media.

Conference participants from congressional districts designated as marginal by COPE met in workshops to discuss ways to tip the balance in favor of labor-supported candidates in their districts and to counter strong challenges from anti-labor candidates.

Other workshop topics included reporting requirements on contributions to candidates in federal elections, the use of telephone banks throughout campaigns, techniques for screening and interviewing candidates before endorsements, relations with local political party organizations, and the formation of coalitions.

SPECIAL WORKSHOPS gave delegates the chance to discuss specific legal questions, data-processing problems, and the current political outlook in their respective states in detail.

Conferences will also be held Mar. 19-20 in Louisville, Ky.; Mar. 30-31 in Phoenix, Ariz.; Apr. 2-3 in Seattle, May 4-5 in Birmingham, Ala.; May 7-8 in Houston, and May 21-22 in Hartford, Conn.

Florida Steel Legal Battle Gains $1.3 Million Back Pay

Florida Steel Corp. has begun issuing checks totalling $1.3 million to 637 workers at its Indiantown, Fla., steel mill in partial settlement of an eight-year legal battle with the Steelworkers and the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.

IUD Sec.-Treas. Elmer Chatak said final disposition of the case against Florida Steel for illegally withholding wage increases at its Indiantown plant and another plant in Charlotte, N.C., where the employees voted for union representation, could cost the firm another $3-$4 million.

IN ADDITION to making the backpay awards, the company agreed to raise wage rates 65 cents at Indiantown and over $1.25 at Charlotte.

Complicating the situation at Indiantown, Florida Steel shut down the plant Feb. 1 for an indefinite period. The union immediately filed charges with the National Labor Relations Board that the shutdown was motivated solely to frustrate unionization.

"The shutdown can't be a result of money problems," Chatak said, pointing out that the company's profits last year were over 7.5 percent and its net worth over $100 million. He said Florida Steel, one of the few non-union steel companies in the South, "is rivaling J. P. Stevens to be the worst labor law violator in history."

OVER THE period 1973-1979, the Steelworkers filed 21 separate unfair labor practice cases against Florida Steel, of which three were settled. All the rest, except one, were upheld by NLRB and in most cases enforced by the courts. In the most recent court action, the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals last June 15 issued a contempt citation against the company.

The central charge in the litigation that led to the initial $1.3 million in back pay for Indiantown workers is that the company illegally withheld wages and benefits from them beginning in 1974, the year they voted to be represented by the Steelworkers. The company used the same tactic at the Charlotte plant beginning in 1973 when the workers there also voted for the union. Ever since, the company has illegally evaded its obligation to bargain in good faith, the union charged.

Before the election at Indiantown, the company boasted in a leaflet of withholding wage increases at the Charlotte plant in an attempt to defeat the union.

THE $1.3 MILLION in back pay represents what the company says it owes the Indiantown workers. The union says the total is closer to $5 million in back pay for workers at both plants.

"Florida Steel has claimed all along that it didn't owe any back pay," Chatak said. "Now, for the first time, the company has admitted it's liable with these first payments to the Indiantown workers."

Richard Shoemaker Retiring from Staff

AFL-CIO health legislation specialist Richard E. Shoemaker has retired after 20 years on the federation's staff as an assistant director of the Dept. of Social Security.

Shoemaker, 67, was a public relations officer with the Pennsylvania Dept. of Health before coming to the AFL-CIO headquarters in 1962. During the mid-1950s he was an AFL-CIO community representative with the Tri-County United Fund in Harrisburg, Pa.

Earlier, Shoemaker was a labor educator at Pennsylvania State University and a legislative representative with the CIO's Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee.

Shoemaker is a member of the Newspaper Guild and holds a bachelor's degree in economics from Yale University.

41 States Suffer Steady Increase In Jobless Rates

(Continued from Page 1)

turing sector, with durable goods generally the hardest hit, BLS said. Over-the-year employment losses in construction trades and government also continued in virtually all of the states with large increases in joblessness.

Areas of relatively high or low unemployment continued to be regionally concentrated, BLS said. Fifteen of the 19 states with the highest rates were in an area extending from Iowa eastward to Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, and southward to the Gulf Coast states of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama. The other four high unemployment states were in the Northwest—Alaska, Idaho, Oregon, and Washington.

In contrast, five of the six low unemployment states extended from Wyoming and Nebraska south to Kansas, Oklahoma, and Texas. Also below 6 percent in January was Hawaii.

MICHIGAN continued to have the highest jobless rate—16 percent in January, an increase from 14.4 percent the month before. Wyoming had the lowest, 4.6 percent.

Of the 203 metropolitan areas covered by the survey, 68 had jobless rates of at least 10 percent. The highest rates were reported in Dubuque, Iowa, 23 percent, and Anderson, Ind., 20.5 percent, while the two areas with the lowest rates were Enid, Okla., and Abilene, Tex., both at 3.7 percent.

Retirees' Union Clubs Flourish In Arizona

Sun City, Ariz.—Less than three years ago a small band of retired trade union officials decided to organize union retirees here into a Union Club to work for programs and legislation that concerned them and all retirees.

But even the most optimistic of them did not foresee what would result. Today, the Union Club in this conservative retirement area has not only taken hold, but has grown to more than 1,700 members from 58 different unions.

THE UNION CLUB idea has caught on so well that similar clubs have sprung up throughout Arizona and others are being formed.

In addition to the Union Club here, eight other clubs are functioning in the state, four are in the process of being formed and five have set up organizing committees. The total state membership is now about 2,700.

The man who provided the spark for the original club and who has worked virtually full time to spread the organization of retired unionists is Lawrence N. Spitz, retired assistant to the secretary-treasurer of the Steelworkers, who serves as president of the club here.

IT WAS SPITZ and two other retired USWA leaders who launched the original organizing campaign—former President I. W. Abel and former Sec.-Treas. Walter J. Burke.

Not only has the growth of the Union Club been dramatic but the potential in Arizona is impressive. There are more than a half-million retirees in Arizona and 390,000 of them have a former union affiliation.

The 69-year-old Spitz says he is not deluding himself that they all can be organized into Union Clubs but "we have all their names on our computer, and who knows but, at the rate we're going, some day we might just organize most of them."

The original Union Club takes in Sun City, Sun City West and Youngtown—two neighboring retirement communities—Peoria, Glendale (suburbs of Phoenix) and the city of Wickenburg, northwest of Sun City. Tucson, with 450 members, has the second largest Union Club in the state.

THE ORIGINAL Union Club played a leading role in repeal of the state's sales tax on food and is currently pushing legislation to exempt $10,000 of pension payments from the state income tax. It also maintains a list of recommended repairmen and monitors food prices in local supermarkets, as well as conducting annual flu shot programs for all retirees in the area.

As an indication of the club's influence and potential, it has been addressed by Gov. Bruce Babbitt and the state's Democratic U.S. senator, Dennis DeConcini.

"We're on our way to showing what retired unionists can do, not only here but in all areas of the country," Spitz said.

MARYLAND SOLIDARITY DAY brought several thousand union members to the state capital to protest Reagan Administration policies and display strong support for labor-backed measures now before the state legislature. Citing the state's 9.7 percent unemployment rate, President Thomas M. Bradley of the Maryland-District of Columbia AFL-CIO in an address to the gathering called on the General Assembly "to show good faith to Maryland's workers and consumers by repudiating the Reagan economic philosophy."

Money Squeeze Continues to Deepen Recession

The nation's economy continued to shudder under tight money policies and high interest rates as joblessness and bankruptcies escalated, automobile sales plunged despite rebate plans, and consumer confidence dipped.

Even government reports of slight February gains in housing starts and factory production failed to indicate any relief soon from the Reagan Recession, now in its eighth month.

NEW APARTMENT construction pulled up the rate of housing starts by 6.5 percent last month, despite a further drop in the number of single-family homes. The Commerce Dept. reported that the number of new starts, after seasonal adjustment, brought the annual rate to 953,000. It was the seventh consecutive month that the closely watched rate of starts was below one million. It was 26 percent under the rate of a year ago.

Analysts had expected a February increase in starts because of the improved weather, but in many areas the surge fell short of expectations. Michael Sumichrast, chief economist of the National Association of Home Builders, said a robust recovery cannot be expected unless home loan rates fall at least four percentage points and bank loan rates also decline substantially. The government reported earlier that interest charged on an average long-term home loan was 17.49 percent in early February.

COMMERCE SEC. Malcolm Baldrige said the strength and sustainability of the housing recovery will depend on the trend of mortgage interest rates, which "remain at disturbingly high levels."

Meanwhile, another closely watched figure—the government's measure of industrial production—rose 1.6 percent in February, the first increase since last July, but again analysts discounted the rise, saying it was distorted by bad January weather that pushed factory output down more than usual. This meant that the usual seasonal adjustment to the figures for January was probably not sufficient and, as a result, there was then a corresponding recovery in industrial production in February.

Wall Street economist Henry Kaufman warned in congressional testimony that the nation may be headed into "unnecessary economic tragedy" under the Administration's current economic policies. He told the House Budget Committee that economic recovery will remain "blocked" if Congress does not trim the huge budget deficits projected by the Administration. A long struggle between Congress and the Administration over the federal budget, he added, would keep interest rates high and place obstacles in the path of recovery.

A tentative trend toward lower interest rates came to a halt as four major banks increased their prime lending rates half a percentage point to 16.5 percent. The rise reversed a downward move that began Mar. 8. The prime is a key lending rate because many business loans are tied to it. It is the interest rate banks charge their best corporate customers.

Other developments that seemed to militate against an early recovery:

- Sales of U.S.-made cars fell 31.8 percent in the first 10 days of March, the steepest decline this year. All five major auto makers had rebate programs in effect during the period but they appeared to have had little impact on sales.
- Factory operating rates went up in February by 1.2 percentage points, the first improvement since July, but did not entirely make up for January's 2.3 percent decline. The Federal Reserve Board said that only 71.8 percent of factory capacity was being utilized in manufacturing industries last month.
- Business failures are climbing sharply. They are now running at a rate of 83 per 10,000 compared to 24 per 10,000 in 1978.
- A Commerce Dept. survey conducted in late January and February showed that businesses planned to spend 1 percent less on new plant and equipment this year than in 1981, adjusted for inflation.

REFLECTING the grim economic news, consumer confidence, which rose for the first time in months in January, fell again in February as Americans put off buying plans. The business-oriented Conference Board said its consumer confidence index dropped to 58.2 in February, down four points from January.

"Negative economic news, including reports of extensive layoffs, rising bankruptcies and large federal deficits, appear to have shaken consumer spirits," the research group said. It said that employment has become a major consumer worry, with 51 percent of those surveyed reporting jobs are hard to get.

Resignation of Williams Shifts Senate a Notch Further Right

The resignation of Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N.J.) shifts the Senate a notch to the right, strengthening its already conservative coloration. It could also, at least temporarily, tilt the balance in the closely divided Senate Labor & Human Resources Committee.

Williams whose resignation averted a Senate vote on an expulsion resolution based on videotapes from the FBI's Abscam investigation, was a staunchly liberal voice during his 23 years in the Senate and two previous terms in the House. His COPE scorecard shows 226 key Senate votes in accord with labor's position and only 18 "wrong" votes.

IN THE current Congress, Williams was the ranking minority member of the Senate Banking, Housing & Urban Affairs Committee. But he remained an influential force on the Labor & Human Resources Committee, which he headed from 1971 until the Republicans won control of the Senate after the 1980 election.

Despite a 9-7 Republican majority on the full Labor Committee, the seven liberal Democrats were often joined by one or both of the committee's moderate Republicans. Thus, Republican Lowell P. Weicker, Jr. (Conn.) voted with the Democrats last year against the nomination of John R. Van de Water, a management consultant, as chairman of the National Labor Relations Board. The resulting 8-8 tie kept the nomination from the floor of the Senate, although he holds office under a temporary presidential recess appointment.

On some other issues, Sen. Robert T. Stafford (R-Vt.) has lined up with the Democrats against his more conservative GOP colleagues.

New Jersey's Republican governor, Thomas H. Kean, is certain to appoint a Republican to succeed Williams, to fill the remaining nine months of his Senate term. That would give the GOP a 54-46 majority, counting independent Harry F. Byrd, Jr. (D-Va.) in the Democratic column.

THE PERCENTAGE shift would not justify a change in the party ratio of committees. But such decisions are not always made solely on mathematical grounds, and various options were explored at a recent meeting of Republican committee chairmen. No immediate decision was reached, however. Nor have the Democrats moved to try to fill the committee vacancies, an action that would have to be confirmed by the full Senate.

Meanwhile, the Republicans have a temporary 9-6 majority on the Labor & Human Resources Committee and an 8-6 majority on the Banking, Housing & Urban Affairs Committee.

MRS. BERNICE ABEL DIES

Sun City, Ariz.—Bernice Abel, wife of retired Steelworkers President I. W. Abel, died recently after a brief illness. She was 71. Survivors include her husband and two daughters.

OSHA Accused of Putting Profits Before Job Safety

(Continued from Page 1)

lor charged. He testified before a House Government Operations subcommittee headed by Rep. Cardiss Collins (D-Ill.), who expressed concern at the "vast and unprecedented power over the rulemaking authority of federal agencies" that the Reagan Administration has assigned OMB.

AMONG THE matters explored at the hearings have been industry contacts with OMB officials over proposed regulations. Such intervention is "perverting the rulemaking authority," Taylor said in response to a question.

The AFL-CIO testimony noted the Administration's attempt to pull back and reconsider OSHA's cotton dust standard. Despite a Supreme Court decision that health considerations in standard-setting may not be subordinated to a cost-benefit test, cost tests are still being applied.

"Since the Reagan Administration took office," Taylor testified, "there have been over 50 Federal Register notices withdrawing, staying and delaying regulations or announcing OSHA's intent to weaken existing standards."

He cited such OSHA actions or proposals as:

- Reconsideration of the health effects findings of the cotton dust standard on the basis of textile industry studies that the OSHA staff had dismissed as inadequate and meaningless.
- Holdup of a requirement for semi-annual publication of a list of substances that can cause cancer because it might lead to a "cancer scare."
- Elimination of requirements that workers be notified of noise exposure levels in their workplaces because industry claimed the notification would be burdensome.
- A proposed change in respirator fit requirements in the lead standard to allow use of a manufacturer's disposable respirator despite evidence that the change would decrease worker protection.

The Tilted Tax Structure

PRESIDENT REAGAN still likes to gibe at the federal government as "that puzzle palace on the Potomac," a line that sometimes was good for mild chuckles on the campaign trail.

Now that the Administration's "supply-side" economic package is in place, there may be more than a grain of truth in the President's quip.

It is hard to conceive of a rational government coming up with a tax program that pours out huge refunds to affluent, highly profitable corporations.

A news story in the Washington Post cited some examples of the buying and selling of tax breaks that allow corporations to increase their after-tax income by obtaining tax credits and depreciation write-offs from less profitable enterprises. This is done through an intricate system of leasing that serves no purpose other than to provide a tax windfall.

TAKE THE CASE of General Electric, which had earnings of $2.66 billion last year.

The previous year, GE had paid $330 million in federal taxes and in 1979, its tax came to $426 million. But all that was before the Reagan Administration discovered supply-side economics and constructed a tax law to fit its ideological goals.

Under the new tax law gimmick, GE ended up owing no federal income tax on its multi-billion dollar profits. But that's not all. It had bought up so many tax breaks that GE will come out with a refund estimated at from $90 million to $100 million.

Amoco, with a pre-tax income of $3.46 billion, wasn't able to acquire enough tax breaks through the complex "leasing" procedure to absolve it of all federal tax obligations.

Shucks. But it did manage to shave $159 million from its tax bill, so Reaganomics proved its value—to Amoco.

Surely one would have to live in a puzzle palace to come up with such an ingenious method of rewarding the rich.

For the rest of us, it hurts too much to laugh.

EVERY DOLLAR in tax giveaways to the most prosperous corporations and the wealthiest individuals is a dollar less for heating bill subsidies for the poor, for health care, for job training—and, yes, also for the strong defense that the nation needs.

It is not just wasteful. It is evil.

The other excesses of last year's tax bill may be less outrageous, but only by comparison. Taken together, the tilt has been to take from those with the least to give to those with the most.

The tax windfalls that have accrued to those firms least in need have more often been used to finance corporate takeovers of other businesses than for job-generating expansion.

Meanwhile the ability of the economy to rebound from recession has been weakened by the government's revenue drain. Federal housing programs, public works, job training—all necessary ingredients of economic recovery—remain starved for funds.

Surely, restoring the nation's tax structure to a fair balance must be the first priority for a repentant Congress.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
LANE KIRKLAND, President
THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward	Murray H. Finley
Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts	Sol C. Chaikin
Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco	Charles H. Pillard
J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride	David J. Fitzmaurice
Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps	Wm. W. Winpisinger
William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell	John DeConcini
Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss	William Konyha
Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney	Douglas A. Fraser
Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield	Barbara Hutchinson
Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto	Gerald W. McEntee

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop, John R. Oravec
David L. Perlman, James M. Shevis

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, March 20, 1982 No. 11

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

LABOR PRESS AFL-CIO/CLC

Privileged Treatment

Capital Gains Cheats Escape With Billions in Unpaid Taxes

By Gus Tyler

ABOUT HALF the profits realized from capital gains (mainly the sale of stocks and bonds) goes unreported to the Internal Revenue Service. That means that no income tax is paid to Uncle Sam on this sum.

This finding bothers Sen. Robert Dole (R-Kan.) who heads the Senate Finance Committee. The loss to the government runs into the tens of billions of dollars. What is more, the amount of unreported income tripled in eight years. Dole proposes that stock brokers report capital gains to the IRS in the same way that employers report earnings of their employees.

TO MOST OF US, it will not come as a surprise that people cheat on their taxes. The practice is as American as apple pie and Jesse James. But there is a difference in the kinds of taxpayers who cheat and who do not.

Those who live on wages and salaries hardly cheat at all, mainly because they can not even if they would like to. These "earned incomes" are regularly reported by employers who, in addition, make weekly deductions from paychecks. So, the records reveal, more than 90 percent of "earned" income is reported and taxed.

But those who live on capital gains, generally referred to as "unearned income," can cheat. So 44 percent of the money due is never reported and escapes taxes.

There's a real irony here because profits on capital gains have gotten privileged treatment from our government. The whole income is not taxed; only half of it is.

To this privilege was added another privilege in the 1981 tax law, constructed to enrich the rich. The tax on capital gains was reduced to 20 percent.

THESE LAWS have, with chronic consistency, been revising the Biblical injunction that man shall earn his living in the sweat of his brow. Our tax law says that if you do not sweat, but merely sell pieces of paper for a profit, you are exempt from the curse put upon Adam and shall therefore get special treatment from Uncle Sam.

Despite the favoritism showed toward "unearned income," the beneficiaries of capital gains cheat half the time.

They are not the only people who cheat Uncle Sam, of course. There are welfare cheats, too. There is the woman with two infant children who earns a few dollars now and then doing housework here and there for a day or two who, alas, does not reveal this "earned income" because she wants to get some money from a federal program like aid to dependent children or food stamps or rent supplement. She, too, is violating the law. Indeed, in a recent survey, it was found that some 2 percent of the recipients of food stamps were cheating.

BUT WHEN the "welfare" cheat and the capital gains cheat appear before St. Peter for judgment, will they both be damned equally? Will the mother who cheats because she wants a few extra dollars for shoes, or for a new dress, or even for a movie be judged the same as the man who cheats because he wants a new Mercedes or a new mistress?

Will Heaven's judgment be alike for those who sin out of need and those who sin out of greed?

Copyright 1982, Gus Tyler Columns

Housing Needs Mount For Young, Old, Poor

This is no time for complacency about housing in our country.

Young families, senior citizens, the poor, and even the not-so-poor are confronted every day with rising shelter costs and a growing housing shortage. Two families doubling up in houses built for one is no longer uncommon. Nor is the sight of homeless people sleeping in makeshift shelters.

All of us are concerned that we will not be able to house decently the 20 million more Americans who will need shelter in the coming decade. Our existing housing stock will not last forever. It needs to be replaced, improved, and rehabilitated.

We believe this nation can support housing programs that will provide adequate levels of production and assistance. We call upon the Congress and the Administration to preserve this nation's commitment to the goal of decent, affordable housing for all Americans.

—From "Save-Housing" coalition statement, Mar. 16, 1982.

Positive Program Needed

Reagan Performance on Rights Deepens Distrust among Blacks

By Norman Hill

THE RESULTS of a recent New York Times/CBS News Poll reveal that only 8 percent of blacks polled approved of the President's handling of his office. This is the lowest approval rating for a President that the poll has ever registered.

Part of the problem is of course based in economics. A disproportionate number of blacks are poor and, proportionately, far fewer blacks are among the high-income earners who are reaping the windfall benefits of the President's tax reductions.

BLACKS ARE represented in high numbers in those industries, auto and steel among them, which are among the hardest hit by the Reagan recession. Moreover, black workers, who are most often employed in jobs with a high risk of job-related illness or injury, are not unmindful of the President's attempt to drastically weaken occupational safety and health standards and their enforcement.

In part, however, the low rating of approval stems from a growing perception in the black community that the President is indifferent to and ignorant of the severe difficulties facing the black community. The sense of despair and frustration among blacks is on the increase. And there is nothing in Reagan's public expressions that can provide blacks with the least bit of hope.

The most recent case in point is the fiasco over a decision by the Treasury and Justice Departments to revoke an Internal Revenue Service policy which denies tax exemptions to racially segregated private schools. White House Counselor Edwin Meese, Reagan's close friend and influential adviser, was the one who personally approved this lamentable change in policy. American blacks can rightly have no confidence in a President with advisers such as Mr. Meese.

MORE SHOCKING, however, was the President's initial reaction. When Deputy White House Chief of Staff Michael Deaver together with Sec. of Housing Samuel Pearce met with the President to explain this latest Reagan disaster in race relations, they confronted a man who reportedly was "hurt and angered" by the public's negative reaction.

All Americans who are committed to racial equality and social justice must be dismayed by news that their President was "angered" at proper criticism of his Administration's latest outrage against human decency. Rather than expressing shock at the failings of his closest aide, Reagan was venting fury against every decent American who is shocked by the Administration's bleak record on matters of civil rights and social justice.

Public response to the Administration was strong indeed. Just days later the President announced that the Administration was submitting legislation to Congress that would bar tax-free status to schools that discriminate on the basis of race.

BUT DESPITE the President's protestations that he is "unalterably opposed to racial discrimination in any form" Mr. Reagan's conduct in office is deeply troubling to blacks. After all, as a result of his stewardship of the economy, black unemployment stands at 17.4 percent; the President is engaged in an effort to weaken the provisions of the 1965 Voting Rights Act, and the work of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has been severely restricted.

At press conferences, the President frequently betrays what for blacks is an almost galling ignorance of such issues of vital concern as affirmative action. Overall, the President's performance on matters of race has been dismal.

When he assumed his high office Reagan pledged he would be President of all the people. In practice he has demonstrated a cruel preference for the privileged and wealthy, for racial bigots and segregationists. At the same time he has heightened the sense of frustration among black Americans and has seriously undermined their trust in the Executive Branch.

WHAT IS NEEDED is not merely an occasional reversal in policy or an attempt legislatively to repeal an Administration blunder. What is needed is a clear articulation of a positive program designed to deal with the special burdens faced by black Americans who disproportionately are suffering from the Reagan recession and the Administration's effort to gut social programs which aid the needy.

Unless he takes clear steps to reverse his failings in the arena of civil rights, amiable and charming Ronald Reagan may go down in American history as the person who most undermined the racial progress our country had made since the 1950s.

Norman Hill is president of the A. Philip Randolph Institute.

For 'Self-Reliance'

Sharp Cuts in Subsidies Snag Postal Service Transition Plan

POSTAL SUBSIDY slashes imposed by the Reagan Administration are interfering with the orderly transition of the Postal Service from dependence on congressional funding, President Vincent Sombrotto of the Letter Carriers charged.

Stressing that the last phase of step-by-step conversion of the postal system to "self-reliance" spelled out in the Postal Reorganization Act is now under way, Sombrotto said that process may now be delayed beyond the 1984 target. He said the budget cuts have also triggered steep rate increases that will force many religious, union, educational and other non-profit organizations to severely reduce or discontinue their publications.

Limitation on the First Amendment right to the freedom of expression "narrows the scope of our society and endangers all of the liberties that we enjoy," Sombrotto warned on the network radio interview Labor News Conference.

Sombrotto said that while "a fair percentage" of the 600,000 members of the Letter Carriers union probably voted for Ronald Reagan in the 1980 election, there is now "great dissatisfaction with what he is doing." Although unemployment is low among members of the union and they have some economic security, "they see this Administration's main objective as trying to cure the ills of the society on the backs of working men and women and the poor—to the exclusion of the very wealthy," he noted.

SOMBROTTO ALSO said that despite stormy 1981 contract negotiations, the current three-year agreement provides a vehicle for both the union and postal management to work toward better labor-management relationships.

"If we can create that atmosphere, I believe we will have higher productivity and a better Postal Service," he said.

Reporters questioning Sombrotto on the AFL-CIO produced public affairs program were Jeff Mills of the Associated Press and Robert Cooney of Press Associates, Inc. Labor News Conference is broadcast weekly on Mutual radio.

Full Measure of Quality!

3/4 Ingredients of All
1/2 Union Products
1/4 and Union Services

UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT., AFL-CIO

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

PRESIDENT REAGAN'S tax and budget cut package was sold to Congress and the American people as the medicine necessary for economic growth and balanced budgets.

Huge tax breaks for business were going to revive investment and productivity. Income tax cuts were "across-the-board"—the same percentage cut for the wage earner and the top corporate executive. Fair enough, it may have seemed, at first glance.

Budget cuts in domestic programs were needed to rein in federal spending. Many would have to tighten their belts, but the "truly needy" would be protected by a "safety net."

With Reagan's "program for economic recovery" firmly in place, Americans are still looking for the light at the end of the tunnel of deep recession, rising unemployment and runaway deficits. The nation is saddled with a tax and budget program which not only has failed to bring the promised prosperity, but has compounded the hardship of recession for millions of Americans.

WHILE MANY have protested all along that the Administration's tax and budget cuts were unfair, a study by the Congressional Budget Office gives us the facts and figures and dispels any lingering doubts.

The 50-page study by the CBO, a non-partisan agency respected for its professional expertise, is the most comprehensive attempt so far to measure the combined effects of last year's tax and budget actions on different income groups.

The study, taking 1983 as the first full year in which all the tax and budget changes enacted by Congress last summer will be in effect, reveals that families with incomes below $20,000 will suffer almost two-thirds of the social program cutbacks.

At the same time, below-$20,000 households, who comprise nearly half the population, will receive less than 15 percent of the income tax reductions in 1983. Over 85 percent of these tax benefits will go to families with incomes above $20,000.

For low-income families, especially the "working poor," the combined net loss from the budget and tax cuts will be the greatest, the study points out.

Families with incomes under $10,000, nearly 23 percent of the population, will suffer an average net loss of $240 in income and services in 1983. These families will lose $360 in benefits while gaining only $130 from the tax cut.

ABOUT 40 PERCENT of the social program cuts come from benefits received by those earning less than $10,000, the study says.

On the other hand, households whose income exceeds $40,000 will sustain only 11 percent of the 1983 program cuts. But these upper-income people will receive half the income tax reductions.

The higher the income, the greater the rewards under Reaganomics. For families with incomes between $10,000 and $20,000, net gains will average $220. For those in the $20,000 to $40,000 income range, gains average $810. Those with incomes in the $40,000 to $80,000 range will net $1,700. And, for those with incomes above $80,000, the net gain averages $15,250.

In arriving at these figures, the CBO analyzed cuts in 18 programs, including social security, civil service and military pensions, unemployment insurance, food stamps, welfare, Medicaid, Medicare, student loans, school lunches, housing assistance, and veterans benefits.

Reacting to the CBO study, which they commissioned, House Budget Committee Chairman James R. Jones (D-Okla.) and Sen. Ernest F. Hollings (D-S.C.) issued this statement, "A critical element in any budget has to be its fairness. The CBO study speaks clearly on the fairness of the Reagan program as enacted in the first session of the 97th Congress."

ORDERLY TRANSITION of the Postal Service to independence from congressional funding may be delayed beyond the 1984 target by the Reagan budget cuts that have also triggered higher postal rates, Letter Carriers President Vincent Sombrotto, center, warned on Labor News Conference. Questioning him were Robert Cooney, left, of Press Associates, Inc., and Jeff Mills of the Associated Press. The AFL-CIO produced public affairs program is aired weekly on Mutual radio.

LABOR WITNESSES testify at joint House-Senate hearings on employment training legislation. From left: Henry Nicholas, president of District 1199 of RWDSU; AFL-CIO Legislative Rep. Robert McGlotten; AFL-CIO Economist Markley Roberts; Service Employees Sec.-Treas. Richard Cordtz; State, County & Municipal Employees Sec.-Treas. William Lucy, and Reese Hammond, education and training director of the Operating Engineers.

Labor Presses Congress to Restore 'Essential' Job Training Programs

The AFL-CIO and a panel of affiliates urged Congress to restore job training and job development programs as vital ingredients of a national commitment to full employment.

"Programs to train the jobless and disadvantaged are essential to economic growth and to social progress," AFL-CIO Legislative Rep. Robert McGlotten testified.

THE LABOR witnesses made their case before an unusual joint session of House and Senate subcommittees that are considering legislation to replace the Comprehensive Employment & Training Act, which expires on Sept. 30. The CETA programs were decimated by last year's budget cuts, which wiped out the remnants of the public service employment program and forced severe cuts in both national and locally sponsored training programs, many of which involved the trade union movement.

Any new program should build on the most successful aspects of the CETA program, the union panelists agreed. In addition to McGlotten, those testifying were:

- William Lucy, secretary-treasurer of the State, County & Municipal Employees. He said AFSCME "rejects the notion that programs to aid the unemployed should be slashed and narrowed when unemployment is high."
- Richard Cordtz, secretary-treasurer of the Service Employees, who stressed that any replacement legislation should include "a strong federal role" in setting standards for programs and provision for government "as employer of last resort" when the private job market can't absorb the workforce.
- Reese Hammond, director of education and training for the Operating Engineers, which has provided training through the Job Corps as well as under other CETA programs. He urged continued provisions for "targeted outreach programs that enable community-based organizations to assist in the identification, recruitment and support of minorities and women for apprenticeship programs."
- Henry Nicholas, president of District 1199, the hospital and health care branch of the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union. He stressed that job training should include upgrading of low-level workers as well as new entry positions.

ALTERNATING AS presiding officers during the joint hearings were Rep. Augustus F. Hawkins (D-Calif.), chairman of the Employment Opportunities subcommittee of the House Education & Labor Committee, and the chairman of the counterpart Senate subcommittee, Sen. Dan Quayle (R-Ind.).

Hawkins is the sponsor of a bill that in most areas came closest to the recommendations of the labor panel. Quayle is co-author with Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) of a compromise measure that would provide some $3.9 billion to fund a variety of programs, compared with $5 billion in the Hawkins bill and less than $2.4 billion under the Administration proposal.

McGlotten, presenting the AFL-CIO testimony, cited the mandate of the Humphrey-Hawkins Act to promote full employment and balanced economic growth both through general economic policies and targeted employment and training programs.

TRADE UNION participation in planning and implementing job programs is essential, he stressed. "Labor, government and business must work as equal partners" to provide "quality training which leads to well-paying, permanent jobs," he said.

McGlotten cited the "demonstrated effectiveness" of the AFL-CIO's Human Resources Development Institute, Apprenticeship Outreach and other training and upgrading programs sponsored by unions and such groups as the Recruitment & Training Program, the Urban League and Opportunities Industrialization Centers.

Labor does insist that the training programs not be abused to undermine wage standards, to subsidize low-wage employers or to aid runaway industries, he stressed.

"FOR ALL its problems and faults," McGlotten testified, "CETA has been a success" and its cost has been repaid to the nation in the skills, higher wages and taxes paid by those who were helped.

He said the Hawkins bill "offers the best starting point" although labor has reservations about proposed wage subsidies for youth and business domination of Private Industry Councils.

The Quayle-Kennedy measure is a welcome bipartisan approach. But "the lack of comprehensive labor standards and authorization for wage subsidies to private employers are major concerns which we hope to see resolved."

A BILL by Rep. James Jeffords (R-Vt.) is also a mixture of desirable and regressive features, McGlotten testified.

He said the AFL-CIO is most critical of the Administration proposal, "the only bill which provides for substantially less than is currently provided." Even worse, McGlotten said, "the Administration's proposal is a clear attempt to dismantle employment and training programs while unemployment is rising to record levels."

The Administration proposal would limit assistance largely to welfare recipients and unemployed youth. States would receive block grants to be distributed through what the Wall Street Journal described as "a network of special business-dominated local boards."

If a comprehensive bill that meets labor's goals can't be put through Congress at this session, McGlotten suggested that it would be better to extend the existing CETA legislation temporarily than to enact a law that would fall significantly short of the need.

LUCY EXPRESSED AFSCME's concern in a related area of proposals from various sources to alter the role of the public Employment Service, especially in the direction of contracting out many of its functions to private agencies. He said close coordination between Employment Service activities and the job training system should be encouraged.

Cordtz stressed the SEIU's support for building on the existing CETA framework and preserving the Employment Service. "There is no gain in scrapping the present system, reinventing the wheel and handing lopsided control of the system to the private sector," he said.

Hammond said the Operating Engineers are concerned that equal access to apprenticeship opportunities, which the union strongly supports, should be followed by quality training which will turn out equally qualified graduates. "Unequal training is the rankest form of discrimination," he said.

Nicholas said CETA programs have been successful in helping hospital workers upgrade their skills and qualify for better jobs. Training programs, he urged, should prepare workers "for jobs that really exist."

Unions Shape Goals for GE, Westinghouse

The 13-union Coordinated Bargaining Committee seeking new contracts this year with General Electric Co. and Westinghouse Electric Corp. placed wage increases and job security at the top of its contract goals.

At a meeting of the CBC's steering committee in Washington, union representatives pointed out that average earnings of workers in the electrical equipment and supplies industry are not enough to enable their families to cope with today's living costs. Besides a general wage increase they called for improvements in the current cost-of-living formula.

OTHER GOALS drawn up at the two-day meeting include protection against automation and high technology, particularly the introduction of robots and computers, and improved pension and insurance plans.

Agreements covering about 228,000 workers employed by the two firms are scheduled to expire on June 30 at GE and on July 15 at Westinghouse. The Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, which represents the largest number of workers involved, will open talks with GE on May 4 and with Westinghouse the week of May 17.

Steering committee Chairman John Shambo of IUE called on subcommittee chairmen for reports on goals in various bargaining areas. They stressed the prosperity of the two corporations, noting that GE profits last year were up 34.1 percent while Westinghouse's rose 80.2 percent.

Under the coordinated bargaining arrangement, each participating union negotiates a separate contract containing similar terms for each bargaining unit. The talks at GE generally influence those at Westinghouse.

SHAMBO SAID the steering committee approved a revised telephone communications system which will make it possible for local unions across the United States to keep abreast of progress in the negotiations.

Coordinated bargaining participants are the IUE, Machinists, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Allied Industrial Workers, Auto Workers, Carpenters, Firemen & Oilers, Flint Glass Workers, Plumbers & Pipefitters, Sheet Metal Workers, Steelworkers, and the unaffiliated Teamsters and United Electrical Workers.

Coalition Asks Study of Policy On Disability Benefit Cutoffs

The Save Our Security coalition has urged Congress to "take a close look" at procedures being used by the Social Security Administration to review the status of persons receiving disability benefits.

The coalition's concern that budget pressures may result in unjustified termination of disability benefits was expressed in a letter to Rep. J. J. Pickle (D-Tex.), chairman of a House subcommittee that has been holding hearings on the issue.

SIGNING THE letter were Wilbur J. Cohen, who headed the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare in the Johnson Administration, and Arthur Flemming, who held the same post in the Eisenhower Cabinet, along with former Social Security Commissioners William J. Driver, from the Carter era, and Charles J. Schottland, from the Eisenhower Administration.

The letter noted that persons whose benefits are terminated after a state review are almost immediately cut off and do not receive any payments during an often lengthy appeals procedure.

Further, "cutbacks in legal services and social service agencies have made it very difficult for disability recipients to obtain legal or other help."

The S-O-S letter noted the special problems of the mentally disabled, who may have their benefits ended merely for failure to return a form they may not understand requesting information on their current medical condition.

Mentally disabled persons, because of their condition, "often are utterly unable to present their own cases" in an appeal and "may not know where to turn for assistance," the coalition said. It urged hearings to assess the disability insurance review process and suggested an investigation by the General Accounting Office.

Benefits should not be terminated before a full review by the Social Security Administration on the merits of the case, the letter urged, and the mentally disabled should be assured assistance in protecting their rights.

Leon Stamey Dies, Retired Field Staffer

Rabun Gap, Ga.—Leon Stamey, retired AFL-CIO field representative, died recently after a heart attack. He was 74.

Stamey, who came out of the Auto Workers, joined the CIO organizing staff in 1946. He had been involved in organizing campaigns throughout the South for 26 years until his retirement in 1972.

'Shelter Is Basic'

Housing Coalition Calls Federal Role Essential

(Continued from Page 1)

Carpenters President William Konyha, who was co-chairman of this year's NHC convention, warned that the housing industry—as well as the auto industry—is in a depression caused largely by the "misguided" policy of the Administration and the Federal Reserve Board of using high interest rates to fight inflation.

He said unemployment among members of the Carpenters union is approaching 20 percent in all construction and is much higher in the housing industry alone.

The Labor Dept. estimated that there was an annual average of about 800,000 unemployed construction workers altogether last year. There are even more today. The jobless rate for the construction industry last month was 18.1 percent, with a total of 928,000 construction workers unemployed.

"I FEAR THAT the entire country may be dragged into this depression unless something is done, and done quickly," Konyha said. The lack of credit availability for home construction is bringing the industry to its knees, he charged.

"Currently, too much of what credit is available is being used in ways that do not enhance productive capacity investment," he observed. "For example, billions of dollars are being tied up in corporate merger and acquisition schemes that add no jobs or new productive capacity to the economy."

Konyha pointed out that under the 1969 Credit Control Act, Reagan and the Federal Reserve Board have authority to direct the availability of credit to socially and economically useful areas and urged that they use it.

Among other coalition participants are the National Lumber & Building Material Dealers Association, Mortgage Bankers of America, National Low-Income Housing Coalition, National Rural Housing Coalition, U.S. Conference of Mayors, Interreligious Coalition for Housing, Ad Hoc Coalition of Housing for the Elderly, and the Council of State Housing Agencies.

THE AFL-CIO is represented in the coalition by the Carpenters, Operating Engineers, Bricklayers, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, and the federation's Standing Committee on Housing chaired by IBEW President Charles H. Pillard.

The housing industry revived slightly last month, with new starts rising 6.5 percent from January's level, but the industry was not impressed. Government and private analysts attributed the February gain at least in part to the fact that builders had simply delayed some construction one month because of the extremely cold January weather in two-thirds of the country.

HIGH INTEREST rates have slowed construction and sales of new homes and apartments and thrown hundreds of thousands of workers in construction and related industries out of jobs. The total number of housing starts last year was less than 1.1 million units, a record low dating back to 1946, and only about half the number produced in 1978, the last peak production year when over 2 million units were started.

Pillard commented on the state of the industry in an address to the NHC convention.

"What are the Reagan housing policies in response to this situation?" he asked. "They are non-policies. Instead of providing below-market interest rate financing to make new housing salable and rentable, as has been done in previous downturns, the Reagan Administration is cutting back on existing programs."

HE CALLED on construction workers, builders, developers, and material suppliers to unite in efforts to persuade Congress "that the country cannot tolerate another year of Reaganomics in housing."

The Administration hopes to lop $9.4 billion from this year's budget by not funding the building or rehabilitation of a number of low-income and elderly housing projects that had already been scheduled, plus other cuts in federal subsidies.

Minneapolis Mayor Donald Fraser said cutbacks in federal support for public housing would have severe repercussions in his city where low-income families already have difficulty obtaining housing. He called for a fundamental change in economic policy in the United States to bring down interest rates.

THE HOUSING CRISIS in the United States is getting worse, not better, as construction unemployment and bankruptcies mount, Carpenters President William Konyha warned at a press conference launching a coalition of national organizations concerned about the industry's steady slide. Joining him were Minneapolis Mayor Donald Fraser, right, and San Diego, Calif., builder-developer Daniel Grady.

Cutback in BLS Statistics Undermines Policy-Making

Administration cuts in the funding of basic labor and social statistical services are detrimental to the nation and should be reversed, the AFL-CIO told Congress.

"We know that good, sound economic policy and good, sound social policy depend on good, sound statistics," Federation Economist Markley Roberts said in testimony before the House Banking subcommittee on census and population. "This is true even in the best of times," Roberts observed.

"NOW, WHEN the nation is slipping further into a massive economic recession, it is even more important than ever to have good, sound labor statistics which are accurate, reliable, consistent, credible, and conceptually valid," he said. "Without such statistics, we won't know where we are and we won't know where we are going."

In the fiscal 1983 budget proposal, Administration outlays would perpetuate serious underfunding and the elimination of important statistical series, Roberts pointed out. Sixteen programs of the Bureau of Labor Statistics have already been reduced or eliminated as a result of drastic reductions in the agency's budget.

Roberts expressed the AFL-CIO's deep concern over the wholesale dismantling of manpower and training programs, general worker protection and support activities, as well as social programs in a number of federal agencies.

"THOSE HUGE budget cuts eliminate and undermine many basic programs," he observed. "Now, many relatively small-budget statistical series that measure economic welfare are being cut so that it will be even more difficult to document the adverse impact of these cuts."

Among the statistical series that will be most affected by the budget cuts are family living cost and wage and collective bargaining programs. Others are area unemployment statistics and import monitoring figures.

Roberts said programs that must be restored include employer compensation studies, area and industry wage surveys, wage chronologies, and collective bargaining agreement analyses.

THE AFL-CIO also opposes the Administration's proposal to kill the "family budget" series, begun in 1945. The budget series describes the impact of inflation on workers and their families.

Roberts also reiterated organized labor's opposition to the BLS plan to drop the present measure of homeownership costs in the consumer price index, covering home purchase prices, mortgage interest costs, property taxes, insurance, maintenance and repairs. A "rental equivalence" measure is scheduled to be used instead, starting in January 1983.

"In our view, the move is a backward one," Roberts said. "The United States is the largest nation of homeowners in the world. But now the index is going to say that all these houses are rented.

"We oppose rental equivalence in principle. In no case should it be adopted without full resolution of the measurement problems that we and others have pointed out," Roberts testified.

Kirkland Protests Payments For Hospital Union-Busters

A government agency's decision to allow hospitals and nursing homes to bill the cost of union-busting consultants to the Medicare program is "disgraceful," AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland protested.

Kirkland wrote Health & Human Services Sec. Richard S. Schweiker that the decision is especially outrageous "at the very time the Administration is cutting back on government funds available for health care."

HIS LETTER referred to a policy change adopted by the department's Health Care Financing Administration at the prodding of the American Hospital Association.

The management group succeeded in getting a reversal of a Carter Administration rule dealing with costs reasonably related to health care service for Medicare patients.

The policy that was reversed by the Reagan Administration held that expenses "for activities directly related to influencing employees regarding their right to organize or not to organize . . . are not related to patient care and, therefore, are not allowable costs." It specified, however, that management could still include normal collective bargaining costs as justified expenses.

THE NEW REAGAN Administration policy is that Medicare will pay for management costs incurred in trying to prevent union organization, unless the activities are found to be illegal under the National Labor Relations Act.

Before the policy shift was made final, Kirkland expressed labor's strong opposition in a letter to the administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration.

His letter to Schweiker protested that the new policy, which the agency termed a "clarification," abandons the principle of government neutrality in organizing situations.

Medicaid Slashes to Cost States $2 Billion

Deep slashes in federal Medicaid assistance proposed by the Reagan Administration in its fiscal 1983 budget could cost states more than $2 billion, the State, County & Municipal Employees charged.

The proposed reductions in federal reimbursements are in addition to cutbacks of $179 million already scheduled for fiscal 1983 under the budget reconciliation act of 1981, AFSCME pointed out.

ACCORDING TO AFSCME's state-by-state analysis of the proposed cuts in Medicaid, $529 million will be slashed from federal funds for nursing home patients, mental retardation centers, mental hospitals and the working poor.

On the average, the union said, states face cuts in these programs ranging from 142 percent to 166 percent in addition to reductions already scheduled.

While all states will be affected by the Medicaid fund cutbacks, the study found that Connecticut, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, New York and Washington would be hardest hit. Their reductions would range from 187 percent to 202 percent above those already enacted.

AFSCME PRESIDENT Gerald W. McEntee pledged that the union would vigorously oppose the new cutbacks.

"Efforts to provide adequate medical care for the nation's elderly, the working poor and the handicapped have been a matter of national policy," McEntee noted. "Now the Reagan Administration wants to dramatically change our nation's health care policies by slashing vitally needed programs which often represent the difference between prolonged illness and a healthy life."

Under the 1981 budget reconciliation act, federal reimbursements on Medicaid were cut by 3 percent for fiscal 1982, 4 percent for fiscal '83 and 4.5 percent for fiscal '84.

As a result of the newly proposed cuts, McEntee warned, states will have to make up the difference out of state revenues, cut back services, raise eligibility standards, or eliminate optional services and coverage for the working poor entirely.

"THE EFFECTS of Reagan's new Medicaid proposals would be to discourage states from providing optional Medicaid services and coverage for the medically needy," he said.

AFSCME represents some 200,000 workers who maintain many of the programs the Administration is cutting back.

House Panel Backs Postal Rate Rollback

The House Post Office & Civil Service Committee has endorsed a restoration of public service funds for the U.S. Postal Service that would allow a rollback in postage rates for non-profit publications.

Mailing costs for non-profit groups, including unions, doubled in January from a second round of budget cuts imposed by Congress. A final-step postage rate that wasn't supposed to be reached until 1987 was put into effect this year.

If Congress should adopt the Reagan Administration budget proposals, non-profit publications would face the threat of a staggering additional increase for the fiscal year starting Oct. 1. The new Reagan budget would cut the "revenue forgone" subsidy for non-profit mailings from the current $614 million level to $500 million.

The House Post Office & Civil Service Committee rejected any further cuts and by a 16-8 vote recommended a rise in the subsidy to $913.2 million for the new fiscal year. Its recommendation goes to the House Budget Committee, but is not binding on that body.

The higher funding was recommended by a Postal Operations subcommittee headed by Rep. William Clay (D-Mo.) after hearings at which the International Labor Press Association and other non-profit organizations testified to the cutbacks in publications compelled by the rate increases.

Meanwhile, Sen. Quentin Burdick (D-N.D.) is leading a bipartisan Senate effort to restore some of the funds cut from this year's postal subsidies when a permanent appropriations bill reaches the Senate floor. The previous sharp reduction was imposed through a resolution continuing funds for agencies whose regular appropriations had not yet cleared Congress.

'Pay Up or Shut Up!'

Auto Workers Resume Talks On General Motors Contract

Dearborn, Mich.—General Motors and the Auto Workers returned to the bargaining table for the first time in six weeks, in an effort to negotiate an early contract renewal that will help the giant automaker out of its current slump.

GM offered a 30-month contract along the lines of the UAW's new Ford Motor Co. agreement that would freeze basic wages and provide other concessions to the company in exchange for greater job security for its 320,000 union workers.

"I THINK the GM agreement will certainly resemble the Ford agreement," UAW President Douglas A. Fraser said. "Certain things we want to do differently, and certain things they want to do differently, but I think we'll end up with a similar agreement."

The union initially voted to reopen its current contracts with GM in early January. Negotiations broke down, but the UAW's General Motors Council authorized a resumption of talks. The second round of negotiations collapsed on Jan. 28. Once again, local UAW leaders approved a resolution to reopen the bargaining, and the third round got underway on Mar. 12 with both sides optimistic over a quick settlement.

MEANWHILE, talks between the UAW and American Motors Corp. recessed temporarily while the union's largest AMC local in Kenosha, Wis., prepared a counterproposal to management's plan for employee investment in the company.

Highlights of the latest General Motors proposals include:

- A wage freeze on current hourly wages for the life of the proposed two-and-a-half-year contract.
- Deferment of three cost-of-living payments, each about 10 cents an hour, over the next 18 months.
- Elimination of nine paid holidays.
- Lower wages and benefits for new hires for a yet-to-be specified period.

In return for these concessions, GM is offering an increased role for local UAW units in plant management, a moratorium on plant closings, possibly for the same 24 months as in the Ford agreement, limitations on the use of outside domestic and foreign contractors to produce GM parts, and a profit-sharing program "for employees to share in the success of GM's U.S. operations."

Flight Attendants Win Flying Tigers Unit

The Association of Flight Attendants has been certified by the National Mediation Board as bargaining agent for 368 attendants at the Flying Tigers Line, a Los-Angeles-based charter and air cargo carrier.

The AFA was chosen by a vote of 156 to 142 over the Teamsters, which formerly represented the bargaining unit, to climax a five-month organizing drive.

The AFA, a division of the Air Line Pilots, said contract negotiations with Flying Tigers would begin immediately.

Labor Asks Tax Alternative To Turn Economy Around

(Continued from Page 1)

gimmicks and token devices to make the deficit appear smaller and defuse the rapidly growing chorus of criticism over last year's tax bill."

In addition to capping the 1982 and 1983 tax cuts at $700 per family, the AFL-CIO plan called for repeal of the provision that allows the leasing of tax credits by corporations. Unless repealed, Denison warned, billions of dollars of lost revenue will in effect be transferred from national priorities to swell the after-tax income of "large and profitable businesses."

Other elements of the AFL-CIO plan included repeal of loopholes Congress punched in the oil windfall profits tax last year, modification of estate and gift tax provisions and closing of some of the more notorious tax loopholes involving foreign tax credits and deferral privileges for multinational corporations.

Denison strongly urged Congress to repeal a section of the tax law scheduled to take effect in 1985 which would reduce taxes each year on the basis of an inflation index.

"That provision would amount to a permanent and continuing erosion of the tax base," Denison warned.

HE AGREED that the AFL-CIO's tax proposal is ambitious.

"It calls for a complete reversal of the tax policies of the past year," he said, "a recognition that a major error was made" and the willingness to correct it.

Such a bold change of course must be undertaken, he urged. As the AFL-CIO sees it, "the crazy quilt combination of the Reagan Administration's huge tax cuts, dismantled programs and sky-high interest rates is the direct cause of the present deep recession" and the accompanying joblessness and budget deficits.

Further, Denison observed, the imbalances of the Reagan program have weakened the ability of the economy to rebound.

He reiterated the AFL-CIO's proposal that any increases in defense spending that Congress deems necessary should be separately financed by a progressive surtax on both individuals and gross corporate earnings.

"IN THIS way, defense needs can be met without adding to the federal deficit or cutting food stamps, unemployment benefits, job and training programs, mass transit or other already battered social programs," he testified.

Denison stressed the AFL-CIO's belief that "the American economy can sustain a strong national defense without short-changing vital social programs that reflect the values of our society."

Instead, he said, "the Administration's policies have set up a destructive guns-versus-butter debate."

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

3/20/82

Public Sector Wage Boosts Average 7.8%

State and local government workers covered by union contract settlements reached last year received wage and benefit increases averaging 7.8 percent in the first year of the agreements, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

This was a gain over the 1980 first-year average adjustment of 7.3 percent. Wages alone increased an average of 7.4 percent in the first contract year and 7.1 percent annually when measured over the life of the agreement. In 1980, the levels were 7.5 and 7.8 percent, respectively.

THE BLS DATA on state and local government collective bargaining agreements cover 1,006,000 employees in bargaining units with at least 5,000 workers. There are 82 such units, accounting for about one-fourth of all state and local government employees under negotiated agreements. Data were reported on 43 settlements reached during 1981.

Not all the 1981 pacts provided for wage increases, BLS noted. Workers employed by the city of Detroit agreed to a two-year freeze to ease the city's financial problems and also to rescind provisions for deferred wage increases scheduled under a 1980 agreement. Chicago school teachers agreed to a one-year wage freeze, but the city assumed the teachers' share of pension plan costs.

BESIDES information on compensation adjustments under new settlements, BLS also provides data on deferred adjustments under previously negotiated pacts and cost-of-living clauses. BLS said two of three 1981 settlements dropped COL provisions included in previous agreements, while a COL clause was introduced in another contract.

The agency said 32 percent of the workers covered by the 1981 settlements were in the West, 27 percent in the North Central region, 22 percent in the Northeast, and 19 percent in the South. The contracts were about equally divided between state and local government workers.

Gasoline Prices Pace Decline in Wholesale Index

Prices at the wholesale level edged down one-tenth of 1 percent in February as large decreases in energy prices and declines in automobile and truck prices more than balanced a half-percent increase in food costs.

Gasoline alone was 2.7 percent cheaper in February, and all energy products together fell 1.8 percent in price, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported. Autos went down 1.3 percent, and light truck prices fell 7.9 percent for the month.

The overall drop in the government's monthly producer price index was the first decline in the measure since February 1976. The wholesale inflation rate is generally an advance indicator of inflation levels for consumer goods.

SOME ANALYSTS regarded the February dip as a fluke caused mainly by the month's rebates on cars and trucks. Others pointed out that the Reagan recession, which has thrown millions of Americans out of work, has caused a slackening of demand making it difficult for suppliers to mark up prices.

The increase in food prices of five-tenths of 1 percent followed a much steeper rise in December of 1.1 percent. Fish, cooking oils and vegetables were cheaper for dealers than the previous month, and refined sugar—one of the most widely used ingredients in processed foods—went down in price by 3.9 percent, BLS reported.

Some foods bucked the moderating trend, however, with eggs increasing in price by a huge 8 percent for the month. Price increases accelerated for other dairy products as well as beef and veal.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII No. 12

Saturday, March 27, 1982

New Food Stamp Cuts Denounced

The Reagan Administration's proposals for a new round of food stamp cutbacks is "unconscionable" and should be rejected by Congress, the AFL-CIO urged.

Heavy cuts imposed last year ended food assistance for a million low-income recipients, and another million had their benefits reduced. Families of strikers were disqualified without regard to need.

FEDERATION Legislative Rep. Kenneth Peterson urged a House Agriculture subcommittee to block the further reductions sought by the Administration, which would eliminate or reduce assistance to 94 percent of "working poor" and to 92 percent of the elderly and disabled recipients.

PETERSON NOTED that the proposal for further cuts in food stamps comes at a time when unemployment insurance has been curtailed, employment and training programs have been cut back, and joblessness has been growing. At the same time, the Administration is proposing other cuts in the so-called safety net, including reductions in Medicaid and other services to the neediest families.

Last year's cuts so penalized the working poor that many families would be better off subsisting entirely on welfare, Peterson testified. And the proposed new cuts, he warned, would further "penalize" work.

"As public policy, this reversal of incentives toward work is outrageous," Peterson protested.

"WORK EFFORTS of these families should be supported, not undercut," he urged. "The Administration is reducing the likelihood that they will ever be able to work their way out of poverty."

The AFL-CIO testimony fingered as

(Continued on Page 8)

AFL-CIO PRESIDENT Lane Kirkland marches with Cement, Lime & Gypsum Workers at the Kosmos Cement plant outside Louisville, Ky. Kirkland led a busload of delegates from the AFL-CIO regional conference to the picket line. Kosmos is the target of an AFL-CIO-endorsed boycott. (Story, Page 3.)

OSHA's Chemical Labeling Rule Hit As Weak, Limited

By John R. Oravec

The Reagan Administration has proposed a long-delayed toxic chemical labeling regulation—now dubbed the "hazard communication" standard—that would provide factory workers only limited access to information about dangerous substances they encounter on the job.

The AFL-CIO immediately branded the proposal inadequate because of its narrow coverage and its failure to assure detailed labeling data. Unions have been fighting for a strong "right-to-know" standard on chemical hazards since the early 1970s.

THE NEW Occupational Safety & Health Administration proposal, which had been bottled up by the Office of Management & Budget for several months, is a cut-rate version of the toxic labeling standard that emerged during the last days of the Carter Administration.

By revising provisions and coverage, OSHA Administrator Thorne G. Auchter said, the new proposal will save employers billions of dollars from what the Carter plan would have cost them.

Coverage of the new proposal would extend to only about 14 million workers in manufacturing, AFL-CIO Occupational Safety Director George H. R. Taylor noted, leaving out many millions more workers in construction, service trades, mining, farming and the transportation industries.

ANOTHER SERIOUS shortcoming of the proposal, Taylor warned, is the extensive leeway given to chemical manufacturers in the guise of protecting their trade secrets.

Chemical firms would be able to exclude from detailed information almost any substance they deem to be a trade secret except widely known cancer-causing agents or chemicals that can lead to birth defects or malfunctions.

AS OUTLINED by OSHA, the assessment of hazardous substances would be left to the chemicals' manufacturers who would be required to provide the information to their workers and to firms that use the substances. Those employers would then pass on the information to their workers.

Under the proposal, labels on containers would be limited to a hazard warning—such as whether a substance is flammable—and a brief chemical identifier. Workers handling the substance would have to refer to a master safety data sheet to get detailed information about the substance.

Exempt from coverage even in manufacturing facilities are pipes and support systems that transport hazardous substances. Also exempt are importers of hazardous chemicals.

TAYLOR POINTED out that while the proposal provides for education and training of workers on hazard information, OSHA has not offered any guidelines on how extensive these programs should be.

He said the AFL-CIO and union affiliates would spell out their concerns over the diluted provisions at OSHA hearings scheduled to open June 15.

Chemical manufacturers and other industry groups had vehemently opposed the original labeling standard drafted by the Carter Administration. It was withdrawn

(Continued on Page 2)

On Commuter Lines

Court Rejects State Bid To Outlaw Rail Strikes

State-owned railroads and their workers are subject to the federal Railway Labor Act and those workers can't be barred from striking by a state law, the Supreme Court ruled.

Its unanimous decision upheld the position taken by the AFL-CIO in a brief supporting the right of the United Transportation Union and its members to strike New York's Long Island Railroad. The railroad is primarily a commuter line which the state had acquired in 1966 to avoid abandonment of service.

SUCH PUBLIC acquisitions of commuter railroads are increasingly common, so both labor and public agencies had looked to this case as an important precedent.

The Metropolitan Transportation Authority, the public agency that owns the railroad, sought to use New York's punitive Taylor Act to prevent a scheduled strike in 1980—despite the fact that the union had complied with all provisions of the Railway Labor Act, including two "cooling off" periods.

The MTA contended that the state interest in preserving commuter services outweighed any federal interest in the railroad as a link to interstate commerce.

IT INSISTED that a Supreme Court precedent involving a California law didn't apply because the railroads involved in that case were primarily freight carriers.

Most significantly, the state-owned railroad sought to get the Supreme Court to broaden the applicability of its 1976 decision voiding an attempt by Congress to apply federal wage-hour standards to most city and state employees.

A federal district court rejected the state arguments, but the 2nd Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals upheld the state's claim that the Taylor Act barred a strike.

CHIEF JUSTICE Warren E. Burger, writing for the unanimous Supreme Court, struck down all of the public management arguments.

He said the wage-hour ruling, generally referred to as the National League of Cities case, held that only areas of traditional state functions are immune from federal regulation. Clearly, he said, "a railroad engaged in interstate commerce is not an integral part of traditional state activities. . . . Federal regulation of state-owned railroads simply does not impair a state's ability to function as a state."

The decision cited the long history of federal regulation of the nation's railroads, including the adoption of the Railway Labor Act in 1926.

"There is no comparable history of state regulation of railroad collective bargaining," the decision noted.

(Continued on Page 3)

Housing Measure Pressed to Lift Sagging Economy

A labor-supported legislative package designed to overcome a critical shortage of affordable housing can also help pull the nation out of recession, the AFL-CIO testified.

The federation endorsed key ingredients of a comprehensive housing bill introduced by Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez (D-Tex.), whose subcommittee has jurisdiction over most housing-related legislation.

IT ALSO supported the intent of a housing-related banking measure sponsored by Rep. Fernand J. St Germain (D-R.I.), who is chairman of the full Banking, Finance & Urban Affairs Committee.

Henry B. Schechter, who testified as director of the AFL-CIO Office of Housing & Monetary Policy, also urged renewal of the Credit Control Act, which otherwise will expire at the end of June. The law

(Continued on Page 3)

Houston Organizing Project Building Early Momentum

Houston—More than 2,000 area workers have joined or rejoined Houston unions under the cooperative organizing effort begun in this booming "corporate city" last October.

Working with the Houston Organizing Project, the Houston Federation of Teachers developed a drive in which more than 1,200 secondary school teachers rejoined the HFT and 500 other teachers became new members of the local.

PROGRESS ALSO includes a victory in the first representation election under the auspices of the project as Carpenters Local 2437 won the support of 80 percent of a 26-person unit at Brand Export Inc., a shipping crate manufacturer.

Despite the strong opposition of labor management consultants and the prevalent propaganda about the Sunbelt, the organizing efforts are beginning to show other results.

Eighteen contractors have signed agreements with the Houston District Carpenters Council. Executive Sec. Paul Dobson said this has brought the addition of more than 300 new members to the council's affiliated locals during the past several months. In the last three months alone, between 75 and 100 new members have also been added by industrial affiliates.

DOBSON ALSO reported there are almost daily inquiries from local contractors seeking information about agreements with local unions. Recently, he says, in response to advertising by the Carpenters, one contractor called claiming he wasn't even aware a union existed, and immediately decided to reach an agreement with the appropriate local union.

In another development, the Steelworkers soundly defeated a decertification attempt at Flexitallic Inc., an oil industry equipment manufacturer. The USWA currently has more than half a dozen organizing efforts in progress.

MORE THAN 60 organizing drives are under way as part of the joint Houston Organizing Project, in which some 30 international unions and their local affiliates are participating. The project began as a response to the needs of local unions in the area. It is patterned on the successful Los Angeles-Orange County Organizing Committee established more than 19 years ago.

Trade Concessions Hit in Caribbean Aid Plan

The AFL-CIO urged Congress to help the Caribbean Basin nations through direct economic aid, but not trade and tax concessions that will wipe out U.S. jobs.

A House Ways & Means subcommittee is considering the Administration's proposal for direct aid, investment tax incentives and the free trade feature that President Reagan termed the "centerpiece" of his plan. It would allow almost all imports from 28 Caribbean and Central American nations into the United States duty-free. The only exception would be textile and apparel imports regulated by existing international agreements.

AFL-CIO Legislative Rep. Stephen Koplan noted that most products from these nations already enter the United States duty-free under existing tariff concessions granted to less developed countries. There are only minimal safeguards against harm to U.S. industry and jobs.

The Administration proposal "would sweep away these protections, minimal as they are," Koplan protested. Further, by requiring that only 25 percent of the imported product be of Caribbean origin, "a flood of imports worldwide can be funneled through any one or any combination of these 28 Caribbean Basin countries," he pointed out.

THE AFL-CIO testimony termed it "mystifying" that the new trade incentives are being proposed when the United States already has a $3.2 billion trade deficit with the Caribbean Basin countries.

With unemployment in the United States close to 9 percent, "such incentives for further increases in unemployment must be rejected," Koplan declared.

He termed the proposed tax incentives for U.S. investments in the Caribbean "equally astounding," especially since the Administration has decided that the United States can no longer afford to pay trade adjustment assistance to U.S. workers displaced by imports. The revenue loss from the proposed tax concessions, he noted, would have paid for continued trade adjustment aid. Yet its purpose "is to further the flight of business from the United States."

Nevertheless, Koplan testified, "the AFL-CIO does support direct economic assistance in the form of a supplemental appropriation for the countries in this region desperately in need of help."

THE PRESIDENT'S request for an immediate $350 million should be "carefully scrutinized to determine whether that amount is appropriate" for the balance of the fiscal year, Koplan said.

The subcommittee also heard Arthur Gundersheim, international trade affairs director of the Clothing & Textile Workers, who stressed labor's concern about the "one-way trade" envisioned in the President's program.

"Labor wants to help in this new initiative," he testified. But it can't go along with a new trade arrangement that would result in the closing of U.S. plants or impose an inequitable burden on one segment of the economy.

WHILE TEXTILES and apparel are not directly affected, ACTWU represents workers in leather apparel and footwear who would be vulnerable, Gundersheim told the panel.

In the present economy, under the policies of this Administration, he noted, "there is no one to bear the burden of increased domestic unemployment created by the Caribbean Basin initiative but the workers themselves."

HISTADRUT'S HUMANITARIAN award recipient, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue, is congratulated at a New York reception. Joining in the tribute are Federation President Lane Kirkland and Vice Presidents Sol C. Chaikin, second from left, and John J. Sweeney. The award was presented by the National Committee for Labor Israel and the American Trade Union Council for Histadrut.

Donahue Questions Premise Of Reagan Policy Decisions

New York—AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue charged that the Reagan Administration is in "disarray" in its handling of domestic and overseas issues.

"Those who are now in charge of national domestic policy," he said, "have abandoned the idea of social and national solidarity, of equal rights, equal justice and equal opportunity. On the international scene, avarice has muddied their perception of who the good guys are and who are the bad."

ACCEPTING THE 1982 Histadrut Humanitarian Award at a dinner here, Donahue said the heart of the differences between the AFL-CIO and the President is their total disagreement on what government is for. He said supporters of the President "appear to be wedded to the view that government is not the property of those governed, but the private property of those who happen to control it."

This means, he added, that instead of government bringing the people together it is driving them apart, dividing them along lines of economics, race, sex, age and any other lines in which wedges can be driven.

In foreign affairs, Donahue said President Reagan allows narrow, mercantile interests to dominate foreign policy.

"He is permitting international bankers and multinational profit seekers to compromise our national interests," Donahue said, "and to collaborate, for the sake of short-term gains, with those who would deny human rights and crush the hope of freedom."

IN THE Middle East, "Mr. Reagan has missed few opportunities to reward Saudi Arabia, the ringleader of the gang of OPEC extortionists," Donahue said. He cited the recent Saudi record of demanding more sophisticated arms from America and then jacking up the price of oil after the arms were delivered.

He also attacked the Administration's claim of a partnership with Saudia Arabia even though the Saudis refuse to allow American soldiers on their soil and have challenged the right of the U.S. Navy to sail in that part of the world.

"When a country says that Israel is its enemy and Soviet Russia is not, how can it be a friend to the United States?" Donahue asked. He noted that in all the Middle East the free and vigorous trade union movement with which American labor can most identify is in Israel, while "union activity is as illegal in Saudi Arabia as it is in Poland or Russia."

DONAHUE concluded with the statement that the federation will make every effort to see that the country gets a new set of senators and representatives this year and a new Administration in 1984.

"Meanwhile," he said, "we'll hold our ground beside Histadrut and beside free trade unionism throughout the world."

Joining the tribute to Donahue by the National Committee for Labor Israel and the American Trade Union Council for Histadrut, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland cited the historic ties between the AFL-CIO and Histadrut.

The evolution of the Israeli state, Kirkland observed, demonstrates the link between freedom of association and political democracy. He added that in shaping the State of Israel, Histadrut required a government which guaranteed the rights of plain people, while the American labor movement has always struggled to extend political democracy and make government more responsive to the will and needs of the people.

KIRKLAND CITED the contrast with communists and fascists united in the belief that the sole proprietor of the people's interest is the state and that freedom of association is inherently reactionary. He noted that the members of their privileged classes are staunch defenders of their system.

"We have difficulty understanding some of those who benefit most from our system," he added, pointing to statements by a Citibank vice president and Chase Manhattan Bank's David Rockefeller that their banks will do business with any government, "as long as it pays its bills."

Kirkland said the American labor movement is from a different school: "We support Histadrut for the same reason we support Solidarity in Poland and the trade union movement of El Salvador."

Task Force Findings Support Concerns of Air Controllers

A special government task force set up a few days after the start of last year's air traffic controllers strike warned that many of the conditions that led to the strike continue to exist.

"Most factors that had caused problems in the past are reasserting themselves, and the Federal Aviation Administration seems headed toward more people-related problems in the future," the three-member group said in its report.

OFFICERS OF the Professional Air Air Traffic Controllers Organization said the task force's findings bear out the assertions of PATCO members concerning the work environment within the FAA's air traffic control system.

The task force, headed by Lawrence Jones, president of the Coleman Co. in Kansas, said several factors led to deteriorating relationships between FAA managers and controllers, including increased "peak-time" air traffic that led to anxiety during peak periods and dissatisfaction during the valleys.

Other factors that created tension between managers and controllers prior to the Aug. 3, 1981, strike included inadequate systems to select and train managers, rigid management attitudes, and a "pervasive" attitude that the FAA had "little concern" for its employees.

JONES SAID the task force concluded that the 11,500 controllers who went on strike last year did so because of factors other than the hope of winning higher salaries. Economic considerations, Jones told reporters, "did not seem to be a driving motive in any way."

The $600,000 study, called for by Transportation Sec. Drew Lewis and FAA Administrator Lynn Helms, contradicts what the FAA has professed since it fired the striking controllers—that PATCO was responsible for the ill feelings at air traffic control facilities, the union said.

The task force determined that "morale within the air traffic and airway facilities divisions of the FAA is not good. It is, in fact, very poor."

PATCO President Gary W. Eads said the union "remains of the opinion that the quickest resolution and the most practical resolution to this labor-management crisis is the immediate reinstatement of all the fired air traffic controllers to their former positions.

"THIS REINSTATEMENT is necessary if the FAA is truly committed to its position of returning a sense of normalcy to the air traffic system in this country."

The major recommendations of the task force report "coincide dramatically" with the concerns voiced by PATCO through the years, Eads said.

The 149-page report listed 13 key recommendations for improving working conditions for controllers.

THEY INCLUDE improving the quality of FAA managers and supervisors, permanently adjusting the daily flow of air traffic into high-volume airports to reduce the peak periods and thereby reduce pressure and anxiety for working controllers, closer communication between the FAA and user groups, and the development of a new set of work rules to replace the collective bargaining agreement between the FAA and PATCO.

President Reagan fired all controllers who participated in the walkout, and the union's certification as the spokesman for the controller workforce was revoked by the Federal Labor Relations Authority.

OSHA's Chemical Labeling Rule Hit As Weak, Limited

(Continued from Page 1)

shortly after the Reagan Administration took office.

Since then, 10 states and a handful of cities have adopted worker right-to-know laws at the behest of union grass-roots lobbying. Similar measures are pending in about 20 more states and two cities.

FACED WITH the strong possibility that state and local regulations could be lot stiffer than those the Administration would implement, chemical manufacturers reversed their position and came out in favor of a federal standard.

At congressional hearings earlier this month, Taylor charged that the Administration "resurrected the federal proposal not to protect workers but to pre-empt local laws."

But he questioned the OMB's heavy-handed role in the development of the OSHA draft, noting that the White House budget office even rejected the diluted version on the grounds that the safety agency failed to make an adequate case for the need of the regulation and that the benefit analysis was insufficient.

In the absence of an effective federal standard, Taylor said unions would continue to seek enactment of stronger regulations at the state and local level.

Housing Bills Backed as Aid To Economy

(Continued from Page 1)

gives the President authority to channel available credit into productive uses and thus ease pressure on interest rates.

The Gonzalez bill includes additional authority for public housing construction and other existing programs which the Reagan Administration wants to scrap.

It would also activate a dormant program of federal subsidies for home purchases by families with incomes up to 130 percent of the national average, holding their payments to the equivalent of a 9.5 percent interest rate.

SCHECHTER SAID the AFL-CIO especially welcomes a companion provision for subsidized rental unit construction targeted to areas of greatest need. But he urged that more than the 20 percent share provided in the bill be earmarked for families with incomes not higher than 80 percent of the local median. The percentage of rental housing in the overall package should also be increased, Schechter said.

The bill also includes emergency mortgage assistance, so that home owners who lose their jobs won't also lose their homes if they can't meet mortgage payments. The recipients would be required to repay the funds advanced by the government to avoid foreclosure.

Schechter proposed tightening of some sections of the St Germain bill, to assure that savings institutions helped by federal loan guarantees to stave off collapse do in fact earmark half of new deposits for mortgages at reasonable interest rates. He said the institutions should be allowed to use up to 25 percent of net new deposits to finance rental housing.

All of these approaches, he testified, are among the "much-needed" steps that should be taken "to deal with the home building and home financing crisis which threatens to atrophy our housing supply and to lead to widespread financial instability, greater unemployment and prolongation of the economic recession."

Indicators Show Further Plunge In Total Output

Preliminary estimates of the current quarter's economy point to another 4.5 percent decline in real gross national product, a steeper drop than the Administration had been anticipating.

The gloomy prediction of the economy's direction—a percentage point or more worse than most analysts expected—is based on partial data for the first three months of this year, a period marked by bad weather and continuing recession.

THE COMMERCE DEPT.'S "flash" estimate of real GNP—the value of the nation's total output of goods and services adjusted for inflation—came at a time the department reported a revised 4.5-percent contraction in the fourth quarter of 1981.

For all of 1981, real GNP rose 2 percent, including an unusual rise of 8.6 percent in the first quarter, a 1.6-percent decline in the second, and a 1.4-percent rise in the third.

If the government's estimate of the current quarter's economic activity is borne out, the recession that began last July could rank among the most severe since World War II.

THE NEW government figures show that businesses are making a determined effort to unload unsold merchandise, but that consumers—many of them thrown out of jobs by the recession—are unable to buy.

"The major source of weakness in real GNP is a significant liquidation of business inventories . . . considerably larger than was generally expected at year's end," Assistant Commerce Sec. Robert Detrick said. He predicted that sales will show a slight increase in the current quarter.

COPE DIRECTOR John Perkins leads off the political rally in Louisville, Ky., on the closing morning of the AFL-CIO regional conference. Louisville was the second of the seven 1982 conferences, with Phoenix and Seattle scheduled for the week starting Mar. 29 and Birmingham and Houston for the week starting May 3.

Radio News Service Offered by AFL-CIO

The AFL-CIO radio news recording service is now available, toll-free, from any location in the continental United States at (800) 368-5744.

Local unionists can refer reporters to the toll-free number for actualities of AFL-CIO officers or other federation officials on breaking news such as unemployment statistics or other major anouncements. Reporters in the metropolitan Washington, D.C., area should call 638-4821.

State Can't Bar Railroad Strike, High Court Rules

(Continued from Page 1)

In even more explicit terms, it cited the conclusion of Congress that "the most effective means" of avoiding disruption of railroad service is by "facilitating free collective bargaining between railroads and the labor organizations representing their employees."

And while the process established by Congress doesn't prohibit strikes, it provides layers of mediation and cooling-off periods to give every opportunity for a settlement, the court observed. It noted that the state agency had used Railway Labor Act procedures up to the eve of the strike.

"To allow individual states, by acquiring railroads, to circumvent the federal system of railroad bargaining," the court held, ". . . would destroy the unformity thought essential by Congress and would endanger the efficient operation of the interstate rail system."

Picket Line Visitors Bolster Embattled Cement Strikers

Kosmosdale, Ky. — Cars and pickup trucks lined the side of Dixie Highway 20 miles south of Louisville because the word was out: AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland was coming to join the picket line.

"Twenty-five years and not a bit of trouble here in our bargaining all that time," said one of the strikers after Kirkland did arrive. "But then the Kosmos plant was sold to Moore McCormack. Ten months is a long time to strike, and it hurts."

MOORE McCORMACK Resources Inc. owns steamships, among other things, and has invested heavily in oil and natural gas holdings in Louisiana and Texas and in the coal, iron ore, and steel industries. It bought the Kosmos Cement Co. in December of 1980 and began immediately to rescind the existing contract, which didn't expire until May 1981.

"It wasn't hard for them to set up for our strike because most of the jobs are unskilled," said another of the strikers, a black man who said he was offered unlimited overtime and other incentives if he won't stay in.

He said there were only about six highly skilled operators like himself among the day shift of 57. "They filled those jobs with personnel supervisors, then recruited a lot of scabs out of Indiana."

IN ALL, there were 180 working the plant's various shifts when the strike started May 8, 1981.

But Moore McCormack didn't count on the solidarity of Local 370 of the Cement, Lime, Gypsum & Allied Workers, which has 147 pickets going around the clock. The company hasn't been able to keep more than 90 scabs working at the plant and the nearby quarry. CL&GW President Thomas Miechur said the Kosmos boycott, approved by the AFL-CIO Executive Council at its February meeting, is the first such request in the 43-year history of the union.

The strikers are very aware of the boycott, and hoping it helps—just as they were buoyed by the visit from Kirkland, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue, Bakery, Confectionery & Tobacco Workers President John DeConcini and some 18 leaders of state federations and other AFL-CIO officers attending the regional conference in Louisville.

ALL THREE Louisville TV stations were present when Kirkland stepped off the bus, and every striker had ample time to meet him during the hour he marched on their line. Most in evidence were the members of Women's Awareness, an organization of strikers' wives and family members in bright blue CL&GW windbreakers. They yelled greetings back at passing cars who honked support of the strike.

"President Kirkland, we can never thank you enough for coming," said one of them.

"Sister, it's like going to church. It's good for my soul, too," he replied.

5,000 LETTERS signed by Ashland, Ky., trade unionists voicing strong opposition to a "right-to-work" bill in the state legislature are packaged by union volunteers at the Steelworkers hall in Ashland. The signatures were gathered in a two-day drive spearheaded by the Ashland Area AFL-CIO and hand-delivered to members of the House Labor Committee in Frankfort. Area AFL-CIO President Michael Blevins reported that Gov. John Y. Brown assured union representatives he would veto the bill if the legislature passes it.

3 Congressmen Upset in Illinois Primary Elections

Three incumbent congressmen lost their bids for renomination in the Illinois primary elections, the first in the nation, as redistricting changed the state's political map.

In the new 4th District, two right-wing incumbents competed for the GOP nomination. The winner was George M. O'Brien, who had more of his former constituency in the new district. He beat Edward J. Derwinski, who had served in the House for 23 years. The district is considered safely Republican.

A realignment of district lines also was a factor in the defeat of Republican Tom Railsback, a moderate who is serving his seventh term in the House. He was beaten by a New Right challenger, Kenneth G. McMillan, a 39-year-old state senator. But the result could tilt the district, which includes industrial Rock Island County, to Democrat Lane Evans in the general election.

INTRAMURAL Democratic battles led to the defeat of 70-year-old John G. Fary by William O. Lipinski, a 44-year-old Chicago alderman. But another Chicago Democrat facing stiff opposition, Gus Savage, won renomination for a second term with less than 39 percent of the vote in a four-way race. The mostly black district is considered safely Democratic.

In the gubernatorial primary, incumbent Republican Gov. James R. Thompson easily won renomination. Former Sen. Adlai E. Stevenson III was unopposed for the Democratic nomination for governor.

The Heart of the Matter

IN IRELAND, in the Middle East, and in too many places even in our own hemisphere, children today know far too much about bombs and plastique, about poverty and pestilence, about terror and death. They know far too much about human hatred.

But in all of those places, there remains the faith that unity and cooperation and mutual effort among free and equal human beings can overcome the forces of hatred. That is the faith that is shared by Histadrut and the AFL-CIO. It is the central theme and guiding principle of free trade unionism, and it is the principle that free nations must learn to act upon if they hope to remain free.

The United States is in some disarray on this and several other issues. Those who are now in charge of national domestic policy have abandoned the idea of social and national solidarity, of equal rights, equal justice and equal opportunity. On the international scene, avarice has muddled their perception of who the good guys are and who are the bad.

Many differences exist between the AFL-CIO and the Reagan Administration on tax justice, fiscal and monetary policy, industrial policy, foreign trade, public health, public education, public works, public welfare and so on.

THE HEART OF the matter is our total disagreement on what government is for, what is its essence, its role. We are unable to free ourselves of the belief that the job of government, as a human institution, is to conserve and improve the conditions of human life. We see government as an ennobling force—able to offer hope and help. Mr. Reagan appears to be unable to understand that.

His supporters appear to be wedded to the view that government is not the property of those governed, but the private property of those who happen to control it.

Instead of bringing the people together, they are driving them apart, dividing them along economic lines, racial lines, sex lines, age lines and along any other lines in which wedges can be driven.

In freeing some of the people from "excessive government control," this Administration is freeing them to exercise, as excessively as they like, the power of accumulated wealth against their neighbors. In freeing others of "excessive dependence" on their government, they are robbing them of the hope of becoming something more than objects to be manipulated at the whim of others.

IN SEEKING to dismantle federal programs in which all groups and all shades of opinion have been able to make themselves heard as integral parts of a whole society, Mr. Reagan is prepared to put those programs at the mercy of smaller, more disparate, more exclusive bodies that can be much more easily controlled by local powerful special-interest groups.

And in allowing narrow, mercantile interests to dominate foreign policy, he is permitting international bankers and multinational profit-seekers to compromise our national interests and the interests of our allies, and to collaborate, for the sake of short-term gains, with those who would deny human rights and crush the hope of freedom of men and women around the world—men and women who have a right to expect something more than indifference from the United States of America.

—AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue, in accepting Histadrut Humanitarian Award, Mar. 20, 1982, New York.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
LANE KIRKLAND, President
THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward	Murray H. Finley
Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts	Sol C. Chaikin
Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco	Charles H. Pillard
J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride	David J. Fitzmaurice
Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps	Wm. W. Winpisinger
William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell	John DeConcini
Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss	William Konyha
Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney	Douglas A. Fraser
Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield	Barbara Hutchinson
Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto	Gerald W. McEntee

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman, James M. Shevis

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W. Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, March 27, 1982 No. 12

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

International Labor Press AFL-CIO/CLC Association

'You Could Use a Breath of Fresh Air!'

New Jersey Example Cited

'New Federalism' Experiment Adds to Burden on Individuals

By Gus Tyler

IF YOU WANT to know what's wrong with President Reagan's "new federalism," take a look at New Jersey. We pick that state not because it is different but because it is typical.

The New Jersey governor is the recently elected Thomas Kean. He squeaked into office over his Democratic opponent largely because Kean was perceived to be a "moderate," even a "liberal," Republican. He has just submitted his first tax and budget proposals to the state legislature.

His first problem is how to make the books balance in these difficult days. New Jersey, like most of the states in the union, has been hit by stagflation: economic stagnation and inflation. For his typical state, this means deficits: economic stagnation means that less will come in and inflation means that more will go out. So he faces a deficit of $657 million.

IN PAST YEARS, he might have turned to Washington for some assistance. But that would be somewhat futile under the new policy of reducing federal aid to the states and increasing state responsibilities for their own programs. That, after all, is what the "new federalism" is all about.

So, liberal Republican Thomas Kean submits his own solution for Jersey's economic plight.

Step Number One is to reduce corporate taxes. This will cost the state about $72 million dollars. That raises the deficit to $729 million.

"Why, oh why," ask the simple minded, "should any governor cut taxes at a time when the state is running in the red?"

KEAN HOPES to entice businesses from other states to relocate in New Jersey. New Jersey's rate will be the lowest in the region, underbidding New York, Connecticut, and Pennsylvania, according to the governor.

This means, of course, that businesses will leave the states surrounding New Jersey. The economy will bloom in the Garden State while the flowers wither in the neighboring gardens.

At some point, of course, New York will try to do to New Jersey what New Jersey is doing to New York. So New York will have to lower the tax rate on corporations to lure them back from across the Hudson River.

But as corporations pay less and less in taxes, the states—whether New Jersey or any other state—must impose taxes elsewhere to make ends meet. That's the other part of Kean's proposal:

- The 5 percent sales tax will now be extended to cigarettes and a new tax will be added to gasoline. So smokers and drivers get hit.
- New Jersey Transit will be required to raise all fares on trains and buses by 25 percent. So commuters and shoppers and people going to work will be hit.
- Tuition at the state universities—12 of them—will be raised by 10 percent. So students and their families will be hit—especially students who can not afford private school tuition fees.
- About 2,500 state employees will be fired. Retired teachers will have their pensions reduced by lowering the cost of living adjustment clause.

There's the "new federalism" in action.

Copyright 1982, Gus Tyler Columns

Making Poverty A Permanent State

When President Reagan submitted his fiscal 1983 budget to Congress, he proposed revisions in almost every major support program that offers assistance to the nation's low income and unemployed families.

He urged the nation "to weather the temporary dislocation and pressure that must inevitably accompany the restoration of national, economic, fiscal and military health."

For the nation's poor and unemployed, the results of the Administration's budget proposals are far worse than "temporary dislocations." Combined with program alterations enacted last year, the fiscal 1983 budget proposals make poverty a more severe and permanent condition for millions of low-income families, and seriously deplete the availability of assistance for the rapidly growing number of unemployed workers.

—From AFL-CIO testimony to a House Agriculture subcommittee on proposed cuts in the food stamp program, Mar 25, 1982.

Occupational Burnout

Growing Union Role Explored On Remedies for Job Stress

By Gordon H. Cole

HOW BAD IS the stress on your job? Are you constantly being bugged by a supervisor, by noises in the plant, by unclear assignments, by faulty materials, by sexual harassment, by dangerous equipment?

Maybe your union can help you.

Executive stress and burnout have been a growing management concern for years. Now the concept has spread that a workplace should be psychologically as well as physically safe for employees as well. About 15 states have paid workers' compensation benefits in cases where anxiety, depression or other mental problems have been caused by job stress.

THIS WAS THE lesson learned at a recent seminar at the George Meany Center for Labor Studies. The subject was "Stress as a Union Issue." Participants came from 12 unions in eight states.

Specialists for the Graphic Arts International Union, the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. and the National Institute of Mental Health led the discussion.

Eugene Martin, stress project director for GAIU, opened the seminar by asking participants to guess which of seven occupations produced the greatest stress: telephone operator, clerical worker, pressman, electrician, mail carrier, electronic technician and management administrator.

He disclosed that this was the order of admissions to mental health hospitals of patients in these occupations.

MARTIN EXPLAINED that too little stress leads to boredom; too much to burnout. What the individual needs is balance, he said.

Dr. Elliott Liebow, an anthropologist and chief of the NIMH Center for Work & Mental Health, described job stress as a social or "systems" problem rather than a problem inside an individual.

He warned that stress at work carries over to home life, explaining that it can lead to trouble with the spouse, to diarrhea, skin rash, colitis, sleeplessness. A worker who suffers from job stress is just as much of a threat to the health of his or her family as a carrier of asbestos dust.

Workers tend to blame themselves for job stresses. They feel they're not man enough or woman enough to conquer what's bugging them, Liebow said. He suggested that unions could help by teaching their members that job stress is a collective experience, not an individual experience. The union can act as a support system by pressuring management to improve working conditions. People being driven crazy on the job don't make good employees or good union members.

The seminar was told that for more than 20 years people have been studying worker alienation, job absenteeism and productivity. Early studies identified most blue-collar workers as being alienated; more recent studies show most professional and white-collar workers as being alienated.

He suggested three reasons for the alienation:

- Workers do not participate in decisions that affect them.
- Workers are not appreciated for what they are and what they do.
- The work processes are not based on an interaction between people so that workers feel "validated" by the communication.

Of American management, Martin concluded, "I don't think they know how." He added, "American management has been unable to respond to these needs of their workers."

He charged management with "overstressing people," calling it "poor strategy for inducing productivity. Even if it was once an effective strategy, it isn't working now."

Martin's explanation: Most American managers have been brought up to function as authoritarians. What we prize in our society is competitive and aggressive behavior, not cooperative, nuturing, supportive behavior.

NO TEXTBOOK solutions for job stress were offered at the seminar. Among the several strategies proposed:

- Sell management on the real costs of stress in the workplace.
- Develop opportunities for consultation and communication between workers and management.
- Establish asylums — quiet rooms — in the plant where a worker can retreat for 10 minutes of peace at breaktime.
- Enlist the local mental health resources with the help of the union's community service program.

Jack Kain, director of GAIU's safety and health program, reported that of the eight subjects covered in 11 safety seminars, the session devoted to job stress has always been the most popular in the members' final evaluations.

Gordon H. Cole is an adjunct senior staff associate at the George Meany Center for Labor Studies.

Shrinking Federal Role

Mine Safety Inspection Cutback Deepens Concern of Workers

BUDGET AND POLITICAL maneuvering by the Administration and of Congress is raising questions among the nation's miners about the level of government concern for their health and safety.

That view was expressed in a network radio interview by top legislative representatives for the Steelworkers and the Mine Workers—two of the unions that represent the nearly one million men and women who work in both deep-shaft and surface mining operations throughout the country. USWA Legislative Director John J. Sheehan and UMW Legislative Manager John Jarvis stressed that consistent and close government scrutiny of the highly hazardous mining industry is critical to maintaining maximum possible safety.

Budget slashes that forced inspection cutbacks, restrictions against use of funds for sand, gravel and stone mine inspections, and attempts to shift large parts of mine safety responsibility from the Mine Safety & Health Administration (MSHA) to the Occupational Safety & Health Administration (OSHA) can lead to "a tragedy of confusion," Sheehan asserted.

He pointed out that "OSHA has no safety standards for sand, gravel and stone operations," and that OSHA officials have refused to perform any mine inspections.

Jarvis said the UMW has "serious reservations about the quality" of coal mine inspections under current Administration policies that have created confusion and low morale among MSHA's inspections in the field. "Most mine inspectors are very well trained; they're dedicated people and are trying to do a very difficult job," he declared. "But, they are human beings, and when their jobs are being threatened—whether the 'RIF' notice becomes a reality or not—it's bound to affect their performance."

JARVIS AND SHEEHAN urged the Administration to spell out a strong commitment to mine safety. They said the unions are pledged to every possible cooperation with management and government in that effort and will continue to be outspoken advocates for the need for federal inspections in these workplaces. Mining, whether surface or deep-shaft, they added, has unique problems and needs that are different from those in the production and construction industries that are the jurisdiction of OSHA.

Sheehan and Jarvis appeared on the AFL-CIO produced program Labor News Conference.

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

THE HOUSING INDUSTRY, a linchpin of the American economy, is in deep trouble.

In 1981, fewer new housing units were built than in any year since 1946. The 1.1 million units that were built were less than half of those needed to provide for new households and replace old housing.

Pounded by the current recession and continuing high interest rates, home construction will dip even further this year, predicts the National Association of Home Builders. The group's president recently told a congressional committee that "the housing collapse that we feared, but prayed would not occur, is upon us."

The American dream of home ownership has been put out of reach for all but a small minority of prospective buyers. Rental housing is shrinking, with the vacancy rate the lowest ever recorded.

THE PAST THREE years of depression in the housing industry has left nearly a million construction workers unemployed —a jobless rate of over 18 percent. An equal number has become unemployed in dependent industries ranging from lumber to home appliances.

Thus, about one out of four of the nation's jobless has been laid off from home construction or construction-related employment. Bankruptcies among home builders have become epidemic. Skilled trades workers have been forced out of the building industry—a costly waste of human and material resources.

Instead of stimulating housing production to remedy the serious shortage, the Reagan Administration is moving in the opposite direction.

The Administration's proposed budget for fiscal 1983 would eliminate almost all new federally assisted housing. The budget even calls for cancelling unused spending authority from prior years that would support new construction.

INSTEAD OF PROVIDING below-market interest rate financing to make new housing saleable and rentable, as has been done in past recessions, the Administration is cutting back longstanding programs. The authority of the Federal Housing Administration and the Government National Mortgage Association to insure mortgages is being curtailed.

In place of four decades of federal programs designed to stimulate the production of housing for low- and moderate-income families, the Administration wants to substitute a so-called rent voucher system for the poor.

With these vouchers, distributed on the basis of income, low-income families would compete for housing on the open market.

The Administration plugs its voucher system as being cheaper than subsidizing new housing. It fits nicely with its free market ideology. One advocate billed it as a bold new initiative "toward people, not toward structures."

BUT THE GENERAL Accounting Office, an investigative arm of Congress, came up with less rosy conclusions. The GAO reported that a voucher program could be "more expensive than new construction" in tight housing markets. The GAO added that such a program wouldn't address the special difficulties that poor families or black families headed by women sometimes face because of discrimination in the rental housing marketplace.

The GAO also noted that the voucher idea isn't new, but that opponents of public housing had advanced it as early as 1937.

Critics of the voucher proposal, which include organized labor, argue that it would do nothing to increase the supply of housing. They predict it would accelerate rent inflation by increasing competition in a tight rental market.

MINERS ARE getting distressing signals about the level of government concern for their health and safety from the budget and political jockeying of Administration officials and members of Congress, Steelworkers Legislative Director John J. Sheehan, second from left, and Mine Workers Legislative Manager John Jarvis, third from left, said on Labor News Conference. They were questioned by Curtis Riddle, of the Baltimore Sun and Lance Gay of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers. The AFL-CIO produced public affairs program is aired weekly on Mutual radio.

EUGENE V. DEBS AWARD of the Social Democrats, USA, is presented to President William Konyha of the Carpenters, second from left, by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue at a reception in New York. Joining in the tribute are AFL-CIO Deputy Organizing Director Don Slaiman and Rita Freedman, executive director of the Social Democrats.

Konyha Calls for New Effort To Reach Social Justice Goal

New York—There is still much to be done in the struggle for social justice that trade unionists Eugene V. Debs and Peter J. McGuire helped pioneer a century ago, President William Konyha of the Carpenters told the Social Democrats, USA.

Although today's society is far more complex than that of the 1880s, Konyha stressed that the philosophy that Debs and McGuire embraced remains sound in the 1980s. He made his comments in accepting the ninth Eugene V. Debs Award from the Social Democrats.

KONYA POINTED out that Debs and McGuire came into adulthood at a time of angry reaction to the severe hardships resulting from the Industrial Revolution—Debs as secretary-treasurer of the Locomotive Firemen and McGuire as secretary-treasurer of the Carpenters.

Debs went on to become a national leader in the American socialist movement. Fellow socialist McGuire made his mark in the trade union movement and as founder of Labor Day.

"I'm sure that both these pioneers would agree that a century later, the inheritors of their traditions have a lot more work to do," Konyha observed.

"OUR TRADE union movement, confronted by vast changes in our economy, needs to be able to organize more than 28 percent of the workforce," he stressed.

At the same time, Konyha said, Social Democrats would agree that "the idea of democratic humanism needs more support on the American political scene."

Konyha outlined current conditions at home and abroad that are undermining the continuing drive for social progress. He cited the repression of a free trade union movement in Poland "by a regime that has the nerve to call itself 'socialist.'" He also assailed the policies of "our Republican capitalistic government" that has brought mounting unemployment, a foundering economy and a depressed housing industry.

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue, who presented the Debs award to Konyha, pointed out that the Reagan Administration continues to wipe out vital social programs even as the effects of "supply-side" economics cut deep on workers, the aged, the young, and the poor.

No one should be surprised, Donahue suggested, that the Reagan Administration's tax cuts which benefit the wealthy were intended to produce a shortage of government funds so that further reductions in social spending would be required.

"The Stockman-Laffer-Reagan plan never pretended to be egalitarian, never pretended to seek a redistribution of the nation's wealth in a more equitable fashion," Donahue observed.

"WE SHOULD never accuse the Republicans of having lied to us. The President, with a few exceptions, told the nation what he intended to do," although the people didn't understand the implications, he said.

"Now, every poll tells us of the nation's changing attitude," Donahue noted. "Now we can see what the implications of these policies are." Most people now know that the Reagan policies have not worked and will not work, he said.

Also addressing the dinner honoring Konyha were Piotr Naimski, a founding member of the Polish Workers Defense Committee (KOR), a forerunner of the Solidarity free trade union, and AFL-CIO Organizing Director Alan Kistler.

Federal Program Sought

Marine Engineers Urge Strong Merchant Fleet

New Orleans—The 97th convention of the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association called on the maritime industry and the federal government to take "economically sensible and militarily important" actions to bolster the American merchant marine.

President Jesse M. Calhoon, in his keynote speech, expressed hope that the Reagan Administration will soon offer the country a long-needed program for upgrading the U.S. merchant fleet.

HE NOTED that the designation of the Secretary of Transportation as the Administration's principal spokesman on maritime matters reflects an upgrading of interest in a stronger merchant marine. On the basis of discussions with government officials, he added, "MEBA viewpoints, based on our policy statements and recommendations, are to some extent at least being integrated into the Administration's formulations."

Calhoon, who became acting president of the national union in 1960 and was elected for the first time in 1962, was unanimously elected to another term of office. Also re-elected without opposition were C. E. DeFries as secretary-treasurer and Raymond T. McKay as executive vice president.

MEBA, WHICH has three affiliated districts, represents more than 9,000 marine engineers, deck officers and radio officers throughout the merchant marine. In addition, a number of affiliated unions represent employees of the National Weather Service; other public employee groups; an organization of engineers and scientists, largely in California, including doctors, technicians, nurses and administrative employees in private and public hospitals and clinics. The convention, however, is composed of delegates only from the maritime industry.

MEBA's resolution on maritime policy pointed out that the merchant marine "is an essential investment in national security and economic strength."

Yet today, the merchant marine is a far cry from the fleet that once dominated much of the ocean's seaways, the resolution noted. In 1981, for instance, U.S.-flag merchant ships "carried only 3.6 percent of our international trade and less than 3 percent of essential imported strategic materials," the measure pointed out. In addition, the average age of merchant ships is 17 years—the most elderly of any of the world's major fleets.

THE CONVENTION also cited the decline in the size of the privately owned merchant fleet from 1,087 ships in 1950 to 577 last year. In 1967, the ocean-going fleet provided 60,000 shipboard jobs; now the total is less than 20,000.

The union called for adoption of "a cargo policy to guarantee a fair share of cargo for U.S.-flag vessels through a series of bilateral maritime agreements with our trading partners." It also urged investment and tax policies to improve the competitive position of U.S. shipowners.

And it proposed to give the merchant fleet status as a naval auxiliary and to provide for civilian manning of naval support and supply ships.

The delegates called for "strictest enforcement" of the Jones Act, which reserves several types of shipping for U.S.-flag ships, and said they "vigorously oppose" efforts to weaken or waive the act, except in cases where it may be deemed "absolutely necessary in the national interest."

The convention also urged adoption of programs to "revitalize waterborne commerce" on the Great Lakes.

The recession in the steel industry and the general refusal of federal authorities to ship more than "a minute amount" of foreign aid grain and military hardware from Great Lakes ports has caused depression-like unemployment in the inland fleet.

Big Decline in Fuel Prices Helps Stabilize Living Costs

Consumer prices rose by only two-tenths of a percent in February, the result of a slight decline in mortgage interest rates, a big drop in energy prices, and only moderate increases in food prices.

Economists also cited the tight-money policies of the Federal Reserve Board, as a reason for the continued cooling of inflation. The Fed's actions have triggered the current recession, which in turn has led to reduced consumer demand for goods and services and rising unemployment.

THE BUREAU of Labor Statistics, in reporting the latest change in its monthly consumer price index, said the index still was 7.4 percent higher than a year earlier. The February rise continued a trend of moderate increases in the CPI that began last September. It was the smallest rise since July 1980, when prices rose only one-tenth of 1 percent.

In a separate report, BLS said the slowdown in the inflation rate caused real spendable earnings — after-tax pay expressed in constant 1977 dollars — to rise 1.9 percent in February, the most of any month since the government began computing inflation-adjusted income in 1964. Over the past year, however, earnings have declined by 1.7 percent.

THE SMALL increase in the February CPI, if repeated for the next 12 consecutive months, would translate to a yearly compounded rate of about 3 percent.

Gasoline prices fell by 2.3 percent over the month, while new car prices, influenced by rebates, were eight-tenths of 1 percent cheaper. Fuel oil and coal prices dropped by four-tenths of 1 percent.

Because of the extraordinary drop in gasoline prices—due to the current world oil surplus—and auto prices, the overall transportation component of the CPI fell for the month by seven-tenths of 1 percent, its steepest decline in nearly 13 years.

The rise in food prices also moderated, increasing four-tenths of 1 percent, or only half the January rate of increase. A substantially smaller increase in prices for fruit and vegetables was largely responsible for the moderation.

UAW, General Motors Agree on Terms

Detroit—The Auto Workers tentatively agreed to a new contract with the General Motors Corp., that provides greater job security in return for wage concessions in an industry hard hit by recission.

Concessions made by GM workers in the 30-month agreement generally parallel those made by the union last month in its new pact with the Ford Motor Co.

AS IN THE Ford agreement, the UAW agreed to give up two annual 3 percent pay raises and the equivalent of two weeks of paid time off a year, along with deferral for 18 months of three cost-of-living raises due this year. The COL money will be restored later.

The automaker agreed in return to rescind decisions to close four plants and to apply retroactively an enhanced layoff benefit program to workers laid off by the shutdown of assembly plants in Southgate and Fremont, Calif.

Matching a provision in the Ford pact, GM said it would also place a two-year moratorium on future domestic plant closings. It made the same promise as Ford to preserve jobs by avoiding excessive subcontracting to lower paid non-union domestic and foreign sources, and to make available to UAW members a profit-sharing plan effective in 1983.

THE UAW's 300-member GM bargaining council was scheduled to meet in Chicago Mar. 25 to vote on the agreement before it is presented to the rank and file for approval. The union set a tentative ratification deadline of Apr. 10. The pact would affect 319,000 UAW members. An additional 141,000 members are on indefinite layoffs, but most would be eligible to vote on the agreement.

UAW President Douglas A. Fraser and Vice President Owen Bieber, who heads the union's GM division, stressed the job security provisions of the new pact. "We've succeeded in achieving a series of breakthroughs on job security that will stop the hemorrhaging of GM workers' jobs," they said in a joint statement.

The four plants that will be kept open under the agreement include GM facilities in Euclid, Ohio; Trenton, N.J.; and two in Detroit—the Fort Street plant and plant No. 37. The decision will save about 11,000 jobs, the company and the union estimated. Workers at the firm's Coit Road plant outside Cleveland will keep their jobs through transfers to other GM facilities.

UNDER THE new profit-sharing plan, the workers' share would be based on GM's net worth and assets. The Ford profit-sharing plan would distribute a share of pretax profits based on a percentage of sales. Under the GM formula, workers as a group would have received $1.3 billion between 1976 and 1979 had the plan been in effect.

In addition, GM guaranteed active workers with 10 to 15 years of seniority half their hourly rate of pay until age 62 or until retirement if they are laid off. In other gains, UAW members will receive prepaid legal services and discounts between 12 and 20 percent on new car purchases.

The new pact would replace an agreement scheduled to expire Sept. 14.

Airline Pact Gives 14,000 2-Step Raise

The Machinists have approved a new two-year agreement with United Airlines covering some 14,000 mechanics, ramp service employees, and other workers.

The pact, retroactive to last Nov. 1, was ratified by members by a 4 to 1 ratio. It represents the first major settlement in this year's round of negotiations between IAM and the nation's major airlines.

UNDER THE United agreement, mechanics will receive pay raises of 10 percent the first year and 8 percent in the second year. Food service workers will receive smaller increases—8 percent the first year and 4 percent the second year.

Extra pay for mechanics holding Federal Aviation Administration licenses to certify aircraft as airworthy was increased, as was premium pay for working certain shifts. Pension benefits were hiked, and medical, surgical and dental benefits raised to compensate for inflation.

The union gave up a cost-of-living clause that had been part of the old contract. The escalator provision had yielded three adjustments during the life of the pact, each one the maximum 13 cents per hour.

The agreement was the first between the parties in more than 20 years to be reached in direct negotiations without a mediator. Three years ago, the union rejected two tentative contracts and struck for 55 days before reaching agreement.

STILL TO BE negotiated are IAM contract renewals with Trans World Airlines, Eastern, Northwest, Continental, USAir, and Braniff.

In previous years, the first settlement of the bargaining round set the pattern for other airlines. But both parties agree that this will not be the case this year. Deregulation and the state of the economy have weakened the industry, and several airlines have asked for and received pay cuts from their unionized employees. IAM has lost 4,600 jobs at United since the last settlement.

Under the old United contract, mechanics' base rate pay was $13 an hour. COL adjustments added 39 cents. The two pay increases under the new contract will raise wages to $14.71, as of last Nov. 1, and $15.91 in November 1982.

PENSION BENEFITS will rise from $27 per year of service per month to $28 on Oct. 1, 1982, and to $29.50 on Oct. 1, 1983. The monthly pension benefit for food service workers will rise to $20.90 per year of service over the term.

Shift premiums were increased by 30 cents an hour over the life of the contract, rising to 51 cents for the afternoon shift, 58 cents for the night shift, and 61 cents for relief shifts. Licensed pay was raised to a maximum of 85 cents an hour for two licenses, up from 65 cents in the old contract.

UNION PICKETS marching outside the Las Vegas Convention Center prompted the cancellation of a union-busting seminar. Although 200 participants had enrolled for the session, only a handful showed up at the center—and they were greeted by nearly 4,000 demonstrators who responded to a call from the Nevada AFL-CIO. The aborted seminar was sponsored by five local Chambers of Commerce, employers, and the state-funded Nevada Development Authority.

SEIU Challenges Hospitals On Social Security Pullout

An "epidemic" of withdrawals of non-profit hospitals from the social security system threatens to leave tens of thousands of employees with inadequate retirement protection, the Service Employees warned.

SEIU President John J. Sweeney said 271 hospitals with 192,000 covered employees have filed the two-year notice required for a non-profit institution to withdraw from the social security system. In many cases, he told reporters at a news conference, the employees who stand to lose protection weren't informed of the withdrawal notices.

PUBLIC EMPLOYERS and non-profit organizations were originally omitted from social security coverage. The law was substantially changed to allow exempt groups to come under the system. Once enrolled, they must remain in the system for at least eight years, with withdrawal requiring a two-year notice of intent to the Internal Revenue Service. About 1.6 million of some 2.3 million employees of non-profit hospitals are now covered by social security.

Sweeney protested the government's policy of refusing, on the grounds of confidentiality, to reveal the institutions that have filed notices of intent to withdraw. He said the SEIU is initiating court action under the Freedom Information Act to obtain the information.

He also said SEIU locals representing employees of non-profit institutions have been advised to file unfair labor practice charges against any employer seeking to withdraw from social security coverage without going through the collective bargaining process.

Legislation before Congress would prohibit withdrawal from the social security system, and Sweeney said the SEIU strongly supports such action. The most recent AFL-CIO convention also urged Congress "to correct this defect in the law."

SWEENEY SAID at the news conference that many of the withdrawal notices stem from the advice of "outside consultants who are marketing various types of replacement plans" they claim will provide equal retirement protection at less cost to the employing hospital.

In fact, Sweeney charged, these replacement plans often "are designed to benefit higher-paid workers at the expense of lower-paid workers, taking advantage of the high turnover rate among lower-paid hospital employees."

In addition to the potential loss in protection for workers, Sweeney noted, withdrawal by the hospitals which have served notice would cost the social security system hundreds of millions of dollars in payroll tax revenues.

Workers with union contracts will be able to protect themselves against loss of social security coverage, Sweeney said. But those without a union have to depend on Congress, he stressed.

About 3.8 million of the 4.7 million workers in non-profit institutions are presently covered by social security. This figure includes 1.6 million out of 2.3 million hospital employees.

BRITISH PARLIAMENT MEMBERS and officials of the AFL-CIO Dept. for Professional Employees compare the impact of microelectronics and high technology on employment in their respective countries. The meeting at federation headquarters was part of a weeklong visit to Washington of the House of Commons Select Committee on Employment. Both the U.S. and British economies are suffering high unemployment. DPE representatives included Director Jack Golodner and Dennis Chamot along with President Rodney A. Bower of the Professional & Technical Engineers, AFL-CIO Special Counsel Larry Gold, and Economist John Zalusky of the federation's Dept. of Economic Research.

FTC Backed As Protector Of Consumers

American workers welcome government protections against deception in the marketplace and aren't clamoring for "less enforcement" by the Federal Trade Commission, the AFL-CIO told Congress.

The federation urged a Senate subcommittee to renew the funding authority of the FTC, which expires at the end of September, and to reject proposals that would tie the agency's hands.

IRONICALLY, FTC Chairman James C. Miller III is one who wants his agency curbed, although not as drastically as some of the business associations. Miller, a Reagan appointee, wants Congress to bar the FTC from acting against deceptive advertising unless it could show that the deception caused economic damage to consumers.

The AFL-CIO statement said the FTC has earned the support of consumers and incurred the hostility of various business groups by such actions as requiring companies to:

- Stop billing customers for unordered merchandise.
- Replace rusted fenders in automobiles.
- Give customers their money back when they can't keep up payments on layaway purchases.
- Stop adding illegal fees to consumer debts.
- Stop abusing customers in telephone calls about delinquent debts.
- Stop discriminating on racial, ethnic and sex grounds in granting credit.

The statement stressed the AFL-CIO's opposition to legislation that would bar the FTC from considering, or even studying, anti-competitive practices engaged in by professional organizations of doctors, lawyers, dentists and others.

IT NOTED that the FTC has in the past helped consumers with lawsuits challenging medical association attempts to prevent physicians from taking part in low-cost health care alternatives.

Changes in the law that would curtail the Federal Trade Commission's jurisdiction "are not in the interest of the working people of this country," the AFL-CIO said.

Labor Opposes NFL's End Run On Antitrust Law

An attempt by owners of professional football teams to gain exemption from federal antitrust laws serves no public interest and should be rejected by Congress, the AFL-CIO urged.

The National Football League wants Congress to give it the status of a single employer, thus eliminating the obligations of fair competition and restrictions on anti-competitive agreements.

In a letter to all members of Congress, AFL-CIO Legislative Director Ray Denison said the owners have failed to show the "strong case" that would be needed to justify an exemption from the law.

HE SAID the AFL-CIO supports the position taken by the National Football League Players Association in opposition to any antitrust exemption. The football players are part of the AFL-CIO-affiliated Federation of Professional Athletes.

"Only the club owners are calling for an exemption," Denison stressed. "Their purpose is to make even more profits at the expense of the consumer and the athlete and, in our view, to gain the freedom to take such steps as putting all athletic events on pay television."

Despite their complaints about antitrust restrictions, "the sports leagues are thriving under the present rules of law," the AFL-CIO noted.

Protest Builds On Funds for Union-Busting

Chairman of four House committees concerned with health care costs have protested an Administration decision to allow hospitals and nursing homes to include fees paid to union-busting consultants as reimburseable expenses under Medicare.

The new policy, which the Dept. of Health & Human Services calls a "clarification," allows retroactive payments for anti-union expenses which had been disqualified under the previous Medicare reimbursement rule.

AFL-CIO PRESIDENT Lane Kirkland had termed the policy change "outrageous." And Service Employees President John J. Sweeney told a Washington news conference that his union will challenge its legality.

The congressional protesters wrote HHS Sec. Richard S. Schweiker that the change of policy means that "limited public funds under Medicare will be used to finance anti-union activities." Such a "misuse of public funds is totally unacceptable," they declared.

Signing the letter to Schweiker were Chairman John D. Dingell (D-Mich.) of the Energy & Commerce Committee; Henry A. Waxman (D-Calif.), chairman of its Subcommittee on Health & the Environment; Charles B. Rangel, chairman of the Ways & Means Subcommittee on Oversight, and Andrew Jacobs, Jr. (D-Ind.), chairman of the Ways & Means Subcommittee on Health.

AT THE SEIU news conference, Sweeney said health care institutions hire management consultants to direct efforts to thwart union organizing in at least 75 percent of representation elections, with billings averaging about $100,000 a campaign.

SEIU documentation had helped bring about a tightening of Medicare reimbursement standards under the Carter Administration, and Sweeney wrote Schweiker that the union considers the reversal "illegal" because "it permits payments for costs which Medicare law flatly prohibits."

The American Hospital Association had brought a suit against HHS challenging the Carter Administration policy of denial of reimbursement for management consultants employed to "persuade" employees not to choose union representation.

INSTEAD OF letting the suit go to court, the Reagan Administration backed down and "settled" the case by agreeing to allow reimbursement for any consultant activities that did not violate the National Labor Relations Act.

It also agreed to make the change in policy retroactive, allowing hospitals to recoup expenses for anti-union activities in the past.

The Federation of Nurses & Health Professionals, a division of the Teachers, has also attacked the Administration turnabout and is exploring a legal challenge.

In an earlier letter to Schweiker, Kirkland said the AFL-CIO considers the new rule an abandonment of the government policy of neutrality in organizing situations since federal funds will be used to discourage workers from joining unions.

FREEDOM FOR AFGHANISTAN rally near the Soviet Mission to the United Nations in New York City drew some 2,000 demonstrators, who expressed their support for the Afghan people and condemnation of the Soviet invaders. The event was sponsored by Freedom House, New York State AFL-CIO, Social Democrats, and Afghan communities in the area. AFL-CIO Regional Director Michael Mann pledged labor's support of Afghanistan's people.

Congress Asked To Bar Further Food Stamp Cuts

(Continued from Page 1)

among "the most heartless cuts" an Administration proposal to reduce food stamps for households that get emergency assistance to help pay winter heating bills.

The energy assistance payments offset only a part of the higher heating bills, Peterson noted, and don't provide any additional money to buy food. The Administration proposal to reduce food stamps dollar for dollar by the amount of the fuel cost subsidy would destroy the whole purpose of the fuel program, he protested.

Subcommittee Chairman Fred Richmond (D-N.Y.) said at the start of the hearings that he is distressed by the fact that top Administration officials, including President Reagan, continue to repeat untrue anecdotes about fraud and abuse of food stamps—while doing little to implement anti-fraud safeguards enacted by Congress.

Thus, Reagan's story of a man who paid for a single orange with food stamps and used the change to buy a bottle of vodka is an obvious fabrication. Under the law any change from a food stamp purchase has to be less than $1.

"We don't need to change the program to counter these myths," Richmond suggested. "We need to silence the storytellers."

Standby Oil Allocation Bill Blocked by Reagan's Veto

By David L. Perlman

President Reagan vetoed a bipartisan bill giving him emergency powers to deal with future oil shortages, and a 58-36 Senate vote to override the veto fell short of the needed two-thirds majority.

Earlier this month, Senate Republicans had joined in the one-sided 86-7 vote to pass the bill, despite the Administration's announced opposition and a veto warning. But in the crunch, most Republicans bowed to White House pressure not to "embarrass" the President and the override attempt was rejected.

THE COMPROMISE measure was intended to replace the Emergency Petroleum Allocation Act, which expired last September. It called on the President to submit to Congress a plan for allocating petroleum supplies in the event of a "severe" shortage that threatened the nation's security or economic stability.

Labor supported the measure, although the AFL-CIO had sought a stronger bill. But the President said in his veto message that he didn't want any such powers, that the government shouldn't interfere with the play of the free market, and that there was "no magic plan" to avoid hardships.

Senate Energy Committee Chairman James A. McClure (R-Ida.), one of the authors of the vetoed bill, urged his GOP colleagues in vain not to support the President's veto "out of blind loyalty." He said the legislation was needed to cope with a crisis such as another oil embargo.

But both Reagan and Vice President Bush made personal calls to senators to switch votes. The intense presidential lobbying of the Senate came even though the House almost certainly would have failed to override the veto.

In other action, the Senate passed unanimously a regulatory reform bill that moves in apparently conflicting directions. On the one hand, it strengthens the role of the Office of Management & Budget in reviewing rule-making by federal agencies. But the Senate then adopted an amendment allowing Congress, by majority vote of both the House and Senate, to overturn any proposed regulation.

This "two-house legislative veto" was opposed by both the AFL-CIO and the Administration. But it easily passed by a 69-25 vote. Congressional committees would have 45 days to review a proposed regulation. If a committee recommended disapproval, each house would have 30 days more to act on the recommendation.

Agencies would be required to submit a cost-benefit analysis of proposed regulations. But the Senate adopted a labor-supported amendment requiring OMB to submit its reasons for rejecting a regulation and directing agencies to keep a public record of written intervention by the White House.

THE MEASURE now goes to the House where the Judiciary Committee has approved a companion measure. But its version of the legislative veto is less controversial. It would allow the President to veto a resolution disapproving an Executive Branch regulation. Thus, if the President backed his administrators, it would require a two-thirds vote of the House and Senate to overturn a regulation.

The voting rights battle has shifted to the full Senate Judiciary Committee.

A subcommittee headed by Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah) and including the chairman of the full committee, Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.), voted 3-2 for a simple extension of the existing Voting Rights Act, without the clarifying and strengthening amendments the House adopted.

CIVIL RIGHTS and labor groups support the House version, which makes clear that voting law changes that result in discrimination are illegal—whether or not there is proof of an "intent" to discriminate. The change is needed to overcome a Supreme Court interpretation that weakens existing law.

A substantial majority of the Senate is listed as co-sponsors of the House-passed version, and an attempt will be made in the Judiciary Committee to substitute it for the weaker subcommittee bill.

SOLIDARITY BANNER flies over the California capitol in Sacramento as a message of support for the continuing struggle of Poland's workers against the government's repression. A joint resolution endorsed by the California AFL-CIO and adopted by the state legislature called on the Reagan Administration and Congress to intensify pressure on the Polish government to restore human and trade union rights.

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

3/27/82

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII | Saturday, April 3, 1982 | No. 13

Labor Backs New Plan For Lid on Health Costs

SIDEWALK DEMONSTRATION rallies support for Television & Radio Artists on strike since Mar. 1 against radio station WINS in New York. The strikers were joined by an array of craft and performing arts unions affiliated with the city AFL-CIO. AFTRA has filed charges against the management of the Westinghouse radio station for refusing to bargain in good faith on a new contract for 17 broadcasters and news reporters.

Alternative Would Avert Budget Ax

By Susan Dunlop

A comprehensive plan to check the steep rise in health care costs without damaging essential programs was unveiled by the labor-supported Health Security Action Council.

Auto Workers President Douglas A. Fraser, who heads the council, called the plan "a major alternative" to sharp cuts in the federal budget for health care sought by the Reagan Administration.

INTRODUCING the council's plan at a Washington news conference, Fraser charged that the Administration's proposals would "slash Medicare and Medicaid programs, wipe out vital services for millions of children, the elderly and the disabled" and shift the costs of their health care to the rest of the economy.

The council's plan to rein in costs, he said, "is a more humane approach that will protect people and save money." Fraser estimated that the program could save about $11 billion in public funds in its first two years. Savings would also go to the states and the private sector, he noted.

Key features of the plan would put lids on hospital, nursing home, and providers' charges. Management of the cost control programs would be in the hands of responsive state agencies.

THE HEALTH Security Action Council is the legislative arm of the Committee on National Health Insurance, which is supported by labor, consumer, senior citizens, religious and minority groups.

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue, who is secretary of the council, said that "the Administration's budget seems to assume that health care costs will disappear if the federal government refuses to pay the bill."

(Continued on Page 8)

Index Points To Stretchout Of Recession

By James M. Shevis

The 10th straight monthly drop in the government's index of leading economic indicators put the freeze on any burgeoning hopes for an early end to the recession.

Coupled with other gloomy economic news, the Commerce Dept.'s report of a drop of three-tenths of 1 percent in the index for February was a clear sign that the Reagan Recession that began last summer has yet to run its course. The index reflects changes in economic activity in a number of areas most likely to influence the economy in the weeks and months ahead.

THE GOVERNMENT also reported that the index declined more in December and January than originally announced. The index, compiled from 12 pieces of economic data, fell 1.2 percent in January —twice as deeply as reported earlier— and by eight-tenths of 1 percent in December instead of six-tenths of 1 percent as initially reported.

Commerce Dept. officials said the February decline also would likely be revised downward in April when more complete data are available.

Of the nine components available for February, five contributed to the decline in the index. The negative indicators were orders for plant and equipment, building permits, crude material prices, stock prices, and the change in liquid assets. The four components that contributed some offsetting improvement were led by a drop in initial claims for unemployment benefits, and included new factory orders, the money supply, and the pace of deliveries.

ANOTHER important indicator, the level of inventories, was not available for February. It was the data on inventories for January that contributed most to the large downward revision for that month.

In both January and February, the Commerce Dept. omitted the length of the average workweek to avoid distortions in the index which it said would have resulted from the abnormally severe January weather. Data for the January index were collected during an unusually cold and snowy week, and would have skewed the report for both months had the workweek been included, the department said.

If the workweek had been left in, the January decline would have been 1.5 percentage points sharper while the February decline would have appeared as an increase of about 1.2 percent, Commerce said.

THE INDEX is closely watched because it has proved reliable as a barometer of recovery from recessions. It usually shows several months of positive readings before an upturn in economic activity begins.

Robert Ortner, the Commerce Dept.'s chief economist, said hopeful signs of recovery are not yet showing up in the index.

(Continued on Page 2)

Benefit Cuts Unwarranted

Social Security Report Branded Alarmist Ploy

By David L. Perlman

The social security system can be restored to financial health without cutting back benefits, the AFL-CIO and leaders of the Save Our Security coalition declared.

Director Bert Seidman of the federation's Dept. of Social Security said a just released annual report of the system's trustees properly points up the need for early action to head off a recession-worsened short-term funding crisis.

BUT IT reveals "no cause for alarm" about the continuation of benefits, he stressed.

The three trustees, members of the Reagan Cabinet, projected various scenarios for the future stability of the social security trust funds, based on assumptions of economic conditions, inflation, birth rates and longevity.

Seidman protested what he termed "the lack of balance" in the way the Reagan Administration presented the report. By "exaggerating the fiscal problems of social security," he charged, "the Administration aims to cut social security benefits and thereby reduce its budget deficit."

IT WAS to prevent "just this sort of manipulation" that the AFL-CIO has urged that social security revenues and outlays be removed from the federal budget.

The social security payroll tax on workers and employers goes into different trust funds. These are the basic Old Age & Survivors Insurance, which pays monthly cash benefits after a worker retires or dies; Disability Insurance, which pays benefits after a worker become disabled; Hospital Insurance, the Medicare Part A protection for persons 65 or older and the long-term disabled, and Supplementary Medical Insurance, the Part B of Medicare.

Periodically, one trust fund will show a surplus while another has a temporary

(Continued on Page 7)

'Enterprise Zones' Termed Lure for Runaway Shops

President Reagan's proposal to establish tax-favored "enterprise zones" in blighted areas is more likely to attract runaway shops than job-creating new businesses, the State, County & Municipal Employees warned.

AFSCME President Gerald W. McEntee said the Administration proposal would establish "company towns" in urban areas that would compete to lure employers through lower taxes and exemptions from building codes and zoning laws.

THE TAX benefits promised business would cost the government $310 million in revenue under the Administration plan, McEntee noted. But the Administration has already slashed billions of dollars from job training and community development programs, he said. Thus, "the President's program gives with one hand and takes with three others."

The heavy industries that are supposed to be the "magnet" to attract other firms to enterprise zones would leave a trail of job losses and community dislocation in the areas where they were formerly located, McEntee suggested.

In addition, he noted that the Reagan proposal "calls for the contracting out of vital police and fire services to private industry in the zones." He termed this "a direct assault on public service and public employees."

AFL-CIO Economist Arnold Cantor called the Reagan plan "the same kind of supply-side nuttiness" as previous Administration tax and budget programs. Cantor,

(Continued on Page 7)

Clothing Workers Win Pay, Pension Gains for 70,000

New York—The Clothing & Textile Workers reached tentative agreement on a new contract with the Clothing Manufacturers Association covering some 70,000 workers in the men's and boys' tailored apparel industry.

More than 600 firms are represented by the CMA. The agreement came just hours before a midnight Mar. 31 strike deadline.

The settlement provides a wage increase of $1.05 an hour over a 38-month period, plus cost-of-living adjustments, and improvements in health, welfare, and pension plans. Additional details were withheld pending ratification.

ACTWU members across the country were voting on the pact, which replaces an 18-month agreement negotiated in the fall of 1980.

Index Points To Stretchout Of Recession

(Continued from Page 1)

"The recession is still here, and there's no sign of the end of it yet," he said.

The widening recession has lifted the nation's jobless rate from 7.2 percent in July to 8.8 percent in February. More than 9.6 million Americans are out of work, an increase of 1.8 million since the start of the recession.

A DUN & BRADSTREET report this week showed 4,846 business either have been liquidated or have sought reorganization since the beginning of 1982, an increase of more than 50 percent from the total for the same period a year earlier. The figures confirmed a new and disturbing trend in durable goods manufacturing, with the factory failure rate up 55.5 percent—from 449 to 698—from the comparable 1981 period.

Meanwhile, the U.S. League of Savings Associations reported that late payments on mortgage loans rose to a 17-year record in February as the recession and high interest rates kept an increasing number of homeowners from meeting their bills. The industry considers a home loan delinquent when no payment has been received within 60 days of the due date.

Sales of new single-family houses declined by 11.8 percent in February to the second-lowest monthly rate in two decades, the Depts. of Commerce and Housing & Urban Development reported. The sale of new houses over the month was a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 336,000, only slightly above the 335,000 of last September, the lowest since the government began keeping such figures in 1963.

RISING PESSIMISM over the near-term outlook for sales is causing auto makers to cut their output by 21 percent over the next three months, the Wall Street Journal reported.

BEST WISHES on his retirement are extended to Wes Reedy, assistant to the AFL-CIO secretary-treasurer since 1955, by Federation President Lane Kirkland and Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue. Reedy served on Kirkland's staff when he held the post during the 1970s, as well as that of William Schnitzler, the federation's first secretary-treasurer. A member of the Bakery, Confectionery & Tobacco Workers for 49 years, Reedy had been assistant to the president of the union before joining the AFL-CIO staff. His retirement was effective Apr. 1.

Congress Asked to Remedy Reagan's Tax Cut Blunder

The AFL-CIO urged the House Ways & Means Committee to support revenue-raising tax reforms as an alternative to Reagan Administration policies that have left key government programs underfunded and created new tax injustices.

Research Director Rudy Oswald told the committee that labor considers the Administration tax bill enacted by Congress last year a major blunder that must be remedied.

"THE CRAZY QUILT combination of the Reagan Administration's huge tax cuts, dismantled programs and sky-high interest rates is the direct cause of the present deep recession," he testified.

Further, Oswald warned, the economy's capacity to "regain strength and resiliency" has been gravely weakened by "the inequities and imbalances of these programs."

Oswald outlined to the committee, which has jurisdiction over tax legislation, the economic program advanced by the AFL-CIO.

It includes a rollback of the 1981 tax law to impose a $700 limit on the tax reduction for any household, repeal of future indexing of tax brackets and repeal or major modification of the new tax loopholes that were enacted.

LOOPHOLES the AFL-CIO proposed to end include the leasing of tax credits by corporations and additional tax windfalls to oil royalty owners.

Oswald submitted a table showing that labor's proposal for a $700 ceiling on income tax reduction would leave intact the scheduled reductions for virtually all families with incomes under $40.000 a year—and still bring in at least $25 billion in lost revenues.

He urged a series of other tax reform measures the AFL-CIO has proposed to further reduce deficits and provide needed revenues while moving closer to tax justice.

And he reiterated the AFL-CIO's position that Congress should finance any needed increase in defense spending through a special surtax, including a levy on gross corporate earnings.

Oswald said the assortment of revenue-raising measures proposed by the Administration "falls far short of needs" in terms of bringing in additional revenue "and adds up to nothing when measured against the need to restore some equity to the federal tax structure."

Senate Vote on Override Of Oil Allocation Bill Veto

The Senate failed to override President Reagan's veto of a labor-supported bill giving him emergency powers to allocate oil supplies in the event of a severe shortage. The 58-36 vote on Mar. 24 fell short of the two-thirds needed to overturn a veto.

FOR LABOR'S POSITION

Democrats 38

Baucus (Mont.)	Dodd (Conn.)	Kennedy (Mass.)	Pryor (Ark.)
Biden (Del.)	Eagleton (Mo.)	Leahy (Vt.)	Randolph (W.Va.)
Bumpers (Ark.)	Exon (Neb.)	Levin (Mich.)	Riegle (Mich.)
Burdick (N.D.)	Ford (Ky.)	Matsunaga (Hawaii)	Sarbanes (Md.)
Byrd, H. (Va.)	Glenn (Ohio)	Melcher (Mont.)	Sasser (Tenn.)
Byrd, R. (W.Va.)	Hart (Colo.)	Metzenbaum (Ohio)	Stennis (Miss.)
Chiles (Fla.)	Hollings (S.C.)	Mitchell (Me.)	Tsongas (Mass.)
Cranston (Calif.)	Huddleston (Ky.)	Nunn (Ga.)	Zorinsky (Neb.)
DeConcini (Ariz.)	Jackson (Wash.)	Pell (R.I.)
Dixon (Ill.)	Johnston (La.)	Proxmire (Wis.)

Republicans 20

Abdnor (S.D.)	Domenici (N.M.)	Hatfield (Ore.)	Pressler (S.D.)
Andrews (N.D.)	Durenberger (Minn.)	Hawkins (Fla.)	Rudman (N.H.)
Chaffee (R.I.)	Garn (Utah)	Jepsen (Iowa)	Roth (Del.)
Cohen (Me.)	Gorton (Wash.)	Kasten (Wis.)	Symms (Ida.)
Danforth (Mo.)	Grassley (Iowa)	McClure (Ida.)	Weicker (Conn.)

AGAINST LABOR'S POSITION

Democrats 4

Bentsen (Tex.)	Boren (Okla.)	Bradley (N.J.)	Heflin (Ala.)

Republicans 32

Armstrong (Colo.)	Hatch (Utah)	Mathias (Md.)	Simpson (Wyo.)
Baker (Tenn.)	Hayakawa (Calif.)	Mattingly (Ga.)	Specter (Pa.)
Boschwitz (Minn.)	Heinz (Pa.)	Murkowski (Aka.)	Stafford (Vt.)
D'Amato (N.Y.)	Helms (N.C.)	Nickles (Okla.)	Stevens (Aka.)
Denton (Ala.)	Humphrey (N.H.)	Packwood (Ore.)	Thurmond (S.C.)
Dole (Kan.)	Kassebaum (Kan.)	Percy (Ill.)	Tower (Tex.)
East (N.C.)	Laxalt (Nev.)	Quayle (Ind.)	Wallop (Wyo.)
Goldwater (Ariz.)	Lugar (Ind.)	Schmitt (N.M.)	Warner (Va.)

Absent: Cannon (D-Nev.); Cochran (R-Miss.); Inouye (D-Hawaii); Long (D-La.); Moynihan (D-N.Y.).

Karen Ignagni Joins Social Security Staff

Karen M. Ignagni has joined the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security staff as an assistant director for health care policy. She takes over the post held by Richard E. Shoemaker, who retired recently.

Ignagni, 29, had been on the Senate Labor & Human Resources Committee staff since 1979, specializing in the labor, health and employment issues. Earlier, she was with the Committee for National Health Insurance as assistant executive director and as research director, and with the former Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare as a research analyst.

Ignagni holds degrees in economics and political science from Providence College.

Auto Workers GM Council Backs Accord

Chicago—The Auto Workers' tentative new contract with General Motors Corp. won overwhelming approval from leaders of GM-UAW local unions, and went to the rank-and-file for final ratification. But contract talks with American Motors Corp. broke off after more than a week of slow but steady progress.

UAW President Douglas A. Fraser said voting on the GM pact would be completed by Apr. 10. All active and laid-off UAW members employed by the giant car maker are eligible to vote on the 30-month contract.

GM AND THE union reached agreement on the pact Mar. 21. After a detailed, four-hour presentation of the package here, the union's GM Council voted 229 to 25 in favor of the settlement. The council is made up of elected union representatives from GM locals.

Under the agreement, the company's 320,000 auto workers in the United States would give up two annual 3 percent pay raises, nine paid personal holidays a year, and defer for 18 months three cost-of-living increases due them this year. The money would be restored later.

In return, GM has agreed to keep open its Detroit Fort Street and No. 37 plants as well as its facilities in Trenton, N.J., and Euclid, Ohio, which it threatened to close when earlier talks broke off.

THE COMPANY also has pledged a two-year moratorium on plant closings due to subcontracting and has agreed to limit its practice of farming out work to non-union sources. It also agreed to give workers a profit-sharing plan based on the company's net worth and assets.

Council delegates were given copies of the proposed contract, which included a letter from GM Chairman Roger Smith assuring the union that sacrifices made by blue-collar workers would be shared by all GM employees, including high-level management officials.

SEPARATELY, Fraser said that members of the UAW executive board had voted to give up a week's vacation time and some pay increases to approximate concessions made by UAW members under the agreement.

The pact is the second agreement with a major U.S. auto firm that the union has made this year to ease the industry's costs in the face of a continuing slump in car sales. The GM contract is similar to the union's settlement with the Ford Motor Co. in February.

Talks between the union and the American Motors Corp. were suspended Mar. 31 because the two sides failed to reach agreement on the ratio of supervisors to workers in certain plants.

Longshore Union Clarifies Boycott On Polish Cargo

New York—The Longshoremen revised its policy on boycotts of Polish cargo to allow for the shipment of gift packages to Poland if the shipper provides assurance that distribution will be handled by non-governmental personnel in Poland.

ILA President Thomas W. Gleason said the union will now expedite the flow of gift packages if their shipment is handled by recognized charities such as Catholic Charities, CARE, and the International Red Cross or by other means that will assure delivery to individual addressees.

Gleason stressed that the boycott—initiated Dec. 21, 1981 shortly after Poland's military regime denied Poles their basic civil and trade union rights—never was intended to harm Polish citizens but to demonstrate the union's strong opposition to martial law.

The revised ILA policy is in line with AFL-CIO policy.

Share of Revenues Sought

Football Players Affirm '82 Contract Objectives

Albuquerque, N.M. — The National Football League Players Association convention sent a strong signal to team owners, who have just signed a $2 billion network television deal, that a fair share of the league's gross revenues will be the union's primary goal in this year's contract negotiations.

That message came in a unanimous stand-up vote by the more than 500 NFLPA members who pledged full support of the union's play-calling to achieve a settlement before the start of the 1982 season.

THE CONVENTION also reaffirmed the NFLPA's opposition to legislation now before Congress that would exempt the team owners from federal antitrust laws.

With more than one-third of the union's members attending the annual meeting, NFLPA President Gene Upshaw said the players are showing the strongest support ever for the union's bargaining position.

"Players understand the issues, and we have solidarity," Upshaw said. "Over the last five years, I have seen the union grow up—and there is no short cut to get there."

NEGOTIATIONS with the owners opened in mid-February, but were recessed within days after management representatives failed to respond directly to the union's package of proposals. Talks are expected to resume in April.

Executive Director Ed Garvey—who also is president of the Federation of Professional Athletes, of which the NFLPA is the major component—pointed out that salaries of football players lag far behind other professional athletes.

Although football is the most profitable of all professional sports, Garvey told the convention, the average annual income of NFL players is $83,811—substantially below baseball's $250,000, basketball's $215,000 and hockey's $115,000.

A convention report showed that 54 percent of the union's membership earns less than $70,000 a year and that annual earnings of one-third of the union's 1,500 members average less than $50,000.

Upshaw pointed out that with players' careers lasting on the average less than five years, those earnings don't stretch too far.

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue underlined that point for delegates in noting that a player's career is often jeopardized by serious injuries.

"With or without injury, any job that has a worklife expectancy median of 4.2 years needs some special bargaining and some special bonuses to compensate for that lack of longevity and the severe limitation on earning power," Donahue said.

ANY INDUSTRY that has a $17,000 starting rate and a short worklife expectancy "is surely not going to rank among the highest-paid union jobs, much less among the highest-paid American jobs," he stressed.

Donahue pledged the full support of the AFL-CIO in the NFLPA's effort to win a fair contract settlement.

Other major contract objectives of the players are improvements in pensions and insurance coverage, players' rights and a voice in the selection of team physicians.

In explaining the union's opposition to an antitrust exemption for league owners, Garvey told the convention that passage of the legislation could seriously weaken players' rights and lead to destruction of the NFLPA.

THE CONVENTION also adopted a resolution calling on owners to give the public a share of their increased television revenues in the form of reduced ticket prices. Garvey noted that the new TV agreement will guarantee each team owner $15 million a year, nearly two and half times more than their gross revenues in the 1981 football season.

In introducing the resolution, San Francisco 49ers quarterback Guy Benjamin said the average working family can ill-afford to pay the ever increasing prices for tickets.

CALL FOR SOLIDARITY by all members of the NFL Players Association in the union's contract battle with owners is made by former Cleveland Browns running back Jim Brown at the NFLPA convention in Albuquerque, N.M. Others from left are NFLPA President Gene Upshaw, Atty. Leonard Lindquist, Executive Director Ed Garvey and Bernie Parrish, a founder of the union.

Louisiana Labor Fights Bid To Gut Compensation Law

Baton Rouge, La.—The Louisiana AFL-CIO's 27th annual convention focused on ways to combat a move by business to gut the state workers' compensation law.

The Louisiana Association of Business & Industry has made weakening of the statute its number one legislative goal. A comparison of the current law with the business group's proposals to emasculate it highlighted one of two workshops held during the three-day convention here.

THE BUSINESS group plans to introduce its concept of workers' insurance coverage in the state legislature, which is scheduled to convene Apr. 19. The 900 delegates to the State AFL-CIO convention adopted a resolution pledging a fight to preserve the existing law.

The other workshop served as an educational forum on the ways the State AFL-CIO serves its members.

All three of the federation's major officers, President Victor Bussie, Vice President Robert Quinn, and Sec.-Treas. Gordon Flory, were re-elected without opposition.

DELEGATES also approved a number of other resolutions on state and national issues. One measure condemned the Reagan Administration's attitude toward the poor, minorities, and the elderly and charged that its policies have been disastrous for the economy.

Other resolutions opposed natural gas deregulation, and supported strengthening of the 1965 Voting Rights Act, ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment, and purchase of union-made domestic goods.

Speakers included former Gov. Edwin Edwards, Atty. Gen. William Guste, President Rupert Richardson of the state NAACP chapter, and Rocky Bleier of the Pittsburgh Steelers, honorary chairman of the Special Olympics for the handicapped.

DELEGATES paid special tribute to Guste, the only state attorney general in the United States to serve on the National Committee for Labor Law Reform. He also appears in an AFL-CIO film speaking out against proposed changes in the Hobbs Act that would make picket-line fights federal crimes.

Quinn received an "award of excellence" plaque for his contributions to the Louisiana labor movement. The convention also paid a memorial tribute to Emile J. Bourg, former secretary-treasurer of the State AFL-CIO, who died last June.

Reagan Pressed to Recall Caribbean Basin Aid Plan

The Reagan Administration's plan for assistance to Caribbean Basin nations threatens U.S. jobs and should be sent "back to the drawing board," AFL-CIO Research Director Rudy Oswald urged.

Oswald told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that the AFL-CIO supports the concept of direct economic assistance to Caribbean nations, but is "strongly opposed" to the trade and tariff incentives in the Administration bill.

THESE INCLUDE duty-free admittance of goods into the United States, including products principally manufactured elsewhere in the world with as little as 25 percent local content added in a Caribbean nation.

Oswald said the cost to the United States will be substantially greater than the "tax incentives" to encourage U.S. firms to invest in the Caribbean. The local cost, he suggested, will include higher U.S. unemployment and diminished U.S. investment in this nation's industries.

He urged "a more intelligent and meaningful way" to help the Caribbean Basin nations.

"DEVELOPMENT must be based upon expanding the opportunities for the citizens of these countries, not by enhancing the benefits for multinational corporations," Oswald said.

"Internal market growth with rising living standards—not trade diversions—should be the route to economic development," he said.

U.S. aid, Oswald suggested, should include improved education and training programs and land reform, where needed.

Oswald told the panel that the "more thoughtful plan of assistance" returned from the Administration drawing board should not be "a blueprint to further pauperize America." Such a plan, he said, should take note "of the past effects of runaway industries in the Caribbean countries and the current plight of the U.S. economy."

PETITIONS FOR an end to martial law and release of political prisoners in Poland are handed over to AFL-CIO Region VII Assistant Director John Lorden, second from right, by members of Knit Goods Local 155 of the Ladies' Garment Workers in New York City. The petitions contained 20,000 signatures, and are among thousands of others collected by AFL-CIO unionists since the military regime cracked down on the Solidarity free trade union. Shown are Local 155 executive board members Angie King and Josephine Werzechoski and Education Director Ruth Groeneveldt, and Local 155 President Murry Hendler.

Mediation Agency To Close 4 of 8 Regional Offices

The Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service announced the closing of four of its eight regional offices, effective Mar. 29, as a result of the Administration's budget cuts.

The reorganization move, first announced last October, will eliminate FMCS regional offices in Philadelphia, Cleveland, St. Louis, and Seattle. The four remaining offices—in New York, Atlanta, Chicago, and San Francisco—will be designated the agency's Eastern, Southern, Central, and Western regions.

Designed to reduce the FMCS workforce by 20 percent and cut $3 million from the agency budget without any loss of mediators, the reorganization plan was temporarily blocked last fall when employees filed suit contending that the cuts could not be carried out in the absence of a permanent director.

A settlement was reached to delay the reorganization, and Acting Director Kenneth E. Moffett was given a recess appointment to head the agency. He was sworn in as permanent director in January.

In the formal announcement of its reorganization plan, published in the Federal Register, the FMCS said notices of labor-management negotiation disputes should no longer be sent to regional offices but rather to its new Division of Case Control at its Washington, D.C. headquarters. Freedom of Information Act requests for copies of notices of bargaining disputes also should be sent to the division.

Mangling the Constitution

HOW IRRESPONSIBLE can Congress get? Are senators and representatives really willing to mangle the Constitution with an unworkable balanced budget amendment?

There is cause for concern. Sometime this spring, the Senate will take up the constitutional amendment that was endorsed by a startling 11-5 majority of the Judiciary Committee. It would compel Congress to adopt a balanced budget each year, unless three-fifths of the House and Senate agree to an exception. It would also write into the Constitution a ceiling on year-to-year increases in tax revenues.

Now, a balanced budget has a superficial appeal. Some senators apparently think it would be politically easier to vote for the amendment and gain the applause of a well-financed single-issue lobby than to explain to constituents why the concept is both wrong and unworkable.

THE EXPLANATION is not really all that difficult.

The amendment is wrong because the Constitution is a charter for government, not a substitute for the legislative process.

Even if it could be enforced, such an amendment would cripple the ability of Congress to respond to changing economic conditions. It would give a minority of the House and Senate an unjustified veto over the decisions of a majority.

It is unworkable because the surplus or deficit in a budget drawn up more than a year in advance is based on forecasts of economic conditions, interest rates and unemployment levels. These assumptions change from month to month, and the fiscal year may be almost over before the margin of error is down to a few billions of dollars. There is even now a gap of nearly $30 billion in the deficits forecast by the President's Office of Management & Budget and the Congressional Budget Office if the Reagan budget proposals were all adopted.

In case anyone has forgotten, Congress started off the 1980 fiscal year by projecting a balanced budget in response to a law requiring it to do so. The end result was a $59 billion deficit.

IF WE HAVE learned nothing else in these past three decades, it is that economic growth and full employment invariably produce budget surpluses and recessions produce huge deficits. That's true even when, as with the Reagan Administration, stringent spending cuts are imposed.

Most members of Congress are sophisticated enough to understand this, and under normal conditions there would be little risk that the required two-thirds of the House and Senate would adopt such a flawed constitutional amendment and send it to the states for ratification.

SPONSORS OF the balanced budget amendment, however, are counting on the concern of their colleagues that a constitutional convention to consider a balanced budget amendment may be compelled by petitions from state legislatures. A never-used procedure for initiating a constitutional amendment allows a convention to be called by 34 states. The number has already reached 31.

Labor shares that concern, and will fight in the state legislatures as well as Congress to prevent the mauling of the Constitution.

We expect responsible legislators and members of Congress of both parties to do likewise. It's time for principle—and political backbone.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
LANE KIRKLAND, President
THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward	Murray H. Finley
Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts	Sol C. Chaikin
Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco	Charles H. Pillard
J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride	David J. Fitzmaurice
Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps	Wm. W. Winpisinger
William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell	John DeConcini
Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss	William Konyha
Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney	Douglas A. Fraser
Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield	Barbara Hutchinson
Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto	Gerald W. McEntee

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman, James M. Shevis
AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W. Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, April 3, 1982 No. 13

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

International Labor Press AFL-CIO/CLC Association

'It's Trickling!'

Leaving It to the 'Market'

Made-in-Japan Subway Cars Point Up U.S. Policy Failure

By Gus Tyler

I AM ANGRY and I don't know whom to hit. I would like to begin by hitting Richard Ravitch, the chairman of New York's Metropolitan Transit Authority because, at a time when unemployment is high in our country, he is buying subway cars from Japan. The cost will be more than a quarter billion dollars, a sum of money that could put many Americans to work.

But I can't really get angry with Ravitch, not only because I know that as a person he is totally dedicated to the public weal, but also because, as the responsible officer running the MTA, he is making what any businessman would consider to be the most prudent decision. He is getting the most for the money: graffiti-resistant cars at a good price.

HE IS GETTING something else. He is getting up-front money from the Japanese government whose import-export bank will advance the money to the Japanese manufacturer through a Japanese trading company that will, in turn, ultimately be paid by the MTA. The financing by the Japanese government is not only at hand, it is also rather easy with an interest rate that must be several points below what it is in the United States.

At this point, I don't know whether to be angry with the Japanese central bank that is behind all these financial ploys or with the American central bank—our very own Federal Reserve Board—that is responsible for our prohibitively high interest rates.

I find it difficult to be angry with the Federal Reserve Board, because I have been angry with them for so long that my wrath is now a bore. And I find it even more difficult to be angry with Japan's export-import bank for sucking in New York, because the Nippon bankers are only doing what comes naturally to any shrewd businessman. I can't be hostile with them just because they're smarter than some of our jerks.

SO I PUT the whole business out of my mind for a while, until my mind's eye looks into some future when I get into my good little old New York subway and see a stainless steel plaque on it reading "Made in Japan."

Don't we Americans have the intelligence to put together a subway car whose stainless sides will repel graffiti, carry passengers, and provide air-conditioning? It seems that we can't, and it seems that Japan can, although Japan will have to do so under abnormally difficult conditions. Forty-three percent of the parts for the cars will be made in the United States, shipped to Japan, assembled there, and then reshipped to the United States at a price to beat domestic production.

HOW CAN the Japanese do that? Simply by deciding to do it. If the Japanese government makes up its mind to beat the rest of the world in turning out highly modern subway cars, they rally their energies nationally; everybody gets behind the big push; the central bank puts up the money; manufacturers are encouraged to concentrate on this undertaking and get favored treatment for doing so; as they move out into the world market, they can keep their plants running all the time at full speed to cut or eliminate the costs of idle overhead.

We have no such process. We leave it to our car builders to do what they want to do. They may use their profits to hand out dividends, to peddle candy, to turn out roller skates, or just to buy out some other company.

Japan has a "policy." We leave it to the "market." So I guess I will be angry with the market.

Copyright 1982, Gus Tyler Columns

A One-Two Punch Against the Family

The one-two punch of reduced government services and deliberately induced recession has brought millions of American families to the brink of economic disaster. Perhaps worse than all the cuts . . . is the deadliest enemy of all for the American family—unemployment.

Yet, today's Washington policy-makers promote an economic game plan that will only deepen the recession. Our nation cannot afford less than a full employment economy.

—Service Employees President John J. Sweeney, Conference on Family & Work, Stillwater, Okla.

Targeted Programs Needed

Fighting the Reagan Recession

The following is from testimony by AFL-CIO Research Director Rudy Oswald to the House Ways & Means Committee, Mar. 30, 1982.

THE CRAZY-QUILT combination of the Reagan Administration's huge tax cuts, dismantled programs and sky-high interest rates is the direct cause of the present deep recession, high and rising levels of joblessness, and the budgetary mess. The inequities and imbalances of these programs have seriously undermined the capacity of the economy to turn itself around and regain the strength and resiliency necessary to move forward.

The Administration's failed Economic Recovery Program promised a "supply-side" outpouring of investment, output, jobs and public revenue as the result of the 1981 tax cut. It promised that 1.4 million more people would be at work by the end of the year, and the national output would grow by 4.2 percent.

Instead, the Administration has plunged the nation into the worst decline since the Great Depression and the end is nowhere in sight.

SINCE LAST JULY, the number of unemployed has increased by 1.8 million; 30 percent of industrial capacity is idle and factory output is down 8.6 percent. Construction industry unemployment is above 18 percent, housing starts are at historic lows and last week, the Commerce Dept. reported that business spending—despite the $14 billion that will flow in business tax incentives—is likely to fall by 1 percent in real terms.

Despite this, the Administration tells America to wait.

The investment numbers were made retroactive to January 1981, with no positive results thus far in either 1981 or 1982. The capital gains reductions were made effective in June of 1981 with no beneficial effects shown for the economy.

While we are asked to wait, 9.6 million Americans are jobless, thousands of Americans have had their mortgages foreclosed and business and personal bankruptcies are at a 40-year high.

A MAJOR EFFORT must be undertaken to create jobs and reverse the economy's downslide. At the same time, interest rates must be lowered and the federal government's dismal fiscal position should not be exacerbated.

This adds up to a need for a carefully balanced combination of direct targeted programs that can fight recession and cushion its effects, and drastic corrective surgery on last year's tax bill.

A complete about-face is essential to begin to revitalize the nation, to add a critically needed element of fair play to national economic policy and to prevent a worsening of the recession.

Trend to 'Disincentive'

Budget Sabotages 'Work Ethic'

WHATEVER HAPPENED to the "work ethic" that President Reagan said his program was supposed to promote?

It went down the pipe. In fact, under Reagan's present budget proposals a trend begun by his last year's budget will accelerate rapidly. That trend is "work disincentive."

A study by the University of Chicago bears this out. It finds that proposed further cutbacks in welfare and food stamp benefits will make it more attractive for the needy to rely entirely on government help than to work at the low-wage jobs available to them.

THE CHANGES would penalize recipients for any work by sharply chopping benefits they receive while employed.

The study showed, for example, that in New York State, under the President's proposal, a family with no earnings—consisting of a mother and two offspring—would receive on the average, $508 a month in welfare, food stamps and energy assistance.

If the mother were to work at a job whose gross pay was $486 a month—the average in the state for working welfare recipients—work-related expenses like child care would cut the total family income to $40 less than if it relied on federal benefits alone.

With the new Reagan budget proposals go the last wee strands of the Administration "safety net" that was supposed to protect the "truly needy."

MEANWHILE, yet another analysis of the new Reagan budget demonstrates that among the biggest losers would be children and needy pregnant women.

The Children's Defense Fund said more than 750,000 pregnant women would become ineligible for a federally supported pre-natal nutrition program. It pointed out, too, 100,000 more families would lose day-care services on top of the 150,000 that lost them in last year's budget, and that more than half the 5.8 million children in compensatory education programs would be dropped from them.

The CDF report charged, "President Reagan has preyed on the fears and resentments of those Americans who want to believe that most welfare recipients cheat—they don't. . . . What he has not told the American public is that 70 percent of the 'welfare cheats' he is ridding us of are children."

—Memo from COPE

Bargaining Stall

NFL Owners Threaten Season

HOPES FOR an uninterrupted 1982 professional football season are dimming as team owners lobby Congress for exemption of their billion-dollar industry from the antitrust laws instead of meeting with the players' union to hammer out a new contract, President Ed Garvey of the Federation of Professional Athletes warned on Labor News Conference.

Garvey said key owner representatives and the NFL commissioner's office, both essential to reaching agreement with the union, have been "ducking the collective bargaining sessions" that opened several weeks ago. He said the NFL Players Association has set a fixed percentage of gross revenues for player compensation and the right of players to choose the doctors and surgeons who treat their injuries as primary goals in this year's bargaining.

THE OWNERS have "resisted rather vigorously" sharing the ticket, parking and concession revenues going to the teams, Garvey said, and have rejected the players' key contract goal for a share of the new $2 billion TV deal. But, he added, "we're hopeful that as we get to serious negotiations, they'll see that it's really better for them as well as for the athletes."

Appearing with Garvey on the AFL-CIO produced network radio program was NFLPA Rep. Roy Jefferson, who stressed that the athletes are "the product—the raw material that is producing all of these increased league revenues," and should be sharing in them.

Jefferson predicted that the owners will try to pin the union with the charge that the players are "out to gouge the public and the fans," but he said that claim just won't stand up.

THE PLAYERS have no interest in controlling the league, he asserted, but want only a fair share of the profits their talents and skills produce. He pointed out that the owners have also rejected the union's proposal to freeze ticket prices—a concession to the public that he said the highly profitable industry can well afford to make.

Reporters questioning them were Dale McFeatters of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers and Robert Cooney of Press Associates, Inc.

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

NOW THAT THE JOKES about South Succotash have about run their course, perhaps it's time to be a little more serious about what's happening to real people.

In his interview with the Daily Oklahoman, President Reagan complained that the television networks were keeping up a "constant downbeat" of news about the unemployed.

TV is an entertainment medium, Reagan asserted, "and they're looking for what's eye-catching and spectacular." Then he asked: "Is it news that some fellow out in South Succotash someplace has just been laid off that he should be interviewed nationwide or someone's complaint that the budget cuts are going to hurt their present (federal) program?"

Yes, Mr. President, it is news. It is news, and not entertainment, when the Administration's policies lead to millions of unemployed and individual misery. It is newsworthy when the Administration pretends it is maintaining a "safety net" for the needy while it is actually slashing funds and eliminating programs that have meant the margin between survival and suffering.

A CLEAR EXAMPLE of the Administration's penny-wise, pound-foolish approach came in a recent congressional hearing on the Senior Community Service Employment Program, Title V of the Older Americans Act. This program supports 54,200 elderly low-income persons in part-time community service jobs. They average $3.47 an hour.

Congressional aides were astonished when they learned the Administration was "zeroing out" the program this September to save $277 million.

Three-fourths of those funds are set aside for eight national sponsors: the U.S. Forest Service, National Council of Senior Citizens, National Council on Aging, National Farmers Union (Green Thumb), National Retired Teachers Association, National Urban League, National Center of Black Aged, and National Association for Spanish-Speaking Elderly. The remaining 24 percent goes to state government programs.

Rep. Ike Andrews (D-N.C.), chairman of the Human Resources panel, said he received 400 letters in two weeks protesting the end of the program. He read a few excerpts:

- 67-year-old Juan Rios of Toledo, Ohio, wrote that "I have a feeling that I can still be of value to my community, in spite of medical problems with my legs, which might make outside employment impossible to find. I am working in one of Toledo's three tool-lending libraries. . . ."
- 67-year-old Mary Auringer of Monterey, Calif., wrote: "I've been working for the Senior Aides Program for five years. I feel very sad because the President is going to discontinue our program. . . . I can't get along without it. I'll have to go on welfare, which I don't want to do. . . ."
- Lelli K. Jones, one of those receiving help, wrote: "I have an aide who does my housework that I am not able to do. I am 82 and have arthritis real bad. I have only my social security as a means of livelihood and don't have the money to go in a rest home."
- Desane A. Espinoza told the panel about a project in Buffalo and Erie County, N.Y., that has 150 enrollees from the Council of Senior Citizens and the State Office for the Aging working as home health aides, van drivers and job placement specialists.

THERE IS STRONG bipartisan support in Congress for the senior aides program, support ranging from liberals to conservatives, and it likely to prevail.

The White House image-builders are concerned that the President's policies are seen as unfair to the poor and needy. So they had him photographed heaving sandbags in the Fort Wayne flood. It would be much better if he would stop "sandbagging" worthwhile federal programs.

CONTINUED STALLING by National Football League owners in contract talks with the players' union could jeopardize the 1982 season, NFLPA Rep. Roy Jefferson, second from left, and Executive Director Ed Garvey warned. They were questioned on Labor News Conference by Robert Cooney, left, of Press Associates, Inc., and Dale McFeatters, right, of Scripps-Howard Newspapers. The AFL-CIO public service program is broadcast weekly on Mutual radio.

RECEPTION HONORING Dolores Huerta, first vice president of the Farm Workers, was held at the AFL-CIO headquarters as part of the International Women's Day observance. Joining in the tribute to Huerta, second from left, are Rudy Mendoza, district representative of the Communications Workers; AFL-CIO Vice President Joyce Miller, and Vice President Jack Otero of the Railway & Airline Clerks, right. The reception was sponsored by the Coalition of Labor Union Women, National Women's Political Caucus and Labor Council for Latin American Advancement.

Tighter Regulations Opposed For Personal Bankruptcies

People who are drowning in debts should continue to have the option of declaring bankruptcy, the Auto Workers urged at House hearings.

The consumer credit industry is trying to get Congress to amend a 1978 law that it contends made it too easy for individuals to use bankruptcy proceedings to get out from under an accumulation of debts.

ITS BILL, sponsored by Rep. Billy Lee Evans (D-Ga.), would deny bankruptcy to a debtor who might be able to pay off a "reasonable portion" of accumulated debts on the basis of "anticipated" future income over the next five years.

An attorney with the UAW Legal Services Plan in Newark, Del., which serves workers at a Chrysler Corp. assembly plant there, told a House Judiciary subcommittee that bankruptcy is the "only remedy" for many workers who were encouraged to get into debt through easy credit and were unable to continue payments when hit by unemployment or curtailment of working hours.

These people are not trying to beat the system through manipulation of bankruptcy laws, Atty. Christopher N. Giuliana told the panel.

WHEN FULLY employed, they were encouraged to make purchases on credit, he noted. "But as unemployment reduces income, less can be paid on the bills. In a process encouraged by creditors, debtors will pay one creditor at the expense of another. Utilities threaten to cut off service. . . . Banks threaten to repossess automobiles. . . . Finance companies badger debtors into refinancing at higher rates. . . . Many unsecured creditors, particularly medical providers, hire debt collectors to recover"

The UAW testimony suggested that the rise in unemployment, not the 1978 modification of previous law, brought about the recent rise in personal bankruptcies. The changes enacted by Congress then were designed to correct abuses, the union noted, and the rise in bankruptcies is in line with previous recession periods and caused in part by encouragement of risky credit purchases.

CONGRESS SHOULD assess experience under the law in more normal economic conditions before considering changes, the union said.

Meanwhile, the Ladies' Garment Workers has launched a counter-effort to the credit industry's legislative push. An ILGWU legislative memo notes that business bankruptcies have also taken a sharp rise, and stresses that "economic improvements" are needed, not changes in the bankruptcy laws.

Wages Not the Villain

Woodworkers Delegates Vote to Bar 'Give-Backs'

Portland, Ore.—Despite an unemployment rate above 30 percent in the forest products industry, some 300 delegates to the 32nd convention of the Woodworkers unanimously endorsed a policy of "no give-back" in current or future collective bargaining agreements.

IWA President Keith Johnson told the delegates, composed about equally of Americans and Canadians, that "wage costs have nothing to do with why forest products are not selling." He said the industry is in trouble for four major reasons:

- "It is part of a system where greed for large, short-term profits dominates all other considerations.
- "Soaring interest rates make building and buying homes beyond the financial reach of the vast majority of North American citizens.
- "The monetary policies of both countries are designed to keep interest rates and unemployment high.
- "Historic management policies of the industry have shrunk forest resources to the point that they cannot support continuous production and full employment."

DOUG EVANS, a delegate from Vancouver, B.C., cited the example of a sawmill in northern Washington State where the crew recently took a 25 percent wage cut "amidst much fanfare and publicity." Two weeks later, Evans noted, the mill closed "without any fanfare or publicity."

"We could work for free and it wouldn't create a single job," he declared.

Industry sources recently revealed that logs from public lands account for nearly 80 percent of the operating costs for mills that depend on those logs for raw materials.

THE CONVENTION adopted a series of resolutions intended to make timber available at lower costs through intensive forest management, an end to speculative bidding in timber sales, and increased allowable cuts from national forests. It also reiterated the IWA's strong opposition to the export of raw logs and the tax advantages enjoyed by log exporters due to the so-called Domestic International Sales Corporations (DISC) loophole.

The delegates also resolved to increase the IWA's political efforts by establishing a union political action fund—WOODPAC—to receive and raise voluntary contributions.

Johnson, along with Vice Presidents Fernie Viala and Bud Rahberger and Sec.-Treas. Bob Gerwig, were re-elected to four-year terms by acclamation.

MAJOR SPEAKERS included former Vice President Walter Mondale, Machinists' President William Winpisinger, Furniture Workers' President Carl Scarbrough, President Howard Samuel of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. and the Rev. Robert Drinan, president of Americans for Democratic Action.

Also addressing the convention were John Lofblad, general secretary of the International Federation of Building & Woodworkers; Lyle Kristiansen, New Democratic Party member of the Canadian Parliament and also an IWA member, and Jim Youngdahl, IWA general counsel.

Safety Conference To Explore Slash In OSHA's Role

The AFL-CIO's second Conference on Occupational Safety & Health will focus on the impact of the federal retreat in protections against workplace hazards. The sessions will be held in Washington, May 23-25.

In announcing the national conference, Federation President Lane Kirkland noted that the Reagan Administration is continuing its efforts "to unravel the fabric of the Occupational Safety & Health and Mine Safety Acts as a major part of its campaign to do away with the proper and necessary regulation of business."

Kirkland pinpointed several areas where the Administration has moved to undercut worker safeguards, including reduced enforcement, shutdowns of local OSHA offices, attempts to weaken standards, and slashes in worker safety training grants.

He urged federation affiliates to participate fully in the conference. Major speakers, in addition to Kirkland, will include AFL-CIO Vice President J. C. Turner, chairman of the federation's Standing Committee on Occupational Safety & Health; COPE Director John Perkins, and Dr. Eula Bingham, OSHA administrator during the Carter Administration.

A series of workshops on safety programs and political action is slated for the conference, AFL-CIO Occupational Safety Director George H. R. Taylor said.

Reagan Policies 'One-Two Punch' for Families

Stillwater, Okla.—The Reagan Administration's mismanagement of the American economy could "wreck" millions of American families, Service Employees President John J. Sweeney charged.

"The one-two punch of reduced government services and a deliberately induced recession" has brought many families "to the brink of economic disaster," Sweeney warned in remarks prepared for the Conference on Family and Work held at Oklahoma State University here.

THE CONFERENCE was sponsored by the university's Family Studies Center and the American Association of University Women with funding from the Oklahoma Humanities Committee and the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Sweeney charged that instead of making full employment its primary goal, the Administration has adopted an economic "game plan" that will only deepen the recession. He blamed the Administration for the lack of policies to check unemployment and create jobs, inflation-fueling high interest rates, cuts in social programs that benefit families and a tax policy that transfers wealth to the rich and corporations.

"The impact of these national economic policies on American families has been devastating," Sweeney said, stressing that the labor movement will continue to fight "for decent and humane public policies designed to assure the continued survival of the American family as we have come to know it."

ORGANIZED LABOR has a long record of concern for family stability, Sweeney said, pointing out that for workers and for the poor, keeping a family together has always been difficult.

"Their struggle to survive and prosper in our economy has always been intense, and economic pressures have always translated into social problems for American workers and their families," he said, while agreeing that today's social and economic climate is transforming some aspects of family life.

He noted that the labor movement had led the fight for child labor laws, the minimum wage, workers' and unemployment compensation, along with public education, safety and health laws, consumer laws and many other "supportive programs that could enhance workers' ability to nurture and care for their families."

HE CRITICIZED politicians who label other candidates "pro-family" or "anti-family" and who have used the issues of the changing role of the family "to allege that many of the social programs of the past half-century are to blame for the break-up of the American family."

"Such allegations are false," Sweeney asserted.

Social legislation was designed, he pointed out, "to produce a living wage for working families" and to protect them from "the worst boom-or-bust economic cycles."

Sweeney, an AFL-CIO vice president, said that during the 1980 White House Conference on Families, the federation pressed for more programs to solve "the many unmet needs in America's social agenda" to aid families, including health care, education, social services, and welfare. Equally important are programs to provide jobs and training to fight discrimination.

BUT THE PAST two years "have seen an all-out attack on many critical social programs" meant to help families, Sweeney said.

The statistics, he said, show that "most of the victims of these cruel cutbacks are women and children." And among the worst cuts, Sweeney charged, were in social programs that aid the jobless and reduce unemployment, "the deadliest enemy of all for the American family."

Changes in the workplace, in the nature of the economy and in a workforce that now includes more than half of all women and 45 percent of all mothers are affecting family life, Sweeney pointed out. He emphasized that these changes call for "decent social and economic legislation, not useless rhetoric."

HE NOTED that the labor movement, including the Service Employees, uses the bargaining process to negotiate solutions to problems "we cannot wait for politicians to solve." This includes bargaining for adequate day care programs, flexible working hours and critically needed training and job upgrading programs for women workers, Sweeney said.

The key issues, he stressed, are the need for equity, especially in the area of equal pay for work of comparable value, and an end to discrimination in hiring.

The United States can have a society "which protects American families, especially mothers and children," and "which provides a decent paying job for every one who wants to work—and supportive services for the families of working people," Sweeney concluded.

The national will to reach this goal exists, he said, but what is needed is to "alter the directions of government policy being promoted in Washington today . . . to return to a government of the people, run by the people for the common benefit of all the people, not just the affluent few."

Bell System, CWA Agree On Job Rights

The Communications Workers reached agreement with the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. on a comprehensive employee protection measure that guarantees wages, benefits, and other job rights during and after the planned breakup of the giant telecommunications firm.

The agreement, which followed six weeks of talks between union and Bell System officials, affects about 60 percent of the more than 500,000 unionized workers at AT&T. The International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the unaffiliated Telecommunications International Union, which still are negotiating employee protection plans, represent the rest.

UNDER THE TERMS of the CWA agreement, workers who are "transferred as a part of their work group or organization in connection with any corporate reorganization of the Bell System" are protected against loss of employment, salary or wages, credited service, and changes in conditions of employment for seven years from the date of transfer.

"We have overcome one of the most serious problems we faced because of divestiture," CWA President Glenn Watts observed. "Now that we know employee interests will be protected, we can go on to other matters."

In addition to basic job benefit guarantees, the agreement covers transfer and relocation allowances, pension benefits, disability benefits, and insurance. Workers who must relocate will receive the greater of the transfer benefits offered by their former and new employer.

AT&T PROMISED the Justice Dept. on Jan. 8 that it would divest itself of 22 local telephone companies with combined assets of about $80 billion. In February, the company proposed to restructure the 22 companies into seven regional corporations.

The job-protection accord, which went into effect Mar. 26, amends and broadens a provision in the union's 1980 contract, which expires next year.

New provisions include a prohibition on wage cuts and layoffs during a six-month period before the establishment of a new subsidiary or divestiture of a company. The parties also agreed that new employers may offer workers downgrades in lieu of layoffs and that employees making that choice would have preferential rights to job restoration.

The operating companies to be spun off by the AT&T divestiture are Pacific Telephone & Telegraph, Bell Telephone of Nevada, Illinois Bell, Indiana Bell, Michigan Bell, New England Bell, New Jersey Bell, New York Telephone, Northwestern Bell, Pacific Northwest Bell, South Central Bell, Southern Bell, Southwestern Bell, Bell Telephone of Pennsylvania, Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone of Virginia, C&P of Maryland, C&P of Washington, D.C., C&P of West Virginia, Diamond State Telephone, Mountain States Telephone, Ohio Bell, and Wisconsin Telephone.

SUPPLY-SIDE ECONOMICS espoused by the Reagan Administration is directly responsible for the nation's sharp rise in unemployment, President Glenn E. Watts of the Communications Workers charged at the CWA's three-day legislative conference in Washington. He told the 1,200 delegates that the White House also has shown "moral meanness" by its indifference to civil rights, rejection of the Equal Rights Amendment and slashes in services for the poor.

Teachers Score Proposed Cuts in Education Funds

The American Federation of Teachers has urged Congress to reject Administration budget proposals that would wipe out nearly all federal aid to education.

The American people support education and are willing to pay for it, AFT Legislative Director Gregory Humphrey testified. "Every poll in recent years demonstrates this fact," he told a House Appropriations subcommittee that is considering funding of education programs.

One of the biggest proposed cuts, he noted, would be in Title I services, which include special reading and tutoring assistance for educationally deprived children in poor neighborhoods.

The Reagan budget would eliminate more than 2 million children from this program, Humphrey testified, and lay off more than 150,000 teachers, paraprofessionals and other school aides.

Report Seen Exaggerating Social Security Problems

(Continued from Page 1)

deficit. A law allowing limited inter-fund borrowing, to deal with temporary fluctuations, expires this year.

The trustees report warned that the social insurance programs will run out of money next year and even if the trust funds were combined, only favorable economic conditions would avoid a crisis during the 1980s.

SEIDMAN SAID the temporary shortfall of funds that are projected during the 1980s "can be handled by extension of the present authority to borrow between trust funds and a back-up provision to permit borrowing from general revenues."

If borrowing proved necessary, he said, the money could be paid back out of the surplus anticipated for the old age, survivorship and disability program (OASDI) after 1990.

"The problems of Medicare costs will have to be dealt with by controlling the runaway inflation in overall health costs," Seidman said. "This will require effective health care costs controls" and would best be achieved under a national health insurance program.

TWO FORMER heads of the Cabinet department that oversees the social security system, Wilbur J. Cohen and Arthur Flemming, strongly concurred that nothing in the trustees' report justifies any cut in benefits.

Cohen, who was Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare in the Johnson Administration, and Flemming, who held the post under President Eisenhower, said the basic OASDI program "is essentially in sound financial condition, at least for the next 35 years and perhaps longer."

Their statement, issued on behalf of the Save Our Security coalition, said the long-run financing of hospital insurance should be dealt with separately, "with the emphasis on cost controls."

THEY URGED, as did Seidman, authority for temporary borrowing from the Treasury for the OASDI programs, noting that "the Treasury has, for years, been borrowing from social security." Since the trust funds were required to be invested in government bonds, "we see nothing wrong in a turnabout for a few years to help keep the system going."

Cohen and Flemming stressed that the trustees' report shows "no need for any cutbacks of any kind in the protection which social security offers for retirees, for workers disabled during their productive years, and for spouses and dependent children left behind when the family breadwinner dies."

April Calendar Announced By Labor Studies Center

The George Meany Center for Labor Studies has scheduled four leadership development programs for April. They deal with advanced computer systems, public communications, organizing and civil rights.

Four unions, the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation and the American Institute for Free Labor Development (AIFLD) will use the campus for their own training programs during the month. The schedule:

Public Communications for Public Employee Unions, Apr. 18-23—A workshop to give leaders of public employee unions a practical background for handling PR for their own unions. Co-sponsored by the AFL-CIO Public Employee Dept.

Advanced Computer Workshop, Apr. 19-20—A course for those who run computers for labor organizations and are interested in upgrading the system. Richard Drennan, AFL-CIO director of data processing, is the principal teacher.

Organizing Techniques, Apr. 18-23—An institute on the essentials of a successful organizing campaign. Labor Board procedures are reviewed.

Effective Union Action for Civil Rights, Apr. 25-29—The AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights annual conference for civil rights and women's rights representatives of federation affiliates.

Unions using the campus for their own leadership training during April are the Iron Workers, Apr. 4-8; Asbestos Workers, Apr. 13 and 16; State, County & Municipal Employees, Apr. 14-16 and 25-30; Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers, Apr. 15 and 16.

The Dept. of Legislation has scheduled its annual conference of union legislative representatives Apr. 13-15.

The AIFLD's 101st class—39 Latin American trade union leaders—will be graduated Apr. 23.

The annual meeting of the center's trustees is set for Apr. 28.

Information on these and other labor studies programs may be obtained from Fred K. Hoehler, Jr., executive director, George Meany Center, 10000 New Hampshire Ave., Silver Spring, Md. 20903. Telephone 301/431-6400.

Enterprise Zone Plan Denounced

(Continued from Page 1)

who is assistant director of the Federation's Dept. of Economic Research, said inner cities need "social services and public investments. This plan is the antithesis of public investment. It's public disinvestment."

Cantor added that Reagan's proposal could turn out to be "a Trojan horse" for other enterprise zone legislation which could weaken federal and local standards even more than the President's bill.

Legislation to set up enterprise zones was first introduced in 1980. A pending bill with similarities to the Reagan proposal is sponsored by Reps. Jack Kemp (R-N.Y.) and Robert Garcia (D-N.Y.).

Rev. Charles Webber, Labor Minister, Dies

New York—The Rev. Charles C. Webber, a Methodist minister who retired from the AFL-CIO staff in 1962 as national representative for religious relations, died Mar. 20 at Amsterdam House Nursing home here. He was 89.

Webber had been president of the Virginia CIO from 1946 to 1953 and was with the Clothing Workers as an organizer during the 1930s and a national representative in the 1940s.

While serving as a pastor in the early 1920s, Webber organized and headed the Denver Labor College. He also held pastorships in Pittsburgh and New York before joining the faculty of Union Theological Seminary in 1927. He taught there until 1936, and later served as executive secretary of the Methodist Federation for Social Service. Webber joined the AFL-CIO staff in 1955.

Coalition Outlines Plan To Curb Health Costs, Save Basic Programs

(Continued from Page 1)

The costs of health care will not disappear and neither will the people who need it, Donahue stressed in the statement read by AFL-CIO Social Security Director Bert Seidman.

The main features of the labor-supported plan are:

- Comprehensive cost containment across the entire health care system—public and private—including hospitals, nursing homes, doctors and other professional health service providers.
- A flexible requirement of state responsibility for the cost control process, including prospective budgeting to help set state ceilings on hospital and nursing home payments based on past experience with an allowance for inflation.
- A ceiling on reimbursements to physicians and other professional providers equal to current levels plus an allowance for inflation in overhead costs.
- A set rate schedule for laboratory and X-ray services worked out by representatives of public agencies, Medicare intermediaries, providers, insurance companies, consumers and laboratory and X-ray organizations.
- Encouragement of new health maintenance organizations.
- A national professional advisory committee to examine new procedures and technologies and advise on their appropriations and on fee schedules.
- Stepped-up development of programs to meet the long-term care needs of the elderly and disabled.

SINCE HOSPITALS are the largest single source of personal health expenditures, control of their cost increases is at the center of the plan, the council said.

It suggested that putting cost controls in the hands of the states, under specific guidelines, would make the system more cost efficient and effective, since they are closer to the actual delivery system.

Medicare would continue as a federal program with full control on eligibility and benefits, and the government would continue to monitor the operations of the program to make sure federal law and policies are met.

IN THE CASE of nursing homes, the council's plan emphasized that while cost containment is essential, "it must not jeopardize decent staff and facility standards."

The program could provide about $11 billion in savings in the first two years in expenditures for Medicare, Medicaid, and other personal health services, yet without the cuts in benefits or eligibility proposed by the Reagan Administration, the council said.

Also, states could look for about $3 billion to come back to them as incentive payments under Medicaid in the first two years.

About $7.5 billion a year in savings on insurance and out-of-pocket payments would be felt in the private sector, the council estimated.

DONAHUE warned that if the Administration's proposals are enacted, "all of us will pay dearly and not only in money." Hospitals would be encouraged to turn away Medicare patients, employers could lay off older workers whose health insurance would cost more, national immunization programs and health services for mothers and children would be cut while doctors' fees and hospital charges would soar to new record levels.

The Administration's so-called competition proposal is a "disaster," Donahue said. It would "pretend to control costs" with a ceiling on employer payments for health insurance, and increase pressure for cutbacks in health coverage achieved through collective bargaining, he said.

He pointed out that a "tax gimmick" would lure employers into abandoning hard-won, high-option health insurance plans for lower-grade coverage and that proposed Medicare "vouchers" would diminish already inadequate health care protection for millions of elderly and severely disabled persons.

THE VOUCHER scheme would give Medicare recipients the option of staying in the program or dropping out and receiving a voucher to buy a private health insurance policy. With everyone getting the same amount of funds, and with a cash rebate offered if a cheaper plan were purchased, the elderly would be faced with another gamble on their future health care needs, the council warned.

Donahue stressed that the council's cost containment plan would save money without drastic cuts. "The real decision-makers —those who provide and sell health services" would be given strong incentives to bring health care inflation under control, he said.

He emphasized that the new plan would also protect collectively bargained compensation for health care employees.

FOOD & COMMERCIAL Workers President William H. Wynn told reporters at the press conference that labor backs the council's plan because it is "a constructive way of dealing with a complex and troubling problem."

As inflation erodes protections won in collective bargaining, he said, more and more of the bargaining package must go toward "high priority" health benefits. Improvements in health plans are harder to get, and "as health care costs outrace everything else, there is less left for increases in wages, pensions and other benefits," Wynn said.

HEALTH CARE COSTS can be successfully controlled without wiping out Medicare, AFL-CIO Social Security Director Bert Seidman stressed at a Washington press conference called by Health Security Action Council to outline its new comprehensive cost containment plan. From left are Jacob Clayman, president of the National Council of Senior Citizens; Food & Commercial Workers President William H. Wynn; Auto Workers President Douglas A. Fraser, who chairs the council; Willard McGuire, president of the National Education Association; and Ruth Kobell of the National Farmers Union.

Bad Medicine

Investment Disclosure Sought On Public Sector Pensions

Employees of state and local government have a right to know how their retirement funds are invested, the AFL-CIO Public Employee Dept. insisted at Senate hearings.

Service Employees President John J. Sweeney, who testified as executive vice president of the 34-union department, said federal legislation is needed because safeguarding the pension rights of some 11 million public workers and retirees is "a national concern."

THE ASSETS of the 6,000 separate plans total more than $200 billion, he noted. But many of the workers who are dependent on these funds for promised retirement benefits are kept in the dark about the administration of the funds.

Sweeney said conflicts of interest on the part of public employers may be a factor in the unusually low return on investment of public retirement funds. "Large segments of the assets held by pension funds are managed in the interest of those who control the funds rather than in the interest of those for whom the funds are intended to provide benefits," he charged.

Sen. John H. Chafee (R-R.I.), chairman of the Senate Finance subcommittee holding the hearings, has introduced legislation that the PED said would represent "a meaningful step toward protecting the retirement benefits of public workers."

Sweeney welcomed provisions for furnishing all participants in a public retirement system with copies of the retirement plan and information about its administration.

HE SAID the PED "strongly supports the regulation of fiduciary responsibilities" and provisions to assure that funds are prudently invested to benefit employees.

The department also endorsed establishment of an advisory council as a step "toward establishing minimum benefit guidelines."

House hearings have already been held on a companion labor-supported bill by Rep. Phillip Burton (D-Calif.).

Newspaper Guild Raising Funds for Polish Journalists

The Newspaper Guild announced it has set up a fund to assist Polish journalists forced from their jobs since imposition of martial law in Poland last December.

The move follows the Polish government's dissolution of the Polish Journalists' Association on Mar. 19. The military regime that governs Poland charged that the association, which backed the independent Solidarity trade union, "undertook actions conducive to the dismantling of state and social institutions of public information." In its place, the government set up the Journalists Association of the Polish People's Republic.

Guild President Charles A. Perlik, Jr., said that in dissolving the Polish Journalists' Association, the junta trampled "any lingering hope that its martial rule over a terrorized population would be only temporary and that free trade unions would be allowed to lift their heads once again."

Perlik said the Journalists Association of the Polish People's Republic "is the voice of no one but the discredited government that created it," and that repression is mounting against members of the Solidarity-linked union dissolved by edict.

Sixty journalists have been arrested since the declaration of martial law, and others have been forced underground, he observed. Still others, deprived of a livelihood, face starvation with their families in the months ahead, he said.

Perlik said the Guild is asking its locals and members to contribute to the fund.

4/3/82

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

Building Trades Send Angry Message to Reagan

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII Saturday, April 10, 1982 No. 14

By David L. Perlman

America's building trades workers want Congress and President Reagan to scrap failed economic theories and switch to programs that will produce jobs for the unemployed.

That's the clear message from a three-day national legislative conference of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept., attended by some 4,000 local union leaders from every part of the country.

"OUR MEMBERS are angry," BCTD President Robert A. Georgine reported in a keynote speech that was punctuated by applause and shouts of assent.

Georgine spoke of the anger stemming from depression-level unemployment in an industry stalled by high interest rates and a simultaneous slash in government construction of needed public facilities.

He cited also the anger of construction workers denied unemployment compensation because of new restrictions on eligibility and curtailment of extended benefits.

"Don't tell us the eligibility rules were tightened to catch the cheaters and loafers, because our members aren't cheaters or loafers," he said as the delegates erupted into applause.

And members whose taxes have funded the food stamp program "are angry about being denied food stamps when they need them."

There's "a new militancy" among building trades members, Georgine said, and "those members of Congress who want labor's support in November will have to support labor in April."

PRESIDENT Reagan and Labor Sec. Raymond J. Donovan asked the delegates to give the Administration's economic program a longer chance to take hold, but the reaction of the delegates made clear their belief that Reaganomics has had a fair chance—and failed.

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland had the obvious concurrence of the delegates when he made the point this way: "If you see a house burning, if you see a ship sinking, a man drowning, do you give it more time?"

Kirkland called on Congress to "undo

(Continued on Page 6)

17 Million Suffer Job Cutbacks

OREGON SOLIDARITY for jobs, justice and an end to the Reagan Administration's damaging social and economic policies drew 5,000 marchers to Portland in a demonstration organized by the State AFL-CIO and some 80 labor, civic, church, minority, women's and social action groups. Participants from throughout the state and southwest Washington jammed a downtown plaza for a three-hour rally after a march through the city.

Official Rate At Post-War Peak of 9%

By James M. Shevis

The Reagan Recession pushed the nation's jobless rate to 9 percent last month, up from 8.8 percent in February, matching the post-World War II peak and demonstrating that the downturn in the economy is deepening.

"These new figures are a signal to the Reagan Administration that it is time to reverse its course," AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland warned. "The White House must open its eyes to the grim consequences of its misguided economic adventures.

"AMERICANS WANT jobs, not empty promises and prophecies. Workers want a chance to build a better America, with justice for all."

Some 17 million Americans are suffering from the recession's impact on jobs, Kirkland pointed out. Nearly 10 million are officially unemployed, another 1.3 million are too discouraged to look for work, and nearly 6 million have been forced to take part-time work because they cannot find full-time jobs, he observed.

Most economists expect the jobless rate to continue to rise over the next several months, even if an economic recovery were to begin soon. Employers who have let people go generally do not hire them back until they are certain the economy is turning around. This means that any pick-up in employment will tend to lag behind recovery.

"ONE CAN expect the unemployment rate, if it behaves as it has in the past, to continue upward," Commissioner Janet L. Norwood of the Bureau of Labor Statistics

(Continued on Page 3)

Labor Scores Move to Scuttle Railroad Panels

Railroad union leaders appearing before a House Appropriations panel accused the Reagan Administration of using the budgetary process to circumvent federal laws governing labor-management relations in the industry.

Ole M. Berge, president of the Maintenance of Way Employees, and Andrew M. Ripp, vice president of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, questioned the authority of the Office of Management & Budget to attempt to dismantle the Railroad Retirement System and rail adjustment boards as part of its budget-cutting efforts.

IN ITS fiscal 1983 budget proposals, the Administration seeks to farm out current functions of the Railroad Retirement Board and abolish the board. Under this plan, the so-called Tier I portions of rail retirees' pensions and sickness benefits would be put under the Social Security Administration. Tier I benefits are similar to social security benefits in all respects except that they are administered by the Railroad Retirement Board.

Other pension benefits would be administered by a private corporation and unemployment benefits by state unemployment compensation systems.

Berge, who chairs the Railway Labor Executives' Association's retirement committee, criticized the OMB rationale that the rail retirement system should be

(Continued on Page 7)

Union-Busting Subsidy For Hospitals Assailed

The Reagan Administration's decision to let hospitals bill the Medicare program for fees paid to union-busting consultants was assailed at House hearings as a flagrant misuse of public funds.

Members of Congress joined union and public witnesses in demanding that the Dept. of Health & Human Services restore its previous ban on inclusion of management consultant fees as patient-related expenses to be paid by Medicare.

THE HEARINGS were held by a Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations headed by Rep. Phillip Burton (D-Calif.), and the opening witness was the chairman of another subcommittee with jurisdiction over health care issues.

Rep. Henry A. Waxman (D-Calif.), who heads a House Commerce subcommittee, charged that federal payment of fees charged for anti-union consultants means the federal government "is no longer neutral" on the issue of whether hospital workers should organize.

REIMBURSEMENT for the management side is as unreasonable as would be government payment of the salaries of union organizers, he said.

In other testimony:

- Service Employees President John J. Sweeney scoffed at the Administration's claim that it would be too difficult to sort out money spent in anti-union campaigns from other consultant activities. The state of Massachusetts has such a prohibition in its Medicaid program, Sweeney noted, and has had no problem with enforcing it.

The fees the Medicare program pays to anti-union consultants, he estimated, would pay for the disease immunization program the Administration has proposed to cut back.

- State, County & Municipal Employees Sec.-Treas. William Lucy said the re-

(Continued on Page 8)

Andy Biemiller Dies at 75, Labor's Voice on Capitol Hill

Andrew J. Biemiller, who melded an abiding commitment to labor's cause with a legendary knowledge of how Congress functions, died Apr. 3 at 75.

He had retired as the AFL-CIO's legislative director after the 1978 session of Congress, his quarter-century as a labor lobbyist capping a remarkable career.

ANDY BIEMILLER was an educator and a union organizer, a champion of workers in the Wisconsin legislature and as a congressman. And he was an inner-circle strategist in historic breakthroughs for civil rights and social justice.

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland and Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue cited Biemiller's role as "the voice of American labor on Capitol Hill for a generation" and said union members "today and tomorrow" will benefit from his achievements "on behalf of all Americans."

THEIR JOINT tribute noted the esteem in which Biemiller was held by leading members of both parties, "ample testimony to the integrity he maintained in his work. He brought honor to the term 'lobbying' and left labor's legislative representatives the legacy of his credo of effective, factual presentation of labor's case."

Biemiller was a cherished friend, with "unswerving devotion to trade union ideals," they said.

(Continued on Page 2)

FLOUR FOR POLAND fills a 100-pound sack at ConAgra's food-processing facility in Omaha, where members of Local 50 of the American Federation of Grain Millers did the milling free. Some 700,000 pounds of flour milled from over 16,000 bushels of Nebraska wheat will be shipped to Gdansk where it will be distributed through Polish churches. In photo above, Grain Millers Vice President Larry R. Jackson discusses the relief project with Polish refugee Stanislaw Janicki, second from left, and members of Local 50, Business Agent Michael B. Taylor and Stewards Steve Marek and Jim Bolen.

Grain Millers Donate Labor To Aid Poles

Omaha, Neb.—More than 700,000 pounds of flour milled by union workers at ConAgra here are destined for needy people in Poland, where martial law under communist rule has been in effect for the past four months.

Forty members of Local 50 of the American Federation of Grain Millers donated their labor for the day it took to mill the flour, while ConAgra—the Omaha food processor—provided its milling facilities and equipment free.

THE FLOUR, packed in 100-pound sacks with appropriate labeling in Polish, was loaded on rail cars for shipment to Baltimore where a Polish ship will take it to Gdansk.

Church World Service, the sponsoring relief agency, has arranged for the flour shipment to be met by representatives of Poland's church relief distribution system in Gdansk. The agency is a division of the National Council of Churches, operating in the area of overseas aid.

Grain Millers Vice President Larry R. Jackson, who worked with the ConAgra employee group involved in the milling, said Polish bakers will be able to make one million one-pound loaves of bread from the flour shipment. The bread will be distributed through Polish churches.

THE PROJECT is the culmination of a statewide campaign begun last January when Nebraska Gov. Charles Thone declared the month "Wheat for Poland" month.

With contributions from more than 6,000 Nebraskans, the Polish-American Congress and the state chapter of Church World Service raised over $80,000 to be used in purchasing some 16,000 bushels of Nebraskan wheat.

Aid came from many sources. One of the largest contributions was from a church group at Offutt Air Force Base. The Union Pacific Railroad donated time and equipment for public relations. And Johnny's Cafe gave free lunches to the union volunteers who worked all three shifts Mar. 26 to mill the flour.

Nebraska's Polish relief campaign is continuing, Jackson said.

Andy Biemiller Dies at 75, Labor's Voice on Capitol Hill

(Continued from Page 1)

Biemiller was born in Sandusky, Ohio, on July 23, 1906. After his graduation from Cornell University, he taught at both Syracuse University and the University of Pennsylvania—and at a summer school for workers.

But it was in Milwaukee, during the Depression and New Deal years, that Biemiller cut his political teeth.

There, he edited a union newspaper, served on the executive board of the Milwaukee central labor body and became a general organizer for the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor. He was an early member of the Newspaper Guild as well as a longtime member of the American Federation of Teachers.

IN POLITICS, Biemiller started out in the democratic Socialist movement and was elected to the Wisconsin legislature as a member of the state's strong Progressive Party in 1936. He became his party's floor leader in the state assembly, serving until 1942.

After a stint with the War Production Board, Biemiller won election to Congress as a Democrat in 1944—from a House district that for many years alternated between Democratic and Republican representatives. He lost his bid for re-election in the 1946 Republican sweep, but regained the seat in the 1948 Democratic resurgence.

In Congress, Biemiller championed liberal legislation, but at the same time became an apt pupil of House Speaker Sam Rayburn in the parliamentary skills that enhanced his value to the labor-liberal coalition. One of Biemiller's laments as a lobbyist was that so few of labor's allies in Congress took the trouble to understand the rules and learn "how to use them to get things done, or to keep things from being done." Biemiller's expertise helped fill the gap.

IT WAS at the 1948 Democratic convention that he forged a political and personal friendship with Hubert H. Humphrey, then running for his first term as senator from Minnesota. Both were members of the convention Resolutions Committee, and they worked together to shape a strong minority report supporting civil rights. It was adopted by the convention as a substitute for the toothless majority report. The Dixiecrats walked out—and Harry Truman was elected President, Biemiller to the House and Humphrey to the Senate.

It was the Republican turn in Biemiller's congressional district the following election, and after a stint in government, he joined the legislative staff of the AFL in 1953. In 1956, after the AFL-CIO merger, Biemiller was appointed legislative director. His directive from George Meany, he would recall, was: "Don't beg, don't threaten, and don't ever assume you are 100 percent right."

HE HELPED shape a staff of AFL-CIO lobbyists to standards that he spelled out in a retirement interview:

"A lobbyist who misleads a member of Congress is through. Because they really do rely on us for information. In fact, make sure that the person you're talking to knows both sides of the argument. You can't ask someone to go out on the floor of the House or Senate with material you've given him unless he also knows the arguments he's going to run into."

At the weekly meetings of labor lobbyists, Biemiller would be a sometimes gruff chairman. "I know people who think the way to lobby is to call a congressman's office and ask some staff person how the congressman is going to vote on a particular bill. But that's not lobbying," Biemiller said. He rejected complaints that labor's interests were too broad, that it should stick to direct labor issues.

"We are American citizens as well as members of trade unions" and labor must be "the people's lobby," he insisted. Besides, there is no single labor issue. Trade is related to jobs, labor law reform to the Senate's filibuster rule, occupational safety and health to budgets and appropriations.

But the man who had been an important part of every drive for progressive social legislation in the modern era never deceived himself into considering legislation the cure-all for social evils.

"Not by a long shot," he said. As he saw it, the basic impetus for progressive change, especially economic change, is "a strong labor movement and effective collective bargaining."

BIEMILLER retired in December of 1978, saying simply that he felt "the time has come" for others to take over the day-to-day responsibility, with "a feeling of satisfaction over what we've accomplished in the past and what we have been trying to do."

Andy Biemiller entered the hospital just a day before he succumbed to congestive heart failure.

He is survived by his wife of more than 50 years, Hannah; by a son, Dr. Andrew Biemiller, Jr., of Toronto; a daughter, Nancy Boerup of Wooster, Ohio, and four grandchildren.

Burial was private; a memorial service will be held on Monday, Apr. 12, at 5 p.m. in St. John's Episcopal Church at 6701 Wisconsin Ave., Chevy Chase, Md.

The family suggests that in lieu of flowers contributions be made to CARE or to a charity of the individual's choice.

Maritime Unions Shape Policy for Joint Contracts

Two AFL-CIO maritime unions have agreed on a joint policy to improve job prospects for their members on new vessels that are added to the nation's merchant marine fleet.

The policy provides for joint contracts covering the entire complement of seamen, both licensed and unlicensed. The agreement covers some 35,000 members of the Seafarers Atlantic, Gulf, Great Lakes & Inland Waterways District and 3,000 members of District II-Associated Maritime Officers, a division of the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association.

THE AGREEMENT, signed by SIU President Frank Drozak and MEBA District II President Raymond McKay, anticipates that uniformity in collective bargaining contracts will improve labor relations administration, cost efficiency, and halt jurisdictional disputes and rivalries between the two unions.

Much of the impetus for the joint policy declaration stems from the drastic decline in the American merchant marine. At the end of World War II, the U.S. merchant fleet comprised some 3,000 vessels. The number has declined to 749 today, and most of these vessels are over 20 years old and need to be replaced.

A main thrust of the new pact is to reduce labor costs and make the American merchant marine more competitive with foreign fleets. Training and upgrading programs will be interrelated to obtain cost efficiency.

The agreement also calls for coordinated legislative and political efforts by the two unions to foster the welfare of the U.S. merchant marine while gaining the support of elected officials and others who "recognize the critical importance of our industry as an economic and national defense resource."

ANDREW J. BIEMILLER

DPE Establishes Policy Panel on Health Services

The AFL-CIO Dept. for Professional Employees has formed a Health Services Committee to help guide the department and the federation in the development of policy in the health care field.

DPE President Albert Shanker said the committee, which will report to the department's executive board, will be involved in a broad range of activities, including the monitoring of the impact of technology on the health delivery system.

Of immedate concern, Shanker said, "are new guidelines promulgated by the Reagan Administration which permit use of public Medicare and Medicaid funds to pay the fees of anti-union consultants engaged by hospitals for the purpose of defeating employees' efforts to organize."

DPE DIRECTOR Jack Golodner charged that under the Reagan policy, the Administration is sharply cutting essential social services in the name of fiscal prudence, "while giving those desperately needed public funds to outside consultants whose efforts are aimed at destroying unions, collective bargaining" and constructive labor-management relations in the health care industry.

Unions represented at the committee's inaugural meeting were the Government Employees, the State, County & Municipal Employees, Teachers, Professional Athletes, Machinists, Operating Engineers, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Office & Professional Employees, Service Employees and the Auto Workers.

REGIONAL CONFERENCES bring AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland to a picket line in Phoenix (left) and to the political stump on behalf of labor's candidates in the closing rally in Seattle (right). In Phoenix, Kirkland walked with striking Laborers at the Carter-Glogau laboratories, a drug manufacturing firm. At the Seattle rally, he is backed up by representatives of the AFL-CIO support groups and other community allies in the women's, minority, consumer and seniors organizations. At Kirkland's left are Washington AFL-CIO President Marv Williams and Sen. Spark Matsunaga (D-Hawaii), who addressed the rally along with Sen. Henry M. Jackson (D-Wash.). Additional regional conferences are scheduled for other sections of the country in coming months.

Teach-Ins Slated On Alternatives to Reagan Policies

The Reagan Administration's disastrous economic policies are the curriculum for a national public education program being launched by the labor-supported Full Employment Action Council.

The series of "teach-ins" will give union members, students, senior citizens and others "hard information about the fallacies behind the Administration's economic policies" and will suggest "positive alternatives" to major economic problems, FEAC Co-Chairs Coretta Scott King and Murray Finley said in a statement announcing the program.

KING IS president of the Martin Luther King, Jr., Center for Social Change and Finley, an AFL-CIO vice president, is president of the Clothing & Textile Workers.

Fifteen teach-ins are scheduled in April and May on college and university campuses in New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, North Carolina, Georgia, Illinois, Ohio, Washington and Hawaii. About 150 more communities have asked for presentations, the FEAC said.

Each teach-in will include talks by economists, political and civil rights leaders and trade unionists. They will dissect the Administration's "supply-side" theories and point out why they are failing to solve the nation's economic ills.

ALTERNATIVE policies keyed to immediately reducing unemployment, stimulating the economy and creating jobs will be discussed.

Janice Fine, student coordinator of the program and president of the U.S. Student Association, said the flood of requests for the programs is a sign "that despite the talk of a conservative tide sweeping American campuses, there is a growing disenchantment with Reagan's economic policies on campuses around the country."

NFL Players Line Up With Central Bodies

The National Football League Players Association has chalked up a 100-percent affiliation rate with AFL-CIO state and local central bodies.

A division of the Professional Athletes, the 1,500-member NFLPA reported that its bargaining units in all 28 NFL cities have joined local labor organizations as well as state federations in the 18 states where the teams are situated.

The NFLPA said the affiliation move is in line with the players union's policy of encouraging its members to get more deeply involved in trade union activities at the state and local level.

Auto Workers Get Training for Aerospace Jobs

Detroit—The Auto Workers and Rockwell International Corp. announced plans for a pilot program to retrain and relocate 400 laid-off auto workers in the company's aerospace division.

Workers who meet the basic skill qualifications will be recruited for the program, which will be funded by a $300,000 Labor Dept. grant.

The method of selecting qualified applicants will be worked out by the union and the Labor Dept.

UAW President Douglas Fraser and Sec.-Treas. Raymond Majerus said that after successful completion of the program, the 400 auto workers—200 from southeast Michigan and 200 from Ohio—will be eligible for jobs on Rockwell's new long-range combat aircraft project.

Rockwell is expected to hire up to 25,000 workers for the project at its various locations around the nation.

Jobless Rate of 9 Percent At Post-Depression Peak told a hearing of the congressional Joint Economic Committee.

(Continued from Page 1)

AFL-CIO Research Director Rudy Oswald charged that the Administration's budget, tax, and monetary policies are making a bad situation even worse, and called on Congress to move ahead with the jobs program the federation has offered as a practical alternative to Reaganomics. He also urged continued protection of the long-term jobless through extension of unemployment insurance programs.

"Jobs and unemployment insurance benefits for those who can't find work are the only way to put bread on the table, to pay the rent and the mortgage, and to maintain dignity," he declared.

THE 9-PERCENT jobless rate for March equaled the figure for May 1975, in the wake of the 1973-75 recession. The nation's unemployment rate has not been higher since 1941, when joblessness averaged 9.9 percent for the year.

The number of unemployed workers last month rose by 279,000 to 9,854,000 on a seasonally adjusted basis. The number of employed persons declined by 98,000 to 99,492,000. The civilian labor force went up 181,000 to 109.3 million.

All of the increase in unemployment over the month was among job losers, most of whom were permanently let go, said BLS in its report on the jobs situation. The number of persons on layoff—job losers expecting recall—rose slightly following two months of decline.

"JOB LOSERS have accounted for nearly all of the increase in unemployment since the recession began and in March comprised over 57 percent of the unemployed," BLS said. The number of persons out of work for 15 weeks or more rose by 230,000 to 2,954,000 last month.

Among the signs that employment is likely to continue to deteriorate was a further drop in the length of the average workweek for nonfarm employees, to 34.8 hours from 35 hours the month before. Factory overtime declined to 2.3 hours from 2.4 hours in February. Economists point out that the average workweek generally turns up before overall employment strengthens.

Other indicators of the breadth and depth of the jobs problem included these record-matching or setting figures in March:

- The 7.9-percent jobless rate for adult men, up from 7.6 percent in February, equaled the postwar high for this worker category set last December. The rate for women, also 7.9 percent, was still somewhat below 1975 levels.
- The number of workers holding part-time jobs because they say they cannot find full-time employment rose to 5.7 million, another new record. The previous high of 5,560,000 was set in February.
- The number of "discouraged" workers, those who are not looking for jobs because they think none is available, reached 1,340,000 in the January-March quarter, surpassing the previous high of 1.2 million in the fourth quarter of 1981.

THE BLS'S Norwood told the Joint Economic Committee that if the number of discouraged workers had been factored into the jobless rate, it would have averaged 12.5 percent in the first quarter of 1982, up from 11.8 percent in the final quarter of 1981.

Norwood stressed the plight of black Americans in her testimony before the JEC, noting that their overall jobless rate rose from 17.3 to 18 percent last month, another record.

"The seriousness of the employment situation for black workers is demonstrated by the fact that blacks comprise 10 percent of the population, but they constitute 20 percent of the unemployed and nearly 40 percent of the discouraged," she said.

TEENAGERS were the only major worker category that showed a drop in joblessness during March, decreasing four-tenths of 1 percent to 21.9 percent. The rate for black teenagers, however, rose from 42.3 percent to 46 percent.

The largest over-the-month employment decline occurred in manufacturing, where some 130,000 jobs were lost. Almost 50,000 of these were among non-production workers, BLS said.

The hardest-hit industries were primary and fabricated metals, machinery, and electrical equipment, textiles and apparel, and food processing. Construction employment in March was down 45,000, and jobs in the industry have declined a total of 300,000 since last April.

Employment in the service-producing sector was little changed over the month.

Scranton Unions Rally to Aid 11-Year-Old Palsy Victim

Scranton, Pa.—Thanks to organized labor, an 11-year-old cerebral palsy victim here can look forward to a better education and a more normal life.

Members of the Scranton Building & Construction Trades Council volunteered the labor to build a specially equipped bathroom in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Walsh to meet the needs of their adopted son, Bobby.

John J. McNulty, president of the council, said the unions were inspired to help by a fund-raising drive for Bobby started by the Scranton Kiwanis Club and endorsed by the Scranton AFL-CIO. The drive raised more than $13,600 to buy a special electronic communications machine for Bobby's education.

Over a third of the contributions came from members of the Machinists and the Auto Workers at McKinney Mfg. Co. where Walsh works, from a $700 contribution by county workers who belong to the Service Employees, and from a $1,000 donation from the Steamfitters local, Scranton AFL-CIO President William Cockerell said.

Since the teaching machine will cost about $5,000, the remaining money is to be put in a trust fund for Bobby's future needs. The building trades stepped in when it was learned that the special bathroom social workers said Bobby needs would cost at least another $5,000, depleting the fund. The volunteer labor will help keep the fund intact.

Bobby, who was born in an institution, cannot walk, speak or use his hands. The Walshes, both 51, became his foster parents after their daughter, a volunteer worker at the foundling home, began to bring the boy home for weekend visits. Bobby became the Walshes' legally adopted child on Mar. 30.

Time for Trickle-Up

IF TRICKLE-DOWN economics hasn't worked, as it obviously hasn't, how about trying a bit of trickle-up economics?

Instead of waiting for tax giveaways to wealthy individuals and prosperous corporations to be invested in job-creating enterprises, let's start with jobs.

We have seen these past months that excess money in the coffers of conglomerates is more likely to be used to finance further corporate takeovers than for expanding production in a consumer market shrunken by unemployment and declining purchasing power.

In the midst of a cruel recession, huge corporations invest billions in an effort to capture control of other huge corporations by taking advantage of depressed stock prices. Sometimes the prize is no more than a potential tax writeoff that will further reduce the corporate contribution to America's national defense and the general welfare.

A jobless worker could die of thirst before any nourishment trickles down from such manipulations.

SO LET'S REVERSE the flow. Put unemployed workers back on payrolls and the nation's cash registers can start ringing again. Small businesses that have been going bankrupt at an alarming rate are able to make a go of it. Automobiles are sold, and steel, glass and tire production revives accordingly.

And prosperity does, indeed, trickle up to the corporations and their stockholders.

But you can't create jobs by echoing the Reagan Administration slogan of getting the government "off our backs."

The government has an indispensable role to play in helping the economy out of recession.

Government can and must act to bring down the high interest rates that have stifled the vital construction industry and priced 80 percent of Americans out of the housing market.

Only the most unsophisticated take at face value the Administration's profession of inability to tamper with the tight-money policies of the Federal Reserve Board—policies which it has advocated and still defends.

BUT IT ALSO has available a tested credit allocation power that makes it possible to channel funds into housing and other productive uses, and cut off credit for speculative ventures that produce nothing for the economy but push up interest costs by draining away funds.

More directly, the federal government can put people to work almost immediately by funding needed public works and public service jobs.

These are the counter-cyclical actions that have helped the nation out of all previous recessions, and they are the measures intended by the Humphrey-Hawkins Full Employment & Balanced Growth Act that Congress passed with fanfare—and then ignored.

Unemployed workers need an array of public assistance and services, but contribute nothing in taxes. The nation is made poorer still because goods are not manufactured, homes are not built, ports are not expanded.

How high does the unemployment rate have to soar before this Administration and this Congress perceive the obvious?

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

LANE KIRKLAND, President

THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward	Murray H. Finley
Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts	Sol C. Chaikin
Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco	Charles H. Pillard
J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride	David J. Fitzmaurice
Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps	Wm. W. Winpisinger
William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell	John DeConcini
Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss	William Konyha
Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney	Douglas A. Fraser
Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield	Barbara Hutchinson
Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto	Gerald W. McEntee

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman, James M. Shevis

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W. Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, April 10, 1982 No. 14

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

International Labor Press AFL-CIO/CLC Association

U.S. Producers Threatened

Dumping Laws Short-Circuited As Japan's Micro Chips Pour In

By Gus Tyler

WHAT TO DO ABOUT those chips from Japan is an almost perfect example of a simple problem made complex because we have no constant policy on imports.

The "chip" is the popular name for an artificial brain, about the size of a fingernail, that can receive information, remember, and reason. It is the soul and cranium of those wizard computers that play games, process data, and solve problems.

THE "CHIP" was born in America, as our very own idea. A huge industry sprung into being to manufacture the midget marvel, much of it located in "silicon valley," that complex of new facilities south of San Francisco. We produced for ourselves and the world; the chip was to be our salvation, making up in exports what we lost in steel and autos. In the "information society" of the future, we would dominate the world markets.

But now, just a few years later, we find ourselves pushed by Japan—not only out of foreign, but also out of our very own domestic, markets. Japan is underselling us on our own turf. How can they do it?

The answer, in a word, is "dumping," according to charges made by Motorola, an American maker of chips. "Dumping" means that Japan is selling chips in the United States below the selling price in Japan or even below production costs.

Now, why would anybody engage in the apparently unprofitable business of selling anything below cost? Because, done skillfully, it can be profitable.

BY PLACING an artifically high price on "chips" sold in Japan, the producer can cover all costs by selling only a percentage—let's say 75 percent—of its output in the home market. The extra 25 percent can be sold for pure profit at any price in the world market, even below cost.

That's the short run strategy. The long range plan is to drive the American competitor out of the field in the same way that Japan has wiped out our radio and TV manufacture. Then Japan has the market all to itself and can raise its prices here.

The solution is simple: enforce present laws that prohibit dumping. That is simple and straightforward national policy.

What complexifies the simple is the clash of interests among different sectors in our own economy. Motorola wants the dumping provisions applied, because it manufactures chips.

But other companies do not want the law applied because they use the chips to make computers and, since they can get the chips for less from Japan, they do not want to halt the present practice. They also can argue that by getting a cheaper chip, they can sell American computers for less.

THE ARGUMENT of those who reason this way is sound—but only for the moment. In the long run, it is unsound. Once Japan monopolizes our market, they can raise the price—without fear of competition. What is more, after they knock out American chip makers, they can proceed to knock out American computer manufacturers by dumping computers as well as chips.

What is in the national interest is clear: stop dumping. But so long as there are special interests who can get the ear of the Administration, there is always the danger that the law will not be enforced.

Copyright 1982, Gus Tyler Columns

Aristocratic Contempt In Medicare Rules

In all my years as a union officer and representative, I never met nor even imagined the degree of arrogance implicit in these latest Dept. of Health & Human Services rules for Medicare.

These regulations not only legitimatize union-busting but reward it out of taxes collected from those being busted.

In an interpretation that verges on satire, these regulations define union-busting as "a service related to patient care." For sheer, callous, aristocratic contempt, that ranks right up there with "Let them eat cake."

—Machinists Vice President George J. Poulin, in testimony before the House Labor-Management Subcommittee, Apr. 1, 1982.

Reversal Needed to Spur Jobs

Runaway Interest Rates Stifle Revival of Construction Sector

The following is from an address by President Robert A. Georgine of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. to the BCTD legislative conference, Apr. 5, 1982.

THE SINGLE most effective way to get unemployed construction workers back to work is to reduce interest rates.

If that means regulating credit and allocating it to high-priority areas, then the Congress and the President must regulate credit. In 1980, when President Carter invoked the Credit Control Act, interest rates dropped dramatically and the housing industry revived—only to be snuffed out by a renewal of tight money.

If it means taxing banks for excessive interest rates, then tax the banks. If it means postponing a few corporate mergers by channelling credit to housing, then do it.

AMERICA CAN live without a few more conglomerates. But this country cannot live without a healthy construction industry.

That is our concern. That is our responsibility to our members. And that is the message we are going to take to Capitol Hill. Don't tell us what the President did. Tell us what you are going to do.

No buckpassing. No sidestepping. No mumbo-jumbo. What are you going to do?

Congress is supposed to be the representatives of the people. Well, we have 4,000 of the people here. And we have a thousand times that number who live and vote in every state and congressional district in this country.

WE ARE NOT economists. We don't know a thing about theories. But we do know what works.

We know that:

- When mortgage rates were 9 percent, houses were being built.
- When sewer and water facilities were being built, the rivers and lakes were getting cleaner.
- When the federal government took charge, the interstate highway system was built.
- When the federal government kept an enforcement club in the closet, our employers became more interested in safety on the job.
- Affirmative action worked when there were plenty of jobs.
- When the private economy was slack, public works programs provided jobs and necessary public facilities.

WE ALSO KNOW that when construction workers are working, the cash registers in the stores are ringing and the merchants are smiling.

But we aren't smiling. On the contrary, our members are in an angry mood. They are angry about the lack of work.

They are angry about being denied unemployment insurance. During the 1973-75 recession, 75 percent of the workers who lost their jobs drew unemployment benefits. Today, only about one-third of the unemployed are receiving benefits.

Don't tell us the eligibility rules were tightened to catch the cheaters and loafers, because our members aren't cheaters or loafers.

OUR MEMBERS are angry about being denied food stamps when they need them, because when they were working, they paid the taxes that funded that program.

They are angry about attacks on their wages and their unions. They are angry about being taken for granted by the Democrats and shunned by the Republicans.

They are tired of being wooed by the politicians and then getting left at the altar after the election.

There is a new militancy and a new spirit among our membership. Construction workers are simply not getting to be anyone's patsy. We aren't going to listen to the congressional run-around. And if the Congress doesn't listen to us now, we'll make certain they hear us in November.

MEMBERS OF Congress who want labor's support in November will have to support labor in April.

If they want to be our friends, they should not confirm the present nominee for chairman of the National Labor Relations Board.

If they want us to walk our precincts for them in November, then they can't jail us for exercising our rights to picket unfair employers.

If the government wants the highest quality work on its construction, it is going to have to support apprenticeship programs that produce highly trained journeymen.

If they want American workers to support the economic and political system, then that system has to work as well for workers as it does for businessmen.

Policies Hurt Workers

Reagan-Provoked Recession 'Devastates' Railroad Industry

THE ADMINISTRATION'S economic program has hit the railroad industry and its workers with "a devastating thunderbolt" of high interest rates and reductions in vital programs, President Richard I. Kilroy of the Railway & Airline Clerks said.

Kilroy pointed out that the near-record interest rates are hurting the entire economy, including the steel, auto, lumber and construction industries. When these industries decline, he said, the railroads, which haul the raw materials for production, suffer severely.

The Office of Management & Budget is interested only in budget cuts, Kilroy observed, "and they have absolutely no concern, in our opinion, for the results of those cuts on the industry or on the workers." Kilroy appeared on the network radio interview Labor News Conference.

KILROY ALSO condemned Administration budget proposals to "eliminate or completely dismantle the Railroad Retirement System which has been in effect since 1936."

There is also a proposal to virtually eliminate the National Railway Adjustment Board set up under the Railway Labor Act of 1926, he said. The board provides a tribunal for final decisions on labor disputes in the railroad industry, and its elimination could mean "chaos," Kilroy asserted.

The Railroad Retirement System, he pointed out, is paid for by taxes on the industry and employees, and these funds cover the system's operations as well as pensions due to retirees.

Both railroad management and the unions agree they want to keep the system and continue to pay for it, Kilroy said. He pointed out that the Administration's proposal to gut the system could deprive some workers of benefits, such as those who also paid into the social security system under other employment.

Kilroy charged that the Reagan recession is also hampering the efforts of Conrail and other carriers to achieve profitability. He pointed out that attempts by railway workers to "help these railroads over the hurdle" through wage deferrals have been undermined by the depressed state of the economy.

KILROY SAID the entire transportation system is essential to the nation's economic health and its national defense, and the railroads are "primary" in that system because they haul commodities, raw materials, grain and foodstuffs and other goods to market. "This nation could not exist economically without a rail system," he said.

Reporters questioning Kilroy on the AFL-CIO public service program were Alan Adams of Employment Relations Report and Lee Coney of the Bureau of National Affairs.

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

THERE IS NO MORE shameful contrast in President Reagan's priorities than in the decisions affecting the rich and the poor.

For the rich, Reagan is standing firm behind the scandalous $750 billion in tax cuts over the next several years for big business and high-income groups.

For the poor and needy, he is standing firm behind further cutbacks which will bring back widespread hunger and malnutrition in America.

Last year, the Administration pushed food stamp cuts through Congress, knocking one million people off the rolls and reducing benefits for 20 million others. In child nutrition, school lunches were eliminated for 1.4 million low-income kids and school breakfasts disappeared for 400,000 poor children.

This year, the Administration wants to cut another $2.3 billion from food stamps and $600 million from child nutrition.

LIKE THE NEWSPAPER publishers who usually manage to find the "woman in the fur coat" on welfare, the President trots out ancedotes about "fraud and abuse" to justify these cuts. But, aside from the President often misstating the facts, Congress already has installed anti-fraud rules to reduce cheating to a minimum.

The non-partisan Congressional Budget Office analyzed the Reagan Administration's proposed cuts in food stamps and reported serious consequences. About 92 percent of nearly 2 million elderly and disabled households now getting food stamps would have them ended or greatly reduced. Cuts for a working poor family would average $684 a year. About 85 percent of the 20 million people receiving food stamps would have the benefits abolished or reduced, CBO found.

Stanley J. Matek, president of the American Public Health Association, recently told Congress that the Administration plan to cut the supplemental food program for pregnant women, infants and children (WIC) by 27 percent and fold it into a block grant to the states would result in hundreds of thousands of recipients being dropped.

Matek called WIC "one of the most successful federal programs ever devised" even though two to three times as many persons are eligible for WIC as actually receive benefits.

The Administration has targeted other programs which prevent malnutrition in needy children for substantial cuts or total elimination—school lunches and breakfasts, child care meals, the special milk program and summer food service.

Further evidence of the effect of Reagan cuts in these nutrition programs and food stamps was presented to Congress recently by the Food Research & Action Center, a public interest group.

FRAC cited recent case histories from pediatricians where children suffered weight loss and disease after their parents were dropped from WIC or food stamps.

PEDIATRICIAN Deborah Frank, who works with undernourished needy infants and children as a staff physician at Boston City Hospital and the Children's Hospital, cited the probable effect of food cuts.

"We have an extremely fragile system of food assistance in place now," Dr. Frank warned. "The problems of malnutrition and 'failure to thrive' that we are seeing today will only be made worse by budget cuts in these programs. Undernutrition during the early periods of brain growth have a long-term effect on children's ability to learn. The proposed budget cuts seem so wasteful when I think about the future educability and productivity of these children."

What Reagan's policies really amount to are a fraud on the public and an abuse of the truth.

A DEVASTATING THUNDERBOLT of Reaganomics has rocked the nation's rail industry and its workers with high interest rates and program rollbacks, President Richard I. Kilroy of the Railway & Airline Clerks, center, said on Labor News Conference. The AFL-CIO vice president was questioned by Lee Coney, left, of the Bureau of National Affairs and Alan Adams of Employment Relations Report. The AFL-CIO produced public affairs interview is aired weekly on Mutual radio.

JOBS FOR THE UNEMPLOYED are the most important legislative issue, President Robert A. Georgine tells 4,000 delegates to the Building & Construction Trades Dept.'s national conference. One out of five construction workers is unemployed. Georgine called on the Administration and Congress to take immediate action to lower interest rates.

Building Trades Welcome Reagan, But Spurn His Economic Policies

If the 4,000 delegates to the building trades legislative conference constitute a political barometer, the climate for the Reagan Administration's economic program has turned stormy.

The delegates heard the Administration program defended by President Reagan himself and by Sec. of Labor Raymond J. Donovan.

THEY HEARD it savaged by two prominent Democrats—former Vice President Walter F. Mondale and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.).

And they heard a maverick Republican senator, Lowell P. Weicker, Jr. of Connecticut, urge them to re-elect Republicans who oppose the Reagan program and defeat Democrats who vote with the President.

Reagan received a warm welcome when he was introduced, a personal ovation that drowned out scattered boos.

He was applauded when he praised the courage of the Polish workers and when he reiterated that he would not "seek" repeal of the Davis-Bacon Act.

AND THERE was prolonged applause when the President expressed his thanks to Alfred Antonucci, the president of a Cleveland local of the Carpenters who had helped tackle the assailant who shot the President a year ago. The assassination attempt came as President Reagan left the same hotel, after having addressed the 1981 building trades conference. There was emotion and thanksgiving in the President's return this year.

But as the President moved into the substance of his program, there were long stretches in which the silence of the delegates was broken only by the occasional cries of a baby in the audience.

His supply-side tax cut must not be tampered with, Reagan declared. Labor should join with management and tell government "to get off your backs so you can get on with the task of rebuilding our economy," the President urged.

"Our program has begun to work," he insisted. "We are on the verge of a major breakthrough."

The applause at the conclusion was polite, but muted. The news stories called it a "chilly" reception.

It was as warm as it could be for both Kennedy and Mondale. The two are widely viewed as potential rivals for the 1984 Democratic presidential nomination, but the competition that day was only in the most pungent way to categorize the Reagan Administration.

The President's tax and spending policies represent "a radical departure from the principle of fairness," Mondale charged.

But Americans "are not a selfish people," he said. "We're not a survival-of-the-fittest society." And in the real America, if not in Reagan's view of the world, "people get old, sick, need education, need job training."

THIS COUNTRY can and must concern itself with both defense and the general welfare, Mondale urged.

Kennedy told the delegates that the Reagan program has already taken effect—"it has brought our economy to a dead stop and run it in reverse, straight into a recession."

He challenged the President's attempt to reassure the building trades delegates about the Davis-Bacon prevailing wage law.

"If the President truly wants to be on your side," Kennedy suggested, "then the next time there is a vote on Davis-Bacon, let him say clearly he is against it and send the White House lobbyists up to Capitol Hill to prove he means it."

THE DEMOCRATIC Party may need new ideas, Kennedy said, but it must also have "the backbone to stand for enduring values of economic justice and human compassion."

Weicker, who is being challenged for renomination this year by the brother of Vice President Bush and is a target of a New Right campaign, termed the Reagan Administration a "tragedy" and exclaimed, "God help the United States if we have two more years like that."

He wants the GOP to be "the party of Lincoln and Eisenhower," Weicker said, not of Strom Thurmond and Jesse Helms. "And nobody is going to kick me out of the Republican Party."

LABOR SEC. Donovan came to the defense of the Administration, insisting that inflation must be curbed before the economy can regain its health.

If the Administration were "to give in now" and modify its economic policy, "we might reduce unemployment a little," Donovan said. But inflation would zoom out of control.

"If we continue in the direction the President has chosen," Donovan promised, "this country will once again be the land of promise and opportunity, where all things are possible."

DEMOCRATIC National Chairman Charles Manatt, a scheduled speaker, termed the Reagan Administration the most anti-union government of the past 50 years, which is "holding the American economy in hostage." It is "out of touch with the reality of unemployment," he said.

Republican Chairman Richard Richards, who asked to speak to the conference and was added to the program, promised that the GOP will set up a labor advisory council, give a union representative a place on the party's executive committee, and seek to close the "gap" between the trade union movement and the Republican Party.

RLEA Elects Kilroy Secretary-Treasurer

President Richard I. Kilroy of the Railway & Airline Clerks has been elected secretary-treasurer of the Railway Labor Executives' Association, succeeding James J. Kennedy, Jr., former BRAC legislative and political director.

Kennedy recently was named executive assistant to AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue.

Construction Unions Focus On Job Needs

(Continued from Page 1)

the worst mistakes" of the "tax giveaways to the corporations and the rich" it enacted last year.

He spoke of the need to provide jobs, to restore decaying transportation, sewage and water systems, and of the need for the Administration and the Federal Reserve Board to end a "stubborn reliance on tight money and high interest rates."

While one out of five construction workers is unemployed, Kirkland said, American families are forced to double up because mortgage costs have made housing unaffordable. And "for every idle construction worker, at least one other person is thrown out of work in the lumber and steel industries, in plumbing or electrical manufacturing, and in other related fields."

Besides hearing from a spectrum of prominent speakers, delegates met with their home-state congressional delegations at breakfast meetings and Capitol Hill visits. In a series of workshops, they explored legislative issues in depth and questioned panelists on subjects ranging from campaign financing to legal developments affecting construction.

"The most important work of this conference will be done when you are back home," Georgine told the delegates, urging each of them "to begin a daily lobbying effort in your own local."

But if a member of the House or Senate tries to tell them that unemployment is the price that must be paid to fight inflation, "forget about lobbying," Georgine said. "Start organizing to defeat him."

This is no time for Congress to be diverted by "single issue groups" pushing matters ranging "from abortion to gun control, school prayer to busing."

The task for Congress and the Administration is "finding jobs for the unemployed." Jobless workers "can't afford to wait for the trickle to reach them," he said.

"We'll evaluate how well the members of Congress hear us by their voting records," Georgine stressed. "And we are planning to send those who are hard of hearing a louder message, one that will arrive in November."

Education Conference Spurs Expanded Political Action

Boston—The restoration of federal training and school funds—cut back sharply by the Reagan Administration—is highly dependent on expanding labor's grass-roots political leverage, the 100 participants in the AFL-CIO's annual education conference were told.

Federation Education Director Dorothy Shields said in opening the four-day conference that college and university labor education programs are at a critical juncture because of President Reagan's budget policies.

STRESSING THE importance of political action, Shields said a resurgence of labor solidarity must be manifested next Nov. 2 to elect candidates who are responsive to the education needs of workers and their families.

In the meantime, she urged, unions must use all available resources to make up for the lost federal participation in essential education services and worker training programs.

The conference, sponsored by the federation's Dept. of Education, was held jointly with the annual meeting of the University & College Educators Association.

Focusing on an increased emphasis on grass-roots lobbying and political action, Michael Gildea of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation described the wider use of telephone communications banks for voter education, personal group contacts with legislators by union members, and stepped-up lobbying at the state and local level.

Participants were given the detailed workings of a Machinists' local canvassing program, a Government Employees' federal sector political action effort, and a Communications Workers' pilot legislative program being operated in Iowa.

Pointing up the effectiveness of personal contact lobbying, a video tape documentary disclosed how the voting records of certain legislators improved in labor's favor after they met in group sessions with union members.

A series of workshops explored the use of union outreach efforts to the public, school students, younger trade unionists and the unemployed.

WORKSHOPS were held on building and expanding coalitions with women's groups, safety and environmental organizations, and religious and civil rights groups.

A multi-media program on the Carpenters centennial celebration, including a slide show, exhibits, displays and films, was presented by the union's secretary, John S. Rogers.

The labor educators also were asked to reaffirm support of black trade unions in South Africa by Executive Director Pat O'Farrell of the African-American Labor Center and Nana Mahoma, AALC director for South Africa.

Protests Swell in Congress

Budget Office Hit on Bid To Scuttle Rail Boards

(Continued from Page 1)

broken up because it is "an inappropriate federal function."

Pointing out that 25 Congresses have given support to the system and the Supreme Court has repeatedly upheld the federal role in railroad affairs to maintain an efficient interstate rail transport system, Berge concluded that the "only impropriety here is OMB's arrogation to itself of the constitutional authority to make that determination."

BERGE ALSO charged that, if the OMB plan to break up the system fails in the budget process, the agency is "determined to destroy it from within" by cutting the board's personnel to the point where it would be unable to effectively administer pension, unemployment and sickness benefits.

Berge said OMB's projected budgetary savings from dismantling the rail retirement system are "mythical" since rail management and labor pay for all benefits beyond those social security is required to pay, except for the so-called "windfall" or "dual" benefits. Congress agreed to fund these benefits for some 400,000 retirees out of general revenues in 1974.

Rail labor is not alone in protesting the Administration proposals to break up the retirement system. A "sense of the Senate" resolution protesting the proposal was introduced by Sen. Howard Metzenbaum (D-Ohio) with 20 co-sponsors. Two similar resolutions have been introduced in the House.

RIPP, WHO chairs RLEA's Railway Labor Act committee, said that by decreasing the budget for the National Mediation Board by some $2 billion, OMB would eliminate the National Railroad Adjustment Board and the Special Boards of Adjustment.

He said the National Mediation Board already had informed the railroad unions that it would no longer pay rent on the Adjustment Board and that the board would shut down.

Contrary to OMB's "so-called rationale" that the industry does not pay anything for the board's services, Ripp said rail management and labor pay for the board's maintenance on a 50-50 basis with the federal government.

OMB'S budget-saving action in the case of the boards is "ill-conceived, ill-considered and ill-advised," Ripp said. The shutdown would only shave about three ten-thousandths of 1 percent of the federal budget, he pointed out, while having grave consequences for the grievance and arbitration procedures set in the Railway Labor Act.

Ripp noted that railroad unions traded the right to strike over minor disputes for the establishment of a national, federally financed adjustment board in 1934 amendments to the act. This trade-off was recognized by the Supreme Court in a 1954 case, the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen v. Chicago River & Indiana Railroad.

If the board shuts down and there is no compulsory arbitration panel to which rail workers may submit disputes, Ripp said, then the basis for the Supreme Court's Chicago River decision will have been removed.

THIS WOULD mean that rail workers "will be free to strike over each and every minor grievance that is left unresolved," Ripp warned.

He said railroad unions would be willing to work with Congress to improve the adjustment board, "but the budgetary process simply is not the appropriate means to make any changes of substance in the Railway Labor Act."

RAILROAD RETIREMENT SYSTEM and the National Railroad Adjustment Board are jeopardized by the Reagan Administration's attempts to use the budget process to dismantle them, union representatives warn at a hearing of the House Appropriations Committee. Testifying are, from left, Ole M. Berge, President, Maintenance of Way Employees; William G. Mahoney, Railway Labor Executives Association counsel; and Andrew M. Ripp, Vice President, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Supreme Court Reaffirms Negotiated Seniority Rights

A 5-4 majority of the Supreme Court held that seniority systems established in good faith—not as a subterfuge to accomplish illegal discrimination—are immune from challenge under the Civil Rights Act.

It overturned, as union attorneys had urged, an appellate court decision that sought to apply different tests to seniority systems that were in effect when the 1964 Civil Rights Act was adopted and those established after that date.

IN A JOINT BRIEF to the Supreme Court, the AFL-CIO and the Bakery, Confectionery & Tobacco Workers had argued that the interpretation by the 4th Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals flouted the intent of Congress as demonstrated by the language and legislative history of the law.

The case that reached the court dealt with a seniority system established in 1968 at American Tobacco Co. plants in Richmond as part of a collective bargaining agreement.

The new system overcame in part the effects of past racial discrimination at the plants, but a subsequent class action brought by a group of black employees contended that the union and company had not gone far enough.

AT ISSUE was the interpretation of a section of the Civil Rights Act specifying that it is not "an unlawful employment practice" to apply different pay or employment conditions standards based on "a bona fide seniority or merit system," or a piece-work system, "provided that such differences are not the result of an intention to discriminate because of race, color, religion or national origin."

A previous case decided by the Supreme Court appeared to sustain the union's interpretation of the law. But the appellate court majority took the position that the law's deference to legitimate seniority systems applies only to those in place before 1964.

The union brief viewed such an interpretation as clearly in error.

THE SUPREME COURT majority agreed, holding that the appellate body's interpretation runs counter to the law's plain language, is inconsistent with prior Supreme Court decisions, and contrary to national labor policy.

Justice Byron R. White wrote the majority opinion, joined by Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Justices Lewis F. Powell, Jr., William H. Rehnquist and Sandra O'Connor.

Effect of AFL-CIO Tax Proposal

For $700 Cap on 1982 and 1983 Individual Tax Cuts

Income		Pre-1981 Law Tax Liability	1982 Tax Reduction from 1981: Current Law	1982: AFL-CIO Proposal	1982: Difference	1983 Tax Reduction from 1981: Current Law	1983: AFL-CIO Proposal	1983: Difference
$ 10,000	(family of 4) ..	$ 550	$ 74	$ 74	None	$ 111	$ 111	None
	(family of 2) ..	900	114	114	"	171	171	"
	(single)	1,177	134	134	"	226	226	"
$ 20,000	(family of 4) ..	2,013	228	228	None	371	371	None
	(family of 2) ..	2,457	268	268	"	459	459	"
	(single)	3,115	326	326	"	610	610	"
$ 30,000	(family of 4) ..	3,917	405	405	None	744	744	None
	(family of 2) ..	4,477	465	465	"	844	844	"
	(single)	5,718	566	566	"	1,081	1,081	"
$ 40,000	(family of 4) ..	6,312	639	639	None	1,188	1,188	None
	(family of 2) ..	7,052	719	700	$ 19	1,328	1,328	"
	(single)	8,886	874	700	174	1,653	1,400	$ 253
$ 45,000	(family of 4) ..	7,737	793	700	93	1,458	1,400	58
	(family of 2) ..	8,528	873	700	173	1,606	1,400	206
	(single)	10,673	1,047	700	347	1,980	1,400	580
$ 50,000	(family of 4) ..	9,323	947	700	247	1,754	1,400	354
	(family of 2) ..	10,183	1,027	700	327	1,914	1,400	514
	(single)	12,559	1,239	700	539	2,326	1,400	926
$120,000*	.....	35,578	2,229	700	1,529	5,324	1,400	3,924
$120,000	.....	36,477	3,128	700	2,428	6,223	1,400	4,823

Four-person family, all income from wages or salary.
*Four-person family with $100,000 salary income and $50,000 capital gains (of which only 40% or $20,000 is included in income).

Note: All calculations based on usual assumption of personal deductions equal to 23% of income and one wage earner.

Estimated Revenue Gain: F.Y. 1982 = $ 6 billion
F.Y. 1983 = 13 billion
F.Y. 1984 = 9 billion
TOTAL = $28 billion

Washington Senate Votes Down Con-Con

Olympia, Wash.—Washington will not become the 32nd state to adopt a call for a national convention to draw up a balanced budget amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

With strong lobbying from the state's labor movement and its allies, the state Senate killed the House-passed resolution by a 31-17 vote.

A year earlier, the battle had been reversed with the Senate passing the resolution and the House rejecting it. Thirty-four states can compel a constitutional convention, although the procedure has never before been used. Washington has been one of the target states of right-wing groups pushing the amendment.

Union-Busting Subsidy For Hospitals Hit

(Continued from Page 1)

imbursement policy for management consultant fees encourage "expansion of an already unsavory and socially useless industry."

With "similar logic" to its earlier attempt to declare catsup a vegetable that meets school lunch requirements, the Administration now has "declared union-busting to be an appropriate medical treatment," he said.

• Machinists Vice President George Poulin said the new government regulations "not only legitimatize union-busting but reward it out of taxes collected from those being busted."

He termed it "criminal . . . to further reduce amounts for patient care by subtracting out payments to union-busters."

• Food & Commercial Workers Vice President Arnold Mayer protested the "partnership of government and employers to use public money" to fight the effort of workers to improve their conditions.

The Administration policy is "incredibly biased," he protested.

• National Council of Senior Citizens President Jacob Clayman noted that the answer to efforts to broaden Medicare benefits to cover prescription drugs, dental care and other now-excluded health costs has always been that "it costs too much."

IF THAT is so, he suggested, surely scarce funds shouldn't be spent "to prevent the honest efforts of hospital workers to achieve a modicum of self-protection and dignity on the job."

The Administration position was defended by Paul R. Willging, deputy administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration, who contended that the previous policy of not allowing payments to management consultants was slanted in favor of unions. He said that there is no reason not to reimburse hospitals for consultant fees on labor matters so long as the National Labor Relations Act isn't violated.

A FLAGRANT MISUSE of public funds describes the Reagan Administration's decision to let hospitals and nursing homes bill Medicare for fees paid to union-busting consultants, union witnesses told a House Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations. Service Employees President John J. Sweeney shows the committee an example of the materials paid for by tax dollars. Appearing with Sweeney were his assistant, Cathy Schoen, and SEIU Assistant Organizing Director David Cromer.

Reagan Urged to Block Deal For Japanese Subway Cars

Union and industry leaders called on President Reagan to block a deal subsidized by the Japanese government for the sale of $275 million worth of subway cars to the New York City transit system.

President Lloyd McBride of the Steelworkers and Chairman Adolph J. Lena of the Specialty Steel Industry advisory committee warned that the transaction would have a harsh impact on U.S. industry and jobs and deal a long-term setback to the American economy.

THE TRANSACTION between Kawasaki Heavy Industries and the New York Metropolitan Transit Authority is being financed through a 12¼ percent loan from the Japanese government—well below the current 16½ percent U.S. prime lending rate.

McBride and Kena charged in a letter to Reagan that the deal clearly contradicts the intent of the subsidy code under the General Agreement on Tariff & Trade.

The Specialty Steel Industry coalition said Reagan has authority under GATT to rescind an agreement that is deemed detrimental to the U.S. economy.

"This subsidized import transaction sets a very dangerous precedent," McBride and Kena wrote Reagan. "Other public transit authorities in scores of American cities are likely to follow the lead of New York unless you personally intervene to halt this brazen blow to American industry and jobs."

THEY SUGGESTED that if foreign firms are awarded all the contracts for New York's planned purchase of 1,150 subway cars, the total transaction would exceed $1.2 billion. The current Kawasaki deal is for 325 cars.

McBride and Kena said it was "ironic that the Japanese should be permitted to use loans to subsidize major exports such as the Kawasaki subway car transaction after chalking up a huge $18 billion trade surplus with the United States in 1981—which is projected to reach $24 billion in 1982."

PRESIDENT David J. Fitzmaurice of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers said the fact that only one American firm made a bid on the New York contract points up "the crying need for a national policy to foster reindustrialization" in the United States.

"We need to require that all public tax moneys used for procurement be spent on U.S.-made products and service where available," Fitzmaurice said. "Where subsidization is necessary for building up our industry, the U.S. government should do so by straight-out targeted grants and low-interest loans."

In pursuing labor's concerns over the subway contract, the New York State AFL-CIO has placed newspaper advertisements urging union members to write the state Public Authorities Control Board to rescind the agreement.

SEC.-TREAS. E. Howard Molisani of the state labor federation said the six-member board has power to reject the agreement because state funds help finance the New York City MTA.

In a letter to the board, AFL-CIO Regional Director Michael Mann branded the transaction "callous, short-sighted and impervious to the suffering of jobless Americans." Mann pointed out that 10 million U.S. workers are unemployed, including 750,000 in New York State.

Court Blocks Firm's Sale Pending NLRB Settlement

San Juan, P.R.—A federal court here granted a request of the National Labor Relations Board to freeze the assets of a Puerto Rican garment firm until a series of unfair labor practice charges against it is resolved.

The company, Alle Arecibo Corp., went out of business last month, and informed the NLRB that it would be selling off its inventory and plant equipment.

JUDGE JUAN M. Perez-Gimenez of the U.S. District Court for the District of Puerto Rico ruled that sale of the company would act "so as to frustrate" the NLRB's anticipated order to the firm directing payment of back pay and other financial liability.

If the sale were to go through, Perez-Gimenez said, there would be no assets available for the company "to comply with its obligation to pay the individual employees and the union." He added:

"Unless such activity is enjoined and restrained, and the proceeds of the sale or transfer of any assets of (the company) held for protection," the employees and their union, Local 601 of the Ladies' Garment Workers, would have no meaningful remedy available when the board's order is issued.

THE UNION filed the unfair labor practice charges against the firm during 1981, accusing the company of unlawfully discharging or locking out 15 employees because of their union activities, threatening other workers and promising them benefits if they quit the union, and of other violations.

The union, which had represented the workers since 1974, charged that the company refused to supply it with information on employees, to bargain with it, or to make payments to its health and welfare fund.

LAST JANUARY, before a hearing on the charges was held, an ILGWU representative said he saw company officials remove machinery from the factory here. Following the hearing before an NLRB administrative law judge on Mar. 1-3, Alle Arecibo's president told the NLRB that the firm was closing its operations and selling its capital assets.

The company denied an NLRB request for written assurance that it would voluntarily set aside funds from the proceeds of the sale to satisfy the anticipated board order. The NLRB's regional director then sought a preliminary injunction against the company to preserve the funds.

4/10/82

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

Study Details Reaganomics' Cost to States

President Reagan's fiscal year 1983 budget proposals threaten dozens of social programs at the state level, a study released by the AFL-CIO Public Employee Dept. warns.

In announcing the report, PED Executive Director John F. Leyden said:

"Our analysis of the Administration's FY '83 state grants to support 36 social programs shows that, in all, the states stand to fall more than $11 billion behind what they need merely to keep these programs going at last year's levels.

"THIS LOSS—coming on top of the $18 billion taken from the states in Reagan's FY '82 budget—demonstrates that the President's 'new federalism' proposals are truly a sham. And to make things worse, the official 'new federalism' program—whereby the states would pay for Food Stamps and Aid to Families with Dependent Children, in exchange for a federal take-over of Medicaid—is going to mean a further loss to the states of $17 billion in 1984."

The study cited the following nationwide shortfalls in key programs:

• Some $2 billion in Medicaid, $375 million in New York alone.

• $1.5 billion in Employment Training & Assistance grants, $86 million in Illinois alone.

• More than $1 billion in Aid to Families with Dependent Children, $189 million in California alone.

• More than $1 billion in subsidized housing grants, $50 million in Massachusetts alone.

• $865 million in the special supplemental food program for women, infants, and children, $2.2 million in the District of Columbia alone.

• $271 million in child nutrition funds, some $22 million in Texas alone.

• $217 million in Energy conservation grants, $12.6 million in Pennsylvania alone.

"THE PRESIDENT is slashing these federal funds for social programs," Leyden said. "Does he expect the states to replace these sums, while their own revenues are threatened by conformity to federal tax cuts passed last year as part of his so-called Economic Recovery Act?"

The full report, "Reagan's '83 Budget: More Bad News for the States," is available for $2 from the AFL-CIO Public Employee Dept., Suite 308, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

O'Neill Hailed For Firm Stand On Social Security

A statement by House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr. that "in no way are we going to balance the budget on the backs of the senior citizens" brought a strong concurrence from AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland.

Kirkland wired O'Neill that labor stands with him in opposing any freeze or reduction of cost-of-living increases in social security and other retiree programs.

"The elderly, as a predominantly lower income group, are particularly vulnerable to inflation. Most of them have been fighting a losing battle even with the inflation adjustments," Kirkland noted.

At the AFL-CIO regional conferences that are being held throughout the nation, Kirkland said, participants expressed strong support for maintaining the protections of the social security program and opposition to benefit cuts in this or other retirement programs.

"Social security is a self-financed program based on earned rights. Cutbacks in this program must not be used to offset deficits elsewhere in the budget," Kirkland insisted.

POPE JOHN PAUL and AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue talk at a reception in Rome for participants in an international symposium sponsored by the Pontifical Commission on Justice & Peace. Donahue's presentation examined the development of Catholic social teaching with regard to workers from an American perspective. (Story, Page 2.)

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII Saturday, April 17, 1982 No. 15

NLRB Upholds Unions' Access To Safety Data

By John R. Oravec

The National Labor Relations Board unanimously upheld the right of union access to worker safety and health records, but a part of the NLRB decision could create a "trade secret" barrier enabling companies to withhold certain information on dangerous chemicals.

While welcoming the thrust of the ruling, the AFL-CIO said a federal court review is needed to correct what the federation described as the flawed portion of the decision.

THE NLRB RULED that three chemical manufacturers committed unfair labor practices by refusing requests of two unions for health, safety and medical data on workers as well as the generic names of substances—toxic or not—that are used or produced at their plants.

The complaints were initiated in the late 1970s by the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers and the Chemical Workers against Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing Co., Colgate-Palmolive Co. and Borden Chemical Co.

In upholding the unions' request for disclosure, the board said few matters could be of greater concern to workers and their unions "than exposure to working conditions potentially threatening their health, well-being or their very lives."

ON THAT premise, the NLRB ordered the companies to provide unions with the information they had requested on safety and health programs, monitoring and testing systems, and individual medical records without specifically identifying the individuals.

The board also said the three firms must release the generic names of all chemicals and substances workers encounter on the job except those that "constitute proprietary trade secrets."

In commenting on the overall ruling, AFL-CIO Occupational Safety Director George H. R. Taylor said the NLRB acted properly under federal labor law to uphold union access rights.

"WE DISAGREE, however, with the board's ruling on letting employers condition access to information which involves 'trade secrets,'" Taylor stressed.

The OCAW and ICWU have petitioned the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia "for review and correction of this error," he said.

The federation, along with the Industrial Union Dept. and the Building & Construction Trades Dept., presented arguments on behalf of OCAW and ICWU at NLRB hearings.

To resolve the trade-secret issue between the unions and the companies, an NLRB majority suggested that the parties take up the matter in collective bargaining.

DISSENTING from the portion of the decision dealing with the trade-secret exclusion, NLRB Member Howard Jenkins, Jr., said the companies should be required to provide all essential information to the unions. "It must be emphasized that confidentiality is not a defense to an obligation to furnish relevant information," he wrote.

Once the information is provided, he suggested, the unions and companies should work out ways to keep the information from falling into the hands of competitors.

(Continued on Page 2)

'Business as Usual'

Kirkland Scores Retreat On Economic Sanctions

New York—AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland assailed "business-as-usual" influences on America's foreign policy and accused the Reagan Administration of abandoning Poland's workers to protect U.S. bank investments.

Kirkland's sharp attack on a "Fifth Column of capital" subverting this country's democratic ideals came in a major address to the Foreign Policy Association.

HE STRESSED the AFL-CIO's insistence on the "primacy" of freedom of association in the shaping of United States foreign policy, contrasting it with the "neutral" business view which asks only that other governments be "orderly" and "pay their bills."

Kirkland recalled President Reagan's promise to impose strong economic sanctions "if the repression in Poland continued, if martial law were not ended, Lech Walesa and the internees released, and negotiations resumed with Solidarnosc."

But "the bankers are calling the tune," Kirkland charged, and "the President does nothing" while Poland's tragedy "begins to recede to the back pages of the daily newspapers and disappear from the television screen."

KIRKLAND ARGUED the potency of economic pressures to restrain international lawlessness and to achieve compliance with widely ignored international treaties affirming basic human rights.

He chided the double-standard applied by the European Common Market nations that joined Britain in applying trade and credit sanctions against Argentina.

These same countries, Kirkland noted, had rejected as unworkable sanctions against the Soviet Union when it invaded Afghanistan as well as when it dictated the crackdown on Poland's free unions. And they had declined to use economic pressure to help free American hostages in Iran.

BUT IN the dispute over the Falkland Islands, they have "suddenly discovered the feasibility and value of economic warfare," Kirkland said.

He noted also that the OPEC nations did not hesitate to declare economic warfare against the United States for its support of Israel. And the mere threat of oil cutoffs helped European leaders "discover hitherto unsuspected virtue in Palestinian terrorism."

Basic human rights are not linked to any particular economic system, Kirkland stressed. But universal freedom of association would raise hopes for a worldwide allocation of resources "less weighted toward insatiable military appetites." As far as American labor is concerned, freedom to form unions and speak freely "would reduce barriers and lead to con-

(Continued on Page 8)

Radio Solidarity Broadcasts Call For Resistance

Warsaw—Poland's Solidarity labor union, suspended since the imposition of martial law four months ago, defied communist authorities over its own radio station here with a daring Easter Monday call for resistance.

"This is Radio Solidarity," the broadcast began. "We must fight for the release of those imprisoned, for the restoration of human dignity. Our radio station has taken up this struggle. All honorable Poles should do the same."

DURING THE 10-minute broadcast, clearly audible in large parts of Warsaw on an FM wave length, two announcers talked of conditions in internment camps, played an antigovernment folk song, and promised to return to the air on Apr. 30.

"We have been sitting at our Easter table and for a while we may have forgotten we are living in a country in which there is a state of war, a war that the authorities declared against their own people," the broadcast said.

(Continued on Page 8)

Recession Brings Rising Job Losses To All Sections

Unemployment rates in 46 of the 50 states were higher in February than a year ago, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported, and no section of the nation went unscathed.

Michigan remained the hardest-hit state, with 16.1 percent of its workforce unemployed in the sample month. It had led the unemployment list the previous year as well, with a 14.3 percent jobless rate. The state unemployment tallies are not adjusted for seasonal variations.

UNEMPLOYMENT was up in the Sunbelt as well as the industrial Northeast and Midwest.

The South and Border region had the largest number of states with unemployment increases of 2 points or more—Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina, Maryland, Tennessee and Virginia, as well as the District of Columbia.

In the Northeast, Massachusetts, Vermont, New Hampshire and Pennsylvania had comparably sharp rises. So did Idaho,

(Continued on Page 2)

Reagan 'Misspeaks' Again On Student Loan Cutback

President Reagan is wrong and his critics are right about the impact of the Administration's budget proposals on the college student loan program, the AFL-CIO said.

Reagan devoted most of a five-minute radio address from his Caribbean vacation site to a denial of charges that students will be forced out of college if his proposal clears Congress. Reagan complained that students had been "misled" and "incited to stage protest demonstrations."

"Despite President Reagan's weekend radio message," the AFL-CIO said, "the Administration has proposed to curb the Guaranteed Student Loan program by doubling the origination fee to 10 percent, forcing students to pay market interest rates after leaving school, basing all loans on need and barring graduate students from the program."

An AFL-CIO recording made available to radio stations in response to Reagan included this comment from James Auerbach, the student loan specialist in the federation's Dept. of Education:

"President Reagan has put the student loan program on the chopping block. The Administration's proposals abandon the national commitment, established 25 years ago under President Eisenhower, that no student of ability would be denied an opportunity to attend college because of financial need."

Donahue Cites Encyclical's Message to Industry

Rome—Pope John Paul II's towering encyclical on the rights of workers, "Laborem Exercens," has given both comfort and challenge to trade unions, employers and the Catholic Church in the United States, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue told an international symposium here.

But the document's central theme—that the priority of labor over capital is inviolable — poses the greatest immediate challenge to U.S. multinational firms whose measure of success is "the bottom line," the amount of profit returned to shareholders, Donahue declared.

Because they are organized around the profit motive, these firms seek to pay the cheapest price for labor and raw materials and to obtain the highest price for their products, he said. All too often, labor is regarded only as a cost factor.

"WE MUST EMPHASIZE and give prominence to the primacy of man in the production process," John Paul said in his papal letter of last September. The Pope called for a re-examination of values in western industrialized nations and a recasting of the employment process in the service of man.

"It is clear that recognition of the proper position of labor and the worker in the production process demands various adaptations in the sphere of the right to ownership," John Paul said in the encyclical, the third of his Pontificate.

Picking up on this theme, Donahue asked delegates to the Apr. 3-5 convocation:

"How much more, then, does that recognition require adaptations of corporate policy to workers? Is it not required that a corporate balance sheet give at least as much attention to the number and quality of jobs it has provided during the year as it does to profits?

"Is it not required—if the worker is to be the center of corporate planning and thought—that allowing one facility to deteriorate through inadequate reinvestment, and closing that facility with resultant unemployment, be considered a wrong that must be avoided and redressed?

"IS IT NOT REQUIRED that greater attention must be given to safety and health measures than to increased output —where that increase is achieved by diluting those measures?"

Only time will tell how many corporations and other employers will accept and implement the concepts of "Laborem Exercens," Donahue observed. There is undoubtedly a major teaching role ahead for the Church and its institutions, particularly in industrialized nations, he added: "an uphill struggle to reeducate those who have too long accepted the view that capital has priority, that capital buys labor, and that without a profit motive there can be no industry."

Donahue recommended that the teaching role of the Church in this matter ought to be organized by the Justice & Peace Commissions in each nation and that the National Conference of Bishops in each country ought to take a new look at their responsibility to insure the teaching of papal encyclicals.

"FOR OUR PART, as trade unionists," he said, "we will go on pressing for the individual elements of worker rights that the Pope has defined and worry not about the system's appropriate title.

"We will continue to struggle for workers' rights, for fair compensation and all that goes with it, and above all to struggle for the recognition of worker dignity that flows from employment, under decent conditions, in a fulfilling toil about which the worker has a say and through which he participates fully in the management, ownership, and profits of the enterprise."

Pope John Paul opened the symposium, which was sponsored by the Pontifical Commission on Justice & Peace and held in Synod Hall at Vatican City. Other speakers included Director Gen. Francis Blanchard of the International Labor Organization and United Nations Sec.-Gen Javier Perez de Cuellar of Peru.

The symposium, titled "From 'Rerum Novarum' to 'Laborem Exercens': Toward the Year 2000," was attended by theologians, church leaders, and others involved in social action from various parts of the world. Donahue was accompanied by Msgr. George G. Higgins of Catholic University.

DONAHUE SAID the same calls for social justice which flowed from Pope Leo XIII's "Rerum Novarum," the Church's first encyclical dealing with worker rights, ought to flow from "Laborem Exercens," written to commemorate the 90th anniversary of the former papal letter.

Together with Pope Pius XI's "Quadragesimo Anno," issued in 1931, and John XXIII's 1961 "Mater et Magistra," the first and the most recent encyclical form an interconnected social charter on the dignity and rights of workers.

"In the last 50 years, many of the encyclical concepts have found their way into the fabric of non-communist western societies," Donahue said. "Much, of course, needs to be done, not only in our own nation, where social inequities and social injustices continue to persist, but in an overwhelming sense in what is called the Third World."

TO ITS credit, the Catholic Church is not flinching from this task, Donahue observed. Just before leaving for Rome, he said, he read a statement by Bishop Joseph Sullivan of Baton Rouge, La., to the House Budget Committee on behalf of the Bishops' Conference and the National Conference of Catholic Charities in which the two institutions called on the federal government to make up the shortfall in meeting the basic needs of Americans caused by last year's budget cuts.

In his address, Donahue gave a U.S. perspective of the implications of "Laborem Exercens," for the future development of the struggle for social justice for workers. The papal letter's view that labor unions are "an indispensable element" of modern industrialized societies, serving as "advocates for the struggle for social justice and for the just rights of working people" gives new hope and encouragement to the American labor movement, he said.

ONLY THREE months after "Laborem Exercens" appeared, he noted, the American Bishops issued a lengthy pastoral letter spelling out the moral obligation of Catholic health care facilities to recognize the rights of their workers to organize and bargain collectively.

"The Church as employer has great influence with the workers it employs, and it has too often in the past used that influence to dissuade workers from choosing union representation," Donahue observed. "Our hope that managers of all Catholic, and indeed all religious, institutions would adopt the same policies and would observe neutrality when their employees consider union representation.

The encyclical's call for extending worker solidarity to new groups, including "certain categories or groups of the working intelligentsia," parallels the AFL-CIO's recent efforts to bring the benefits of trade union organization to scientists, engineers, teachers, and nurses as well as to agricultural, service, and industrial workers, he noted.

ON AN international level, Donahue said the federation's recent return to the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions is "an expression of our solidarity with workers throughout the world and a reflection of our belief that we can best work with, and cooperate with, other unions through such an international organization."

In other areas, Donahue strongly criticized the Reagan Administration for failing "to act against unemployment, which in all cases is an evil and which, when it reaches a certain level, can become a real social disaster," as the encyclical states.

DONAHUE NOTED that the small section of the encyclical that deals with workers' rights to strike and the papal injunction that essential community services must be ensured received a great deal of attention in the United States because of the issuance of the document during the U.S. air traffic controllers' strike.

"While the section was obviously not intended to have that effect," he said, "it was much cited as defending the actions of the President in discharging all of the striking employees.

"It is unfortunate that the encyclical, while forthrightly noting that essential community services must be ensured, does not call with equal vigor for substitute mechanisms to ensure fair treatment of workers who, on the theory that there is no other way to insure essential services, may be deprived of their right to strike."

Unemployment Rates by State, February 1982

Source: U.S. Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics, April 1982

NLRB Upholds Right of Unions To Safety Data

(Continued from Page 1)

Labor safety specialists have long expressed concern that many employers have sought to use the "trade secret" provisions of federal regulations to avoid adequate labeling of toxic substances and limit other essential information unions have sought for worker protections against workplace hazards.

AN OCCUPATIONAL Safety & Health Administration standard, which has been bottled up by an employers' court challenge, provides for union access to trade-secret information under certain conditions. Unions would be required to sign pledges to preserve confidentiality before the information is released by employers.

However, OSHA is now drafting a revised regulation that would give companies wider leeway in withholding information on certain hazardous materials on the claim of trade-secret confidentiality, according to an AFL-CIO analysis.

The Minnesota Mining case also involved a request by OCAW for release of data on the company's affirmative action plan covering women and minorities.

An NLRB administrative law judge ruled in favor of the union on the affirmative action issue, but the NLRB majority reversed the decision. Jenkins dissented.

Impact of Job Losses Felt in All Sections

(Continued from Page 1)

Montana and Washington in the West, and Indiana, Iowa and Ohio in the North Central region.

TWENTY-ONE states reported 10 percent or higher unemployment this February, the highest number in the 12 years the data has been compiled. A year ago, only nine states had double-digit unemployment, and only 16 had jobless rates higher than the previous year.

The unemployment rate dipped in four low-population states, Delaware, New Mexico, South Dakota and North Dakota. But the drop was only from 10.2 to 10.1 percent in Delaware and exceeded one point only in North Dakota. Wyoming and Oklahoma had the nation's lowest unemployment rates, at 4.8 percent, despite over-the-year increases.

The BLS analysis said the states with the biggest jump in unemployment were those hurt "by the prolonged slump in manufacturing and housing, as well as cutbacks in government employment."

UAW Ratifies GM Contract By Close Vote

Detroit—A new national agreement between the Auto Workers and General Motors Corp. won approval by a majority of those workers voting on the contract, UAW President Douglas A. Fraser and Vice President Owen Bieber announced.

Fraser and Bieber said 52 percent of those members voting favored the pact. The total vote count was 114,468 in favor of the agreement and 105,090 opposed. The 30-month contract became effective on Apr. 12.

THE AGREEMENT trades wage and benefit freezes for job security, profit sharing, and other protections, and replaces a contract scheduled to expire Sept. 14.

"The closeness of the vote makes it clear that this was a very difficult and painful step for our UAW-GM members, yet one taken in an attempt to address our problems in these very troubled economic times," Fraser said.

"However, we agree with the majority of those voting that this agreement will go far to protect the job and income security of our UAW-GM members, while keeping intact our basic wage and benefit structure. The new contract should stop the hemorrhaging of our jobs and bring many thousands of our laid-off members back to work.

"Hopefully, we'll go to the bargaining table in 1984 to negotiate with a healthy industry in an expanding economy," he said.

THE NEW contract covers some 470,000 active and laid-off workers. Terms generally follow those negotiated in February at Ford Motor Co.

Workers will receive no general wage increases, the next three cost-of-living adjustments will be deferred for 18 months each, and paid personal holidays will be eliminated. In exchange, the company agreed to reverse plans to close four plants, beef up benefits for laid-off workers, set up a profit-sharing plan, and fund a legal services plan.

APPROVAL OF the GM contract leaves only American Motors Corp. among the domestic auto manufacturers without a labor contract that reflects the current slump in car sales. AMC and the union resumed negotiations Apr. 14 on a new pact under which employees would defer future pay increases to help the company finance the development of new products. The money would be repaid later with interest.

Negotiations had broken off Mar. 31 after sputtering for weeks.

PICKET LINE at Group Health Association's Washington, D.C. facility is swelled by nearly 300 members of AFL-CIO unions supporting striking nurses and physical therapists. The health care workers, represented by the unaffiliated Registered Nurses & Physical Therapists Association, are seeking greater staffing to improve patient care and better wages. The 85 nurses and therapists are among the lowest paid of any HMO in the metropolitan area.

Subsidized Steel Imports Hit As Industry Job Losses Soar

Imports made cheap by government subsidies have forced unemployment in the U.S. specialty steel industry to "catastrophic proportions," Steelworkers President Lloyd McBride charged.

Joblessness in the industry is now at 23 percent, well over twice the national rate, McBride emphasized in a statement submitted at hearings on unfair trade practices held by U.S. Trade Representative William E. Brock.

McBRIDE, ALONG with employer representatives, asserted that many foreign specialty steel makers are competing unfairly because they receive heavy subsidies from their governments, enabling them to undercut U.S. producers' prices.

Richard Simmons, president of Allegheny Ludlum Steel Corp., testified that more than 60 percent of the import competition U.S. companies face is owned by foreign governments.

McBride linked "a large part" of the unemployment in the industry directly to "a sharp rise in subsidized imports." He stressed that "this tragic loss of jobs does not come about because our steelworkers are less efficient or less productive than foreign workers."

THE SPECIALTY steel industry in the United States, he said, "is the world's leader in technology and productivity, and our workers can match and surpass the productivity of any specialty steelworkers on the face of the earth."

"When our government permits other countries to ship their unemployment to the United States, traumatic experiences for steelworkers are inevitable," McBride observed.

Manufacturers and steelworkers have repeatedly been assured by the government "that we would not have to compete against illegal, subsidized imports, McBride said. He cited the Trade Agreements Act, which forbids such subsidies, as well as agreements between the United States and its trading partners "pledging not to indulge in such practices."

"WE ONLY ASK that our government enforce the law," McBride said.

Specialty steel manufacturers and the union filed a complaint with the U.S. trade representative last December accusing six European countries and Brazil of underpinning their steelmakers with subsidies or of providing "concealed subsidies" through outright government ownership.

Brock dropped Brazil and Belgium from the case in March, leaving Austria, France, Italy, Sweden and the United Kingdom on the list for investigation.

Brock's office said Brazil has agreed to limit specialty imports, but the manufacturers and the union are urging that he reinstate the case against Belgium based on additional evidence they have collected showing substantial government ownership of major Belgian specialty steel exporters.

Federal Agencies Blacklist Controllers

Federal air traffic controllers who were fired by President Reagan last August for striking are now being blacklisted from getting other jobs both in government and the private sector, according to documents compiled by their union.

The Professional Air Traffic Controllers Association charged that PATCO members are encountering stiff job discrimination in attempts to land government work despite an Executive Order that Reagan signed as "an act of compassion" declaring them eligible for hiring by federal agencies other than the Federal Aviation Administration.

MORE THAN 50,000 federal jobs have been filled since the order was issued last Dec. 9 but not one former air traffic controller has been hired, PATCO said.

The union accused the Dept. of Defense of blatant discrimination by circulating a directive barring former FAA air traffic controllers from being hired.

"It appears as if the directors of some federal agencies have ignored President Reagan's stated policy," PATCO President Gary W. Eads observed.

"These occurrences of blacklisting are real and they serve no purpose other than to harass former controllers and their families, all of whom have been treated more harshly than anyone can realize," he said.

Citing scores of instances of federal hiring discrimination, Eads said PATCO members have had "no trials, no hearings, just complete condemnation since last August."

PATCO also released correspondence dealing with the firing of a former controller in California by the U.S. Postal Service. He was told by the local post office that an order came from a USPS regional headquarters office calling for his discharge solely because of his role in the FAA strike.

ANOTHER PATCO member who had applied for a post office job was informed by letter from a supervisor that he would not be considered for the opening "do (sic) to the fact you were terminated for alledgedly (sic) striking against the U.S. Government when employed by the Federal Aviation Administration."

Other PATCO documents disclosed that a fleet operator for a moving van company in Michigan cited government pressure as the reason for not hiring former controllers.

The Dept. of Defense directive which PATCO cited covers provisions for licensed contractors who handle the staffing for certain military airport towers. These are jobs that DOD has been unable to fill because many military controllers were shifted to FAA facilities to handle commercial and private aircraft traffic after the 11,400 PATCO members were fired during the strike.

WHILE THE DOD provisions point out that neither the contractor nor the hired controllers will be considered federal government employees, the directive warns that "the contractor is prohibited from using any FAA controllers discharged for participating in the strike 3 Aug. '81 against the Government."

And according to a sworn statement, the Michigan fleet operator of moving vans is quoted by PATCO as saying that his firm, which held a number of government contracts, could not consider job applications from former controllers because of government pressure. A specific government agency was not named, the statement said.

Union Pacts With AT&T Protect Jobs

Two more unions reached agreement with the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. on employee protection plans to guarantee workers' jobs and benefits after the firm's divestiture of its local operating companies.

The two unions—the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the unaffiliated Telecommunications International Union—signed pacts paralleling the agreement reached by the Communications Workers on Mar. 26.

ALTHOUGH employee protection guarantees had been negotiated during the last round of collective bargaining in 1980, the unions sought new provisions to ensure that their members would be protected under the type of restructuring envisioned by the agreement for divestiture entered into by AT&T on Jan. 8.

The giant telecommunications firm, in settlement of a government antitrust suit, has agreed to divest itself of 22 Bell telephone companies, which it says it will restructure into seven regional corporations.

In addition to basic job benefit guarantees, the agreements cover transfer and relocation allowances, pension benefits, disability benefits, and insurance. Workers who must relocate will receive the greater of the transfer benefits offered by their former and new employers.

IN THE pacts with IBEW and TIU, the firm agreed that Bell System companies will continue to be bound by both the employee protection plan and any bargaining agreement in effect at the time of divestiture.

CWA represents about 533,000 Bell System workers, IBEW about 120,000, and TIU about 50,000.

Wholesale Price Dip Linked to Oil Glut, Slump

Wholesale prices, or what the government calls producer prices, fell by one-tenth of 1 percent on a seasonally adjusted basis the second straight month, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

The dip in the producer price index for finished goods resulted from falling energy prices caused by the world oil glut and lower demand levels in the economy due to the Reagan Recession.

IN THE January-March quarter of 1982, the prices of finished energy goods fell at an 18.5-percent annual rate, "a drop approached only by a 14.2-percent rate of decline in the first quarter of 1976," BLS said.

The decline in energy prices last month was a seasonally adjusted 2.3 percent, the largest drop since a 2.9 percent decline in January 1976. Finished energy goods prices declined 1.8 percent in February.

Also figuring in the March wholesale price decline was a two-tenths of 1 percent drop in finished food prices. Food prices rose five-tenths of 1 percent in February and 1.1 percent in January.

PRICES received by producers at all three steps of processing—finished, intermediate, and crude—fell in March, as they had in February. BLS said this was the first time since 1967 that all three fell together in consecutive months.

The 2.3-percent decline in finished energy prices was the third consecutive monthly decrease and the largest monthly decline in more than six years. Prices for both gasoline and home heating oil fell more sharply than in February. On the other hand, prices for natural gas rose 2.4 percent after increasing 2 percent in the previous month.

Among other finished goods, prices fell more than in February for fresh fruits and vegetables and for cooking oils.

The Bankers Call the Tune

THE BASIC AIMS of foreign policy emerge from and ought to be rooted in the basic concerns of human society:

First, the natural desire of those who share ethnic, language or other common bonds to govern themselves, as nations.

Secondly, the freedom and rights of plain people as against the state or any other stronghold of power—that is to say "liberty and justice for all."

If those two values were not at issue, it would matter little what flag flew over any land and armies would be a redundant burden, there being no good reason either to advance or resist.

NO POLICY which remains indifferent to the forces and aspirations that move the multitudes and bring them from time to time to a critical mass more potent than tanks or truncheons can faithfully reflect this nation's ideals and interest.

Our long and futile courtship with the Shah of Iran, while other forces worked the streets, bazaars and refinery crews, should have taught us that. Our current romance with Khalid, Hussein and Pinochet will teach us again.

As for our financial and commercial elites, they have impeached themselves as the guardians of our national ideals or interests—or of anything else save their corporate purses.

Their test is not one of liberty and justice, but whether states are "orderly and responsible" and "can pay their bills."

No cry from the Gulag, no shriek of pain from the dungeon . . . stays their service of tyrants or outweighs a ruble in their scale of values.

I do not suggest a campaign to reform the world of finance and business. I suggest rather that such a view should no longer drive our foreign policy or be confused with the national interest.

THE PRESIDENT has repeatedly promised that if the repression in Poland continued, if martial law were not ended, Lech Walesa and the internees released, and negotiations resumed with Solidarnosc under the terms of the Gdansk agreement, he would add strong economic measures to his modest early sanctions.

But the bankers are calling the tune, and the tune is "business as usual at the same old stand."

Today is the 122nd day of Lech Walesa's captivity. Thousands of Solidarity members languish in concentration camps, whose dismal conditions have been described in letters smuggled to the West. Workers are being beaten and sentenced to jail terms.

And, while the President does nothing—while in fact, he continues to avoid defaulting the Polish loans by bailing out the banks at the taxpayers' expense—the Polish tragedy begins to recede to the back pages of the daily newspapers and disappear from the television screen.

Nevertheless, Solidarnosc exists. Jaruzelski has found no quisling in its ranks. His problems mount and are further compounded by the economic failure of the entire Soviet empire, which is today sustained by western credits. The game is not over, and our potential leverage over the outcome is great, if we can but find the will.

—From address by AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland to the Foreign Policy Association, Apr. 13, 1982, New York City.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
LANE KIRKLAND, President
THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward	Murray H. Finley
Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts	Sol C. Chaikin
Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco	Charles H. Pillard
J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride	David J. Fitzmaurice
Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps	Wm. W. Winpisinger
William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell	John DeConcini
Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss	William Konyha
Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney	Douglas A. Fraser
Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield	Barbara Hutchinson
Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto	Gerald W. McEntee

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop John R. Oravec
David L. Perlman James M. Shevis

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, April 17, 1982 No. 15

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

International Labor Press AFL-CIO/CLC Association

C*A*S*H

Truly Affluent Fare Better

Surging Costs of Necessities Hit Poor Harder Than Rich

By Gus Tyler

IT REALLY DOESN'T pay to be poor. It costs too much. Consider, for instance, how much more expensive inflation is to people with a small income than it is to big earners.

Poor people must content themselves with the necessities of life: food, fuel, housing and health care. More affluent can indulge in non-necessities as well—like new clothing, a first-hand car, or a hair-do.

Now how has inflation hit these two different costs: necessities and non-necessities?

Between 1973 and 1979, the cost of necessities has doubled. In the same period, the cost of non-necessities has gone up only half as rapidly.

THIS MEANS that if you spent most or all of your income on necessities, you were hit very hard. But if you spent less of your income on necessities and more of it on non-necessities, you were not hit so hard.

For the one family out of five at the bottom of the nation, necessities eat up 90 percent of the budget. Within that unhappy community, there are the official "poor" who—after they pay for housing—must debate whether they should eat or get heat and must count on public institutions for health care.

For most families, necessities count for 60 to 70 percent of the budget—a hard wallop but a mild blow as contrasted with the devastating cost to the poorer families of the country.

CONTRAST THE costs to the average family or of the poor families with those of a family with an income of a million dollars a year. For such a wealthy family, necessities may not make up more than 5 or 10 percent of income. So the bite that inflation takes out of them is tiny.

Indeed, housing may not be a cost at all to the rich. While mortgage payment or maintenance may be high, the value of the property is very likely shooting up even more rapidly than the rate of inflation. The poor family, however, that pays rent or inhabits a hovel in a rundown area where property values may actually be going down, enjoys no such relief from housing costs.

For the truly affluent, inflation may indeed be a boon. They may not spend more than a quarter of their income on necessities and non-necessities combined. The other 75 percent of their income may be invested in real estate, income producing housing, agri-business, oil, utilities. For such a family, inflation is far less a "cost" than an income.

All this is by way of suggesting that, contrary to the cliche that "inflation hurts everybody," not everyone is indeed injured by inflation. For some, rising prices mean rising income and rising life style. Inflation is a way to redistribute income—bottoms up.

Copyright 1982, Gus Tyler Columns

Health Care Costs In the Real World

The rationale offered by the Administration for these (Medicare and Medicaid) cuts is that they will control rising health care costs. The idea seems to be that if we simply depress federal payments, health care inflation will go away.

In fact, these proposals will do virtually nothing about costs but set up a complex shell game of cost-shifting in which the elderly and the states are the biggest losers.

The Administration proposals reflect an unsettling lack of understanding of the way our health system works. Their proposals do nothing to address some of the most fundamental problems in Medicare and Medicaid such as the bias toward expensive institutional care, the failure of doctors to limit their fees to Medicare-approved levels, and the built-in inflation which comes with reimbursement that chases costs upward in a never-ending spiral.

The only way to accept the efficacy of these proposals is to close your eyes and make a wish that hospitals and physicians will forego revenue in the public interest and that states will simply absorb the difference in lost Medicaid payments. Unfortunately, neither of these hopes reflects the real world.

—From report by Rep. Claude Pepper (D-Fla.), chairman of the House Select Committee on Aging.

Donahue Gives U.S. Perspective

Encyclical on Workers' Rights Challenges Unions, Employers

The following is excerpted from a presentation by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue at the Apr. 3-5 symposium in Rome on Pope John Paul's recent encyclical, "Laborem Exercens."

THE U.S. LABOR MOVEMENT has long insisted on a written collective bargaining agreement with each employer as the fundamental protection of workers on the job and has always regarded our collective bargaining system as the cornerstone of labor-management relations and, hopefully, as the basis for labor-management cooperation.

We believe in a conflict theory of labor relations as the soundest basis for worker representation, worker participation and worker gains, because we see no real or broad evidence of acceptance by U.S. employers of the concepts of just remuneration, protection of worker interests or of the participation of workers in the ownership, management or profits of the enterprise.

WE ACCEPT fully the view that all capital is the product of past labor, that labor is not a commodity and that nothing has been created in the human realm except through labor. Consequently, we seek a redistribution of the wealth of our nation and an enlarged share in future wealth.

Workers properly want, and are entitled to, a larger share of the wealth they produce. It is our almost universal experience that the employer—individual, corporate or non-profit organization (both secular and religious)—doesn't want to give workers their fair share, and we are therefore in essential conflict over this issue. It is, hopefully, a conflict which always "aims at the good of social justice."

We do not believe that our adversarial role, appropriate to the conflict of collective bargaining, should be limited to the period of negotiation. During the lifetime of a contract so arrived at, it ought to be replaced by a period of cooperation aimed at maximizing the potential of the joint enterprise to advance the company's business and the workers' satisfaction.

FOR THAT REASON and on that premise, many U.S. unions are participating in "labor-management committees" and other cooperative programs, where those programs have their base in collective bargaining. Much attention is now being paid in our country to the question of worker satisfaction on the job and the quantity and quality of his or her work output.

These two subjects have been joined under the title of "quality of worklife" and a great deal of experimentation is now going on, seeking to find new and better ways to give to workers a sense of pride in their work, a sense of their involvement in the production process, and through this sense of involvement, to draw forth from workers a greater personal interest in the quantity and quality of the product of work. All of this effort is to the good and is an implementation of the encyclical's view that through work man achieves fulfillment as a human being and, indeed, in a sense becomes "more a human being."

Unfortunately, in many instances non-union employers are introducing such programs or giving the appearance of real participation to their employees in an effort to dissuade those employees from joining together in a union. For the most part, such programs will fail in the long run, since while they appear to manifest a real concern for worker fulfillment they are, in fact, based on a less admirable desire to maximize profits, and when a conflict between the two eventually arises, as inevitably it will, that conflict will be decided in favor of maximizing profits.

THE ENCYCLICAL has given both comfort and challenge to U.S. unions, to employers, to political and economic analysts and to the Church itself. The condemnation of rigid capitalism and of collectivism presses us toward some middle course as yet insufficiently defined.

The applications which flow from the recognition of the proper position of capital and labor are considerable. They are surely immediately present for the non-profit institution, and particularly the religious non-profit institution, as employer.

If unions are "indispensable," what Catholic institution, as employer, can fail to instruct its employees on the need for them to seek legitimate union affiliation and representation? What Catholic institution, as employer, can fail to initiate legitimate participation in management, based on a collective bargaining agreement, for its employees?

FOR CORPORATIONS or other employers who accept the concepts of the encyclical, the same consequences flow, but only time will tell how many of such employers and corporations will accept.

There is, undoubtedly, a major teaching role ahead for the Church and its institutions, particularly in industrialized nations—an uphill struggle to re-educate those who have too long accepted the view that capital has priority, that capital buys labor, and that without a profit motive there can be no industry.

Budget Key Issue

Coalition Knits Diverse Groups In Opposing Reagan's Policies

ORGANIZATIONAL GROWTH and diversity of interests that have come together in the Budget Coalition are strong evidence of mounting opposition to the Reagan Administration's assault on vital federal programs, Auto Workers Legislative Director Dick Warden said.

Noting that more than 200 national public interest, union, religious, social action and other organizations have responded to the AFL-CIO's call for the coalition, Warden observed that, "the Reagan budget is under attack by more than just liberals and the labor movement." He pointed out that "many of the President's own party" are now refusing to go along with policies that will hurt people and stall economic recovery.

Questioned by reporters on the network radio interview Labor News Conference, Warden said the stalemate that has developed between the Administration and Congress can only be broken by "a genuine compromise," but that kind of movement has not yet started.

"There are virtually no votes up on the Hill right now" for the budget the Administration submitted in January, Warden asserted. "The President and the people around him at the White House—or the Republicans—are going to have to come forward with some kind of alternative budget around which, perhaps, some talks can take place," he said.

Warden, a former assistant secretary of the Dept. of Health & Human Services, said that the coalition's aim simply is not to "return to everything that was done in the past. . . . I don't think the federal program has been enacted that can't be improved." But, "that doesn't mean that all federal programs should be tossed overboard."

TURNING TO the problems of the U.S. automobile industry, Warden urged passage of a strong "domestic content" measure that will require that a certain percentage of the parts and labor for cars sold in large volume in the United States be produced here.

Manufacturers "who have a $12 to $15 billion market in this country, as the Japanese have for their automobiles, should have an obligation to invest some capital and create some jobs where that market is," he declared. He pointed out that most of the industrial countries of the world have stiff domestic content requirements as part of their national laws.

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

THERE'S A SCENE in the movie "Kiss of Death" where Richard Widmark approaches an elderly woman who is sitting helpless in a wheelchair. Widmark settles a dispute with her son by giving the woman a push, sending her plunging down the stairs.

In a similar rage, the Reagan Administration in effect has been pushing many thousands of severely disabled Americans down the stairs.

One clue to the behavior of the Reagan ideologues appeared in the Heritage Foundation's "Mandate for Leadership," an 1,100-page blueprint for the incoming Reagan Administration.

THE SECTION on the federal disability insurance program claimed there was a 20-percent ineligibility rate in the program. It alleged the Social Security Administration (SSA) kept that secret because it didn't want the public to know it was paying out $3 billion a year to ineligible recipients.

There are 4.5 mllion people receiving Social Security Disability Insurance (SSDI) and Supplemental Security Income (SSI) because they are too disabled to work. SSDI recipients get an average of $413 a month; SSI recipients, $265.

In 1980, Congress asked the SSA to begin a three-year review of all non-permanently disabled recipients, starting in 1982.

THE REAGANITES, eager to get all those "cheaters" off the rolls, started the review nine months early. While some 160,000 disability cases a year were routinely reviewed, the Reagan Administration sent over 300,000 cases to state agencies for review last year and will send out 567,000 this year.

John Harris, who heads the American Federation of Government Employees' national council of SSA Field Operations Locals, said the review project is badly mismanaged. The Administration wants to save hundreds of millions of dollars and "that's the heart of it," he said. The rules are being applied "narrowly, stringently and meanly," he added. People are being treated "like criminals."

The Reagan blitzkrieg against the disabled has left a trail of horror stories. At a congressional hearing in March, Sen. Donald Riegle (D-Mich.) told of one man who killed himself with a shotgun outside a social security office in Lansing last November after finding out his benefits were terminated.

Harris, who works out of Chicago, knew of that case because the AFGE workers in Lansing called him in terror, he said. Harris told of another tragedy in San Diego, where a man whose benefits were ended threw himself in front of a car and was killed.

THE MENTAL HEALTH Law Project, a public interest group, documented a number of cases of arbitrary and harsh treatment of the disabled, including rehospitalization. It quoted staffers of the New York Psychiatric Institute as observing that it costs the government $100 to $500 a day to keep someone in a hospital, "surely an odd way" to save the $15 a day it costs to maintain a disabled person outside. A large number of cases have been documented by the Mental Health Project.

Wilbur J. Cohen, chairman of Save Our Security, the 100-group coalition formed to protect social security, said the coalition is fighting the Administration's "massive assault" against the disabled.

What is needed are congressional hearings around the nation to focus public attention on what the Administration is doing to the disabled. The American people in their compassion would put a stop to it.

MOUNTING OPPOSITION to the Reagan Administration's assault on vital federal programs is seen in the growth of the Budget Coalition and the diversity of interests that have come together in response to a call from the AFL-CIO, Auto Workers Legislative Director Dick Warden, center, said on Labor News Conference. He was questioned by Doug Harbrecht, left, of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers and Jerome Cahill of the New York Daily News. The AFL-CIO produced public affairs interview is aired weekly on the Mutual network.

STRONG ROLE in training and placing disadvantaged and jobless workers will be carried on by the AFL-CIO Human Resources Development Institute in spite of deep cuts in funding by the Reagan Administration, HRDI President Alan Kistler assures the institute's staff at a conference in Bal Harbour, Fla. At left is HRDI Executive Director Mike Arnold.

Job Training, Placement

Recession, Budget Cuts Add to HRDI Burden

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Job training and placement are "key elements" in the AFL-CIO's economic recovery program, Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue told the staff conference of the Human Resources Development Institute here.

HRDI, the AFL-CIO's employment and training arm, faces bigger responsibilities on a reduced budget in the wake of the Reagan Administration's cuts in funding for jobs programs, Donahue pointed out.

EVEN THOUGH those cuts have meant reductions in HRDI's own staff and programs, the labor movement "must look at the realities we have now . . . and do the best job we can with the resources we have," Donahue said.

"We are never going to have a reviving, growing economy" without "major funding" of employment and training programs as in the past, he told the HRDI staff.

The AFL-CIO places "a high priority on effective employment and training programs" in its alternative proposals for revitalizing the economy, Donahue said.

HE NOTED that the Administration had rejected appeals to restore budget funds to finance national employment and training programs like those of HRDI.

Without those funds, and in the face of more Administration-backed cuts in job-related programs, Donahue emphasized that "the labor movement is going to have to respond to the needs of unemployed people."

HRDI will "carry a heavy burden" to maintain essential programs for the unemployed, laid-off members, the disadvantaged "and all who are faced with barriers to decent jobs," he said.

Donahue called HRDI "the eyes and ears" of the federation, providing feedback from the field to help the development of AFL-CIO policies on employment and training.

THIS RESOURCE is especially important now, he said, "as we begin to participate in the debate on legislation that will replace the Comprehensive Employment & Training Act." The AFL-CIO is asking Congress to include continued funding of HRDI's programs, Donahue noted.

Organization & Field Services Director Alan Kistler, who is president of HRDI, urged the staff "to continue to demonstrate that the AFL-CIO program has practical application in the field."

He praised the staff as "a skilled corps of employment and training technicians" and pointed out that as the needs of the unemployed grow, "we will have to rely even more on this skilled labor group to mobilize all elements of the labor movement and all elements of the community" to solve the problem.

MICHAEL M. ARNOLD, executive director of HRDI, explained plans to restructure the institute's programs to maintain services through its 12 field offices.

He outlined HRDI's plans to target aid to unions in about 12 communities now facing plant closings and major lay-offs. HRDI will help the unions analyze and strengthen their training and re-employment services for workers in these communities, Arnold said.

In its report to the AFL-CIO Executive Council in November, HRDI pointed out that cuts in the federal budget for national employment and training programs resulted in a 37-percent slash in the institute's 1981 Labor Dept. contracts. This forced it to discontinue many of its programs, close nearly half its area offices and sharply reduce its staff, both in Washington and in the field.

DESPITE THESE cuts, HRDI Sec.-Treas. William T. Collins stressed at the meeting that HRDI recognizes "the importance of what we must do in the months ahead" to serve jobless workers. Collins is also AFL-CIO comptroller.

Training, counseling and placement services for laid-off workers were discussed by Melba Meacham of the Illinois AFL-CIO Manpower Assistance Program and Ruth Fedrau of the California Employment Development Dept.

IUE Agrees on New Pact For 22,000 GM Workers

Detroit—The Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers reached early agreement with General Motors on a new contract that holds the line on wages but greatly enhances members' job security.

The agreement, which must be ratified by IUE's 22,000 members at eight GM plants, is "a good, forward-looking contract that faces up to the hard times in our industry, and still protects our members in the present and in the future," IUE-GM Conference Board Chairman Robert Livingston said.

THE IUE-GM negotiating committee, comprising top officers of each of the six locals involved in the bargaining, approved the 30-month settlement unanimously. The agreement closely follows the new national agreement between GM and the Auto Workers.

The new national contract would replace the agreement between IUE and the big automaker that was due to expire this September. Bargaining began early at GM's request because of the firm's acute sales slump.

"The corporation has finally admitted that they need our cooperation as much as we need their jobs," said IUE President David J. Fitzmaurice, who participated in the three weeks of bargaining.

THE AGREEMENT retains the paid holidays in the former contract and maintains the old cost-of-living clause. COL payments, however, would be deferred for three quarters, with full restoration after that period.

The corporation and the union also agreed jointly to develop one of the company's eight IUE plants for a pilot project of guaranteed employment. The firm agreed that none of the eight plants would be closed due to "outsourcing," or farming out of work, during the first 24 months of the contract.

Other provisions call for:

- Guaranteed income for workers with 10 or more years' seniority in plants which are closed permanently and to workers with 15 or more years' seniority in all other cases of layoff. Income would be guaranteed to eligible workers until age 62 or until they retire, whichever is earlier.

- Maintenance of current pension benefit levels, including a scheduled Aug. 1 increase, plus an improved monthly temporary benefit, with early retirement provisions for long-service workers caught in plant closings.

- Maintenance of all health, surgical, medical, drug, dental, vision, hearing, and other benefit programs, plus extension of health-care coverage from 12 to 24 months for workers with at least 10 years' seniority who are laid off.

THE PACT also provides for a profit-sharing plan that would become effective in any year that GM earnings top $1 billion, relocation allowances for eligible laid-off workers, strengthened supplementary unemployment benefits, a "quality-of-worklife" program in every plant, and increased employee discounts on new GM cars and trucks.

GM also assured the union that the economic adjustments made by hourly-paid workers would be applied to earnings of salaried personnel.

Union Approves Stock Swap Plan At Wheeling Steel

Pittsburgh — The Steelworkers overwhelmingly approved a 19-month agreement with the Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel Corp., that will give employees stock in the company in exchange for wage and benefit concessions.

The pact, which takes the form of an amendment to the firm's current agreement, received 7,875 votes in favor of the plan and 1,210 against.

ABOUT 7,500 active and 3,000 laid-off workers are covered by the agreement. The nation's eighth-ranked steelmaker, Wheeling-Pittsburgh on several previous occasions had asked its employees for concessions from the industrywide pattern steel contract.

Terms of the pact call for workers to forgo scheduled Aug. 1 wage increases averaging 23 cents an hour per employee, give up one week of paid vacation this year and another in 1983, and 13 paid holidays. In addition, Sunday overtime pay rates would be cut to 1.25 times straight-time pay from 1.5 times.

In exchange, Wheeling-Pittsburgh will invest preferred company stock in a trust fund equal to the value of the employees' surrendered wages and other benefits, estimated to average about $3,500 per union worker. The stock will be distributed after Jan. 1, 1985.

THE AGREEMENT also calls for the company to spend at least $1 million to set up labor-management "participation" teams in all its facilities.

The company, which is heavily dependent on the slumping auto and appliance industries, had previously obtained other concessions from its employees, including deferrals of a contract-settlement bonus and a quarterly cost-of-living allowance. The payments have since been made.

AFGE Elects Buckle Executive Vice President

The executive council of the American Federation of Government Employees has named Wayne F. Buckle executive vice president to fill the term of the late Joseph Gleason.

Buckle was the AFGE's chief accountant from 1963 until he retired in 1980 and has been president of the union's members-at-large local.

Poor Found Shortchanged On Subsidy for Heating Bills

The Low-Income Energy Assistance Program, begun in 1980 to help the poor with rising home fuel bills that followed oil decontrol, has fallen far short of its promises, according to a study by the Citizen/Labor Energy Coalition.

The report, titled "The Broken Promise," states that between October 1980 and October 1982, low-income families received nearly $3 billion less, or slightly more than half, the assistance intended under the 1980 Windfall Profits Tax Act.

PHASED OIL decontrol was sold as a way to raise revenue for energy assistance and other worthy projects through a windfall profits tax, the study points out.

"The failure of the windfall profits tax on crude oil to protect the poor should be powerful, ongoing evidence that windfall profits taxes on deregulated natural gas, oil import fees, and other energy-taxing schemes to redistribute money to the poor stand little chance of accomplishing their purpose," the report says.

Under the windfall profits tax formula, 25 percent of the expected revenues were to be allocated to low-income fuel assistance. But fuel assistance funding amounted to less than 15 percent of the revenues collected by the windfall tax in 1981 and 1982, the report states.

IT NOTES that Congress left itself a loophole around the 25 percent funding level by requiring annual congressional appropriations for the fuel assistance program. The Reagan Administration has been attempting to reduce the program's funding even more. The current annual level is $1.85 billion.

The gap between "promise and performance has been devastating for the poor," who must spend more than 20 percent of their incomes on household energy needs, the report says.

"For many poor people," it points out, "the choice is, literally, between heating and eating."

Of the more than seven million households receiving fuel assistance under the program, about 30 percent consist of elderly persons, according to the coalition's study.

THE STATES whose low-income residents are most dependent on the program are New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Michigan and Ohio.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.), commenting on the report, criticized proposals for natural gas decontrol and an oil import fee. He said "an import fee is nothing less than an attempt to balance the budget at the expense of those on fixed and limited incomes."

Kennedy added, "We should not be lulled into accepting policies which drive up the cost of home heating and other energy by the empty promises of assistance to those most in need."

William R. Hutton, secretary-treasurer of the Energy Coalition and director of the National Council of Senior Citizens, said, "Oil prices have increased 60-90 percent since decontrol began in 1979, but fuel assistance has not come close to matching the heavier burden these increases have placed on the poor and on senior citizens."

Increases Under Major Agreements (Average Annual Rate of Increase Negotiated)

*Agreements covering 1,000 or more workers.
Agreements covering 5,000 or more workers.
SOURCE: Bureau of Labor Statistics, Dept. of Labor.

Bargaining Gains Expected Despite Hard Times

Bargaining between unions and employers in the remainder of 1982 will not only be heavy, but it will also be hard, an article in the current American Federationist points out.

This is because a few private-sector employers in certain industries, emboldened by government union-busting tactics and harried—or professing to be harried—by recession, have become more strident in demanding employee "givebacks."

"NEGOTIATIONS in 1982 will be shadowed by the deepening Reagan recession that started in July 1981," observes Stephen Dohrmann, author of the article in the AFL-CIO's monthly publication.

Dohrmann, an economist in the federation's Dept. of Economic Research and the department's 1981-82 research assistant, says that while union members and their bargaining representatives this year may find themselves "swimming upstream in high waters," he expects that 1982 settlements generally will improve on the bargaining gains recorded last year and that unions will continue to pursue new avenues of bargaining on behalf of their members.

Roughly 3.6 million workers are covered by major collective bargaining agreements—defined as those involving 1,000 or more workers—that either expire or reopen in 1982. The number is over a million more than were covered by major settlements negotiated last year.

MOST CONTRACTS in key industries are scheduled to expire in the first six months of 1982. Some major agreements already have been reached, notably in petroleum refining, trucking, and meatpacking. Major agreements in the tiremaking industry expire in April and in the electrical-equipment industry in June and July. In the auto industry, key contracts were slated to expire in September, but early agreements were reached in March with Ford and General Motors.

Although a substantial majority of settlements last year won broad improvements in wages, benefits, and working conditions, Dohrmann observes that the state of the economy and the financial ills of certain firms and industries required that some unions make compromises and concessions to protect their members from crushing job losses. This necessity arose particularly in the auto, airline, meatpacking, and rubber industries.

"UNIONS PROVED, however, that compromise is a two-way street, and they were generally successful at gaining offsetting concessions and enhanced job-security provisions in return," the author notes.

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland has pointed out that given the result of some collective bargaining agreements, "one can just imagine what would happen to working people who are subject to the unilateral will and dictate of their employer" without a union to represent them.

Unions did well by their members in 1981, Dohrmann observes. The average negotiated wage increase in the first year of major bargaining agreements was 10.1 percent, compared with 9.5 percent in 1980 and 7.4 percent in 1979. The figures do not include cost-of-living adjustments.

Approximately 6.3 million workers in 1981 received wage boosts averaging 5.3 percent, excluding COL increases, due under previously negotiated contracts. This year, about 4.3 million workers in private industry are scheduled to receive deferred increases averaging 6.3 percent—the highest average since the 7.7 percent recorded in 1971.

About 27 percent of the workers covered by 1981 settlements were protected by COL clauses. Of all workers covered by major contracts, 56 percent have cost-of-living protection. Although COL clauses were high on employer "hit lists" for givebacks in 1981, they were for the most part successfully defended and even improved, Dohrmann notes. About 54,000 workers were covered by 11 settlements in which COL clauses were either introduced for the first time or re-established.

As the Reagan Administration rattled its budget-cutting sword in the direction of the social security system, and inflation was eating away at retirees' fixed incomes, union-negotiated pension plans again became a critical bargaining issue in 1981.

MANY UNIONS secured improved pension formulas and retirement benefits for current, as well as future, retirees—even though the courts have ruled that issues affecting those who have already retired are not mandatory subjects for bargaining.

Other leading trends that developed in collective bargaining last year dealt with medical coverage, worker safety programs, protections against plant closings and anti-union employers, and quality-of-worklife for employees.

Plant-closing protection took the form of negotiated limitations on management prerogatives and strengthened financial assistance for displaced workers. At Armour & Co. for example, the Food & Commercial Workers won management's agreement not to close any plants, departments or divisions during the period up to July 1, 1983.

The Steelworkers' agreements' with four major container companies doubled the supplemental relocation allowances for employees dislocated by plant shutdowns and increased the employer contribution to the supplemental unemployment fund.

THE OPERATING Engineers raised the employer contribution to their SUB fund from 40 to 60 cents an hour per worker in a contract with the Associated General Contractors of New Jersey and other contractors.

In a settlement with the Airline Pilots, United Airlines agreed not to open any non-union subsidiaries—a popular union-busting strategy—and to retain 250 pilots, who would be affected by work-rule changes, on new or expanded routes.

Aware of the need to make their voices heard in the political arena, a growing number of unions are negotiating payroll check-offs for voluntary member contributions to union political funds. The Service Employees, Operating Engineers, Bricklayers, and State, County & Municipal Employees scored impressive gains in this area.

THE DEVELOPING issues of "comparable worth"—paying equal wages to workers in jobs that require similar levels of skill and effort, even if the jobs themselves are different—was tackled by AFSCME Local 101, representing about 2,000 city workers in San Jose, Calif. A successful strike by the union won $1.45 million in pay raises for several hundred women employees who had been paid less than men employed in comparable jobs.

The Communications Workers and the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. adopted a statement of principles on joint efforts to improve the quality of worklife for employees of the Bell System. Legal funds were established by the Paperworkers in an agreement with the Delaware Set-Up Box Manufacturers Association in Philadelphia, and the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers achieved company-wide bargaining on life insurance, pensions, and dental benefits with Union Carbide.

HARD-HAT RALLY organized by the Massachusetts AFL-CIO and the Boston Building Trades Council drew nearly 3,000 demonstrators to protest an appearance by Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah) at a luncheon meeting of the non-union Associated Building Contractors in Boston. Hatch, a key figure in blocking passage of the labor law reform bill, used his speech to renew his attack on unions. At the microphone is State AFL-CIO President Arthur R. Osborn with Sec.-Treas. George E. Carpenter, Jr.

Kirkland Names Ernest Lee Director of Meany Archives

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland has announced the appointment of Ernest S. Lee as executive director of the George Meany Archives, a permanent library and reference center established by the federation in memory of the AFL-CIO's first president.

Lee, who has been director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of International Affairs since July 1, 1974, will be in charge of collecting and preparing for exhibit and reference use the vast store of memorabilia and archival material relating to Meany's long career and other records of the AFL-CIO going back to its founding in 1881.

LEE WILL develop programs and exhibits based on this material to advance a broader understanding of labor's role in the nation and the world.

The Meany materials, now largely housed at AFL-CIO headquarters, will be transferred to a new library and reference facility to be built at the George Meany Center for Labor Studies in Silver Spring, Md.

Meany was elected president of the AFL on the death of William Green in 1952. He was elected president of the AFL-CIO at its founding convention in 1955 and was re-elected at each subsequent convention until he retired in 1979. He died on Jan. 10, 1980.

LEE JOINED the AFL-CIO staff in 1962 as executive assistant to the international affairs director. He served as assistant director of the department from 1964 until his appointment as director in 1974.

Born in the Dominican Republic on Apr. 12, 1923, Lee served 11 years on active duty with the U.S. Marine Corps. He graduated from the Georgetown University School of Foreign Service in 1955. Before joining the AFL-CIO staff, he was director of international affairs for the Retail Clerks (now the Food & Commercial Workers) and served as inter-American representative of the International Federation of Commercial, Clerical & Technical Employees (FIET).

'Business as Usual'

Kirkland Assails Retreat On Economic Sanctions

(Continued from Page 1)

structive relations." And "the world would become a kinder place to live in."

But if fear of losing trade or profits deters the United States from exerting its influence, it is the forces of repression that have won a victory, Kirkland protested.

LECH WALESA remains a captive, Kirkland reminded his listeners. "Solidarity members languish in concentration camps," and workers are beaten and jailed.

Throughout the world, not just in Poland, the United States must align itself with the cause of freedom, Kirkland asserted.

"Our programs should openly and proudly support and foster free institutions of working people, such as the black trade unions in South Africa, and the democratic movements of rural and urban workers in Central and Latin America and Asia.

"Our policies and pressures, economic and diplomatic, should aim to get tyrants —tinhorn or totalitarian—off the backs of independent associations of working people," he said.

"NO GOVERNMENT which kills, imprisons or exiles free trade unionists should receive our aid or patronage."

Kirkland expressed dismay that the International Labor Organization's Convention No. 87, which affirms the right of freedom of association, has never been ratified by the United States because of "the stubborn and blind opposition of American business as represented by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce."

Failure to ratify is a "long-standing piece of stupidity" that should be rectified, Kirkland urged. He reminded the gathering that Solidarity's first demand, incorporated in the Gdansk Agreement of 1980, was that the Polish government fulfill the commitment it undertook when it ratified the convention.

Perhaps business can't be faulted for looking to its profits in the absence of a clear national commitment to higher values, Kirkland suggested. But "I would not want a world where business is the judge, agent and enforcer of our values and interests."

HE CITED "oil companies, glutted with tax privileges from the American Treasury" that, through runaway registry of shipping, "pledge allegiance to the flag of Liberia and the venality for which it stands, with license and profit for some."

For too many corporations, Kirkland said, "no shriek of pain from the dungeon, not even a businessman's arrest by secret police . . . stays their service of tyrants or outweighs a ruble in their scale of values."

A foreign policy shaped by such standards flouts American ideals, Kirkland protested.

SPECIAL INVITATION to the 1982 Union-Industries Show is extended to Federation President Lane Kirkland by John E. Mara, secretary-treasurer of the Union Label & Service Trades Dept., which produces the free public exhibition. The show, with more than 400 exhibits by unions and employers, runs May 14-19 at the Pittsburgh Convention Center.

'Radio Solidarity' Beams Call for Polish Resistance

(Continued from Page 1)

"But absent from the table are miners who were killed. Prisons still hold more than 4,000 people. It is not true that internment is better than ordinary jail. We are getting more and more reports of beatings in internment camps. Let us recall these events when we are told that life is returning to normal.

"THERE CANNOT be normalization in the country when people are being beaten or the innocent jailed, when human rights are being trampled on. To accept this as normal is to be a renegade to your conscience."

Nothing that Apr. 13 marked the start of the fifth month of martial law under the Jaruzelski regime, an announcer asked listeners to turn off their lights on that date between 9 and 9:15 p.m. as a show of solidarity and in remembrance of the social renewal that had begun in Poland with the birth of free trade unions in 1980.

MEANWHILE, a prominent leader of the Solidarity trade union federation who has avoided capture warned that Poland's communist rulers may be planning to ban the labor organization altogether.

Zbigniew Bujak, who headed Solidarity's Warsaw branch, pointed to the recent dissolution of the Polish Journalists' Association—a supporter of Solidarity —and attacks on Solidarity in the controlled Polish press as signs of a government campaign to outlaw the independent union and possibly restore a party-controlled union in its place.

John Darnton of the New York Times reported in an Apr. 10 dispatch from Warsaw that Bujak's comments were contained in a statement given to Western journalists. Bujak called on Solidarity members to "fight without any compromise for our union," and he appealed to unions abroad to give their support "with all available means," Darnton reported.

New Cuts in Reagan Budget Scored as Attack on Elderly

President Reagan's budget proposals would force a new round of cutbacks in Medicare and Medicaid benefits, with "tragic consequences for the nation's elderly," the chairman of the House Select Committee on Aging charged.

A report by Committee Chairman Claude Pepper (D-Fla.) said the proposed reductions would be as "devastating" to older Americans as the social security benefit slashes the Administration sought to impose last year.

THE ADMINISTRATION backed off from its social security plan "because of the outraged reaction of the American public," he noted. Pepper said he intended his report to help members of Congress judge the "very substantial impact" of the Administration budget request.

Under the President's budget, Medicare would be cut $2.5 billion below the level needed to maintain current benefits. And Medicaid, which pays the health care costs of the poor, would be cut $2 billion in terms of current services and $1 billion in actual outlays.

Funding of the two programs for the current fiscal year has already been cut a total of $2.4 billion, compelling the elderly to pay more in out-of-pocket medical expenses. Although Medicaid is not a program for the elderly, it supplements Medicare coverage for some 3.5 million elderly poor.

PEPPER NOTED that even without the new cuts sought by the President, Medicare now pays only about 44 percent of the health costs of older Americans.

After allowance for inflation, he said, "the elderly now spend more out-of-pocket and as a proportion of income than they did before Medicare and Medicaid began."

Last year's cutbacks resulted in higher patient-paid deductibles for both hospital stays and doctor services, Pepper noted. And the new budget proposals would require further increases in "co-payments."

CUTS IN welfare-related programs will deprive many low-income elderly of Medicaid entitlement, the report showed. And "state cutbacks resulting from reduced federal payments will jeopardize Medicaid coverage for 905,000 elderly persons in nursing homes, 223,000 who receive dental services and 2.1 million who need life-sustaining prescription drugs and who have nowhere else to turn for this care," the report said.

Pepper challenged the Administration's contention that the cuts it recommends will help control rising health care costs.

"The idea seems to be that if we simply depress federal payments, health care inflation will go away. In fact," Pepper stressed, "these proposals will do virtually nothing about costs but set up a complex game of cost-shifting in which the elderly and the states are the biggest losers."

With slashes in a broad range of federal grants squeezing state resources, it is unrealistic to rely on states increasing Medicaid spending to make up for cuts in the federal share of the program, Pepper suggested.

AS FOR the Administration's assumption that higher deductibles will persuade elderly and disabled Americans to "use more discretion in their use of health services," Pepper noted that the choice is seldom with the patient.

"Patients do not admit themselves to hospitals; physicians do," he said. "Patients do not order lab tests or X-Rays; physicians do."

He charged that "these new proposed cuts in health care programs represent the most significant assault on the equality of life and economic well-being of the elderly since the Administration's disastrous plan to slash social security benefits."

'Stay Away from My Door!'

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

4/17/82

Kirkland Asks Immigration Reforms

Compassion Coupled to Job Concerns

By Susan Dunlop

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland called for speedy passage of an immigration bill that combines compassion for immigrants with safeguards for the jobs and labor standards of American workers.

At joint hearings of the House and Senate immigration subcommittees, Kirkland said the proposed Immigration Reform & Control Act is in line with the goals of the AFL-CIO. "With some modifications" it would set an "appropriate" immigration policy for the nation, he said.

THE BILL is sponsored by Sen. Alan Simpson (R-Wyo.) and Rep. Romano Mazzoli (D-Ky.) and incorporates many of the recommendations of the Select Commission on Immigration and Refugee Policy.

Among its major provisions, the legislation would modify current law to impose penalties on employers who hire illegal aliens backed by a plan to issue a secure employment eligibility card for all workers.

The status of many illegal resident aliens would be legalized and current legal immigration ceilings would be revised. The measure would streamline the procedure for judging immigration cases and clarify provisions for granting asylum to refugees.

"GUEST WORKER" programs would be barred and existing programs permitting certain workers to enter the country temporarily would be revised.

The AFL-CIO has historically supported an immigration policy "consistent with the nation's tradition for compassion and humane treatment," Kirkland told the committees. He stressed that such policy should be "firm, clear, consistent and fair," promote reunification of families and offer "a haven for refugees from persecution" while maintaining concern for U.S. workers and their jobs.

Stopping the flow of illegal immigrants is a "necessary prerequisite" to reform of immigration policies, Kirkland emphasized. That flow, he said, should be replaced by "a fair, enforceable program of legal immigration."

High unemployment reduces the country's capacity to "pursue our immigration goals" and increases the need to stem illegal immigration, Kirkland pointed out.

"THE QUICKEST and best way to stop illegal immigration is to stop giving jobs to illegal immigrants. Therefore, federal law must provide strong, effective penalties for employers who hire illegal aliens," Kirkland said.

"The lure of jobs" brings most illegal workers into the country, he observed.

(Continued on Page 3)

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII — Saturday, April 24, 1982 — No. 16

Budget for City Family Climbs 9.8% Over Year

U.S. IMMIGRATION POLICY should be compassionate and humane in dealing with illegal immigrants while safeguarding the jobs and labor standards of American workers, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland testified at congressional hearings. He was accompanied by Legislative Director Ray Denison, right, and Research Director Rudy Oswald.

$25,407 Cost Of Moderate Living Level

By James M. Shevis

A typical American family needed $25,407 last year just to maintain a middle-income standard of living, a 9.8 percent increase over 12 months earlier, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

At a lower, more austere level, the same family would have required $15,323 a year while a family on a higher budget affording a few simple luxuries would have needed $38,060, up 9.1 and 10.6 percent, respectively.

THE FIGURES are derived from BLS's annual compilation of hypothetical expenses of an urban family of four at three different living standards as of last autumn. The amounts are nationwide averages, and represent before-tax income.

BLS said that the increases in 1981 were approximately 3 percentage points less than those recorded from 1979 to 1980. The biggest categorical increases last year were in social security and income taxes.

The budgets are prepared by updating changes in prices of various goods and services for a precisely defined family at each of three budget levels. BLS applies the changes as reported in the consumer price index for urban wage earners and clerical workers (CPI-W).

THE BUDGETS have been updated since 1969 but will no longer be published. BLS is eliminating the series as part of the Reagan budget reduction.

"The expenditure data on which the budgets are based are now 20 years old,"

(Continued on Page 7)

Repair Safety Net

Unions Press Congress To Extend Jobless Aid

The AFL-CIO and its affiliates urged an additional 13 weeks of unemployment benefits for recession victims and pressed Congress to reject new slashes in safety-net programs.

A House Ways & Means subcommittee is considering President Reagan's budget proposals for further cuts in various entitlement programs, including family assistance and social services for the needy as well as unemployment insurance. But labor witnesses insisted that the real need is to repair some of the damage Congress inflicted last year at the Administration's urging.

AFL-CIO SOCIAL Security Director Bert Seidman warned that some 3 million unemployed workers will have their benefits curtailed in the coming fiscal year if the "ill-considered" actions taken by Congress aren't rectified.

He noted that Congress had abolished the national trigger for extended benefits and raised the state trigger points just as the unemployment rate was starting its climb to the highest level since the Great Depression.

During this same period, Seidman reminded the panel, 750,000 needy families with dependent children have had their AFDC benefits reduced or terminated. The further cuts proposed by the Reagan Administration would hit an additional 921,000 AFDC families, he protested.

SEIDMAN AND other labor witnesses endorsed a bill by Subcommittee Chairman Harold E. Ford (D-Tenn.) that would allow up to 13 weeks of supplemental benefits for workers still unemployed after having used up their maximum 26 weeks of state payments and 13 weeks of extended unemployment benefits.

Even that would be less than the 65-week maximum benefit pernod allowed in the less severe 1975 recession, Seidman noted.

(Continued on Page 3)

Steep First Quarter Decline Worsens Reagan Recession

A steep, 3.9-percent annual rate of decline in "real" gross national product during the first three months of the year, along with other adverse economic developments, is further confirmation of the sick and deteriorating state of the nation's economy, the AFL-CIO declared.

The drop in first-quarter real GNP—the market value of all the nation sells and produces adjusted to remove the effects of inflation—was nearly as great as the 4.5 percent rate of decline in the final three months of 1981, and underscored the depth and breadth of the Reagan Recession that most economists believe started last July.

THE LATEST bad economic news came from the Commerce Dept., which attributed much of the slide in GNP to troubles in the auto industry.

Earlier, the Federal Reserve Board reported that the nation's industrial output fell eight-tenths of 1 percent in March, indicating that the recession is not over yet. It was the seventh decline in the output of the nation's factories, utilities, and mines in the past eight months.

"As a result of the Reagan Administration's economic programs, homes were not built that could have been built, cars were not assembled, and steel not produced," AFL-CIO Research Director Rudy Oswald observed.

"Public tax, budget, and job policies must be directed to put people back to work producing the goods and services that America is capable of producing and that America needs. The AFL-CIO alternative tax and budget proposal would get

(Continued on Page 2)

Goodrich Pact Shapes Pattern In Tire Industry

Columbus, Ohio—The Rubber Workers reached tentative agreement on a new three-year contract with the B. F. Goodrich Co., that will serve as the pattern for talks with three other major tire makers.

The economic package, designed to keep pace with inflation, was unanimously approved by the URW's 15-member advisory committee at an Apr. 19 meeting here. In a joint announcement, URW President Milan Stone and Goodrich Vice President Jack W. Johnson stressed that the settlement was reached "without concessions" from the union.

The agreement preserves the existing cost-of-living formula of one cent an hour

(Continued on Page 2)

Economic Index Sends 'Dead-in-the-Water' Signal

(Continued from Page 1)

American production moving again."

Because of the recession impact and the loss of millions of jobs, inflation as measured by what the Commerce Dept. calls the "GNP implicit price deflator" fell to an annual rate of 3.6 percent in the January-March quarter, down from 9.5 percent in the previous three months. The first-quarter inflation figure was the lowest for the deflator since a similar increase in the first quarter of 1976. Sharply lower gasoline prices played a big part in the decline.

SHORTLY before the Fed released its industrial production report, Treasury Sec. Donald T. Regan told a national television audience that the economy was "dead in the water. . . . High interest rates have brought this economy to its knees."

Regan, who just over two months before had declared the economy would come "roaring back in late spring," acknowledged that the recovery would not start until summer, and not even then if interest rates do not decline.

TWO OTHER business barometers reflected the deterioration in the nation's economy. Retail sales declined five-tenths of 1 percent in March, and Commerce Dept. officials predicted that such trade probably will remain sluggish through June. And the Federal Reserve Board reported that the nation's factories operated at a seasonally adjusted 71.4 percent of capacity in March, down from 72 percent in February.

In its report on real GNP, the government indicated that most of the first-quarter drop was due to the fact that businesses were no longer pushing to produce goods that had only been ending up in inventory stockpiles. Inventories decreased sharply in the first three months of 1982 after continuing to rise earlier in the recession.

Inflation-adjusted final sales actually increased 1.9 percent in the first quarter after declining 1.8 percent in the fourth quarter of 1981. Economists say that businesses' recent success in whittling down stocks of unsold goods may have set the stage for production increases and a general recovery from the recession. But few are predicting much economic growth before summer.

REAL GNP declined at an annual rate of 1.6 percent in the second quarter of last year, rose at a rate of 1.4 percent in the third, and resumed its slide in the final quarter.

The only bright spots in the industrial production report concerned auto and defense industries. Autos were assembled at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 4.7 million units in March, up from 4.1 million units in February and a 20-year low of 3.6 million units in January.

The Administration's higher priority to military spending resulted in a seasonally adjusted seven-tenths of 1 percent rise in defense and space production in March following an adjusted 2.4 percent rise in February.

Business equipment output fell an adjusted 1.2 percent in March while consumer goods production declined three-tenths of 1 percent, and the output of materials dropped 1.1 percent.

B.F. Goodrich Contract Sets URW Pattern

(Continued from Page 1)

increase for every .26 point rise in the national consumer price index, but does not provide general wage increases. "Because of the high yield of the COLA, the union and the company agreed to forgo any additional wage increase," Stone and Johnson said in their statement.

Based on an anticipated 7 percent increase annually in the CPI, the COLA formula would yield about $2.44 an hour in wage increases over the next three years. The agreement also includes improvements in pension contributions, disability pay, and life insurance. In addition, the pact provides for a .02 cent per employee company contribution to a fund for medical surveillance activities aimed at the early detection of job-related illness.

A PROVISION dealing with plant closures increases the duration of life insurance coverage for laid-off workers from 24 to 30 months, and extends the period of group health insurance rates for displaced employees from 24 to 30 months. The parties also agreed to procedures designed to improve communications when it comes to plant closings.

The agreement covering some 8,500 URW workers employed by Goodrich now goes back to the bargaining table for work on non-economic issues and then to the rank and file for ratification.

Stone expressed confidence that the nation's three other big tire makers would agree to similar terms. He predicted ratification of master agreements at all four companies in two or three weeks.

BESIDES Goodrich, the Big Four tire makers include Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., and Uniroyal Inc. Uniroyal has agreed to go along with the industrywide agreement, minus certain cuts in wages and benefits the union made because of the company's financial difficulties.

Contracts covering about 42,000 tire workers with the four companies were to expire Apr. 21.

Food Workers Report Net Growth of 63,767

Miami—The Food & Commercial Workers announced a net gain of 63,767 new members during 1981 in the face of the deepening recession.

UFCW President William H. Wynn announced the gains at the winter meeting of the union's executive board here.

Wynn said it took "an absolutely monumental organizing effort" to achieve the gains as store and plant closings and other job losses cost 35,000 members their jobs.

The UFCW gained 20,500 with the merger of the United Retail Workers in Chicago. It gained 12,000 members in 257 labor board elections and another 17,500 through card checks.

'R-T-W' Proves Also-Ran In Kentucky Legislature

Frankfort, Ky.—It wasn't even a horse race in the Kentucky legislature where supporters of so-called right-to-work bills finished dead last in attempts to hobble the state with a compulsory open shop law.

Measures introduced in both the House and Senate could not round up enough support to be reported out of committees, and a back-door attempt to add a "right-to-work" amendment to a bill prohibiting age discrimination in employment also failed for lack of support. The legislature adjourned Apr. 15.

Kentucky AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Leonard S. Smith credited the state's union members with the victory.

"We asked our members to let their representatives know how they felt about so-called right-to-work and they sent over 30,000 messages within three weeks," Smith said.

"We will certainly try to bury this issue for good by supporting our friends in the legislature on election day, and by keeping our members informed in every way possible," he stressed.

Tuition Tax Credits Opposed In Wake of Public School Cuts

President Reagan's proposal to give an income tax credit to parents sending children to private schools would weaken public education and widen the budget deficit, the AFL-CIO and the Teachers charged.

The tuition tax loophole proposed by Reagan would cost the government about $100 million in the next fiscal year and mount to an estimated $4.6 billion in lost revenues over five years.

AN AFL-CIO statement contrasted the President's tax credit plan with the Administration's continuing attempt "to squeeze every penny out of essential educational programs, including school lunches for needy children."

In a recording for radio news programs, AFL-CIO Assistant Research Director Arnold Cantor said the Reagan proposal would add new inequities to the tax structure to benefit private schools and affluent families.

It would divert "scarce dollars from critically needed programs" such as those "helping children with special learning problems and requirements," he said.

Teachers President Albert Shanker said his union will fight tuition tax credit legislation "tooth and nail."

TAX CREDITS for private school tuition can't be justified under any circumstances, Shanker said, "but there has never been a worse time than now to consider such a program."

"How can our federal government even think of spending billions of dollars on a tuition tax credit scheme when programs serving children with the greatest economic and educational needs are being slashed?" he asked.

Reagan, in a Chicago speech to a conference of Catholic educators, said the Administration plan would give up to $500 a year credit against income tax to families with income up to $50,000, with a cutoff at the $75,000 income level. He indicated the Administration would support credits for private college tuition as well as elementary and secondary schools when the budget outlook allowed.

"I look forward to a day when we can expand this bill," the President said.

Reagan insisted that the nation's public school system would be strengthend, not weakened, by "alternatives to public education."

Auto Workers Negotiate New AMC Accord

Milwaukee—The Auto Workers reached a tentative agreement with American Motors Corp. on a new three-year contract to temporarily defer wage increases to help out the financially ailing firm.

Under an "employee investment plan" that is the heart of the agreement, the union's 14,000 AMC members would forgo six quarterly cost-of-living increases and 3-percent annual increases through 1985 as well as a number of paid personal holidays. The company would invest the savings—expected to total $115 million—to finance new product developments.

UAW Sec.-Treas. Raymond Majerus said the agreement guarantees workers their donations would be refunded by 1985 with 10-percent interest. The payback would go into effect whether the company was making a profit or not.

The agreement, which workers must ratify by May 3 at AMC plans in Milwaukee, Kenosha, and Toledo, Ohio, shows that UAW members "are willing to enter into a partnership with the company," Majerus said.

The pact follows earlier concession contracts the union negotiated with Ford Motor Co. and General Motors Corp., the country's two largest auto makers.

The AMC agreement includes company assurances of equality of sacrifice by salaried employees and executives. It allows the union to reopen the contract if there should be a substantial rise in sales.

Oil Import Surtax Scored As Burden on Workers

The AFL-CIO remains firmly opposed to an oil import tax, Legislative Director Ray Denison said in a letter to all members of Congress.

Denison charged that such a tax, which is one of the proposals being considered in congressional budget deliberations, would be "unfair, inflationary and job destructive."

HE CITED AN analysis by the staff of the House Energy & Commerce Committee that a $5 a barrel import fee would add more than 1 percent to the inflation rate, and as much as 12 cents a gallon to the price of gasoline and heating oil. The study estimated that the cost to consumers could reach $30 billion a year.

That burden will fall heaviest on America's workers, Denison protested, with gasoline costs alone rising $100 a year for a typical family. "For workers such as building tradesmen, who commonly commute long distances and travel between work sites, the costs would be much higher," he said.

The revenue increase from an oil import fee would be "quickly dissipated by the added energy costs the government will have to bear," Denison said, and by added outlays resulting from increased inflation, higher unemployment and reduced output.

"Thus, imposition of an oil import fee to help meet the budgetary mess caused by last year's tax giveaways to the wealthiest in our society will only add to the energy costs of American families already hard-pressed by inflation and soaring unemployment."

DENISON NOTED the AFL-CIO had opposed a similar oil import tax in the Carter Administration and labor's position on the issue is long-standing and nonpartisan.

Congress can raise billions of dollars in added revenues without an oil import tax, Denison stressed, through "correcting inequities in last year's tax legislation and closing loopholes."

That's what should be done, he urged. "The American consumer cannot afford nor should be asked to foot the bill for another round of windfall oil profits and tax injustice."

Comparison with Safeguards

Immigration Bill Seeks To Stem Illegal Flow

(Continued from Page 1)

Often "unscrupulous employers prey upon these illegal immigrants and force them to work at low wages under substandard working and living conditions in an atmosphere of fear and exploitation."

Stiff sanctions against employers, including civil and criminal penalties, are the most important deterrent to illegal immigration, Kirkland said.

He told the committee the AFL-CIO did not come to that conclusion "out of a desire to find excuses to impose employer sanctions," but only after unsuccessful attempts in cooperation with labor-management groups to find a better solution.

SANCTIONS MUST be backed by a secure, forgery-proof worker eligibility verification system, Kirkland said, stressing that the federation opposes any "work permit" such as used in Europe.

He urged that the bill contain strong safeguards so no one eligible under the law could be denied documentation, and no documentation could be revoked once it had been lawfully issued.

Funding and staffing of the Immigration & Naturalization Service should be increased so the agency can control the borders and enforce immigration laws internally, Kirkland said.

KIRKLAND PRAISED the Simpson-Mazzoli bill for its rejection of so-called bracero or guest worker programs "which would permit importation of foreign labor to undercut U.S. wages and working conditions."

By contrast, the Reagan Administration has proposed admission of up to 50,000 workers a year from Mexico during a two-year trial guest worker program.

In his testimony, Kirkland also urged that the so-called H-2 program allowing temporary workers into the country be phased out. He voiced strong objections to provisions of the bill that would allow different treatment of temporary farm workers than those performing other jobs, and he scored a section that would let agricultural employers join together to seek certification of temporary workers.

"EMPLOYER CARTELS" would result, Kirkland warned, that would dominate local labor markets "through hiring and firing and intimidation and blackballing of workers."

The AFL-CIO supports the legalization of status for illegal aliens now in the country, he said, including the bill's provisions that immediate permanent resident status be given to long-time residents with demonstrated ties to the community.

He expressed serious concern, however, about starting the legalization process until the flow of illegal immigration is halted.

Kirkland opposed a "two-tiered" legalization plan that would give only temporary legal status to people who entered the country between 1978 and 1980 and asked for immediate permanent resident status for aliens "with continuous residence in the United States prior to Jan. 1, 1980."

ENFORCEMENT OF the nation's immigration laws must be "color-blind," Kirkland stressed, adding that differential treatment of refugees seeking asylum, such as those from Haiti, should be rejected as "an affront to human dignity."

The AFL-CIO president commended the bill for continuing the responsibility for certification of alien workers under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Labor.

In response to questions from the panel, Kirkland noted that the "sensitivity" of American workers to the problem of illegal immigration was growing in proportion to the increase in unemployment and continued economic stagnation.

"The most vulnerable workers of all," he said, "are women and minorities and others who are already on the margin of job security and job opportunities, and who are also the most concerned about the further disadvantages they are placed under because of unchecked illegal immigration."

POLICE FIRE PEPPER GAS at picketing Machinists at Brown & Sharpe Manfacturing Co.'s North Kingstown, R.I., plant. The police action took place when the workers engaged in a sitdown protest. The strike is in its seventh month.

Judge Backs Union Pickets In Brown & Sharpe Dispute

Providence, R.I.—Striking Machinists welcomed a state Superior Court ruling denying Brown & Sharpe Manufacturing Co.'s request for an injunction against mass union picketing, but deplored the most recent instance of picket line confrontation.

Three weeks after police sprayed some 800 IAM pickets with pepper gas during a sitdown protest at the company's North Kingstown plant, a union picket was shot.

MACHINISTS Vice President Sal Iaccio in New York said that the man was not seriously injured because the bullet hit him on his belt bukle. Iaccio said that police filed charges against the assailant, whom he described as a "scab."

Earlier, Superior Court Judge James M. Shannahan turned down the firm's request for a court order against the picketing, saying that "there is no evidence, even stretching inferences . . . of any participation or ratification of illegal acts by any of the defendants . . . on any occasion."

Raul L. Lovett, the union's lawyer, called the ruling a mandate to the company "to stop using the courts as an excuse . . . and return to the bargaining table."

The union is seeking a contract renewal from the company, which produces precision industrial instruments at two Rhode Island plants, in North Kingstown and in North Providence. Iaccio says the firm's intransigence on bargaining issues leads him to believe that "they're out to break the union. There's no question of that."

Iaccio said that the Mar. 22 picketing was "a peaceful assemblage" of IAM members, and that "what happened at Brown & Sharpe is a reflection of the economy and the present labor climate that exists in this country today."

The workers struck Brown & Sharpe 27 weeks ago. IAM District 64 represents the strikers.

Gov. J. Joseph Garrahy has criticized the gassing of IAM pickets saying that it "should not have been used." The governor is empowered to appoint a fact-finding panel to investigate issues in the strike, but has not yet exercised this authority.

United Way Honors Williams, Murphy

Miami Beach—The United Way of America has honored two AFL-CIO central body presidents with outstanding records of service to their communities.

Co-recipients of the Joseph A. Beirne Community Services Award are Marvin L. Williams, president of the Washington State AFL-CIO, and Valentine P. Murphy, president of the Greater Boston Labor Council.

Williams, a United Way volunteer since 1957 and a past president of Spokane's Family Counseling Service, is the first union official chosen president of the state United Way organization. Murphy helped establish the United Fund of Greater Boston in 1957 and was a founder of the Medical Foundation, a community health education agency.

The award is named for the late president of the Communications Workers, who served for many years as chairman of the AFL-CIO's Community Services Committee. It was presented during the United Way's annual conference here.

ILA's Ban on Soviet Cargo Ruled a 'Secondary Boycott'

The Supreme Court ruled that the Longshoremen violated the secondary boycott prohibition of the Taft-Hartley Act when the union protested the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan by refusing to handle cargo to or from the USSR.

Its unanimous decision reinstated a damage suit against the union that had been filed by a Massachusetts firm that imported Russian wood products, and leaves the union open to other lawsuits.

THE ILA CONTENDED that the invasion by the Soviet Union was "an affront to the conscience of the entire world" and the boycott of Soviet shipping reflected the "repugnance" of ILA members.

A federal district court had dismissed the suit, holding that the boycott was a political act not related to federal labor law. But the 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled against the union's position and the Supreme Court concurred.

Justice Lewis F. Powell's decision acknowledged that the union's objective was "understandable and even commendable." But it said the effect was to burden "neutral employers," which the ban on secondary boycotts was intended to prevent.

IN A BRIEF supporting the ILA's position, the AFL-CIO had noted that in previous decisions the Supreme Court had refused to allow U.S. unions to picket "runaway-flag" ships registered in foreign countries to avoid U.S. wages and benefits. At this time, the AFL-CIO noted, the court held that Congress didn't intend the National Labor Relations Act to reach into areas involving international trade and foreign relations.

But the Supreme Court held that the governing issue in the ILA boycott was the impact on "neutral" parties, in this case "an American stevedore which had contracted to service an American ship carrying goods of an American importer."

The Supreme Court has not yet acted on a separate case involving the ILA boycott in which the issue is whether such boycotts can be blocked by a federal court injunction.

Labor Asks Jobless Benefit Extension

(Continued from Page 1)

The union witnesses also urged enactment of other bills before the subcommittee to restore the national unemployment rate trigger for extended benefits and to nullify other regressive changes made last year.

- Steelworkers Legislative Rep. John Powderly presented a statement by USWA President Lloyd McBride noting that employment in the steel industry is already well below depression levels. Supplemental unemployment compensation funds have been exhausted at many plants, the union reported.

McBride cited the Secretary of the Treasury's recent comment that the economy is "dead in the water" and suggested that the question before Congress now "is whether unemployed workers will be allowed to sink."

- Auto Workers Research Director Sheldon Friedman warned that community problems rise as workers are dropped from unemployment rolls, and the resultant loss of buying power worsens the recession.

Friedman noted that one of the Reagan Administration's new budget proposals would require states to round down an individual's weekly unemployment benefit check to the next lower dollar. "The sheer pettiness and miserliness of this proposal clearly reveals the Administration's attitude toward the unemployed," he said.

- Albert P. Russo, coordinator of social services programs for the State, County & Municipal Employees, charged that cuts in family assistance have pushed up the recession's "already high human misery index."

NOTING THAT contradictory impact of the various Administration proposals, Russo told the subcommittee:

"The proposal to make workfare mandatory for employable AFDC recipients as a substitute for the Work Incentive Program which would be abolished is plain and simply irrational. We can see no logic to replacing a program that helps welfare recipients find private sector work, and which provides child care services to 100,000 children, with one that just makes recipients work off their benefits."

Seidman, testifying for the AFL-CIO, also scored the retreat by the Administration in social services for the needy.

Last year, he noted, Congress went along with a "brutal reduction of funding and elimination of responsibility for providing life-sustaining services to the aged, blind, disabled and young children under Title XX of the Social Security Act."

CONGRESS TURNED over a major portion of these programs to the states and cut federal funding nearly 25 percent, Seidman noted. Now, "with a monstrous display of insensitivity," the Administration is proposing an additional 12 percent cut in funds.

He urged the subcommittee "to reject these unconscionable attacks on the nation's poor and unemployed. These people and their children can afford no further sacrifice," he insisted.

Invitation to Disaster

IT IS ENTIRELY understandable that congressional Republicans would like to shed the heavy political burden of the failure of Reaganomics.

Thus, they have invited their Democratic colleagues to join in sponsoring a "compromise" budget that would project a substantially lower deficit than the version submitted by the President.

There are, of course, many ways to lower the deficit—including the very comprehensive economic program advanced by the AFL-CIO Executive Council. But the GOP negotiators on Capitol Hill have taken the position that the final version must be "acceptable" to the President, not to be seen as a repudiation of his voodoo economics.

The Republican script envisions only a limited rollback of scheduled tax cuts. To bring the deficit down to a politically acceptable figure, it contemplates further deep cuts in many federal programs—deeper even than President Reagan proposed, and including cuts in social security entitlements that the President vowed would not take place.

BUT IF THE DEMOCRATS somehow could be persuaded to embrace these destructive measures, who could blame "a nice guy" like the President or the members of Congress who rubber-stamped his program last year?

It's a great script for the GOP. But not for the country. And certainly not for Democrats who will be facing the voters in November.

Alternative to Unemployment

INTEREST RATES, one of the most flammable components of inflation, can be brought down if the President and the Federal Reserve Board choose to use powers Congress has granted them to regulate the flow of credit.

Restricting credit for non-productive purposes would make funds available at more reasonable interest rates for job-producing, economically useful investments. That's the course the AFL-CIO has repeatedly urged as an alternative to the Reagan Administration's theory that a heavy dose of unemployment is the surest cure for inflation.

But unless the credit control law is extended past its June 30 expiration date, that remedy will no longer be available.

The chairman of the House Banking Committee, Fernand J. St Germain (D-R.I.), has introduced legislation to continue this standby authority. His bill would also make clear that the powers granted the President and the Federal Reserve Board can be used to combat high unemployment and recession, as well as inflation.

THE LIMITED use of credit control authority during the Carter Administration gave a needed spurt to the housing market—dropping mortgage costs from a peak of over 16 percent to about 12.5 percent within three months.

There is no way to compel this Administration to make use of standby powers. But it and future administrations should continue to have the option. Sometimes, even the most rigid economic ideology bends under practical realities.

Just now, it's up to Congress. The credit control law should be renewed. Time is short.

AFL-CIO NEWS

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
LANE KIRKLAND, President
THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer
Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward	Murray H. Finley
Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts	Sol C. Chaikin
Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco	Charles H. Pillard
J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride	David J. Fitzmaurice
Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps	Wm. W. Winpisinger
William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell	John DeConcini
Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss	William Konyha
Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney	Douglas A. Fraser
Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield	Barbara Hutchinson
Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto	Gerald W. McEntee

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop, John R. Oravec
David L. Perlman, James M. Shevis

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, April 24, 1982 No. 16

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

INTERNATIONAL LABOR PRESS AFL-CIO/CLC ASSOCIATION

Blaming Wall Street

White House Passes the Buck For Gaping Economic Pothole

By Gus Tyler

PRESIDENT REAGAN is angry with the "money market." He says that it won't listen. If it were listening, says Reagan, then interest rates would come down.

Larry Speakes, spokesman for the White House, told the public just why the President was annoyed. "The president has cut inflation, cut the budget, made good on his promises and the money market won't listen," says Speakes.

Just who is meant by that vague phrase "the money market"? According to Robert Ortner, chief economist of the Commerce Dept., it is Wall Street. Backing up Speakes, he pummeled "the street" in public: "Wall Street hasn't bought the idea" of bringing down interest rates.

WALL STREET has not spoken yet because, unlike the White House or the Commerce Dept., the "street" is only an abstraction without a mouthpiece who can speak like Speakes. So it is silent as a wall.

But, if it could speak, it would quickly pass the buck. "Don't blame us," they would say. "Blame our central bank, the Federal Reserve Board. They decree that interest rates shall remain high. Ask them and they will tell you so."

So you go to the Feds and speak to its genial and consistent chairman, Paul Volcker. "Yes," he will gladly admit. "We have been keeping the interest rate high by keeping a tight grip on the money supply. And we are doing it because only by restraining the economy can we bring down the rate of inflation."

"But," the voice of the White House may say, "isn't it enough? To quote myself: 'We have cut inflation, cut the budget, made good on our promises.' Isn't it time to bring down that interest rate?"

IN THIS IMAGINARY conversation, Mr. Volcker would undoubtedly dig his teeth into his ever present cigar and, in his basso profundo, would calmly retort:

"What do you mean that you cut inflation? I was the one who cut it by keeping interest rates high. I was the doctor; my medicine is working; and I say that it is much much too soon to take the patient off the prescription. Lift the money supply and you will lift prices."

"But when will you bring down the interest rates?" pleaded the speakesman.

"When you do what you say you did. You say that you 'cut the budget.' But you didn't. You're spending more than Jimmy Carter. You subtracted here, then you added there, and then you added more. I know how to add and subtract. It's part of my job.

"What's more," continued the voice of the Fed. "You did not make good on your promises. Let me just read you one of those promises—the biggest one you made. Here's what our President said not so many years ago. 'Inflation is the cause of recession, and the only cause. . . . The one basic cause of inflation is government spending more than it takes in. . . . The cure is a balanced budget. . . .'

"DO YOU THINK interest rates will ever come down then?" wondered the voice of the White House.

"Sure," said the voice of the Fed. "Soon as you balance the budget."

"But will we ever balance the budget?"

"That," smiled the Fed, "is your business, not mine."

Infection of Recession Continues to Spread

We live in a nation where a decline in auto production in Michigan results in steel layoffs in Pennsylvania, steel and rubber layoffs in Ohio, electrical components in New Jersey and Wisconsin, auto upholstery in the Carolinas.

The decline in steel production further results in layoffs in the iron range of Minnesota and the coal fields of West Virginia.

High interest rates which result in a decline in new housing starts affect the lumber industry of the Northwest, and the brick and clay industry in Georgia.

As these laid-off workers forgo purchases of home appliances produced in Illinois, workers who make electrical cords in Vermont are laid off.

As workers exhaust their unemployment benefits, the recession begins to feed upon itself.

—From statement by Steelworkers President Lloyd McBride at House hearings.

New Sacrifices Demanded

Recession's Victims Feel Brunt Of Last Year's Program Cuts

The following is from the opening section of testimony by AFL-CIO Social Security Director Bert Seidman before a House Ways & Means subcommittee considering the Administration's proposed new cutbacks in unemployment compensation, public assistance and social services programs.

LAST YEAR the Administration requested and Congress enacted drastic cutbacks in vital social programs forcing the needy to sacrifice while the country waited for economic recovery.

While the unemployment rate has gone from 7.5 percent in 1981 to 9 percent in March 1982, billions of dollars have been cut from all of the programs designed to help the needy. Without pausing to assess the pain caused by these actions, the Administration is back asking for additional cuts which will further erode these basic life-support programs.

Today there are more people out of work than at any time since the Great Depression of the 1930s. It is estimated that 3 million unemployed workers will have their unemployment insurance benefits cut off or reduced in fiscal year 1983 as a result of recent actions by Congress. When these people are faced with a total loss of income they will join millions of other destitute Americans seeking ways to keep their families from starving.

AS THE RESULT of congressional action in 1980 and 1981, the extended benefit program is severely restricted. The national trigger has been eliminated, and extended benefit claimants are no longer included in the calculations of the state trigger. Because of this change in the trigger calculation, the state of Michigan, despite depression levels of unemployment, stopped paying extended benefits for 13 weeks.

To prevent such tragic anomalies, it is essential that the national trigger be restored and recipients of extended benefits be included in the trigger calculation.

As the result of two additional restrictions that will become effective on Oct. 1, 1982, extended benefits will be paid in fewer states due to the mandated increase in the state triggers and 20 weeks of qualifying employment will be required for eligibility. Millions of jobless workers in the current recession, therefore, will be deprived of unemployment compensation after they exhaust regular benefits resulting in economic disaster for them and their families.

THE GAP BETWEEN the insured unemployment rate and the official unemployment rate continues to widen. During the 1974-76 recession, the gap averaged 3 percent. This differential has increased to almost 5 percent. Because each state's insured unemployment rate is the trigger for extended benefits, even the present trigger levels are too high. Rather than enacting a 1 percent increase, Congress should have lowered the trigger. Once the increase takes effect in fiscal 1983, extended benefits will not be available until the official total unemployment rate is near 11 percent.

In fiscal year 1983 over 3 million unemployed workers will be denied extended benefits during periods when they otherwise would have been entitled as the result of economic events over which they have no control. It is the height of injustice to make them bear the responsibility for their unemployment under these conditions.

THIS SITUATION is even more intolerable because jobless workers are finding that other resources are no longer available to them. Tightened eligibility requirements for receipt of Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) make it virtually impossible for unemployed workers and their families to obtain any welfare assistance when they exhaust unemployment insurance benefits. Many of these workers will also be disqualified for food stamps due to the lowered ceiling on the amount of income a family can earn in order to be eligible.

In recognition of the necessity for additional weeks of benefits for unemployed workers during economic recession, Congress has several times enacted legislation establishing supplemental benefit programs. At this time of worsening recession and increasingly high levels of unemployment we are encouraged by the introduction of bills that would restore some of the protections to which the long-term unemployed are entitled.

Year-Old Fiasco

Reagan Tax Cut Scheme Fails To Reverse Slide in Economy

THE ADMINISTRATION'S plea for more time for its tax-cut plan to work suffers a basic fallacy: key parts of the program took effect more than a year ago and the economy has steadily worsened, AFL-CIO tax expert Arnold Cantor said.

"Most of the big business tax cuts—the larger revenue-losers—were retroactive to Jan. 1, 1981," Cantor stressed. And, he added, some of the cuts for the wealthiest individuals, "those in the top brackets," were back-dated to last June. Yet, he pointed out, the unemployment rolls have swollen to 9.9 million, another 1.3 million discouraged workers have dropped out of the labor force, and close to 6 million are working at part-time jobs because that is all they can find.

Cantor said that from the outset, the President based his tax-cut scheme on anticipation and future realizations that had no chance of working out. It was "economic nonsense to set up an inevitable collision of supply-side tax cuts and tight-money," he said on the network radio interview Labor News Conference. Cantor is assistant director of the federation's Dept. of Economic Research.

HE RENEWED the AFL-CIO's call for a 180-degree turnaround of the Reagan tax plan that would restore "substantial equity to the tax system." He noted that a main feature of the tax changes the AFL-CIO has put before both houses of Congress is a $700 cap on individual tax cuts. That, he said, would affect only "that 5 or 6 percent of the population that so unfairly and inequitably got far more than reason allowed," and would add $28 billion to badly depleted federal revenues.

Cantor said the Administration applied an unfair double standard in its tax program. He said that while it was "willing to give these huge, untargeted, unspecified gains to people in the top brackets," it was scrutinizing food stamps and all sorts of programs that are vital life-support aids to those families and individuals who are hit hardest by the recession.

There are "important, critical investments in the nation that this Administration is ignoring," Cantor asserted, and the way to get back on track is to curb the excesses of the Reagan tax program that are causing so much damage to Americans and the economy.

CORRECTION

An error in the Apr. 17 issue of the AFL-CIO News distorted a point made by Federation Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue at an international symposium in Rome. Donahue said:

"We do believe that our adversarial role, appropriate to the conflict of collective bargaining, should be limited to the period of negotiation. During the lifetime of a contract [arrived at through conflict bargaining] it ought to be replaced by a period of cooperation aimed at maximizing the potential of the joint enterprise to advance the company's business and the workers' satisfaction."

The Op-Ed article incorrectly quoted Donahue as saying, "We do not believe that our adversarial role. . . ."

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

MANY AMERICANS, young and old, fear that the social security benefits they have worked for will be drastically reduced and some even fear for the survival of the 47-year-old program.

A recent Washington Post-ABC News poll of older people revealed that 57 percent of them believed that in five years the program no longer will "provide a significant share of living expenses for the elderly."

However unjustified, the fears are understandable. For social security is under attack as never before.

THIS LANDMARK New Deal program has been fought by conservative naysayers from the beginning. Ronald Reagan, for example, called in past years for the virtual dismantling of the program by making it "voluntary."

Last May, Reagan, days after proclaiming "Older Americans Month," proposed massive cutbacks in the social security program—$82 billion over five years—in the name of saving it from "bankruptcy." Early retirees and the disabled would suffer the biggest cuts. The public outcry against Reagan's proposed cuts led Congress to reject most of them.

However, Congress approved several of the cuts, including the minimum benefit for new retirees, survivors benefits for college students, and lump-sum death benefits.

LIKE MANY MYTHS, the one of impending social security insolvency contained a grain of truth. One of the program's three trust funds, the old-age and survivors fund, was running low because high unemployment had cut payroll revenues and high inflation had pushed up cost-of-living increases. But the fact shunted aside by the fearmongers was that the two other trust funds—disability and Medicare—were more than able to compensate for the relatively slight and temporary shortfall in the old-age fund.

Congress, in effect, recognized this when it rejected the wholesale gutting of the program and, instead, approved interfund borrowing among the three trusts through June 1983. Critics claim this "stopgap" solution only "postpones the day of reckoning" because an aging population will, they say, put unbearable pressures on the payroll tax-funded program.

But this myth is exposed by Congressional Budget Office calculations that while the old-age fund faces rather small shortfalls during the 1980s if the economy remains weak, this fund will move into a favorable position by 1990, at least until 2015.

During this period, the numbers of older people will be balanced by the increase in the size of the wage-earning population. A scheduled 1990 social security tax increase also would help.

In the years beyond 2015, the program could face substantial shortfalls as the postwar "baby boom" retires unless nothing is done to shore it up by that time. And action to bolster and reform the program without gutting it is something the doomsayers conveniently omit from their dire calculations.

FOR SOCIAL SECURITY is not some kind of inflexible balance sheet portrayed by the mythmakers. It is a social compact between the people and their government. It is an earned right of every citizen to live in retirement with dignity. Thus Congress would never permit it to go "bankrupt," nor would the people stand for it.

Senior citizen and labor groups long have advocated ways to improve the program's financing and make it more equitable. Among these proposals is for Congress to authorize borrowing from general revenues if the economy makes this necessary in the 1980s. Also, interfund borrowing should be made permanent.

Social security must be preserved intact. Congress should reject the schemes of the mythmakers to weaken its protections.

A BASIC FALLACY of President Reagan's plea for more time for his tax-cut scheme to work is that most of it has been in effect more than a year and the economy has steadily worsened, AFL-CIO Economist Arnold Cantor, center, said on Labor News Conference. He was questioned by Peggy Simpson of the Boston Herald-American and Robert Cooney of Press Associates, Inc. The AFL-CIO produced public affairs interview is aired weekly on the Mutual radio network.

Television Series On Labor Linked To College Credit

Paramus, N.J.—A 27-part television series on American labor, produced by Bergen Community College here, will be broadcast nationwide over the CBS network for early morning viewing—and possible college credits.

The series, starting May 17 in the New York metropolitan area and May 18 elsewhere, is entitled "American Labor: A Modern Perspective." It will examine the changing nature of work and the workforce, and the role that unions play in American life. Local, regional and national union leaders are among those appearing on the series.

Three college credits are offered by Bergen Community College for a fee of $86.25, which includes supplementary readings and regular communications with the instructor. A brochure describing the course is available by writing Dr. Philip C. Dolce, Bergen Community College, Paramus, N.J. 07652, or phoning (201) 447-1500, Ext. 250.

Retiree Cost-of-Living Index Asked

A special cost-of-living index for aged or retired persons is preferable to using either of the two existing consumer price indexes as a basis for adjusting government social security and other retirement benefits, the AFL-CIO told Congress.

"We would support congressional initiatives to accomplish this result, including the necessary funding for the Bureau of Labor Statistics to undertake the work," Research Director Rudy Oswald said in testimony before a Senate Governmental Affairs subcommittee.

THE PANEL is considering plans to use "CPI-U" index rather than "CPI-W" index in calculating automatic cost-of-living adjustments in benefit programs. Various bills toward this end have been introduced dating back to 1978 when CPI-U was first published, the rationale being that it was a better index to use because the retired population was included in the expenditure surveys from which the index is derived. CPI-W covers only the working population of wage earners and clerical workers.

But while CPI-W excludes the buying patterns of retired persons, CPI-U "drowns them out," Oswald said. Expenditures of families headed by persons age 65 and over make up only a small portion of total family expenditures—less than 12 percent, according to a 1972-73 BLS survey.

Data show that there is a distinct difference between the type of expenditures made by families with heads age 65 and over as compared with the population as a whole.

HOME PURCHASE outlays, for instance, made up 10.9 percent of expenditures by the general population but only 4.3 percent for families with heads age 65 and over, the BLS survey showed. Similarly, mortgage interest costs were 5.2 percent for all families but only 1.7 percent at age 65 and over. In marked contrast to the general population, most older families have already bought their homes and are no longer incurring mortgage interest payments.

On the other hand, property taxes, insurance, maintenance and home repair loomed larger in the expenses of older people. Taken together, they comprised 7.7 percent of outlays as against 4.7 percent for the general population.

Other significant differences include shares of the older people's market basket for food (21 percent as against 17.4 percent), for fuel and utilities (9.1 percent as against 6.2 percent), and for medical care (9.9 percent as against 5.5 percent.)

APART FROM the matter of a special index for retired people, Oswald noted, the question of using CPI-U versus CPI-W for adjusting government benefit programs has now been complicated by BLS's plan to change the homeownership component of both indexes to a "rental equivalence" measure on different effective dates. For CPI-U, the change takes place next Jan. 1, while the effective date for CPI-W is Jan. 1, 1985.

The AFL-CIO opposes the change to a rental equivalence measure because it means dropping the direct pricing of home purchase and mortgage interest costs along with property taxes, inurance, and maintenanance and repair.

"The problem of finding enough rental housing sufficiently similar to owned housing to serve as the basis for a rental equivalence index has been a sticky one even for proponents of this methodology," Oswald said. "We do not believe it has really been resolved by the procedures being adopted by BLS, particularly for the 'first stage' of the changeover scheduled for completion by January 1983."

THE FEDERATION has additional practical reasons for opposing any speedup in the conversion schedule for CPI-W, he added. Most labor contracts use CPI-W, with existing contracts expiring at various times between now and 1985.

"If a major alteration in the basic computation of the index is made, such as the housing change represents, it would invite disputes over the validity of existing COL provisions," Oswald said. "The possible disruptive impact of basic CPI changes for existing agreements is in itself a sufficient reason not to install a rental equivalence CPI-W before January 1985."

AFL-CIO CENTENNIAL MATERIALS

"What does labor want? . . . We want more school houses and less jails; more books and less arsenals; more learning and less vice; more leisure and less greed; more justice and less revenge . . . in fact, more of the opportunities to cultivate our better natures."—Samuel Gompers

Gompers. Green. Lewis. Murray. Reuther. Meany.

These are great names from the pages of American labor history. They, along with thousands of working men and women, nurtured the roots of the trade union movement.

The human drama that evolved in the growth of the unions in the United States is documented in materials prepared for the AFL-CIO's observance of labor's centennial year. Many of these publications, pamphlets, posters, lithographs and reprints of articles are still available from the AFL-CIO Pamphlet Division.

The struggle to organize unions. The Haymarket Square massacre. The Knights of Labor. The fight against discrimination. The eight-hour day. A century of achievement. Solidarity Day 1981. A challenge for the future.

Return to:
AFL-CIO PAMPHLET DIVISION
815 16th Street N.W.
Washington D.C. 20006

Name_____
Address_____
City_____ State_____ Zip_____

Amount of check or money order $_____
Check should be made payable to the AFL-CIO Secretary-Treasurer

Quantity		Amount
☐	A SHORT HISTORY OF AMERICAN LABOR, 32-page magazine format, $1 each	____
☐	A SHORT HISTORY OF AMERICAN LABOR, 16-page magazine reprint, 25 cents each	____
☐	POSTER—WHAT DOES LABOR WANT?, $2 each	____
☐	CENTENNIAL BUMPER STICKER, 12 cents each; $1 for 12	____
☐	FEDERATIONIST COVER SHEET—LABOR'S CENTENNIAL, free	____

Quantity		Amount
☐	HISTORICAL EXHIBIT PANELS—three in a set, $7 per set	____
☐	CENTENNIAL LITHOGRAPH by artist Robert Rauschenberg, $3 each	____
☐	CENTENNIAL INFORMATION KITS, $1 each	____
☐	AFL-CIO CENTENNIAL ANTHOLOGY, 96-page booklet, $1 each; $90 per 100	____
☐	SOLIDARITY DAY PLASTIC SHEETS, 3 by 6 feet, 50 cents each	____

State Job Agency Drops Query on Union Affiliation

Knoxville, Tenn.—A U.S. District Court judge here issued an order stopping the Tennessee Dept. of Employment Security from questioning workers about their union membership.

As a result of a suit filed by Clothing & Textile Workers Local 1742, Judge Robert Taylor signed the order—agreed to by both parties—stipulating that the department will not direct or allow use of such questions as "Are you a union member?" on its forms in the future. The local had challenged the constitutionality of such questions.

"WE FEEL THAT this represents a complete victory for our membership, and for all union members in the state of Tennessee," said Local 1742 President Bernice Butler.

"Workers can now be free to participate in their union with the full knowledge that the state will not be intruding into their rights of freedom of association, and that information concerning their membership in a union will not be available for possible abuse by the state or by private agencies or employers."

The order also calls for the Dept. of Employment Security to clarify language concerning union hiring halls and says that the union will participate in the rewriting of the language.

J. C. Turner Heads United Way International

J. C. Turner, president of the Operating Engineers, has been named chairman of United Way International—an arm of United Way of America that has voluntary fund-raising and service programs in 16 countries.

Turner has been on United Way's board of governors since 1976 and is the former chairman of its executive committee.

Urban Family Budget Rises 9.8% in Year

(Continued from Page 1)

BLS observed. "Continuation of the program would have required revision of concepts and expenditure data and extensive price collection for which funding was not available."

Since last fall, prices as reflected by the CPI-W have increased 1.1 percent through February. The social security tax rate has risen five-tenths of 1 percent, with the maximum taxable base expanded from $29,700 in 1981 to $32,400 in 1982. During the same period, federal income taxes have been cut—5 percent as of Oct. 1, 1981, or 1.25 percent annualized, with a 10 percent cut scheduled to take effect on July 1.

IF ALL THESE adjustments were made, AFL-CIO Economist Anne Draper estimated that the lower budget level as of February would be $15,329, or $6 higher than last fall. However, largely due to scheduled and actual federal income tax reductions, the intermediate budget total would be $25,258, or $149 less than last fall, while the higher budget would be $309 less at $37,751.

Most American families were far short of the middle-level standard of living reflected by BLS's 1981 intermediate budget.

Indeed, the income of many families more closely approximated the lower budget level. The Census Bureau reports that the median income of all families with one wage earner in 1980—the most recent year for which it has statistics — was $16,714.

AT ALL THREE levels, the costs of basic necessities were approximately 7.5 percent higher in autumn 1981, with the largest increases occurring in transportation and medical care. Personal income taxes, including federal, state and local tax payments, rose 19.4 percent at the lower budget level, 17.5 percent at the middle level, and 17.9 percent at the higher level.

Social security deductions increased approximately 18 percent at the lower level, 19 percent at the intermediate level, and 24 percent at the higher level. The large increases were due to an increase in the social security contribution rate from 6.13 percent in 1980 to 6.65 percent in 1981. and an increase from $25,900 to $29,700 in the maximum income on which contributions are made into the social security system.

Among necessities, transportation expenses rose 12 percent for families at the lowest budget level, 12.1 percent for middle-level families, and 11.8 percent for those at the higher level.

Housing costs rose 8 percent at the lower level, 8.6 percent at the intermediate level, and 8.7 percent at the higher level. Shelter costs were higher at the middle and higher levels because of mortgage-interest costs and large price increases for fuels and utilities, BLS said. Medical-care costs increased 10.6 percent for lower-level budgets, and 10.7 percent at the other budget levels. Most other consumption costs rose at about the same rate for each budget.

THE BUDGETS do not represent how families actually do or should spend their money. Rather, they reflect certain assumptions about the manner of living at each of three relative standards of living.

The estimates are drawn up for a hypothetical family consisting of a 38-year-old man employed full time, his nonworking wife, and their 13-year-old boy and eight-year-old girl. The couple is assumed to have been married 15 years, the family settled in the community, and the husband an experienced worker. The family has, for each budget level, average inventories of clothing, house furnishings, major durables, and other equipment.

The budgets are prepared for 24 metropolitan areas, defined as those with more than 1 million people, four non-metropolitan regions (populations between 2,500 and 50,000), and Anchorage, Alaska. Nearly three-fourths of all Americans live in cities and metropolitan areas.

VIEWS ARE EXCHANGED by AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland and Lionel Jospin, first secretary of the French Socialist Party, who visited the United States at Kirkland's invitation. During his stay, Jospin met with several AFL-CIO vice presidents in Washington and New York. From left are Communications Workers President Glenn E. Watts, Kirkland, Jospin, Seafarers President Frank Drozak, and Operating Engineers President J. C. Turner, who participated in the Washington meeting. Jospin was accompanied by his party's Deputy National Secretary Jacques Huntzinger and Alain Davezac, director of North American affairs for the party's international secretariat.

OSHA Hit for 'Outrageous' Retreat On Curb of Cotton Dust Hazards

The Clothing & Textile Workers branded as "outrageous" Reagan Administration plans to tamper with protections of the federal cotton dust exposure standard that the Supreme Court upheld last year.

The Occupational Safety & Health Administration has no justification for reopening rulemaking on the standard, ACTWU said, challenging OSHA and industry claims that there is "new health data" or a need for "consideration of more cost-effective compliance methods."

THE UNION leveled the charges in a statement submitted to OSHA in a public comment period that followed the announcement that the agency proposed its review.

The Supreme Court held in June 1981 that the federal rules on worker exposure to cotton dust should stand and rejected the principle of applying "cost benefit analysis" to regulations concerning workers' health.

ACTWU scored the agency for tampering with the cotton dust regulations in effect since 1978 "in view of OSHA's inability to expedite—and in some cases even begin—rulemaking on known unregulated hazards." It said that since the high court has already held that the existing standard provides sufficient protection, OSHA must also show that an alternative standard is equally or more protective in order to re-open rulemaking, and that has not been done.

The union questioned the validity of "new information" on the specific effects of cotton dust inhalation and its relation to the crippling "brown lung" disease that afflicts many textile industry workers.

The statement pointed out that a health effects review must be based on "the latest and best available data." By law, OSHA can get such data only from surveys by the National Institute for Occupational Safety & Health or from its own extensive collection of all company medical and exposure data, validated by NIOSH, the union contended.

The American Textile Manufacturers Institute in its statement to OSHA claimed that an industry survey of the effects of exposure to cotton dust show that "the dimension of any respiratory health problem in the cotton textile industry is much smaller than seems to have been believed by some people."

THE INDUSTRY group also wants OSHA to adjust the permissible exposure limit for cotton dust to account for other substances in the mill atmosphere. Workplaces using fibers that are more than 90 percent synthetic should be excluded, ATMI said, and more exclusions should be granted mills handling washed cotton.

ATMI also called for setting of an "action level" at 50 to 60 percent of the current exposure level below which requirements of the standard could be relaxed, and the institute asked for a two-year rather than annual requirement on medical surveillance of workers' health.

The problems of relying on the employers' collection of medical records are "severe," ACTWU said, pointing to NIOSH criticism of industry medical surveillance data during the 1977 hearings on the then-proposed standard and to ATMI's failure to substantiate its medical evidence.

IN MARCH, ACTWU and a group of independent medical experts on brown lung disease sharply questioned the results of a report released by the National Academy of Sciences which suggested that there is not enough evidence to link cotton dust to byssinosis, the scientific name for brown lung disease.

Eric Frumin, ACTWU safety and health director, charged that the NAS report was biased and did not add any new data to the scientific evidence but merely selected from existing studies. He pointed out that several authors of the report have been textile industry consultants.

He praised a draft report prepared by the World Health Organization and forwarded by its authors to OSHA which concludes that "there is no new scientific data available on the textile sector that would justify serious reconsideration" of the cotton dust standard.

The WHO study urges the federal agency to maintain the current exposure standards for cotton textile preparation, processing and weaving operations.

PANEL MEMBER Dr. James Merchant of the University of Iowa told OSHA that the current standard "has had a marked positive effect on environmental conditions" in U.S. mills, and at a time when many "progressive mills" have made investments to comply with the standard and protect their workers' health "it would be a serious mistake to relax the provisions of this standard."

AFL-CIO Safety Director George H. R. Taylor said the WHO report "reinforces the position long taken by the AFL-CIO, ACTWU and other unions" on the validity of the current cotton dust standard and "refutes" the positions taken by the Administration.

In comments to OSHA, the Clothing & Textile Workers also argued against setting of "action levels" based on evidence that even below permitted exposure levels there is still an "unacceptablly high" health risk.

ACTWU pointed out that there is a government-industry-labor research project underway to determine safety in washed cotton processing and that only those results should be considered in setting exclusions.

The union also called for retention of wage protections in the standard, an issue the Supreme Court sent back to federal appeals court for further hearings.

City Family Budget Costs At Three Levels of Living

Summary of annual budgets for a four-person family at three levels of living, urban United States, autumn 1981.

	Lower budget	Intermediate budget	Higher budget
Total budget	$15,323	$25,407	$38,060
Total family consumption	12,069	18,240	25,008
Food	4,545	5,843	7,366
Housing	2,817	5,546	8,423
Transportation	1,311	2,372	3,075
Clothing	937	1,333	1,947
Personal care	379	508	719
Medical care	1,436	1,443	1,505
Other family consumption	644	1,196	1,972
Other items	621	1,021	1,718
Social security and disability	1,036	1,703	1,993
Personal income taxes	1,596	4,443	9,340

Electrical Workers Ratify General Motors Contract

Members of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers employed by General Motors overwhelmingly approved a new two and one-half year contract providing greater job security.

The pact, which was negotiated six months ahead of schedule due to adverse economic conditions in the auto industry, covers some 22,000 IUE members at six GM locals.

Of the 17,665 votes cast, 71.6 percent favored acceptance of the contract.

Enterprise Zone Scheme Held Lure to Exploiters, Not Source of New Jobs

President Reagan's proposal for tax-favored "enterprise zones" to attract businesses to inner cities wouldn't create any new jobs and should be rejected, the AFL-CIO urged at Senate hearings.

The tax giveaway at most would lure "footloose employers" from one unemployment-ravaged location to another, AFL-CIO Vice President Sol C. Chaikin contended. Chaikin, who is president of the Ladies' Garment Workers, testified for both the AFL-CIO and his own union.

Labor "strongly favors the rebuilding of our inner cities and the creation of new jobs," Chaikin stressed. But the urban enterprise zone concept "is a delusion and a diversion from the real problems facing our inner cities."

THE BASIS for the AFL-CIO's opposition was also spelled out by Legislative Director Ray Denison in a letter sent to all members of Congress.

The potential tax loss of billions of dollars would take revenue needed for "programs that directly address the problems of unemployment and deteriorating neighborhoods," Denison said, to give to "fly-by-night firms that are more interested in a fast buck and exploitation.'

Chaikin's testimony, before a Senate Finance subcommittee, made the point that business expansion is keyed to demand and, in today's recession, only 70 percent of the nation's productive capacity is being utilized.

THE APPAREL industry has lost hundreds of thousands of jobs to imports from low-wage countries, Chaikin said, and attempts to maintain wage standards are continuously threatened by unscrupulous employers who exploit the fears of undocumented workers.

"I can tell you straight out," Chaikin testified, that any increase in apparel industry employment in enterprise zones "will come at the expense of jobs now existing outside of the enterprise zone."

New tax inequities should not be created merely to "shift existing jobs from one depressed area to another and from one minority group to another," he urged.

TAX EXPENDITURES rather than tax giveaways are needed for the inner cities, Chaikin urged. He cited unmet needs for improved sanitation, health care facilities, housing, crime prevention and drug abuse programs.

Chaikin reminded the panel that the Reagan Administration originally contemplated modification of minimum wage protections as an additional inducement for locating in an enterprise zone.

"We suspect that the lifting of regulations that protect public health, provide for occupational safety and attempt to limit further degradation of the environment remain as part of the hidden agenda," he testified.

"This nation cannot afford to continue to grant further tax advantages to the business community while sloughing off the responsibilities of national government," Chaikin insisted.

THE COMPREHENSIVE economic revitalization program advanced by the AFL-CIO Executive Council earlier this year "offers the most effective way to deal with our blighted inner cities and the high levels of unemployment that pervade them," he said.

As for the Administration's urban enterprise zone proposal, it is "a delusion and a diversion from the real problems facing our inner cities. We are convinced it is part of a broader, sugar-coated strategy aimed at the destruction of hard-won protective legislation for the workers and the poor of our nation."

Republicans Gain Vote in Senate as Brady Takes Seat

The political lineup in the Senate tilted to a 54-46 Republican majority as Nicholas F. Brady, the newly appointed senator from New Jersey, took his seat.

Brady, a wealthy investment banker and political ally of Vice President Bush, filled the vacancy left by the resignation last month of Democrat Harrison A. Williams, Jr.

He was appointed to the post by Republican Gov. Thomas H. Kean, to serve through the November election, when New Jersey voters will choose a senator for a full six-year term.

Brady is not a candidate for the seat and Kean named him as a "caretaker" appointee rather than give the advantage of incumbency to one of the candidates for the Republican nomination in the June 8 primary. The leading GOP candidates are Rep. Millicent Fenwick, a political moderate, and Jeffrey Bell, who is supported by the GOP's conservative wing.

A scene from "With Babies and Banners"

'Babies and Banners' Film Scheduled for Television

The award-winning film, "With Babies and Banners," will have its television premier May 7 on the national Public Broadcasting System. The program will include a panel discussion with union women and labor historians.

"With Babies and Banners," which won numerous international film awards and was nominated for an Academy Award in 1969, recreates the story of the Women's Emergency Brigade which helped Auto Workers win the famous 44-day sit-down strike at General Motors in Flint, Mich., in 1937. The strike was seen as a turning point in the CIO's organizing drive.

Director Lorraine Gray, filmmaker Anne Bohlen and labor historian Lyn Goldfarb produced the story of the women who helped win the strike.

PBS will air the broadcast at 10 p.m. EDT, but local listings should be checked to verify broadcast times.

Auto Workers to Challenge Bonus Hike to GM Officials

The Auto Workers, angered over management proposals to make it easier for executives of General Motors Corp. to take big bonuses, said it would send a delegation to the company's May 21 annual meeting to oppose the plan.

"The UAW finds these proposals to be an absolute outrage, particularly at a time when GM workers have just agreed to substantial sacrifices to help the company withstand the terribly depressed conditions facing the auto industry," UAW President Douglas Fraser said.

Under proposed changes in GM's bonus compensation system, the profit the company must make before bonuses are awarded would be reduced. Bonuses would be granted when GM's annual after-tax earnings exceed $1 billion, rather than the current requirement of $1.27 billion.

GM DISCLOSED the proposal, which is subject to shareholder approval, in proxy material distributed Apr. 16, only hours after UAW and the company signed a new contract calling for $3 billion in union concessions.

In addition, the changes would increase the number of executives eligible for bonuses, and create a new incentive plan for executives who achieve certain performance goals.

UAW Vice President Owen Bieber, who directs the union's GM department, said the proposed changes "violate the entire spirit of the agreement negotiated with General Motors. While our initial examination of GM's proxy statement indicates the changes won't result in any payout this year, GM couldn't send its workers and consumers a worse signal.

"THE INK WAS barely dry on the new contract, and along comes GM making it easier for its top executives to reward themselves financially."

Fraser said that GM should withdraw the proposals, but if it fails to do so and the shareholders adopt the changes, "we will call upon GM Chairman Roger Smith and all those who could receive bonuses to state publicly they will refuse to accept them."

Because of the industry-wide car sales slump, there have been no bonuses for the past two years under the current bonus system. GM reported earnings of $333.4 million in 1981, and losses of $763 million in 1980.

GM said that the proposed changes in the bonus plan are needed to attract and retain execuitves.

FTC Funding Backed to Protect Consumers

The Federal Trade Commission should have the funds and enforcement power it needs to protect consumers against marketplace deception, the AFL-CIO urged at House hearings.

Congress must renew the FTC's authorization in order for the agency to function after next Sept. 30, and business groups are using the deadline to press for new curbs on its powers. They have found an ally in FTC Chairman James C. Miller III, a Reagan appointee who has testified in support of new restrictions on his agency.

The AFL-CIO protested that proposed curtailments, including a redefinition of "deception," would make it "much harder" for the FTC to investigate and prosecute fraud.

IN A TIME of high inflation and high unemployment, America's workers need "more, not less, protection in the marketplace," Arnold Mayer testified for the AFL-CIO. Mayer is vice president and government affairs director of the Food & Commercial Workers.

Mayer reminded the House Commerce subcommittee that the demand for less government intervention in the marketplace hasn't come from America's consumers.

Workers and their families have been helped by FTC orders that required companies to stop billing customers for unordered merchandise, refunding money paid on layaway purchase plans that weren't completed, cracking down on abuse debt collection practices and discriminating against women and minorities in granting credit, Mayer told the panel.

The AFL-CIO protested that there would be "less protection for consumers" if Congress curtailed the FTC's authority over unfair or deceptive practices or had to measure the "costs and benefits" of its rules.

SOME INDUSTRY groups want to bar the FTC from seeking civil penalties for intentional violations of the law in a "first offense," but Mayer protested that this would allow a company to flout the law with impunity until it was caught. "You can imagine the message that Congress would be sending the hucksters and swindlers of the marketplace," he suggested.

The AFL-CIO also expressed strong opposition to legislation that would bar the FTC from acting against "anti-competitive" conduct by members of professions, such as doctors, lawyers and dentists. Mayer cited FTC successes in curbing an attempted boycott of a union-negotiated dental insurance plan, concerted efforts by doctors to force higher payments for Medicaid patients and attempts to prevent price advertising for eyeglasses.

He said the AFL-CIO is convinced that the FTC "is performing a valuable service" for all consumers.

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

4/24/82

IUD Delegates Hit Recession-Breeding Policies

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII Saturday, May 1, 1982 No. 17

Three topics of critical importance to industrial workers—interest rates, auto local content legislation, and job safety issues—dominated discussions at the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.'s annual legislative conference in Washington.

Some 500 delegates representing 21 unions heard labor and political leaders address the issues, studied informational materials about them, and then lobbied hard in visits to congressional offices and meetings with various state delegations.

THE CONFERENCE was held in conjunction with legislative meetings of several IUD affiliates. A congressional reception attended by some 100 members of Congress was held the evening before the plenary sessions.

IUD President Howard D. Samuel opened the sessions with a review of the deterioration of the economy under the Reagan Administration.

"With more than 10 million American workers unemployed, with some industries facing disaster, we are in the midst of one of the worst economic busts in recent history," Samuel said. "President Reagan's supply-side economics coupled with tight money and high interest rates have compounded the difficulty faced by many industries—but neither party in Congress has distinguished itself this past year."

Reviving the economy requires direct action by Congress, Samuel declared.

"We want a sensible budget for America that supports social programs for the defenseless, including the victims of layoffs," he said. "We need to revive our largest industry—auto assembly and auto parts and supplies—through auto local content legislation. And we need to relieve the stranglehold of high interest rates that are squeezing the life out of industry after industry and community after community."

The day before the conference opened, legislation was offered in the House to bring down high interest rates. The Low Interest Rate Act of 1982 introduced by House Banking Committee Chairman Fernand St Germain (D-R.I.), would extend

(Continued on Page 3)

1,000 STEELWORKERS and their families marched from the White House (in background) to Capitol Hill in a last-ditch move to save two Detroit steel mills and 4,000 jobs. Members of Locals 2659 and 7990 at the McLouth Steel Co. came to the nation's capital to seek support for government guarantee of a loan to the bankrupt company, one of the most modern in the nation. They also sought curbs on steel and auto imports.

Quotas Sought to Combat Job-Killing Steel Imports

Quotas on steel imports are necessary to America's industrial health and justified by tactics other nations have used to penetrate the U.S. market, Steelworkers President Lloyd McBride testified.

"One out of four tons of steel consumed in the United States is produced in foreign mills, while 80,000 steelworkers here are on layoff," McBride said.

"WE HAVE steelworkers who have exhausted state unemployment benefits, are ineligible for trade adjustment assistance, and are without supplemental unemployment benefits in most of the large companies because funds are exhausted."

Also testifying at hearings by a House Energy & Commerce subcommittee was the chairman of U.S. Steel Corp., David Roderick, who said existing mechanisms for dealing with dumping and import damage have been inadequate.

While he doesn't "favor" quotas, Roderick told the panel: "I support Mr. McBride's call for quotas if we cannot get justice through our regular system."

BEARING WITNESS to the plight of the industry's workforce was an 18-bus caravan that came from Michigan on a mission to save 4,000 jobs that will be lost if the McLouth Steel Co. is forced to close its two Detroit-area plants.

Nearly 1,000 USWA members and supporters made the trip to Washington and marched from the White House to a Capitol Hill rally with Michigan's congressional delegation seeking government support to keep the plants open.

McBRIDE TOLD the committee that the steel industry's problems have been compounded by "the failure of President Reagan's economic program" and the "job-killing effect" of high interest rates.

While the recession has made the steel industry's problems "even more repressive," the inroads of foreign steel have come about largely because of subsidies and related forms of economic assistance other nations provide, he testified.

"We cannot compete if foreign steel-producing nations play by one set of rules and we play by another," McBride warned.

The problems of the steel industry have been "overstudied," he suggested, and "the time for remedial action is past due." He urged members of Congress and Administration officials "to visit our steel communities" and talk to the union's members "in order to understand the despair and growing anger of American workers

(Continued on Page 8)

Economic Trends Of '70s Widen Gap In Family Income

Most American families were on an economic treadmill during the decade of the 1970s, running hard but no better off after 10 years of wages chasing inflation.

Some, especially among blacks, were worse off.

In terms of reducing inequality in income—the gap between those with the most and those with the least—gains made in the 1960s were wiped out in the 1970s.

That's the finding of a large-scale sampling of American households conducted as part of the 1980 census. Its income figures are all expressed in constant 1980 dollars so that comparisons of 1960, 1970 and 1980 family income are valid in terms of buying power.

DURING THE decade of the 1960s, when the government's war on poverty was launched, median family income in the United States rose significantly from $15,637 to $20,939. But 10 years later, it had crept up only to $21,023.

While real family income for whites was less than 1 percent above the previous decade, median family income for blacks slumped 5 percent, to $12,674.

More households were at the lower and higher ends of the income scale at the time of the 1980 census than 10 years earlier.

THE GAINS of the Sixties weren't wiped out for the lower-income groups but they were trimmed back. Thus, in constant dollars, 27.5 percent of households had incomes under $10,000 as measured in the 1960 census. This group dropped to 17.8 percent 10 years later but edged up to 18.9 percent in the 1980 census.

But while 18.9 percent of households had incomes over $25,000 in 1960, the ratio climbed to 37.5 percent in 1970 and to 39.3 percent in the 1980 census.

A Census Bureau official said the increase in the number of families with two wage earners was a factor in the rise of upper-income households. The census report noted also that the size of households shrunk during the Seventies, so that per capita incomes rose even though family income did not.

THE CENSUS sample showed 12.5 percent of all persons below the poverty line, down slightly from 13.7 percent a decade earlier. Nationally, the poverty rate was 9.4 percent among whites, 30.2 percent for blacks and 23.8 percent for persons of Spanish origin.

The poverty rate was highest in Mississippi, at 24.5 percent, followed by Louisiana and Arkansas. In metropolitan areas of over 1 million population, poverty was most prevalent in New Orleans, San Antonio and New York.

A CENSUS analyst quoted in the New York Times noted the impact of recessions on the widening of the income gap. The pattern is that when unemployment rises, lower-income people are often "the first to be laid off."

The census sampling also showed a substantial rise in the percentage of one-parent families.

In 1970, families maintained by one parent—either male or female—without a spouse present amounted to 12.3 percent of all families with children under 18.

By 1980, the ratio had risen to 19.1 percent. In numbers, 5.8 million of the 30.3 million families with children were in this category.

Congress, Reagan Clash on Training

House and Senate committees are battling the Reagan Administration over the shape and size of job training legislation to replace the expiring Comprehensive Employment & Training Act (CETA).

The Administration slashed CETA programs heavily last year and wiped out entirely the anti-recession public service jobs program which employed 300,000 people when President Reagan took office. It now wants to cut the current funding level of $3 billion—about half the pre-Reagan level—to $2.4 billion, mostly in "new federalism" grants to states.

BY CONTRAST, the House Education & Labor Committee on Apr. 27 approved a $5.4 billion job training package sponsored by Rep. Augustus F. Hawkins (D-Calif.) and Rep. James M. Jeffords (R-Vt.). A public jobs section, providing extra funds to communities during recessions, was dropped from the bill. But it will be considered by the committee as separate legislation, Hawkins was promised.

A Senate Labor & Human Resources subcommittee approved a smaller-scaled job training bill, a compromise measure sponsored by Subcommittee Chairman Dan Quayle (R-Ind.) and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.).

It was supposed to be a bipartisan "consensus bill" but Labor Sec. Raymond J. Donovan warned that it faces a veto unless cut back to the Administration's specifications.

DONOVAN WROTE Quayle and Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah), the chairman of the full committee, that it is "not acceptable to the Administration" because it would allow living allowances to be paid to trainees and departs from the President's blueprint in other respects.

Unlike the House bill, the Senate measure has an open-ended authorization—leaving the funding level to a later congressional decision. But Quayle estimated fiscal 1983 expenditures in the $3 billion to $3.5 billion range.

The Quayle-Kennedy bill would leave the issue of living allowances for trainees up to the local area "prime sponsor." The Hawkins measure would base payments to participants on need.

THE ADMINISTRATION proposal, and to a somewhat lesser extent the Senate bill, would put control over local programs under Private Industry Councils in which employers would have an absolute majority.

The Hawkins measure would diffuse membership among various segments of the community and provide for consultation with unions representing workers in fields for which training is being provided.

COMPENSATION PROGRAM for workers disabled by exposure to asbestos and other occupational health hazards is urged by AFL-CIO witnesses at House hearings. With Legislative Director Ray Denison, center, are Arleen Gilliam, an assistant director of the federation's Dept. of Social Security, and Lawrence Smedley, the department's associate director.

Asbestos, Radiation Exposure

Fund Urged for Victims Of Job-Related Diseases

The AFL-CIO urged the House Labor Standards subcommittee to approve legislation to set up a federally-administered compensation program for workers disabled by exposure to asbestos and uranium ore.

State workers' compensation programs have proved inadequate to deal with occupational disease, AFL-CIO Legislative Director Ray Denison testified.

DENISON ENDORSED as an important step forward a bill introduced by Subcommittee Chairman George Miller (D-Calif.) and urged strengthening amendments that would allow future coverage of other occupational disease hazards.

"Thousands of workers die each year from the effects of asbestos, cotton dust, beryllium, lead, carbon monoxide, cancer-causing chemical dyes and pesticides to which they were exposed, sometimes many years ago. Thousands more workers suffer long illnesses from the same causes," he testified.

The Miller bill would establish a presumption of eligibility for benefits in cases of mesothelioma (a chest cancer) or asbestosis, which attacks the lungs, if it is shown that the worker was exposed to asbestos in the course of employment.

SUCH A presumption is needed, Denison said, because "for too long, workers disabled by exposure to occupational hazards have been forced to bear the burden of proof that their disabling diseases are caused by such exposures."

Compensation benefits for total disability and survivorship benefits for death from covered illnesses would be two-thirds of the worker's average weekly wage up to a maximum of double the national average wage. There would be no limit on payment of medical expenses.

These proposals are in line with the standards the AFL-CIO has urged for all workers' compensation, Denison noted. He welcomed also provision for adjustment of benefits in line with increases in the state's wage levels.

THE MILLER BILL would put financial responsibility on the last employer of the disabled worker, if that was the location where the asbestos or uranium ailment was contracted. Otherwise, benefits would come from a fund created by payments required from employers, manufacturers and importers.

Both the Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers testified against the legislation.

The Chamber insisted that state laws generally are adequate to cover all occupational diseases and argued that the states should be left free "to fashion solutions that meet their own needs."

DENISON URGED that the legislation leave intact the right of workers to bring suits against third-party manufacturers.

Under the Miller bill, expansion of the program to other occupational diseases would come only through a recommendation by the Secretary of Health & Human Services to the Secretary of Labor, who would then submit proposed legislation to Congress.

Denison urged that expansion recommended by the Dept. of Health & Human Services be acted on under rule-making authority of the Labor Dept., including opportunity for comments by interested parties.

Threat to U.S. Jobs Cited In Reagan's Caribbean Plan

The Reagan Administration's Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery bill should be rejected because it would weaken U.S. industries and add to unemployment, the AFL-CIO testified.

A House Foreign Affairs subcommittee is considering the President's proposal for tariff-free admission of Caribbean goods over the next 12 years—including products primarily manufactured in other nations with a minimal content requirement from a Caribbean nation.

THE ADMINISTRATION package also includes an assortment of tax incentives that the AFL-CIO protested would cost the U.S. Treasury more than $800 million in revenues.

But the "real cost," AFL-CIO Legislative Rep. Stephen Koplan warned, "will be higher U.S. unemployment" and "diminished U.S. investment in our own domestic industries."

Koplan noted that some 87 percent of Caribbean products already enter the United States duty-free under the tariff preferences given to less developed nations. He questioned why Congress would want to virtually wipe out the few job safeguards still in place.

"EQUALLY ASTOUNDING," he testified, is the effort to encourage firms to invest in the Caribbean through the same investment tax credits that Congress enacted last year to increase domestic investments that would create jobs in this country.

The AFL-CIO testimony noted also that all of the "safeguards" in the Administration bill are designed to protect investors. But there is nothing to assure that workers in the Caribbean area benefit from the transactions.

"We believe that a basic requirement for a country to participate in the Caribbean Basin program should be that the workers in that country have the right to form unions and to bargain effectively concerning their wages and terms of employment.

"WITHOUT EQUAL requirements for workers' rights, this legislation only protects the rights of those who invest money, not those who invest their work," Koplan testified.

He termed the Administration trade and tax incentives "ill-conceived" and "unthinkable" at a time of 9 percent U.S. unemployment. Congress should "send the Administration back to the drawing board to design a more thoughtful plan of assistance," Koplan suggested.

Tax Law Change Pressed to Bar 'Contractor' Ruse

Tax laws governing independent contractors should be tightened to protect workers from the "machinations" of employers and avoid revenue loss to the government, the AFL-CIO urged.

Legislative Rep. Stephen Koplan told a Senate Finance subcommittee that employers have abused lax tax laws by reclassifying workers as independent contractors in order to evade legal obligations and avoid payroll taxes.

HE NOTED that employees who are shifted to independent contractor status lose eligibility for unemployment compensation coverage, must pay social security tax at the higher self-employed rate, and lose the right to collective bargaining.

"Equally important," he testified, "laws safeguarding workplaces, establishing standards for working conditions, providing workers' compensation, and affording protection from discrimination in hiring, promotion and benefits apply to workers only if they are classified as employees."

Koplan noted also the notoriously poor income tax collection record the government has experienced with independent contractors and endorsed legislation to establish a withholding tax system and a clear-cut classification procedure to identify genuine independent contractors.

SUCH TESTS, he said, should include requirements that a contractor have a place of business, employ other workers and perform services for more than one company.

Tax legislation should be drawn so as "to narrowly limit the use of independent contractor status so that employers will be discouraged from circumventing their responsibilities and contributing to the exploitation of workers," Koplan urged.

Food Union Rejects A&P Bid For 'One-Way' Concessions

Stiff demands by the A & P management for wage and work rule concessions were rejected by the Food & Commercial Workers in a sharply worded letter to the company.

The union's response answered a written proposal by A & P's industrial relations vice president, H. Nelson Lewis, for a two-year wage freeze, deferral of wage renegotiations until March 1984 and suspension of established working conditions and standards.

IF THE UNION complied, the company said, it would apply the freezes "equally to all other employees," but Lewis threatened a 10-percent across-the-board wage cut if the demands were not met.

Lewis also said A & P "is unable to guarantee the workforce against future reductions and/or layoffs."

In late 1981, A & P closed 400 stores despite concessions made then to aid the financially ailing retail grocery chain.

In the UFCW's response, Thomas M. Russow, the union's bargaining director, scored the company proposal as "a one-way street that serves your needs and ignores all but the barest employment needs of your employees . . . and provides no security."

RUSSOW ACCUSED the company of "audacity" in making "an extreme proposal without offering your employees even the slightest shred of a guarantee against further reductions in staff or further store closings."

UFCW's 16-member A & P special bargaining committee, appointed by union President William H. Wynn after the wave of store closings, unanimously rejected the employer's demands, Russow said.

He said the committee felt angry and frustrated by the company's demands and pointed out that the union had made clear in previous talks that it "would be glad to cooperate in a viable company-union game plan" if the company "agreed to help itself."

A & P's "track record speaks for itself," Russow said. "You promised there would be no more store closings if we would just make some concessions. We made the concession. You thereupon closed another 400 stores."

THE UNION "might very well give favorable consideration to changes in contract terms . . . when we really know where you are going and what you are doing and why," Russow said.

The UFCW said talks between local unions and stores are still under way, but contract changes made at that level would require approval of the A & P committee.

AFL-CIO

Announces a New Service For The Media

Brief recorded statements on labor's viewpoints and attitudes on current issues, updated several times a week.

Throughout the nation:

1-800-368-5744

In Washington, D.C.:

(202)-638-4821

For more detailed information, special requests, interviews, etc.,

AFL-CIO Department of Information

815-16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006

Murray Seeger, Director of Information

Rex Hardesty, Assistant Director of Information

Charlie Hughes, Audio Services

202-637-5010

Recall Issued On Bonuses To GM Bosses

Detroit—General Motors has put the brakes on a plan to fatten executive bonuses following protests by the Auto Workers that the proposal was "an outrage" when employees were making wage and benefit concessions.

GM Chairman Roger B. Smith in a letter to UAW President Douglas A. Fraser said the company would not go through with plans to hand out bigger bonuses under a system that would have made them easier to get for a larger number of executives.

THE COMPANY'S statement followed on the heels of angry reaction by the union to a bonus-plumping plan outlined in GM's proxy statement to stockholders released Apr. 16 only hours after the UAW and the company signed a new contract calling for $3 billion worth of wage and benefit concessions by union employees.

Shareholders will still vote on the plan, but Smith's letter "negates" new bonuses, Fraser said.

Earlier, he had called the bonus proposal "an absolute outrage, particularly at a time when GM workers have just agreed to substantial sacrifices to help the company withstand the terribly depressed conditions facing the auto industry."

THE NEW contract calls for equal sharing of financial sacrifices by both labor and management.

Bonuses under the new system would have been granted to executives when the company's after-tax earnings topped $1 billion rather than the current level of $1.27 billion.

More executives would have been eligible, and a new incentive plan would have rewarded managers for performance. Because of the industry-wide car sales slump, GM executives have not gotten bonuses for the past two years under the current system.

SMITH'S LETTER now pledges that no new executives will be made eligible for stock options and that management officials will not get any higher bonuses for the life of the contract if the proposal is approved.

The incident, Fraser said, is "regrettable" and shows "a lack of sensitivity."

Six Rail Unions, Amtrak Reach Contract Accord

Six AFL-CIO rail unions reached tentative agreement with Amtrak, the National Railroad Passenger Corp., on a new 39-month agreement covering about half its unionized workers.

President Richard I. Kilroy of the Railway & Airline Clerks, which represents some 7,500 of the estimated 11,000 Amtrak employees covered by the settlement, said details of the agreement would not be released pending ratification by the membership. Mail balloting on the package is expected to be completed by May 20.

KILROY SAID the agreement, fully retroactive to Apr. 1, 1981, is modeled in many respects along the lines of last fall's agreement between the unions and the nation's major private railroads.

"I am confident that upon learning the details of this agreement, our members will vote their approval," Kilroy said.

Other unions that have initialed the pact are the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Maintenance of Way Employees, Machinists, Boilermakers & Blacksmiths, and the Joint Council of Carmen. The last group consists of Amtrak employees who are members of the Carmen and the Transport Workers, who negotiate jointly with the carrier.

Meanwhile, talks between Amtrak and nine other unions representing 5,000 to 6,000 additional workers are continuing.

OSHA, AUTO CONTENT LEGISLATION, and interest rates were the central topics at the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.'s annual legislative conference in Washington. Sen. Paul Sarbanes (D-Md.), at podium, was one of three liberal Democratic senators facing unusually difficult elections who addressed the conference.

IUD Legislative Conference Pushes Action to Reverse Reagan Policies

(Continued from Page 1)

the Credit Control Act of 1969, which gives the Federal Reserve Board and the President the authority to reallocate credit.

THE MEASURE would encourage the Fed to redirect credit from such nonproductive uses as corporate takeovers and commodity speculation to productive uses —housing construction and home mortgages, new plant and equipment for business, and state and local government infrastructure investment in roads, mass transit, ports, bridges.

Pointing to the need for the bill, Carpenters President William Konyha stated:

"Interest rates won't come down as long as Dupont is able to borrow $3 billion of your mortgage money to buy Conoco. Why should the Hunt brothers be allowed to borrow $1 billion in one week for silver speculation when that money is needed to rebuild the industrial base of this country?"

Konyha was joined in the panel discussion on the economy by Utility Workers President James Joy and three liberal Democratic senators facing strong challenges for re-election: Howard Metzenbaum of Ohio, Donald W. Riegle of Michigan, and Paul Sarbanes of Maryland.

JOY COMMENTED that the three Senate speakers were special targets of the National Conservative Political Action Committee, the right-wing group that boasted it could elect Mickey Mouse to the Congress if it had enough money. "They proved their point and did just that in 1980," he said.

Accusing the Administration of being indifferent to the effects of imports on unemployment in this country, Metzenbaum urged passage of local content legislation that would require foreign auto manufacturers who sell in the United States to build and operate in the United States.

"I used to be a free trader," Metzenbaum said, "but if we can't sell our beef and pork in Japan, then no Datsuns and Hondas should be sold here." The delegates cheered.

SARBANES DREW applause when he said, "If you want to address the problem of the federal deficit, it's very easy—you put the American people back to work." Every 1 percent of unemployment adds $30 billion to the federal deficit, he said.

Each of the senators stressed that the ultimate remedy for dealing with the economic and social problems created largely by the Reagan Administration and its allies in Congress is defeating them on election day in 1982 and 1984.

Riegle, for instance, said "Solidarity Day II has to be on Election Day so we can give Reagan a message."

In a session on occupational safety and health, former OSHA Administrator Eula Bingham said the Administration's proposed 40-percent budget cut "would wipe OSHA out" and that already "OSHA enforcement is in shambles." She urged unions to make safety and health a key issue in the coming elections.

Rep. Joseph M. Gaydos (D-Pa.), chairman of the House Labor Subcommittee on Health & Safety, stressed the need to reverse congressional action in January that exempts surface miners from coverage under the Mine Safety & Health Act (MSHA). The idea was to shift surface mine safety responsibility from MSHA to OSHA, but even Labor Sec. Ray Donovan has admitted OSHA doesn't have the capability to protect some 77,000 surface miners and 46,500 stone milling workers.

OSHA isn't equipped to handle mine safety, Gaydos said, pointing out that 134 surface, stone and gravel miners were killed over the period 1978-1980. Since the exclusion of these miners from MSHA protection in January, OSHA has scheduled only 17 inspections, compared to 1,800 MSHA inspections for the same period last year.

Rep. George Miller (D-Cal.) gave this lobbying advice:

"WHEN YOU'RE lobbying and they ask you about the Hobbs Act and violence on the picket line, you should talk about the violence perpetrated by employers who knowingly expose workers to hazards in the workplace." Miller was referring to right-wing efforts to subject union members to the Hobbs Act, a federal anti-extortion law, for picket-line scuffles.

Operating Engineers President J. C. Turner called attention to the "silent epidemic of occupational disease sweeping across America's work places virtually unrecognized." Every year 100,000 workers die from occupational diseases, and another 400,000 are disabled by them, he said. But only some 5 percent of these dead or disabled victims receive any compensation under state workers' compensation programs.

Steelworkers Vice President Leon Lynch said occupational disease victims should be covered by a comprehensive workers' compensation system, both to relieve their suffering and to act as an incentive for employers to rid the workplace of health hazards.

SPEAKING ON the elections at a conference luncheon, political analyst Peter Hart told the delegates that voters in 1982 will make "mid-course corrections" for Republican mistakes on economic policy, yielding "major gains" to Democrats.

"1982 will be a one-issue election—the health of the economy," Hart said, and voters will "send a message to Washington" that they disagree with the Reagan Administration's policies on unemployment, inflation, and high interest rates.

Local Auto Content Proposal Seen Source of a Million Jobs

Close to a million jobs in the auto and auto-related industries are at stake in labor's effort for passage of auto content legislation.

The Fair Practices in Automotive Products Act now before Congress would require that autos sold in U.S. markets include a set percentage of American-made content (parts and labor). So far, it has picked up 190 co-sponsors in the House, just 28 short of a majority, and 10 in the Senate.

ON THE DAY before its legislative conference, the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. held a special conference on the auto local content bill, bringing together about 250 delegates from unions in the Coalition of Auto Component & Supply Workers to beef up lobbying efforts in support of the bill.

"This legislation would aid the American economy by shifting the bulk of auto production to American workers and communities," said IUD President Howard D. Samuel. "It makes no sense for the U.S. to maintain virtually unlimited access to our markets while our access to the markets of other countries is restricted, at a cost of hundreds of thousands of American jobs."

President David Fitzmaurice of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers pointed out that for every unemployed production worker from the Big Three auto makers, there are at least two workers laid off in the auto support industries—electrical, steel, plastic, textile, rubber, glass and others.

AUTO WORKERS Vice President Martin Gerber said passage of the content bill would mean jobs for 117,000 more auto workers than at present and 146,000 more American workers employed by foreign car manufacturers, plus 605,000 more among independent suppliers.

President Dominick D'Ambrosio of the Allied Industrial Workers, provided a dramatic example of how and why employment in auto-related industries has plummeted.

Members of AIW Local 857 make steering wheels for cars at the Sheller-Globe plant in Portland, Ind. In 1976-1977, the bargaining unit had about 500 members. Today the company is in the process of closing down the plant and the local is down to 49 members.

THE DROP in auto sales wasn't the only factor involved in the company's decision to shut down that plant, D'Ambrosio explained.

"Just last week, we learned that the company had acquired a major interest in a British company that makes—you guessed it—steering wheels."

Political speakers at the conference included chief sponsors of the auto content bill from the Senate and House: Senator Wendell H. Ford (D-Ky.), and Representatives Richard L. Ottinger (D-N.Y.) and Barbara A. Mikulski (D-Md.).

Standing Up on the Hill

THAT WAS GOOD news from Capitol Hill when the so-called bargaining session between President Reagan, the Republican and Democratic congressional leaders broke up with no agreement.

The Democrats came close to buying a very bad deal from the Republicans, a deal that would have compromised away some of the basic elements of fair public policy.

Ever since the Republicans took over the White House and the Senate last year, the Democrats have been floundering around trying to find a rock of principles on which to take a stand.

Last year, the Democrats became mesmerized by the false attractions of the giveaway tax policy initiated by the President and his most conservative supporters.

The Democrats tried to out-bid the Republicans in punching holes in the tax system to satisfy the greed of the major corporations and rich individuals. They split in disarray and permitted the Republicans to chop and slash away economic, social welfare, training and educational programs which had helped to reduce poverty and ignorance and provided a true safety net for the disadvantaged in our society.

NOW, IN THE second year of Reaganomics, when everyone in the country can see the disastrous, cruel effects of trickle-down, voodoo policies, the Democrats have shown a modicum of courage.

They finally got the President himself to enter the round of budget talks after putting up with the charade of negotiating through staff assistants. They got Mr. Reagan to admit, at least tacitly, that the budget he sent to Congress earlier this year was a hoax; it had no chance of winning approval even with most of his own party, and was compounded of such straw and paste that it couldn't survive even a mild examination.

The Democrats will have to stand up to Republican attacks for failing to take the alleged compromise Mr. Reagan offered them. They will be on the defensive, again, unless they can somehow rally around the basics of a sound, fair and high-principled set of policies.

Earlier this year, the AFL-CIO offered an alternative economic package that has as its base those principles. These include a restoration of fairness in the tax system; maintaining the integrity of the social security system; halting the destruction of social welfare programs, and starting a direct attack on the single biggest problem the nation faces, post-war record high unemployment.

IT ISN'T EASY for Congress to write a budget and make economic policy in the best of times; it is more difficult when the Administration remains enamored of a discredited set of ideological theories.

A good place for the Democrats and liberal Republicans to start would be a return to the agreed basis for public policy that every president from Franklin D. Roosevelt through Jimmy Carter accepted.

This is the concept that the federal government bears ultimate responsibility for the common good and welfare of all Americans. This calls for a policy that puts people ahead of ideology; it demands direct action to put Americans back to work. Congress must adopt this concept as its own, because the White House has abdicated that responsibility.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

LANE KIRKLAND, President

THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward	Murray H. Finley
Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts	Sol C. Chaikin
Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco	Charles H. Pillard
J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride	David J. Fitzmaurice
Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps	Wm. W. Winpisinger
William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell	John DeConcini
Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss	William Konyha
Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney	Douglas A. Fraser
Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield	Barbara Hutchinson
Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto	Gerald W. McEntee

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman, James M. Shevis

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W. Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, May 1, 1982 No. 17

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

International Labor Press AFL-CIO/CLC Association

'Probing for the Trough'

Official Double-Talk Translates Into Real Trouble for Economy

By Gus Tyler

THINGS ARE GOING from bad to worse in our economy. That's the fact. But if you hearken to the way this plain truth is put into officialese, the twisted language of various spokesmen for the Administration, you would think that we are on the high road to recovery. Consider this rhetoric pretzel, for instance, coming from Robert G. Dederick, Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Economic Affairs:

"The economy is probing for the trough, and this is an indication that the upturn is not here."

LET'S TRANSLATE this into plain prose. "The economy is probing for the trough" means that we're on the way down. "The upturn is not here" means that we're not on the way up. Put the whole sentence together and it says that because we are on the way down, we are not on the way up. Get it?

Implicit in all this circumlocutious locution is the premise—actually the implied promise—that "the upturn" is someplace out there, although for the moment is "not here" because the derned "economy is probing for the trough."

The last time we started our descent into the ever-descending trough, the then President of the United States tried to talk the country out of the fall. "Prosperity is just around the corner," he announced. And the next month there was another corner to turn.

AND TALK THERAPY is not working now. The Administration announced that in the first quarter of 1982, the economy would shrink by four-fifths of one percent; instead it tumbled downhill by 4.5 percent.

In February, Secretary of the Treasury Donald Regan said the economy would "come roaring back in late spring." But then the President said we would begin to pick ourself up sometime between July and December.

Meanwhile, the fatal facts come pouring in:

Phelps Dodge, the country's second largest copper producer, announced that it will be closing its plants until June 1. This means that 3,800 employees will be laid off—until some indefinite time. Copper is used in housing (depressed), in autos (depressed), in making capital goods (depressed).

Easter sales fell way behind. "Thank God," said one retailer, "for doctors, dentists and lawyers. They still are buying."

But then the Wall Street Journal runs a story on how people are so broke that they can't afford dental work. Unemployed auto workers have lost heatlh coverage and are not going to doctors.

Meanwhile, Mr. Dederick says that although we are still falling, "the rate is slowing." In other words, we will be starting up again—sooner or later.

BUT WHAT'S to bring the "upturn" if copper mills are closing, if bankruptcies doubled in the last year, if banks are going bust, if people can't buy, if they can't even afford to bring their decay to dentists or their pains to doctors?

So what will turn it around unless, maybe, they go to the polls once more—to re-elect Roosevelt?

Copyright 1982, Gus Tyler Columns

Credit and Blame—Two Sides of the Coin

The White House would prefer to forget how much the recession and reduced inflation are sides of the same coin.

Larry Speakes, the President's spokesman, sought to take credit for the good news on Friday, tracing it to "our consistent economic policy, which has cut the rate of increase in federal spending, our support of a stable monetary policy and our policy of non-intervention in the marketplace.

That was a curious statement from a White House that keeps on insisting that its economic policy won't even begin to have a real effect until July. If the Reagan Administration wants to take credit for reducing inflation, it also has to take the blame for the recession.

It was President Reagan's stubborn insistence on a multi-year tax cut that forced the Federal Reserve Board to attack inflation by engineering a slowdown. For the past year, tight monetary policy and the resulting high interest rates have been Washington's only anti-inflation policy.

No one questions the power of a recession to beat back inflation. But that is a crude victory and a costly one, especially for the 9 million thrown out of work in the process.

—From a New York Times editorial, Apr. 25, 1982.

McBride Warns Congress

Imports, Recession Endanger Survival of U.S. Steel Industry

Following are excerpts from testimony by Steelworkers President Lloyd McBride at House hearings, Apr. 26, 1982:

THERE IS NOT another industry that has been as thoroughly studied in the past five years as the steel industry.

We studied while 100,000 steel jobs disappeared and 10 million tons of steel capacity was dismantled or set aside.

We studied while about 100 million tons of foreign steel entered the U.S. market—much of it that should have been produced in American steel plants.

The current economic situation has made steel's problems even more oppressive. The failure of President Reagan's economic program has added injury to economic distress. We did not boast about the state of the economy before the Reagan presidency; but we were better off then than we are now. There were nearly two million fewer unemployed workers in America. There was no effort to redistribute income to the corporations and wealthy individuals on the cynical and erroneous theory that all Americans will benefit.

THE PRESIDENT sought and obtained tax relief for corporations so they would invest in new plant and equipment. This has not been forthcoming because his economic policies have brought about more idle capacity in our nation. The steel industry is operating at less than 60 percent of capacity.

The Administration's policy of high interest rates has dealt this economy a severe blow: a job-killing recession with ten million unemployed Americans. Reagan's policies have made even more remote the objective of rebuilding America's industrial base.

There are those who speak glibly of our being a service economy, and of the diminished need for a large industrial base in America. There are those, too, who have virtually written off the steel industry in the United States as incapable of competing in our own steel market. These critics have done this nation, the industry, and American steelworkers a disservice in promoting such nonsense.

IT IS TRUE that we cannot compete if foreign steel-producing nations play by one set of rules and we play by another. We are expected to adhere to the rules of a market economy; but we do not insist that others do so.

The price of a product must cover the cost of producing and distributing that product, plus a reasonable profit. I submit to you that if a product is priced below cost as a means of garnering a market that this is unfair competition and a violation of market principles.

Yet we have been told that if the taxpayers of another country are willing to subsidize an industry's output, we should welcome the cheaper products in our market. That kind of thinking is not only wrong; it is dangerous. We would soon find that the U.S. industrial base would be vulnerable to the decisions of foreign governments about which of their industries they wish to promote. By subsidizing inefficient industries, foreign governments could undermine more efficient U.S. industries. Our plants and our jobs would be affected by political decisions elsewhere, not market principles. That has been true in the past, as it is today.

THIS IS NOT an idle hypothesis on my part. We have efficient steel plants and steel companies on the brink in this country in part because of dumping and subsidization of steel operations abroad. A recent Congressional Budget Office study of steel operating profits and losses in the past eight years shows the U.S. major producers to be profitable in six of the eight years, West Germany in two of the years, France in one year, Japan in four years, and Great Britain with a loss in each of the eight years.

I cannot imagine our government being insensitive to the trade problems we face in the U.S. steel industry. Yet how else can we read this critical situation?

The penetration rate of foreign steel in the U.S. market exceeds 25 percent. One out of four tons of steel consumed in the U.S. is produced in foreign mills, while more than 80,000 steelworkers here are on layoff. We have steelworkers who have exhausted state unemployment benefits, are ineligible for trade adjustment assistance, and are without supplemental unemployment benefits in most of the large companies because funds are exhausted. Entire steel communities are hard hit.

Government has a responsibility to provide a favorable economic climate within which industry and labor can have a chance to accommodate to the problems that are within our ability to resolve.

Inaction by government impacts on our economic welfare just as surely as action of the wrong sort. An eighteenth century economic philosophy is no substitute for the creative role that the federal government must play in achieving and maintaining a strong and viable economic system.

System Basically Sound

Social Security Trustees Use Scare Tactics in Bid for Cuts

THE REAL BUT correctable funding problems of social security were deliberately overstated in the annual trustees' report to prop up the Reagan Administration's claim that benefits must be cut to keep the system fiscally sound, AFL-CIO Social Security Director Bert Seidman charged in a network radio interview.

Noting that the trustees are all members of the Reagan Cabinet, Seidman said the way they presented their recent report gives the impression "that social security is essentially in very great fiscal trouble, and that the only way to deal with that problem is to cut benefits."

He branded that approach "alarmist and misleading," pointing out that the real strain on the system is "short-range and manageable."

There is every indication that the system will be in good financial shape before the end of the decade and will remain that way well into the next century, Seidman declared. He said that neither the soon-to-be corrected current problems nor those likely to develop over the next 40 or 50 years warrants the kind of cutbacks of retirement benefits and other social security protections that the President has called for.

Questioned by reporters on the AFL-CIO public affairs program Labor News Conference, Seidman said Congress has at hand two ways to correct the very real short-range fiscal problems:

- Extend the authority to borrow among the various trust funds that is scheduled to expire on Dec. 31.
- Authorize borrowing from general revenues—the same kind of borrowing authority "that is being used right now to bolster the unemployment compensation funds."

SEIDMAN POINTED out that current projections show the Social Security Trust Fund "in surplus about 1990," and in a position to repay any loans made now.

"As a matter of fact," he added, "the AFL-CIO would prefer, not borrowing authority, but actual contributions from general revenue to the social security system"—a procedure that is used all over the world by other countries.

Reporters questioning Seidman on Labor News Conference were D'Vera Cohn of United Press International and Chris Connell of the Associated Press.

THE ALARMIST and misleading approach of the social security trustees' annual report was a deliberate overstatement of real but correctable problems intended to prop up the Administrations claim that benefits must be cut to keep the system fiscally sound, AFL-CIO Social Security Director Bert Seidman, center, said on Labor News Conference. Questioning him were D'Vera Cohn of United Press International and Chris Connell of the Associated Press. The AFL-CIO produced public affairs program is aired weekly on the Mutual radio network.

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

THE RESULTS of the 1980 Census, delayed by budget cuts and government worker layoffs, have begun rolling in.

The preliminary information offers a "snapshot" profile of a restless people and ever-changing society.

The Census Bureau's summary report, based on a survey of 3.5 million people, spells out trends that were apparent during the turbulent 1970s. It also provides some surprises.

These are the highlights:

- The population totaled 226.5 million, up from 203 million in 1970.
- The number of families headed by a single parent and households of non-related individuals rose dramatically. One-parent families grew from 12.3 percent of all households in 1970 to 19.1 percent in 1980. Non-family households, including persons living alone, jumped from 19.7 percent to 26.7 percent.

THE GROWTH of one-person households reflects increased separation and divorce, the postponement of marriage by many young adults, and increased numbers of older persons living alone after being widowed.

- Americans were more mobile than ever. By 1980, some 64 percent of us were living in our state of birth. In 1970, it was 68 percent. At the turn of the century, almost 79 percent stayed put.

During the decade, many migrated from the Northeast and Midwest to the Sunbelt states in search of jobs and retirement homes.

- Despite skyrocketing gasoline prices, only 6.3 percent of the workforce rode public transportation to work in 1980, down from 8.9 percent in 1970.

While some attribute this to Americans' love affair with the automobile, a better explanation is inadequate public transportation. Nearly two-thirds of those surveyed drove to work alone. Nearly 20 percent belonged to carpools.

- The civilian labor force grew by 24.5 million persons, with the number of women workers rising by over 14 million, or more than 46 percent. By 1980, half the women of working age held jobs, up from 41 percent in 1970.

WOMEN SOUGHT careers and non-traditional jobs as the women's movement began breaking down old barriers and attitudes. Many had no choice but to work.

- Median household income, when adjusted for inflation, showed virtually no change. Median dollar income for families, which increased 98.3 percent over the decade, was $16,830 in 1980.

Differences in family income were significant among population groups. In 1979, the median income was $20,840 for white families; $12,618 for black families; $14,711 for families of Hispanic origin.

- One in eight Americans was poor—27.5 million persons in 1979 by government definition. This was fewer than in 1969, when one in seven was impoverished. Anti-poverty programs, beginning with Lyndon Johnson's Great Society and including social security increases, did make a dent in the problem.

The national poverty rate in 1979 was 9.4 percent for white persons; 30.2 percent for blacks, and 23.8 percent of Hispanics.

- Americans are better educated than ever. Nationally, 66.3 percent of those 25 years old and above were high school graduates in 1980, compared with 52 percent in 1970 and 41 percent in 1960. Also, 17 percent had completed at least four years of college in 1980, up from 11 percent in 1970. The 1980 Census was the first to show that in every state a majority of the population had completed at least four years of high school.

AFTER ONE YEAR OF REAGAN

DAMAGE REPORT FOR AMERICAN WORKERS

Conservatives in Congress and the White House show a hard-hearted reaction to the economic disaster they have brought to the nation.

UNEMPLOYMENT

"Is it news that some fellow out in South Succotash someplace has just been laid off?" President Reagan asked, as he complained of unfavorable press reports.

No, one unemployed fellow does not a news story make. But 9.9 million unemployed, the highest number since the Great Depression—that's news, and bad news for working Americans. And when the 5.7 million workers forced to take only part-time work, and the 1.3 million discouraged job-seekers are added, nearly 17 million Americans are suffering from the Reagan recession.

Two million people have lost their jobs since the recession began in July 1981. The construction industry is suffering a full-fledged depression, with a 17.9 percent unemployment rate. Other figures:

Unemployment Rates

Blue-collar:	12.9%	Manufacturing:	10.8%
Blacks:	18.0%	In Michigan:	16.1%
Teenagers:	21.9%	Washington:	12.4%

The Reagan Administration has shown a remarkably hard-hearted reaction to the economic disaster it has brought to the nation. The President advised the jobless to search the "help wanted" classified ads, but failed to note that almost all the job offers require a high degree of technical training. The job training programs that could have helped some of the unemployed learn new skills were decimated by Reagan budget cuts. Nearly 200,000 training positions were cut, in addition to the 340,000 public service jobs eliminated in the Republican budget.

Adding insult to injury, the cuts reduced regular unemployment benefits by $1.6 billion and nearly eliminated Trade Adjustment Assistance for workers laid off due to government policies that encourage imports.

JOB SAFETY

Shortly after taking office, the Republican Reagan Administration launched an all-out attack on worker safety and health protections. To employers who can read between the lines, the message is clear: No need to worry about enforcement of safety and health rules by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

To begin with, the Reagan budget cut OSHA funding 8 percent, or 15 percent after allowing for inflation. The results:

OSHA inspections:	Down 21%
Follow-up inspections:	Down 72%
Penalties:	Down 48%
41 OSHA Field Offices to be closed
MSHA penalties:	Down 27%
Mining death toll:	153, Up 15%

The Reagan message to employers: Forget about OSHA.

In addition, the Reagan Department of Labor, instead of proposing new solutions to new safety and health problems, began removing protections already in place. For Example:

13 Million Lose Protection: As of Oct. 1, 1981, three out of every four manufacturing firms are exempt from routine OSHA safety inspections. Thus the employers of 13 million workers lost the major incentive to maintain safe jobsites.

Worker Complaints Ignored: As of Feb. 1, 1982, the Reagan Administration OSHA does not always send an inspector in response to a worker's complaint of a hazard. In about half the cases OSHA will just send a letter to inform the employer of the complaint.

Gutting Standards: Recent petitions for emergency action on three chemical hazards have fallen on deaf ears. Reagan's OSHA has attempted to weaken the cotton dust standard, the cancer standard, and medical-records access standard. The lead standard was weakened, the hearing conservation standard watered down, and the "right to know" chemical plan withdrawn.

PROGRAMS DESTROYED

Many policies of the Republican Reagan Administration can be explained in terms of dollars—shifting hundreds of billions of dollars from middle- and low-income Americans to the wealthiest individuals and corporations. As the charts below show, Reagan budget cuts hit hardest at working Americans, while the Reagan tax cut benefits the wealthy:

Reaganomics means windfalls for the wealthy, and hardship for the rest of us.

Reagan Budget Cuts Hit Workers

Program	Cuts Enacted
Total, all programs:	−$40 Billion
Unemployment Comp.:	−$1.6 Billion
Trade Adjustment:	−$1.4 Billion
Job Training:	−$1.6 Billion
Public service jobs:	−$2.1 Billion
Housing:	−$9.0 Billion
College grants:	−$0.5 Billion
Other education:	−$0.5 Billion
Medicare:	−$1.0 Billion
Railroads:	−$1.4 Billion
Federal pay:	−$3.7 Billion
Federal retirement:	−$0.5 Billion
Child nutrition:	−$0.7 Billion

Reagan Tax Cut Benefits the Rich

Income	Tax Cut in 1983
$10,000	$111
$20,000	$371
$30,000	$744
$40,000	$1,188
$120,000	$5,324

Family of four, one wage earner, 23% personal deductions

And the unfairness of the income tax cut is just the beginning:

- Estate and gift taxes were nearly eliminated—a special windfall for millionaires and near-millionaires.
- One example of the corporate tax cuts: General Electric, which had profits of $2,660,000,000 in 1981, will get a tax refund payment from the government of more than $90 million.

In filling government posts, the Reagan Administration has drawn heavily from the ranks of anti-worker groups.

UNION-BUSTERS

The Reagan Administration has demonstrated another strategy in its attack on worker programs: appointing people with anti-worker backgrounds to direct those programs. For example:

Union-Buster at NLRB: President Reagan's nomination for Chairman of the National Labor Relations Board was John Van de Water, a "management consultant" who helped employers defeat at least 125 union organizing campaigns. Van de Water's advice to employers pushed to the breaking point the laws prohibiting unfair labor practices.

"Right-To-Workers" at DOL, OPM, HHS: In filling government posts, the Republican Administration has drawn heavily from the ranks of the National Right to Work Committee and its Legal Defense Foundation, the employer-front groups that fight union security laws and finance lawsuits against unions:

- Right-to-Work Legislative Director Hugh Reilly was given a top post under Assistant Labor Secretary Donald Dotson, who is in charge of overseeing union finances and pension funds.
- Former Right-to-Work consultant Donald Devine now manages federal hiring as director of the Office of Personnel Management.
- Former Right-to-Work Vice President Andrew Hare was given a top legislative affairs post at the Department of Health and Human Services.
- Former Right-to-Work editor Michelle Easton was appointed staff attorney to a Department of Justice program, from which she transferred to the Department of Education.
- Baker Armstrong Smith, former director of the anti-union Center on National Labor Policy, was appointed to a labor relations post at the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

ANTI-LABOR LAW

Right-wing elements in the Congress have long sought the destruction of laws enacted in the past 50 years to provide American workers and retirees with a measure of security and dignity. Congress' focus on economic issues left little time in 1981 for this agenda, but conservative Republicans seek to push back the clock on workers' rights this year:

Anti-Worker Hobbs Amendments: If amendments to the Hobbs Act are passed, a striker who threw a punch on a picket line could receive up to a 20-year sentence in a federal penitentiary, despite adequate state laws now on the books.

Conservatives in Congress are determined to turn back the clock on worker protection laws.

Davis-Bacon—Prevailing Wages: Conservatives in Congress were unsuccessful in their efforts to remove Davis-Bacon provisions from federal contracts in 1981. But the Reagan Department of Labor weakened the rules used to enforce the law, which requires fair wages on federally contracted construction.

Walsh-Healey—Eight-Hour Day: The Walsh-Healey Act provides for an eight-hour day on federally contracted jobs, thus serving to support America's oldest labor standard. The Republican right wing would like to allow 10-hour days without overtime pay.

Workers' Comp.—Longshore Act: The best workers' compensation law in the nation, the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, faces the possibility of devastating "reforms."

Pensioners Targeted, Too: Business-backed legislators want to weaken the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA), which prevents hardship when private pensions go under due to poor management or company failure.

The material on this page was prepared by the AFL-CIO Department of Legislation; Ray Denison, director.

Honda Agrees To Drop Fight Against UAW

Marysville, Ohio — The Auto Workers and Honda of America have "resolved all outstanding unfair labor practices matters" at the company's motorcycle plant here, the UAW and the company announced.

Honda agreed not to fight two decisions handed down by the National Labor Relations Board ordering bargaining with a UAW unit already in the plant and striking down a company policy against wearing union insignia on the job.

THE AGREEMENT means the Japan-based company will recognize the union as the bargaining agent for four boiler operators at the plant and begin bargaining for a first contract.

The operators had voted for UAW representation in July 1981, and the NLRB had ruled against company claims that it should not have to bargain because the election should have included all employees at the plant.

The company has pledged to remain "neutral" on future UAW organizing efforts, the statement said.

Also, Honda will change its policy, ruled a violation of federal law by the NLRB, that had prohibited union supporters from wearing UAW baseball caps or other emblems on the job.

THE ISSUES were settled "as a result of informal discussions," the joint statement said, adding that both sides "are confident there will be no need to use the NLRB in the future to resolve disputes."

About 400 workers now make Honda motorcycles at the plant here which opened in September 1979. An adjacent auto-making facility now under construction will employ over 2,000 more workers by early 1983.

In the statement, the UAW commended Honda for being the first Japanese company to build cars in the United States.

Honda said it anticipated a "cooperative" relationship with the UAW. The firm promised "neutrality" on a union representation choice.

SHUTDOWN OF BROOKLYN'S federal Occupational Safety & Health Administration office is protested by New York area trade unionists. It was one of more than 40 OSHA facilities across the country closed under a "reorganization plan" by Assistant Labor Sec. Thorne G. Auchter. Joining in the Brooklyn protest, coordinated by the New York Committee for Occupational Safety & Health, was Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan (D-N.Y.). The shutdowns reduce OSHA facilities from 124 to 82 and eliminate 372 enforcement positions.

CLUW to Prepare Women For Union Leadership Roles

The Center for Education & Research of the Coalition of Labor Union Women has launched a project to help more women move into leadership roles in their unions.

The two-year "empowerment project" will be funded by a $235,000 grant from the Carnegie Corp. of New York, CLUW President Joyce D. Miller announced. Miller, an AFL-CIO vice president, also chairs the center's board, and she is a vice president of the Clothing & Textile Workers.

THE CLUW center will develop a model training program and materials keyed to strengthening the leadership skills of union women. The model program will be introduced nationwide through unions and university labor education systems, Miller said.

The education project, Miller said, "will help union women learn the skills to bargain on provisions like pay equity and child care in their contracts," and teach them "how to take an active part in their unions and to become effective union leaders."

WOMEN MAKE UP 25 percent of union membership in the United States but hold only 12 percent of the leadership positions in their organizations, Miller said.

The project's director, Ellen Wernick, said the materials now being prepared will include topics such as techniques for building political skills; how unions function and are administered; and developing leadership skills. Both print and audio-visual programs will be available.

The center expects to hold a national conference in late 1982 to introduce the model program to officers, education directors and women's activities directors of unions and to members of the University & College Education Association.

A series of regional conferences is also planned to provide technical assistance to unions and labor educators interested in conducting training programs. The model program and the supporting materials will also be distributed to CLUW chapters.

MILLER emphasized that some unions and universities are already conducting leadership programs for women trade unionists, "but there need to be more."

CLUW's research, she said, "shows that union women generally do not participate in union leadership training programs, and that there is realtively little institutional support for programs specifically for union women."

The CLUW project "brings together union leaders, labor educators and rank-and-file union women to address these problems and to work together toward the empowerment of union women," Miller said.

Drozak Hits Reagan Stand On Cargo Bill

New Orleans—The Reagan Administration has done "nothing significant" to improve the maritime industry since taking office 15 months ago, Seafarers President Frank Drozak charged in a speech at Tulane University here.

"The long-awaited promotional program has finally reared its ugly head. It is a non-policy," Drozak told a Tulane Foreign Trade Institute meeting.

AN APR. 19 letter from Transportation Sec. Drew Lewis to Congress discarding the President's seven-point maritime program makes the Administration's intent "crystal clear," Drozak said.

He noted that the letter expresses the Administration's opposition to the only major initiative to strengthen the U.S.-flag dry bulk fleet as set forth in the Maritime Dry Bulk Trade Act, which is part of the House Merchant Marine Committee's port development bill. The legislation would guarantee that American-flag ships get a substantial share of U.S. bulk trade.

"This promotional effort is the one existing hope of building a bulk fleet and, in turn, of revitalizing a key sector of the maritime industry," Drozak said.

THE STATE DEPT. is concerned that enactment of the proposed Maritime Dry Bulk Trade Act may have a negative effect on U.S. foreign relations, Drozak noted.

"Bear in mind, the President himself said that what the United States must do is 'recognize the challenges created by cargo policies of other nations. . . . A major goal of the United States must be to insure that American-flag ships carry an equitable portion of our trade'," Drozak quoted.

"The Maritime Dry Bulk Trade Act would fulfill the President's own promises —at no cost to the federal government or the American taxpayer."

SO FAR, the only positive step toward helping the ailing industry has been support of regulatory reform, which the Seafarers favor. It is essentially a housekeeping chore, however, and fails to build a single new ship or create a single new job, Drozak pointed out.

He urged the Administration to come out with a "real program" centered on a cargo policy including bilateral shipping agreements with U.S. trading partners.

Labor Studies Center Lists Institute Schedule for May

Four labor studies programs highlight activities at the George Meany Center for Labor Studies during May. They will cover safety and health, issues in the economy, newswriting and editing for union publications, and mini-computers for local unions.

Six AFL-CIO affiliates will use the campus for their own staff training during the month, and the American Institute for Free Labor Development will also use the campus. The schedule:

Occupational Safety & Health, May 9-14—An institute to equip union officials with skills necessary to respond to workers' problems with chemical and physical hazards at work. Participants will be coached in the nature and causes of occupational diseases.

Issues in the Economy, May 16-19—A background program co-sponsored with the AFL-CIO Dept. of Economic Research emphasizing alternatives to supply-side theory. Topics will include federal budget, tax policies and monetary policies to control inflation and achieve high employment, output and productivity.

Newswriting & Editing for Union Publications, May 16-21—A workshop for union editors on how to make their publications more readable, more credible, and more useful to union members. The International Labor Press Association is co-sponsor of this workshop.

Mini-Computers for Local Unions, May 24-26—A program to help local unions find the right hardware and software for their needs, get the best system for the least money and plan conversion from manual to automated systems.

Affiliates using the Meany Center campus for their own leadership training during May are the Clothing & Textile Workers, May 2-7; Operating Engineers, May 7; Carpenters, May 9-15; Railway & Airline Clerks, May 16-21; National Football League Players Association, May 23-27; AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept., May 23-28.

The AIFLD will bring 40 Spanish-speaking trade union officers to the campus for its 103rd class beginning May 3 and continuing until June 12.

Information on these and other labor studies programs may be obtained from Fred K. Hoehler, Jr., executive director, George Meany Center for Labor Studies, 10000 New Hampshire Ave., Silver Spring, Md. 20903. Telephone 301/431-6400.

Peter Harrison Dies, Midwest Field Staffer

Harvey, Ill.—Peter J. Harrison, an AFL-CIO field representative since 1961, died Apr. 22 at Ingalls Memorial Hospital after heart surgery. He was 60.

Harrison, who was with the federation's Region I staff based in Westchester, Ill., came out of the Paperworkers. His recent assignments included the coordination of a Machinists' organizing campaign and assistance for Air Traffic Controllers.

In a message to his family, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland and Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue noted that Harrison made a vital contribution to the labor movement during his two decades on the federation's staff.

In addition to his wife Connie, Harrison is survived by a son and a daughter.

Matsunaga Fills Democratic Slot On Labor Panel

Sen. Spark M. Matsunaga of Hawaii has been appointed to a Democratic vacancy on the Senate Labor & Human Resources Committee, and AFL-CIO Legislative Director Ray Denison said he will be "an excellent addition."

Matsunaga, who has served in the Senate since 1976 after 14 years in the House, has an 85 percent "right" voting record by AFL-CIO standards—putting him in the mainstream of Senate Democrats. He fills the vacancy left by the resignation of Harrison A. Williams (D-N.J.) earlier this year.

HIS APPOINTMENT restores the committee ratio to 9 Republicans and 7 Democrats—and an almost even division between conservative Republicans and a bipartisan moderate-to-liberal coalition.

The New Jersey Republican named to succeed Williams in the Senate, Nicholas F. Brady, was assigned to the Armed Services Committee and the Banking, Housing & Urban Affairs Committee. In both cases, the committee ratios shifted to give the Republicans a 10-8 majority on Armed Services instead of 9-8 and a 9-7 majority on Banking, up from 8-7.

The resignation of Williams also left a Democratic vacancy on the Banking Committee, which was filled by Sen. Jim Sasser of Tennessee.

'Hispanic Solidarity'

Latin Unionists Stress Registration, Vote Goals

Los Angeles—"Hispanic Solidarity" set the theme of the 4th national membership meeting of the Labor Council for Latin American Advancement (LCLAA), as delegates placed emphasis on registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns for the 1982 elections.

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) topped a list of speakers that included President Cesar Chavez of the Farm Workers, Representatives Edward Roybal (D-Calif.) and Robert Garcia (D-N.Y.); Tony Bonilla, president of the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC); and Carmela Lacayo, national executive director of the Asociacíon Nacional Pro Personas Mayores. Margo Albert, the actor and Hispanic community leader, spoke at the banquet at which Donahue was keynoter.

DONAHUE UNDERLINED the importance of this year's elections by urging the delegates to make themselves felt on the next Solidarity Day—Election Day, Nov. 2, 1982.

He called particular attention to states with such Hispanic populations as 40 percent in New Mexico, 19 percent in Arizona, 18 percent in Texas, 16 percent in California, all of which have Senate races this year.

But he also cited states like Utah, "where we hope a very tight race will develop against Orrin Hatch, who has done us untold mischief as chairman of the Senate Labor Committee during the 97th Congress, and votes against us 90 percent of the time."

DONAHUE POINTED out that while Hispanics have only 4 percent of the population, Utah has a potential Hispanic vote of more than 30,000, which could make a difference in the election. The same could be true in other states, Donahue said.

Delegates were joined by Hispanics of the community, including entire families, in the overflowing convention hall to hear Sen. Kennedy, who hailed "this demonstration of Hispanic Solidarity."

Kennedy denounced the Reagan Administration's "supply-side zealots" at the Office of Management & Budget "and its new right allies in Congress," charging that they are seeking to turn back the clock on all the progress of the past.

"LET US send them a message that they cannot misunderstand," Kennedy said. "The social, political and economic gains won in the decade since LCLAA was founded must not be rolled back. The current round of unjust Reagan budget cuts must not be enacted into law."

LCLAA President Henry L. Lacayo sharply attacked President Reagan for engaging in a form of double-talk that Lacayo called "Reaganspeak."

"Reaganspeak is telling a group of workers that unemployment is going down when it is going up," Lacayo said. "Reaganspeak is telling college students who drop out because of sharp cuts in student aid that federal aid to education is not being slashed.

"Reaganspeak is telling the elderly that nothing is going to happen to social security, while at the same time cutting it up in budget sessions.

"REAGANSPEAK is when you promise so-called safety nets for the truly needy and then push Reaganomics, which is creating a new class of poor out of the middle class, which is added to the old poor, the unemployed, the handicapped, the elderly, women, Hispanics, and other minorities . . ."

Lacayo, director of UAW-CAP, was unanimously re-elected by the council as were Executive Vice President Jack Otero who is a vice president of the Railway & Airline Clerks, and Sec.-Treas. Oscar Sanchez, Steelworkers. Re-elected as vice presidents were Maria Portalatin, Teachers; Manuel Gonzalez, Ladies' Garment Workers; Rudy Mendoza, Communications Workers; J. J. Rodriguez, Food & Commercial Workers, and Alfonso Rodriguez, Carpenters. S. Q. (Chano) Merino, Steelworkers, was elected a vice president to succeed Michael Garcia of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, who did not run for re-election.

HISPANIC SOLIDARITY with emphasis on getting out the vote for the '82 elections was the keynote of the national membership meeting of the Labor Council for Latin American Advancement in Los Angeles. Among those taking part in the sessions were, seated from left, Margo Albert, actor and Hispanic community leader; actor Eddie Albert; AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue; and, standing, LCLAA President Henry L. Lacayo and Executive Vice President Jack F. Otero.

Consumer Price Index Drops As Recession Stalls Buying

Consumer prices, heavily influenced by the recession, declined in March for the first time in 17 years, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

The decline of two-tenths of 1 percent in the consumer price index for urban wage earners and clerical workers (CPI-W) followed five months of price rises at an annual rate of about 3.5 percent.

ECONOMISTS attributed the March decline to the recession—now in its ninth month—the Federal Reserve Board's tight-money policies, the worldwide oil glut, and favorable crop developments.

With official unemployment at a post-World War II high of 9 percent, millions of Americans have cut back on buying, and the reduced demand for consumer goods and services has served to pare prices.

Despite lower consumer prices, "real" spendable earnings of production and nonsupervisory workers rose by only two-tenths of 1 percent in March, and were down by 1.6 percent from the year-earlier level. Real spendable earnings are after-tax wages expressed in constant 1977 dollars. BLS said that a decline in weekly hours, reflecting the recession, shaved the gain for inflation-adjusted earnings in March.

THE DECLINE in the March CPI was the first since a drop of one-tenth of 1 percent in August 1965. The CPI has risen 6.8 percent over the last 12 months.

A major factor in the March price picture was a 3.9 percent drop in gasoline prices, which helped bring about a 1-percent decline in overall transportation costs, the third consecutive decrease in this category. There were also substantial declines in food prices, home mortgage rates, and house prices.

Medical care costs rose eight-tenths of 1 percent, reflecting large increases in charges for hospital rooms and prices for prescription and non-prescription drugs and medical supplies. Prices for apparel and personal upkeep rose seven-tenths of 1 percent, entertainment three-tenths of 1 percent, and other goods and services 1 percent.

THE HOUSING component of the index fell three-tenths of 1 percent, following increases in the previous two months. Most of the decline in mortgage interest rates came from the drop in early March in the Federal Housing Administration and Veterans Administration insured mortgage rate, to 15.5 percent from 16.5 percent.

Grocery store food prices fell five-tenths of 1 percent, following increases of 1 percent, and six-tenths of 1 percent in January and February, respectively.

Over the past 12 months, the fastest-rising component of the CPI continued to be medical care costs, up 10.6 percent from March to March.

Steel Union Asks Import Quotas to Halt Job Losses

(Continued from Page 1)

who feel deprived of their right to make a living."

IN A RELATED area, the union and 11 specialty steel companies filed an anti-dumping petition with the Dept. of Commerce covering stainless steel sheet and strip products imported from West Germany.

The petition charges that the steel products are being sold in the United States for 20 percent less than prices to West German customers, with the differential rising to 80 percent in some cases.

A spokesman for the specialty steel industry, Dr. Adolph J. Lena, charged that "dumping" was responsible for a rise in West German specialty steel exports to the United States from 307 tons in 1980 to 15,489 tons last year, with projections of still higher inroads this year.

'You're a Real Handyman!'

Rep. Ashbrook Dies, Leading Conservative

John M. Ashbrook, a champion of conservative causes during 11 terms as a Republican congressman from Ohio, died suddenly at 53 while campaigning for his party's senatorial nomination.

Ashbrook, who had a COPE record of 214 "wrong" votes and only 26 "right" votes on issues important to labor, was the senior Republican on the House Education & Labor Committee. He had been considered the leader in a three-way contest for the GOP nomination to challenge the re-election bid of Sen. Howard M. Metzenbaum.

Rep. John N. Erlenborn of Illinois, who has an identical 11-percent "right" voting record, now becomes the ranking Republican on the Education & Labor Committee.

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

5/1/82

Tax Bill Embraces Labor's Plan

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII — Saturday, May 8, 1982 — No. 18

SOLIDARITY SUPPORTERS in Warsaw's Old Town demonstrate May 3 for an end to the martial law imposed by the Polish communist government. Hundreds of police and riot troops, backed by water cannons, later teargassed and clubbed the union protesters as they chanted "Solidarity! Solidarity!" The protests flared up throughout Poland.

Key Reforms Would Yield Added Funds

By David L. Perlman

The AFL-CIO and its coalition allies called on Congress to shape a federal budget that would finance recession-fighting programs with tax reforms that would shave tens of billions of dollars from President Reagan's projected deficit.

Labor's revenue-raising reforms were introduced in the House on May 4 by Rep. Thomas J. Downey (D-N.Y.), a member of both the House Budget Committee and the tax-writing Ways & Means Committee.

DOWNEY TOLD his colleagues that the measure, based on the proposals made by the AFL-CIO Executive Council earlier this year, would "recapture sufficient revenues to fight inflation, maintain essential public investments and protections, reduce the deficit and permit a lowering of interest rates." (Excerpts, Page 5.)

It would bring in $157.5 billion over the next three years, substantially more than the package put together by Republicans on the Senate Budget Committee. The GOP plan would make up for lessened revenue by cutting $40 billion from social security benefits and curtailing all non-defense programs.

Senate Republicans acted after Reagan went on television to blame Democrats for the breakdown of bipartisan negotiations for a "consensus" budget.

THE PRESIDENT again ascribed the nation's economic problems to the policies of his predecessors in the White House and said the tax cuts enacted last year are necessary to restore incentives.

Reagan went on to endorse a proposed constitutional amendment requiring a balanced budget—despite the fact that his own budget proposal sent to Congress in January projects a deficit of more than $100 billion.

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland termed Reagan's constitutional amendment endorsement "a dangerous abdication of political responsibility." Full employment, not a constitutional amendment, is the path to a balanced budget, Kirkland insisted. (Text, Page 4.)

THE BUDGET COALITION, which includes the AFL-CIO and some 200 organizations, said Congress must take the initiative in changing the nation's economic direction.

The economy is in shambles because the Reagan economic program "has worked"—against the American people, the coalition said. But "fighting inflation with recession and joblessness is cruel and unfair." The need is for jobs, "not further cuts in vital social programs," the coalition statement stressed.

(Continued on Page 8)

Kirkland Presses U.S. Support

Solidarity's Cause Spurs Polish Demonstrations

By James M. Shevis

Widespread anti-government demonstrations of support for Poland's suspended Solidarity labor union prove that the organization "is alive and speaks for the Polish people," the AFL-CIO declared.

"It is further evidence of the depth of the human hunger for freedom," Federation President Lane Kirkland said following the demonstrations in Warsaw and other major Polish cities on May 3.

"WHAT IS NEEDED now is for the U.S. government to make good its promises to help the Polish people by giving their aspirations a chance," Kirkland stressed.

Soon after the military junta headed by Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski imposed martial law in Poland last December, President Reagan announced a limited set of U.S. economic sanctions against the Polish communist government and the Soviet Union for its role in the crackdown. He also promised further action if the junta did not relax its iron grip on the country, free Lech Walesa and other Solidarity leaders, and live up to the terms of the 1980 Gdansk agreement giving birth to Poland's independent trade union movement.

New U.S. sanctions "are now long overdue," said Kirkland. "It is time for America to come down on the side of freedom."

AN UNOFFICIAL May 1 demonstration in support of Solidarity provided the backdrop to the latest show of Polish unrest. Some 30,000 Poles, drawn to Warsaw's Old Town section in a counter-march to the Communist Party's annual May Day celebration held only a few blocks away, burned red communist flags, chanted "We want freedom" and yelled "Gestapo, Gestapo!" at onlooking policemen.

Called by underground Solidarity leaders, the march came two days after the junta had freed about 1,000 people detained since the military crackdown and announced easing of restrictions, including an 11 p.m. to 5 a.m. curfew in the capital city.

Police and security forces tolerated the May Day demonstration, but turned to violence May 3 when a throng of about 10,000 assembled in Warsaw's historic Castle Square to express anew their opposition to the regime. Police charged into the crowd, swinging clubs, as militiamen turned water cannons, flares, and tear gas on the unarmed protesters.

THIS TIME, the protests spread throughout Poland to the coastal cities of Gdansk and Szczecin and the central and southern cities of Bydgoszcz, Torun, Lublin, Lodz, and Cracow. New York Times reporter John Darnton in Warsaw reported

(Continued on Page 3)

Economic Index Continues Drop For 11th Month

The government's index of leading economic indicators declined in March for the 11th straight month, signaling no letup in the Reagan recession.

The index, which is designed to forecast economic change, fell five-tenths of 1 percent, the same as in February but less than half the 1.2-percent January deficit. The economic barometer generally shows an increase a month or two before a recovery begins.

THE COMMERCE DEPT., which reported the drop, said six of the 10 available components of the index contributed to the March decline. The largest drop was in the length of the average manufacturing workweek. A rise in initial claims for state unemployment benefits, which has a downward impact on the index, also contributed to the month's decline.

(Continued on Page 7)

Voting Rights Bill Advances in Senate

A labor-supported bill to extend and clarify the Voting Rights Act cleared the Senate Judiciary Committee and seems assured of easy passage when it reaches the Senate floor.

The House passed a similar measure last October, but the Reagan Administration opposed that bill because it included language to overcome a Supreme Court ruling that would make it much more difficult to overturn discriminatory election law changes.

AT ISSUE was whether a law could be overturned if it had the effect of discriminating against minorities, as the House bill specified, or whether there had to be evidence of "intent" to discriminate, as the Supreme Court interpreted the original 1965 law.

In the Senate Judiciary Committee, a compromise shaped by Sen. Robert Dole (R-Kan.) in consultation with the civil rights coalition, resolved the issue to the satisfaction of all but a few conservative hard-liners.

It requires courts to consider the "totality of circumstances" surrounding discrimination charges, not merely the intent. And it specifies that racial quotas, such as election of minorities "in numbers equal to their proportion in the population," are not required to show the absence of discrimination.

President Reagan, who has been sharply criticized for past actions that showed insensitivity to minority concerns, did a turnabout and embraced the new version as a "constructive, bipartisan compromise."

IT WAS included in the bill by a 14-4 vote, with only Judiciary Committee Chairman Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.), Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah), John P. East (R-N.C.) and Jeremiah Denton (R-Ala.) opposed. Only East voted against sending the measure to the Senate floor.

Senators Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) and Charles McC. Mathias, Jr. (R-Md.) are the chief sponsors of the legislation, which clearly commands sufficient support to squelch any filibuster attempt.

The Voting Rights Act, first passed in 1965 and subsequently extended to cover discrimination against Hispanics and other language minorities, is often termed the nation's most successful civil rights law. It brought a dramatic rise in black voting in the South.

Some portions of the law are permanent, including a ban on literacy tests and criminal penalties for interfering with voting rights. But most of the provisions will expire in August, unless Congress acts.

The House-passed bill and the Senate version continue requirements that nine states and portions of 13 others must obtain advance clearance from the Justice Dept. before changing voting laws or elec-

(Continued on Page 6)

Study Finds Oil Import Tax Fueling Inflation

A proposed oil import tax would fuel inflation, ravage the economy and destroy hundreds of thousands of jobs, the Consumer Energy Council of America warned in testimony before Congress.

CECA told the House subcommittee on energy and environment that its own study, "A Comprehensive Analysis of the Impact of a Crude Oil Import Fee," demonstrates that any "potential gains" from the imposition of such fees would rapidly be offset by its serious "negative economic impacts."

THE LABOR-SUPPORTED council's 140-page study, subtitled "Dismantling a Trojan Horse," was presented to the committee that is considering the oil import tax as part of the current round of budget deliberations.

Its conclusions parallel the AFL-CIO's position that the import fee would be "unfair, inflationary and job destructive."

In a letter to all members of Congress and using an analysis done by the House Energy & Commerce Committee, AFL-CIO Legislative Director Ray Denison stressed that the burden of the impact of the tax will fall heaviest on American workers and their families "already hard-pressed by inflation and soaring unemployment."

CECA RESEARCH Director Mark Cooper called the proposal "the worst, least cost-effective, most inequitable strategic energy response we have available."

Better solutions, he said, include putting five times as much oil into the strategic petroleum reserves. Also, "we could resurrect all of the conservation programs gutted by the Reagan Administration . . . establish contingency responses under a standby petroleum allocation act, which the Administration has recently vetoed."

The report projects that the proposed tax would lead to inefficiency in the energy market to the tune of about $1 billion a year in economic waste.

Also, the total gross national product would be reduced by one percent or $30 billion, and inflation would increase by at least one-half a percentage point.

"THE DECLINE in economic activity would lead directly to a dramatic reduction in the revenue-raising potential of the fee," Cooper said, "so that the actual revenue raised is far less than half the price of the increase."

The study projects revenue losses of:

- $4.5 billion from the decline of tax receipts in non-energy sectors of the economy, or 28 percent of gross revenues.
- $1.8 billion due to additional federal outlays to pay costs of higher unemployment and other social assistance programs, about 11 percent of gross revenues.
- $1.8 billion attributed to increases in federal outlays from entitlements to individuals indexed against inflation.
- $1.0 billion due to other inflation-linked increases in federal outlays.

ENERGY TAXES are "cruelly regressive," Cooper said, stressing that the study shows that imposition of the oil import tax would wipe out what benefit there was for the low and middle-income taxpayer in the 1981 tax cuts.

According to CECA, the 22.5 percent of the population earning less than $10,000 a year would have about two-thirds of their tax cuts erased by the fee and price increases related to it.

People earning $10,000 to $20,000 a year, about 25 percent of the population, and those earning $20,000 to $40,000, about 35 percent, would lose about one-third of their tax cuts.

On the other hand, those earning $40,000 to $80,000, about 16 percent of the population, would lose less than one-sixth and the 1.2 percent of the population earning over $80,000 could expect to lose nothing at all and might even benefit from increased oil company profits, CECA said.

COOPER SAID the study "shows the absurd irony of the import fee." The same policy-makers who created the 1981 tax cuts and current budget deficits "are threatening to further undermine social equity by trying to close the deficits with an even more regressive tax increase this year—the import fee," he observed.

He called the proposal "a massive national tax shell game in which the rich gain at the expense of the poor and the middle class."

Attempts to balance the federal budget by imposing regressive energy taxes "are nothing less than economic suicide," he said. "They don't effectively raise revenues, they damage the economy, and they place a massive burden on the poor and middle classes."

AT HOUSE HEARINGS on mass transit assistance, union witnesses urged rejection of an Administration proposal to phase out federal operating subsidies, starting with a 38-percent cutback from this year's budget. From left: Legislative Director Robert A. Molofsky and General Counsel Earle W. Putnam of the Amalgamated Transit Union and President William G. Lindner and General Counsel Arthur Luby of the Transport Workers.

Halt in Mass Transit Subsidy Seen Eroding Service, Jobs

The AFL-CIO and its affiliates pressed Congress to continue federal mass transit assistance and reject an Administration bill that would phase out operating subsidies, withdraw collective bargaining guarantees and weaken enforcement of Davis-Bacon Act prevailing wages.

Labor's objections to the Reagan Administration cuts were spelled out by the Amalgamated Transit Union and the Transport Workers at House and Senate hearings, and in letters to the subcommittees by AFL-CIO Legislative Director Ray Denison.

DENISON WARNED that ending operating subsidies would compel most public transit systems to "raise fares and reduce services." That in turn would touch off a destructive spiral of ridership losses compelling further cuts in service and new rounds of fare increases. The end result, he declared, would be to isolate large numbers of workers from job opportunities and further damage the economy.

Transport Workers President William G. Lindner and the Transit Union's general counsel, Earle W. Putnam, endorsed the approach taken by Sen. Alfonse D'Amato (R-N.Y.) and a bipartisan group of co-sponsors.

While the D'Amato measure does not provide the increased funding levels labor has urged, it includes both capital grants and operating subsidies as part of a single general assistance program. It would also continue the existing requirement for continued collective bargaining with unions of transit employees and other labor standards safeguards.

LINDNER WARNED in testimony before the Senate Housing & Urban Affairs subcommittee and the House Surface Transportation subcommittee that urban mass transit is unlikely to survive the decade of the 1980s without continuation of federal operating assistance.

He noted that the Administration argues that the reduced level of federal assistance should be concentrated on capital grants that will improve "productivity." But the chief problem of productivity is vehicles disabled and out of service, Lindner noted. "The fundamental barriers to gains in productivity are operating and maintenance deficiencies, not capital deficiencies."

Testifying for the Transit Union before the two panels, Putnam said the 38-percent cut in operating assistance the Administration has proposed for the 1983 fiscal year—as the first step in the proposed phaseout—"amounts to a deliberate abandonment of the national goal of promoting an expansion of transit services and increased ridership."

States and cities are simply not able to pick up the tab for abandoned federal assistance, he warned. And if this is supposed to represent the President's "new federalism" concept, "it seems to us a step toward no federalism at all," he said.

The two unions sharply protested the Administration attempt to eliminate collective bargaining requirements as a condition of receiving federal grants, and submitted wage comparisons refuting the Administration contention that the labor provisions of existing law led to excessive wage increases.

Denison's letter on behalf of the AFL-CIO termed the Administration bill "destructive of good labor-management relationships in the transit industry."

HE NOTED that the Administration would make the labor standards protections "inapplicable to 90 percent of the federal support programs" for mass transit. And it would transfer administration of the labor protections that remain from the Dept. of Labor to the Dept. of Transportation, despite that agency's "lack of expertise."

Denison also informed the two subcommittees that the AFL-CIO considers "unacceptable" the Administration proposal to allow recipients of federal grants to certify compliance with Davis-Bacon requirements without verification.

Goodrich Accord Wraps Up Bargaining in Tire Industry

Akron, Ohio—The Rubber Workers wound up their current round of bargaining with the tire industry, signing a master agreement covering some 42,000 URW members employed by the nation's Big Four tire makers.

"We've maintained pattern bargaining in the industry in 1982 without a confrontation, and I'm happy about that," URW President Milan Stone observed.

THE UNION signed a tentative contract with Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. on May 3, and a similar pact with Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. on Apr. 30. Both agreements followed the pattern settlement with the B. F. Goodrich Co. attained Apr. 19. The other member of the Big Four, Uniroyal Inc., reached agreement on labor concessions late last year because of severe financial losses.

Goodrich workers already have ratified the new three-year pact. Approval by Firestone and Goodyear employees is expected within 10 days of the contract signing.

The new pacts replace agreements that expired on Apr. 21. Goodyear, the largest of the firms, employs 19,000 URW members, Firestone 9,500, Goodrich 8,700, and Uniroyal 4,800.

In a separate contract with Goodrich's Akron plant, Local 5 members voted by a 2 to 1 ratio to approve a three-year concessions package to save the facility from closing. The plant employs 2,000.

IN RETURN for wage reductions that could total as much as 81 cents an hour over the life of the pact, Goodrich agreed to keep most of its Akron production lines open and institute a profit-sharing plan. Management officials have said the facility, which employed up to 11,000 workers in the 1950s, has been losing $1 million a month for two years.

The master agreement with Goodrich, Firestone, and Goodyear maintains the existing cost-of-living formula of one-cent an hour for every .26-point rise in the national consumer price index, but does not provide general wage increases. Based on an anticipated 7-percent increase annually in the CPI, the COL formula would result in about $2.44 an hour in wage increases over the life of the contracts.

The pacts also provide employee protection in the event of plant closures, and extend group health insurance rates for senior workers who are laid off.

Employees at Firestone's industrial products facility in Noblesville, Ind., are not covered by the economic terms of the pattern settlement, having voted special concessions early last year that will continue until 1985.

Coalition Report Documents Huge Tax Cut Inequities

A new study of the Reagan tax program by Citizens for Tax Justice (CTJ) documents the huge inequities and economic shortcomings of the 1981 tax act.

The study, "The Reagan Tax Shift: A Report on the Economic Recovery Act of 1981," details how the law "showers tax reductions on the very highest income individuals, and virtually wipes out the corporate income tax," while "middle- and lower-income taxpayers will end up paying higher taxes."

Robert S. McIntyre, CTJ's federal tax policy director, says the report should dispel any lingering doubts about the unfairness of last year's tax bill. It "is not only a travesty of tax fairness, it is an economic disaster," he observed.

CTJ is a coalition of public interest, citizens and labor groups, including the AFL-CIO, which represents average taxpayers in seeking fairer, simpler, and more efficient tax laws at the national, state, and local levels. The report is available from Citizens for Tax Justice, 2020 K Street, N.W., Suite 200, Washington, D.C. 20006.

New Protests Evoke Spirit Of Solidarity

(Continued from Page 1)

that clashes also were said to have erupted in a number of small towns. Travelers from Gdansk, where Solidarity came into being in August 1980, said violence there was even greater than in Warsaw.

The government quickly reimposed the Warsaw curfew it had lifted only the day before and reinstated other tough security measures. Telephone lines in the capital were cut, cultural and sports events suspended, and the use of private cars banned.

In a special address to the Sejm, or Parliament, Interior Minister Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak disclosed that 1,372 people had been taken into custody for participating in the May 3 demonstrations. He blamed the disturbances on "enemies of socialism" acting in conspiracy with "reactionary" forces in the West.

THE PROTESTS were the biggest open defiance against the Jaruzelski rule since its crackdown on Solidarity last Dec. 13. At that time, the junta banned public gatherings other than religious services, rounded up and jailed Solidarity leaders, and suspended all union activities.

Solidarity, the only independent union in the Soviet bloc, did not dissolve, but went underground. A clandestine radio station defied communist authorities last month, and urged Poles to resist the junta and fight for their union. "Radio Solidarity" went on the air again May 3 but was audible only in some parts of Warsaw and then drowned out by heavy jamming

The Reagan Administration called the violence in Poland "a result of frustration" and urged the Polish government to open a dialogue with Solidarity and leaders of Poland's influential Roman Catholic Church.

Testifying before a Senate Appropriations subcommittee, Sec. of State Alexander Haig said the Polish government and its Soviet allies are "lagging badly" in meeting U.S. requirements for the resumption of normal trade and scientific exchange with the United States.

$65 Raise Won By 30,000 in N.Y. Building Services

New York—Thirty thousand apartment house employees here will receive a $65-a-week pay raise over three years under a new contract negotiated by Local 32B-32J of the Service Employees.

In addition to the wage increase, the contract with the city's apartment house owners includes an improved cost-of-living provision, strengthened job security, an additional holiday, full pay for unused sick days, plus major improvements in health, dental and pension benefits, and life insurance.

THE SETTLEMENT, which Local President Guy Bevona termed the best ever achieved in the union's 48-year history, came at the end of a marathon negotiating session that lasted 29 hours.

Strikes of eight days in 1979 and 17 days in 1976 had been necessary to achieve the union's two previous contracts. The agreement covers 3,500 buildings in Manhattan, Brooklyn, Queens and Staten Island and sets a pattern for settlements with buildings not represented by the Realty Advisory Board.

THE AGREEMENT provides for a raise of $24 a week immediately, $21 in the second year and $20 the third year. The cost-of-living clause, which kicks in if the consumer price index exceeds 8.5 percent in any year, was improved over previous levels. Unused sick days will now be paid in full, instead of at the 70 percent rate.

A unique provision for an 11th holiday will allow workers the choice of Good Friday, Yom Kippur or the birthday of Martin Luther King.

MUSICAL REVUE brought picket line relief for 2,000 members of District 1199 who had been on strike for 27 days in support of 78 registered nurses before a settlement was reached with Long Island Jewish Medical Center in New Hyde Park, N.Y. The performance was provided by the union's continuing Bread and Roses cultural program. District 1199 is the health care division of the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union. The revue, "Take Care, Take Care," is scheduled for a two-week run in a number of cities on the West Coast.

CLUW Delegates Review Growth, Press Program for Women Workers

Los Angeles—Banners proclaiming "a past of progress and a future of promise" set the theme for the second biennial convention of the Coalition of Labor Union Women, which drew more than 900 delegates, alternates, observers and visitors from 20 countries.

CLUW President Joyce Miller, a vice president of the Clothing & Textile Workers and a member of the AFL-CIO Executive Council, cited the organization's growth since its 1979 convention from 30 chapters to 65 and a doubling of membership.

MILLER OUTLINED recent CLUW programs to help organize the unorganized and emphasized CLUW's continuing commitment to ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment and establishment of quality child care. Other areas of concern, she noted, include "the problems of older women workers, inequities of the social security system, and the dangers posed by sexual harassment."

And pay equity, she observed, is a key issue for CLUW "as we work to dispel some of the myths surrounding equal pay for work of comparable value."

Despite the solid gains of the past two years, Miller warned, "the anti-worker, anti-woman policies of the Reagan Administration have had a devastating impact on women." Citing jobless figures of 17.6 percent for black women heads of household and 8.1 percent for white women, she noted that almost 300,000 more women have been added to the jobless rolls during the first three months of 1982.

"THERE IS NO mystery about these figures," Miller said. "Every program that would have encouraged the hiring of women, the maintenance of women on the job, the development of new jobs for women and the training of women has been cut.

"Women had only just begun their climb up the economic ladder when Ronald Reagan lowered the boom. And trying to climb that ladder with the President stomping on your fingers is not easy."

Miller called on CLUW members to make a statement with their ballots on Solidarity Day II—Election Day, Nov. 2—showing the Reagan Administration "that we totally oppose economic policies which take from the poor and provide for the rich. We must encourage our unions to develop strong grass-roots political organizations and we must become leaders in those organizations."

DELEGATES heard welcoming remarks from Bill Robertson, executive secretary-treasurer of the Los Angeles County AFL-CIO, and John F. Henning, executive secretary-treasurer of the California AFL-CIO.

California Gov. Jerry Brown told the delegates that "the onslaught of budget cuts has created a challenge to organize and mobilize. The Administration's abuses of public trust provide a stimulus to respond with alternatives. We cannot build a strong economy on trickle-down theories and a multinational philosophy."

David Sickler, coordinator of the Coors boycott, was greeted with signs and cheers in support of the boycott campaign. Tracing the history of the dispute with "a company that demands workers leave their rights at the plant gate," Sickler praised CLUW for its part in the effective boycott, which he said has reduced Coors' share of the California market from 50 percent to 16 percent since 1977.

VICE PRESIDENT Delores Huerta of the Farm Workers, stressed in an address to the delegates that women trade unionists "have a clear mission and purpose in assuming leadership roles to help organize unorganized workers."

She reported that the UFW "has been hit hard" by recent arrests of undocumented workers by the Immigration & Naturalization Service and charged that "the Reagan Administration is trying to make Mexican workers the scapegoats for the high unemployment rates."

Other speakers included Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley; Yvonne Burke, former congresswoman; Maxine Waters, assistant majority leader of the California Assembly; William Lucy, secretary-treasurer of the State, County & Municipal Employees; M. E. Anderson, director of the Western Conference of Teamsters; Sec.-Treas. Elmer Chatak of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., and William Pollard, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights.

IN AN expression of solidarity with workers at Litton Industries, more than 500 CLUW members demonstrated in front of Litton's headquarters in nearby Beverly Hills. The spirited demonstration was part of a nationwide campaign to inform the public of the firm's systematic union-busting over two decades.

The delegates acted on a score of resolutions ranging from support for affirmative action, ERA, pay equity and comprehensive child care to opposition to the Reagan Administration's economic policies.

Also approved were a number of constitutional amendments including an increase in the number of vice presidents from four to seven and a new annual dues structure of $11 (up from $10) with the additional $1 earmarked for the state CLUW structure.

Officers elected for two-year terms are: president, Joyce Miller, ACTWU; executive vice president, Addie Wyatt, Food & Commercial Workers; treasurer, Gloria Johnson, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; corresponding secretary, Elinor Glenn, Service Employees; recording secretary, Lela Foreman, Communications Workers; vice presidents, Odessa Komer, Auto Workers; Georgia McGhee, AFSCME; Clara Day, IBT; Pat Halpin, Teachers; Gwen Newton, Office & Professional Employees; Evelyn Dubrow, Ladies' Garment Workers, and Joycelyn Thompson, Machinists.

High Court Rejects Challenge To Bona Fide Seniority Plan

The Supreme Court has again rebuffed a challenge to a union-negotiated seniority system under the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

Its 7-2 decision rebuked the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals for second-guessing a federal district court on the facts of the case.

THE LOWER COURT had found no evidence of discriminatory intent in the negotiation or administration of the seniority system of Steelworkers Local 1466 at the Bessemer, Ala., plant of Pullman-Standard, which manufactured freight cars until the plant was closed last year. On the contrary, the district court found that the union was committed to "color-blind objectives" and that the local "had approximately equal numbers of black and white officers and negotiators."

The Supreme Court reaffirmed, as the AFL-CIO and the Steelworkers had urged in a joint brief, that Congress in enacting the Civil Rights Act had decided that legitimate seniority systems not designed to perpetuate discrimination are lawful.

While the appellate court, on its own review of the record, found an intent to discriminate, the Supreme Court held that the appellate body could overturn a finding of fact only if it were "clearly erroneous," which was not true here.

THERE WAS an element in the case, involving a small department whose workers previously had been represented by another union, which had not been dealt with by the trial court, the Supreme Court acknowledged. But it said the appellate court should have remanded that issue to the lower court for further proceedings rather than make its own findings.

Justice Byron R. White wrote the majority opinion. A dissent by Justice Thurgood Marshall, joined in large part by Justice Harry A. Blackmun, contended that the appellate court was entitled to come to its own conclusion on the facts.

A Shackling Amendment

IN A TIME of deep economic distress, with unemployment rising and millions of Americans suffering deprivation, the call for an amendment to the Constitution to balance the federal budget is a dangerous abdication of political responsibility.

Any attempt to write a particular economic theory into a living document like the Constitution carries unacceptable risk for all Americans. This time, the amendment drive is coming from the far political right, which has seen its theories discredited by the cruel experience of the past. Next time, the movement could come from a different, equally selfish crevice of American politics.

The AFL-CIO subscribes wholeheartedly to the words of Justice Holmes, who said: "A Constitution is not intended to embody a particular economic theory."

THE PROPOSED amendment embraced by President Reagan would do more than incorporate economic theory in the Constitution. It would also undermine the essential separation of power principles on which American government rests and erode the power of our elected representatives to act. These results would weaken the Constitution and undermine the inherent strength of our system of government.

In particular, this amendment would immobilize the congressional power to meet national needs through tax and spending levels. The Federal Reserve Board of Governors, an unelected body not responsible either to Congress or the President, would gain increased power.

We have all witnessed the cruel results when the setting of economic policy is left to the crude monetary powers of the Federal Reserve. The effect is a mild recession turned into a near-depression.

THE REAGAN Administration came to power promising to balance the federal budget. Such a goal is not consistent with the President's agenda, which features massive, unfair tax cuts to the wealthy and a budget that undermines the economy and breeds unemployment. To transfer budget balancing authority to the Constitution would not change the fact that in an economic recession like the current one, taxes cannot be raised high enough or spending cut low enough to balance the budget. A balanced budget in this atmosphere would bring on a new Great Depression.

An amendment that shackles the Constitution to prevent the nation from dealing with unemployment is self-defeating. The only way to a balanced budget is through full employment which would restore the economy and bring this nation out of its despair.

The AFL-CIO urges all Americans to resist the simplistic notion that economic well-being can be achieved by amending the Constitution. Instead, all Americans must demand that their elected representatives and their President grasp their responsibilities to write an economic program that will put individuals back to work, restore fairness to the tax system and protect the helpless from further deprivation.

—Response by AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland to President Reagan's televised address on the federal budget, Apr. 29, 1982.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
LANE KIRKLAND, President
THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward	Murray H. Finley
Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts	Sol C. Chaikin
Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco	Charles H. Pillard
J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride	David J. Fitzmaurice
Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps	Wm. W. Winpisinger
William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell	John DeConcini
Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss	William Konyha
Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney	Douglas A. Fraser
Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield	Barbara Hutchinson
Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto	Gerald W. McEntee

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop, John R. Oravec
David L. Perlman, James M. Shevis

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, May 8, 1982 No. 18

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

International Labor Press AFL-CIO/CLC Association

'If You Want It Done Right...'

Escape Budget Scrutiny

'Tax Expenditure' Label Hides Huge Handouts to Big Business

By Gus Tyler

THE BIGGEST EXPENDITURE in the federal budget is not recorded as an expenditure. In 1981, that one item cost $229 billion; in 1982, it is expected to run to $260 billion. That sum is more than double the deficit for this year. If this "cost" were wiped out, the budget could be balanced with enough left over both for military and for social purposes.

The huge, and ever-growing, expense item is referred to as "tax expenditures." The phrase itself is confusing, an oxymoron—which means a word or phrase that contradicts itself. From the government's point of view, a "tax" is something that comes in to the Treasury; an "expenditure" is something that goes out. So how can there be a something that goes both in and out at the same time?

THIS CONFOUNDING verbiage helps to obscure a very costly operation that goes on virtually without the knowledge of the American people, because it never appears in the official budget and is rarely explained—although, curiously, it touches just about everyone in the country in one way or another.

Perhaps the easiest way to understand what a "tax expenditure" is would be to imagine that you are the federal government. Suppose you receive a trillion dollars in income and then spend a quarter of a trillion. You are left with three-quarters of a trillion, and the outgo is reported as an "expenditure."

Now suppose you were due to receive a trillion dollars through taxes but you decide to exempt one quarter of a trillion from taxation. You end up with three-quarters of a trillion, just as in the previous situation. But the quarter of a trillion that you did not receive is not listed as a straight "expenditure" but as a "tax expenditure" that never appears in the budget as money you "spent."

THE "TAX EXPENDITURE" is a neat way for a politician to look like a big saver when he is really a big spender. Last year, when the President and Congress were cutting the budget here and there to leave the social program bleeding badly, they were handing out "tax expenditures" to the tune of $82 billion.

If you are the beneficiary of one of these "tax expenditures," you will quickly discover that it is better than a subsidy. The "tax expenditure" is written into the tax law, so—as in the case of any law—it does not come up for review every year. Once you have it, you have it forever—or at least until such time as someone in Washington decides to rewrite the law.

IT'S DIFFERENT with a subsidy that is a straight "expenditure." Such an expenditure comes up for review every time a new budget is written—which is annually.

That's why "tax expenditures" are very popular with special interests. And that's why they have grown so fast—about two and a half times as fast as regular expenditures. And that's one of the main reasons that the budget is running so deeply in the red this year.

Copyright 1982, Gus Tyler Columns

Leadership Needed To Salvage Economy

President Reagan can no longer "get off the hook" by blaming Congress and saying his economic program has not yet had a chance to work. It has worked, and the American people know how it has worked—against them. Fighting inflation with recession and joblessness is cruel and unfair; the organizations in the Budget Coalition cannot and will not watch this economic disaster in silence.

We need a change in direction and emergency action to deal with the problems we face, and it is up to the President to provide the leadership. If he refuses to do it, then we look to the Congress—the representatives of the people.

What this country needs is obvious to all: we need jobs, not further cuts in vital social programs; we need effective action to lower interest rates; changes in regressive and unfair Reagan tax policies; reform of flagrant tax loopholes; and the elimination of wasteful spending on defense.

Finally, we need to invest in programs to reconstruct our economy and provide hope for the American people where there is now only despair. To accomplish these humane and decent objectives, we need leadership from our government.

—From a statement by the Budget Coalition, Apr. 30, 1982.

AFL-CIO Proposal

Tax Reform Measure Termed Vital Step Toward Recovery

Following are excerpts from remarks made by Rep. Thomas J. Downey (D-N.Y.) in introducing tax reform legislation based on proposals made by the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

SWIFT AND RESPONSIBLE action is necessary to restore the nation's economic health and assure that burdens and benefits are shared equitably.

A vital first step toward economic recovery, balance and fair shares is a comprehensive package of tax changes and reforms. These measures will undo in large degree the worst inequities of last year's tax legislation and recapture sufficient revenues to fight recession, maintain essential public investments and protections, reduce the deficit and permit a lowering of interest rates.

It is called the Equity Tax Act of 1982.

THE REAGAN Administration's Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 was an ill-conceived hodgepodge of loopholes and giveaways for big business and individuals with high incomes. The great majority of the nation's taxpayers were shortchanged and the economy severely damaged.

The act has not brought about economic recovery, but rapidly deepening recession. It has not generated any of the promised "supply-side" effects of more jobs, investment and lower deficits claimed by its proponents. It has failed the most fundamental tests of sound tax policy: to raise adequate revenues to meet national needs and a fair sharing of the responsibility for financing those needs. The time has come to redirect the tax structure to meet these tests.

The President's tax program has been given more than ample time and the evidence of its failure is overwhelming. Most of the big business tax cuts were retroactive to Jan. 1, 1981; key tax cuts for the wealthiest individuals were back-dated to June of last year and payroll withholding reductions of 5 percent began in October.

YET, DESPITE these actual effects and the fact that the Reagan program was geared to "expectations" we are in the midst of a deep recession that began six months after President Reagan took office and has been worsening ever since. There are more than 9.9 million workers unemployed—more jobless Americans than at any time since the Great Depression.

Towering interest rates have decimated the housing and durable good markets, discouraged investment in plant and equipment and smothered the ability of households with modest incomes to save. Mortgage rates still hover around the 15 percent they averaged last year, and the prime lending rate, which averaged almost 19 percent in 1981 still remains at an intolerable 16.5 percent—despite the depressed levels of economic activity and price level reduction.

Costs and inequities of the Reagan tax cuts are principal impediments to economic growth and full employment. They have created projected budget deficits far larger than anticipated and are preventing vital reductions in interest rates. Unless the course of Reaganomics is reversed, the economic and social ills we are currently suffering—ills inflicted by shoe-string public budgets financed by unfair tax cuts—could fester and grow into a full-fledged depression.

We must change directions now.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council outlined a comprehensive alternative to the economic policies of the Reagan Administration earlier this year. That multifaceted proposal included means for dealing with the Reagan recession through job-creating programs, reinvigoration of our industrial base and methods for relieving the suffering of unemployment victims. The Equity Tax Act incorporates the principal tax policy suggestions of the AFL-CIO which add up to a reasonable and responsible package of basic tax reforms and measures that will reverse some of the worst aspects of the Reagan program.

A KEY PROPOSAL in the package is to cap the 1982 and 1983 individual tax cuts at $700 per family. This will put back a substantial element of fairness to the tax system. The cap will have little or no effect on most families earning $40,000 or less, and will recoup about $28 billion of badly needed revenues.

It also proposes to end the much abused buying and selling of excess tax credits through the leasing provisions of ERTA. The leasing provision has already proven itself as a wasteful and inefficient means to deal with troubled firms or industries and other methods must be found.

The revenue loss due to the leasing provisions will reach $7 billion by the end of fiscal 1983; and will cost $8.5 billion annually by 1986. The prime beneficiaries will continue to be large and profitable corporations.

THE MEASURE also would reduce the investment tax credit—the single most costly business tax preference—to its former 7 percent level. In view of the depreciation giveaways of the Acclerated Cost Recovery System enacted last August, there is no justification for maintaining this provision which is costing taxpayers over $7 billion annually.

The Equity Tax Act will enable the federal government to put into place the kinds of policies we need to set the economy on the right track. It will help make possible necessary investments in the public infrastructure—highways, bridges, mass transit, railroads and other facilities—human capital investments through jobs and training programs, revitalization of the housing industry—particularly for low- and moderate-income housing—rebuilding of the nation's industrial sector—and extension of unemployment insurance benefits to protect the long-term jobless, victimized by recession.

Shifting the Burden

'Enterprise Zone' Plan Called Device for Cut-Rate Job Bidding

THE REAGAN ADMINISTRATION'S enterprise zone scheme is an attempt to pit jobless workers and blighted communities against each other bidding for jobs and industries with cut-rate wages and substandard conditions, AFL-CIO Vice President Sol C. Chaikin charged.

"There's no way that any business is going to invest fresh dollars" in an enterprise zone when it is already operating at far less than capacity outside the zone because of the depressed economy and uncertain markets, Chaikin observed. He said that, at best, the Reagan proposal would only shift the burden of unemployment from one area to another without creating any new jobs. The Ladies' Garment Workers president was questioned on the AFL-CIO public service program, Labor News Conference.

Chaikin warned that allowing special tax breaks for employers within the enterprise zones, along with exemptions from certain federal, state and local laws, regulations, ordinances and codes, would give them a big advantage over employers outside the zones who must conform to the laws and regulations that protect both the interests of the community and the rights of workers. He said that what the Administration would like to set up is a situation where employers can come into the zones "and be free to make their own individual deals with these desperate people."

ENTERPRISE ZONES, Chaikin said, would turn out to be the same kind of failures that the other keystones of Reaganomics have been.

Chaikin urged that instead of gimmicks like enterprise zones, Congress ought to be shaping "realistic job-making programs" that address badly needed community improvements, such as road, highway and bridge repairs, sewer and public utility updates, improved mass transit and revival of the housing industry.

By Press Associates, Inc.

FREE PUBLIC EDUCATION for all children is taken for granted as a vital part of American democracy, but it was not automatically achieved by the American Revolution.

It took decades of struggle by workers and social reformers to win tax-supported elementary and secondary education in many states.

When New York City established public schools in 1832, resistance came primarily from the wealthy, who objected to paying taxes for schools they knew their children would not attend.

After 150 years, this argument endures as a threat to the public school system.

Introducing his tuition tax credit proposal in Chicago recently, President Reagan said he was fulfilling a campaign promise to provide relief to "parents who bear the double burden of public and private school costs."

REAGAN'S TUITION tax credit proposal—similar to many others introduced in Congress since the early 1950s—would allow parents earning $50,000 or less with children in private schools to take a tax credit equal to 50 percent of tuition. The maximum credit would be $100 per child in 1983, $300 in 1984 and $500 in 1985 and thereafter. Parents earning up to $75,000 a year would be allowed a partial credit.

One of the reasons Congress probably will reject it is the soaring budget deficit. Faced with the Reagan Recession and sagging federal revenues, Congress is unlikely to approve tuition tax credits costing an estimated $100 million in Fiscal 1983 and an estimated $1 billion after 1985.

It seems odd, then, that Reagan would pick this time to propose tuition tax credits. A good clue is that Whie House polls reportedly show the President's support dwindling among certain groups that helped elect him.

POLITICAL EXPEDIENCY may explain why the Administration suddenly can afford to spend $100 million on 5 million private school children, yet cries poverty when it comes to federal education programs that serve many, many millions more public and private school children.

And this is probably the strongest reason why Congress should reject the plan. Federal education programs for the educationally disadvantaged, handicapped and college students, and other programs providing school lunches, breakfasts and milk supplements have been drastically cut by the Administration in the name of "budget-balancing."

These targeted programs work and serve those who really need them. If more money can be found for education in the federal budget, it should go to programs that serve the greatest need.

Public schools have an obligation to serve public need, and basically they have fulfilled this by educating generations of immigrants, by offering opportunities to all classes, and by providing a foundation for personal achievement as an adult.

THEY ALSO have served democracy well, introducing democratic principles and ideals and serving as a unifying factor in a nation of diversity. They have provided common experiences for children of all races, religions and national origins.

Finally, tuition tax credits threaten the public school system. If as a matter of public policy, taxpayers who send their children to private schools get a tax break, why not the same for single persons or anyone else without children in public school?

Setting policy along these lines of thinking would signal a return to 150 years ago, when education by and large was available only to those with the means to pay for it. It would repudiate one of the greatest achievements of American democracy, a system of free public education which has served as a model for the world.

JOBLESS WORKERS and blighted communities will be forced to bid against each other for jobs and industries with cut-rate wages and substandard conditions if the Administration's enterprise zone plan is implemented, Ladies' Garment Workers President Sol C. Chaikin, center, charged on Labor News Conference. The AFL-CIO vice president was questioned by Thomas Edsall, left, of the Washington Post and Lance Gay of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers. The AFL-CIO produced public affairs program is aired weekly over the Mutual radio network.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS were a key issue on the agenda of the annual AFL-CIO Civil Rights Conference which stressed "Making Equal Opportunity a Reality." Speakers at the conference, held at the George Meany Center for Labor Studies, included, from left, Gloria Johnson, director of education and women's activities for the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, and Dorothy Height, president of the National Council of Negro Women, along with AFL-CIO Civil Rights Director William E. Pollard and Cynthia McCaughan, coordinator of women's activities.

Auto, Trucking Settlements Lower Average Wage Gain

Major bargaining settlements during the first quarter of 1982 provided wage increases averaging 2.2 percent in the first contract year, mainly because of wage freezes in the depressed auto and trucking industries, the Labor Dept. reported.

A more accurate indicator of the bargaining trend, excluding autos and trucking, shows 185,000 workers in 62 other major units winning wage hikes averaging 7.8 percent in the first year and 6.8 percent annually over the life of the contract.

THE FIRST QUARTER settlements were dominated statistically by the Auto Workers' pact with Ford and the Teamsters' Master Freight Agreement with Trucking Management, Inc.

The UAW and Teamster agreements accounted for about 70 percent of the 645,000 workers in the 65 major units for which settlements were reached.

The Labor Dept. said no specified wage adjustment was negotiated for the 460,000 workers covered by the auto and trucking pacts. Those agreements continued to include cost-of-living adjustment clauses which were revised to delay or reduce COLA increases. COLAs are not included in the Bureau of Labor Statistics calculations since they depend on unknown future changes in the consumer price index.

IN TERMS of effective wage adjustments during the first quarter, some 2.7 million workers received wage increases averaging 3.0 percent. Those under new settlements won wage boosts averaging 8.0 percent; those receiving deferred adjustments got 4.6 percent; and COLA increases came to 1.2 percent.

The 1.7 million workers receiving COLA increases of 1.2 percent recovered three-fourths of the rise in consumer prices during the period covered.

In the April-June 1982 quarter, 335 major agreements involving 1.4 million workers, one-fourth of them in construction, are due to expire or be reopened on wages.

IN ADDITION, at least 57 agreements covering 367,000 workers expired prior to Apr. 1, but new agreements had not been reached or ratified by the end of March. The UAW pact with General Motors reached in April will affect the figures for the second quarter.

Also in the second quarter, 1.6 million workers are due deferred wage increases averaging 7.2 percent. About 2.2 million workers, chiefly in trucking, steel and electrical equipment industries are scheduled for COLA reviews.

The trucking and auto agreements, which dominated the first quarter settlements, occurred in industries hurting from the deep recession, with trucking also disrupted by deregulation and the auto industry undermined by imports.

ABOUT 300,000, or half the workers covered by first-quarter settlements, are in trucking. The Teamsters pact had no specified wage hike, but the previous COLA clause was revised to provide annual rather than semi-annual adjustments and to divert all or part of COLA hikes to meet cost rises in health and welfare and pension benefits, BLS said.

The Ford pact covering 160,000 UAW members also provided no specified wage increase, BLS reported. The pact defers for 18 months the effective date of the first three quarterly COLAs and reduces each by 2 cents.

Voting Rights Extension Clears Senate Hurdle

(Continued from Page 1)

tion district boundaries. But the legislation sets up simplified procedures, starting in 1984, for jurisdictions to "bailout" of this requirement by demonstrating to a three-judge panel in the District of Columbia a 10-year record of non-discrimination.

Elsewhere and after a bailout, allegations of discrimination could still be brought through court action as is the case now. The clarifying language about "intent" covers such cases.

AFL-CIO Assails Move

Labor Dept. Proposals Weaken Anti-Bias Rules

By Susan Dunlop

The Reagan Administration's plans to weaken affirmative action requirements for federal contractors have drawn fire from labor and civil rights organizations.

The Labor Dept.'s Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs has proposed rule changes that would scale down the use of back pay as a remedy for discrimination, limiting it to "identifiable victims." The proposal also would change the methods for determining the availability of women and minorities for jobs and for insuring that they are being used in all job categories.

THE EXTENT of coverage of a contractor's non-federal jobs would be narrowed, and construction contractors would have wider leeway in the methods they use to set and meet goals for hiring and promoting women and minorities.

AFL-CIO Civil Rights Director William E. Pollard called the proposed rule changes an attempt "to dilute the already modest requirements for non-discrimination and affirmative action set out in Executive Order 11246 for contractors getting paid with federal dollars."

The NAACP charged that the backpay proposals are "inadequate," and that the "ambiguity" of the entire package poses "potentially serious enforcement problems."

THE PROPOSALS are part of a larger package of rule changes that would ease many affirmative action requirements for contractors doing business with the government. The Administration announced its intention to seek the changes in August 1981. The OFCCP said the full package of proposed revisions will be recombined into a final set of rules this summer.

Public comment on the current proposals will be accepted by the agency until May 24.

The OFCCP's proposals define the agency's right to seek back pay as a remedy for discrimination. But they would limit awards to "identifiable victims" who have suffered "economic loss due to the contractor's discriminatory actions."

BACK PAY would not be sought for more than two years prior to the date on which OFCCP notified the contractor of a filed complaint, and liability would be confined to jobs or opportunities that would have been available to the victims of discrimination. "Interim earnings" would be subtracted from the award, and disputes between the agency and contractors over amounts would be arbitrated.

Pollard pointed out that the proposals would put the burden of proof of discrimination heavily on the workers and would prevent many victims of discrimination from gaining redress.

The OFCCP should establish a strict time-frame for notification of complaints and should include a clear definition of what constitutes back pay, he said.

The Administration proposals would cut from eight to four the factors contractors must take into account in figuring out the "availability" of qualified women and minorities for jobs and in proving that they have "utilized" an adequate number of those workers.

THE EIGHT-FACTOR system, criticized as cumbersome by employers, included both present and potential availability of workers. The new proposal concentrates on availability of women and minorities who already have the necessary skills—in the immediate geographic area, in the "relevant recruitment area" and in the contractor's own workforce.

Contractors would be permitted to "weight" any of these factors "in the manner they deem most appropriate to their particular situation."

As an alternative, the contractor could use the appropriate standard metropolitan area statistics for women and minorities in the area's civilian labor force.

A major flaw in those proposals, Pollard noted, is that they do not take into account training programs, such as apprenticeship outreach programs, that continue to increase the potential availability and the qualifications of women and minorities for jobs where they have been underrepresented.

THE OFCCP IS assuming, he pointed out, that contractors will "act in good faith" in not weighting an analysis in such a way as to exclude women and minorities or to exempt themselves from compliance.

The agency is also asking for comment on two alternatives for defining the "job groups" established to show that women and minorities are being hired and promoted. Currently the regulations call for breaking a service or supply contractor's work force into "horizontal" groups made up of workers doing similar jobs and with similar wage rates and promotion opportunities.

The OFCCP could leave that system intact, except to encourage groups made up of 50 or more employees, or, depending on public reaction, it could permit contractors to group jobs "vertically," from entry levels to the higher positions that could be filled for them.

This alternative, Pollard said, could lead to continued concentration of women and minorities in entry level jobs since goals and timetables for hiring and promotion would be weakened.

FOR THE SAME reasons he was critical of another provision that would keep the current 6.9-percent goal for employment of women on federal construction jobs, but apply it to the contractor's entire on-site workforce instead of trade by trade.

Also, the OFCCP said, if 6.9 percent of the hours worked in entry level jobs, such as helpers and apprentices, were worked by women, this would be considered a "good faith effort" by the contractor to meet the goal.

Executive Order 11246 now applies OFCCP regulations to all of a covered contractor's worksites, including those that do not involve federal money. The new rules, if adopted, would limit the contractor's affirmative action obligations only to the geographic area where the federal work is being done although the employer's non-federal jobs in that area would also be under the regulations while the federal work is being performed.

Workers Collect $3.3 Million In Back Pay at Florida Steel

Checks for almost $2 million were sent out to present and former employees at Florida Steel Corp.'s Charlotte, N.C., mill in partial payment toward settling one of the largest backpay cases in the history of the National Labor Relations Board.

On top of the $1.3 million paid last month to current or former employees of the company's Indiantown, Fla. plant, the most recent payments make the $3.3 million total the third largest backpay settlement ever handled by the NLRB. The largest was $12 million by American Cyanamid in 1979. The second largest was $4.5 million by Kohler Co. in 1965.

SEC.-TREAS. Elmer Chatak of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., who announced the latest payments, said a final settlement could cost the company another $2 million. The case stems from charges against the firm filed by IUD and the Steelworkers more than eight years ago.

Between 1973 and 1979, the Steelworkers filed 21 separate unfair practice charges against Florida Steel, of which three were settled. All but one were upheld by the NLRB and in most cases enforced by the courts.

The central charge in the litigation was that the company illegally withheld wage increases at the Charlotte and Indiantown plants in retaliation for union election victories in 1973 and 1974, respectively. While withholding pay raises at those two facilities, the firm continued to grant regular increases at three unorganized plants.

THE NLRB and the courts upheld the union's charges that by denying increases at the two plants, Florida Steel unlawfully punished its employees for voting for the union.

The $3.3 million in back pay represents what the company says it owed workers at Indiantown and Charlotte as of February 1980. The final amount of the pay liability remains to be settled. The issue is before an NLRB administrative law judge who is reviewing seven months and 4,000 pages of complex testimony.

While the USWA won elections at the Charlotte and Indiantown plants, it has been unable to gain a first contract at either because the company has illegally evaded its obligation to bargain in good faith, the union says. The Steelworkers continue their organizing efforts at Florida Steel's mills in Jackson, Tenn., Jacksonville, Fla., and Tampa, Fla.

AT CHARLOTTE, 869 present and former workers received back pay under the settlement while at Indiantown the figure was 637.

Florida Steel employs about 2,700 workers at its mills and steel fabricating plants in the Southeast. It makes structural steel products such as reinforcing rods for the construction industry.

Index Shows Economy Still Headed Down

(Continued from Page 1)

Also off were vendor performance, changes in crude material prices, stock prices, and total liquid assets.

The four components that increased were the money supply, new orders for consumer goods, contracts for plant and equipment, and building permits.

The continuing recession and doubts about the prospects for recovery are causing many companies to curb capital spending plans. A survey of the National Machine Tool Builders' Association showed that machine tool producers' new orders skidded 17 percent from February to March, and were down 61 percent from a year earlier.

THE NATIONAL Association of Purchasing Management, polling its members, reported that new orders, production, and employment continued to deteriorate in April. Only 17 percent said their companies were operating at 90 percent of normal capacity or better, the lowest number in 21 years. The number indicating their production rate was below 50 percent was the highest since May 1961.

In the construction industry, spending in March fell eight-tenths of 1 percent from the February level and was 7.6 percent below the year-earlier rate, the Commerce Dept. reported. Building outlays have been weak for months because high interest rates have driven up the cost of mortgage and construction loans.

Meanwhile, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported that productivity in the nation's nonfarm business sector rose at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of three-tenths of 1 percent in the first three months of this year—a reflection of the impact of the recession.

THE SLIGHT gain in the output per paid hour of work occurred because employers cut payroll costs during the quarter by a greater amount than they cut output, BLS said. Businesses cut paid hours at a 3.3 percent rate as output fell by 3 percent.

In another gloomy economic report, the Commerce Dept. said the nation's merchandise trade deficit was $2.6 billion in March. The trade deficit for January was $5.1 billion and for February $1.2 billion.

NATIONAL WINNERS in the annual "Ability Counts" essay contest for high school students are congratulated at an awards ceremony sponsored by the AFL-CIO during the annual meeting of the President's Committee for Employment of the Handicapped in Washington. From left are Everett Lehman, director of special services for the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Harold Russell, chairman of the President's committee, first prize winner Amanda Hetzel of West Virginia, second prize winner Tracy Dane of New Jersey, and third prize winner Jeffrey Beck of Iowa.

Labor Pledges Aid to Meet Job Needs of Handicapped

The labor movement is strongly committed to working "shoulder to shoulder" with handicapped and disabled people to help them participate fully in the nation's workforce, Everett Lehman, director of special programs for the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, told the winners of the national "Ability Counts" essay contest for high school students.

Organized labor is "deeply concerned," Lehman said, about cuts in federal programs that aid disabled people as well as in education programs that have benefited all the nation's youth.

LEHMAN, representing AFL-CIO Vice President Charles H. Pillard who is vice chairman of the President's Committee for Employment of the Handicapped, pointed out that the AFL-CIO and its affiliated unions will "stand firm in our commitment" to work with disabled people, with employers and with government to assure that handicapped persons have access to training programs and to placement in decent jobs.

He stressed that a key to accomplishing that goal, however, is reducing the current high unemployment rate for all working people.

The essay contest winners, their families and many of their teachers were the guests of the AFL-CIO at an awards luncheon held during the annual meeting of the President's committee. AFL-CIO Vice President Joyce Miller chairs the committee's labor panel.

THE STUDENTS' trips to Washington for the ceremony were paid for by the federation and its state central bodies.

Also addressing the luncheon was the chairman of the President's committee, Harold Russell, who urged the students to continue their interest in the concerns of the handicapped as they become adults and themselves enter the workforce.

Russell, who has been a member of the Meat Cutters, is well-known for movie and television appearances as an actor in films that deal with the concerns of disabled people including "The Best Years of Our Lives" and "Inside Moves."

THE FIVE national winners, along with 27 other state winners wrote on the theme "Disabled People at Work." The five top winners shared $6,450 in cash scholarships donated by the Disabled American Veterans.

First prize of $2,000 went to Amanda Hetzel of West Virginia. Second prize of $1,500 went to Tracy Dane of New Jersey; third prize of $1,200 went to Jeffrey Beck of Iowa; fourth prize of $1,000 to Glenn Miley of New York; and fifth prize of $750 to Vickie Willis of Montana.

UAW Members Ratify Pact With International Harvester

Detroit—The Auto Workers overwhelmingly approved a new 29-month agreement with the ailing International Harvester Co., giving the firm concessions in return for greater job security, expanded employee involvement in management decisions and a profit-sharing plan.

UAW Vice President Stephen Yokich said the new contract, which covers some 18,000 active and 10,000 laid-off hourly paid workers in nine states, was ratified by 64 percent of union members voting on the pact.

"WE BELIEVE that this new agreement is an important, supportive measure to help Harvester withstand a difficult period, and one which will enable our members to share in the profits we are confident the company will be making in the future," Yokich said.

Concessions accepted by the union include a freeze on general wage increases through the life of the agreement; deferral of three cost-of-living adjustments scheduled this year, for 18 months; elimination of a number of paid personal holidays and vacation days, and suspension of vacation and Christmas bonuses.

For its part, Harvester agreed to maintain "equality of sacrifice" among all its employees, including management. It also agreed to give 60 days' notice before hiring outside contractors to supply parts and, "when possible," six months' notice before any plant closures.

In what the union described as "a historic breakthrough," UAW members will share in any Harvester pretax profits on its domestic operations in fiscal years 1983 and 1984. The complex profit-sharing formula is tied to the amount of U.S. profits and the number of hours worked by each employee.

Other provisions include agreement by Harvester to deposit $6 million in the workers' supplemental unemployment benefit program on Nov. 1, with the funds to be used to pay benefits owed from last Nov. 8; stronger grievance procedures; the maintenance of current pension benefits. and agreement to resolve at the local level UAW complaints that Harvester employs too many supervisors in proportion to workers.

The pact contains a provision permitting reopening of the contract if Harvester's worldwide pretax profits exceed $300 million in any two consecutive quarters.

THE AGREEMENT with the agricultural implement manufacturer was reached five months before the union's existing contract with the company was to have expired.

Meanwhile, the union agreed to an American Motors Corp. request for "further consideration" of a new UAW agreement with the auto maker which was essentially killed when Local 12 in Toledo voted against it. Earlier, AMC locals in Milwaukee and Kenosha, Wis., approved the pact, which provided for an employee reinvestment plan aimed at saving the company more than $100 million.

Auto Workers Certified At Mississippi GM Plant

Meridian, Miss. — The Auto Workers won recognition as bargaining agent for some 415 production and maintenance employees at General Motor's Delco Remy plant here.

UAW Vice President Owen Bieber, who heads the union's GM department, said that recognition came after an independent arbitrator certified that a majority of the employees had signed cards authorizing the UAW to represent them.

Bieber noted that recognition means that the Meridian workers now are covered by provisions of the union's new master agreement with GM, including a two-year moratorium on plant closings, supplemental unemployment benefits, and a prepaid legal assistance plan. A local agreement now must be worked out, the UAW noted.

Job Security Key Concern In GE Talks

New York—Greater job security and no contract givebacks emerged as the top concerns of union negotiators who opened talks with General Electric Co. on a new national agreement here.

President David J. Fitzmaurice of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, which represents the largest number of the company's 101,000 organized workers, said other bargaining goals include improved cost-of-living protection, greater insurance and pension benefits for active and retired workers, and "substantial general wage increases on a percentage basis to do justice for both hourly and salaried workers, as well as additional increases for skills."

THE TALKS with GE, the largest U.S. electrical manufacturer, normally set the pattern for the rest of the industry. The firm's contracts with workers represented by IUE and 12 other unions expire at midnight June 27. The 13 unions, which participate in coordinated bargaining in the industry, will also be negotiating with the nation's other electrical manufacturing giant, Westinghouse. Those talks are scheduled to begin on May 20.

Emphasizing the need of GE workers for greater job security, Fitzmaurice said the IUE's 70,000 members at GE "want guarantees against being cut adrift in the middle of their working lives, with the burdens of mortgages, car payments and children's education on their backs.

"They want the plants in which they work kept open and the production lines kept humming."

FITZMAURICE, speaking on behalf of the IUE-GE Conference Board which coordinates the negotiating efforts of all participating unions, noted that GE is prospering and its future outlook "is for more of the same."

Sitting in on the GE talks were representatives of all the unions that make up the AFL-CIO Coordinated Bargaining Committee of General Electric & Westinghouse Unions.

Court Overturns Fines, Jailings in Teachers' Strike

Hartford, Conn.—A unanimous Connecticut Supreme Court ruled that a superior court judge demonstrated bias in a 1975 teachers' strike case in which he imposed harsh penalties on the union and its members.

The justices held that Judge George Saden, now retired, should have removed himself from the case because of the public comments he made in a newspaper article while the case was pending.

During the 11-day strike, Saden ordered the jailing of 90 members of the New Haven Federation of Teachers for violating his injunction against the strike and fined the AFT local $224,500.

THE HIGH COURT ruling nullifies Saden's findings and returns the case to the superior court to determine if the union can recover the money that it has paid out in fines.

In upholding the union's petition that Saden was not qualified to handle the case because of his bias, the court said the judge "clearly demonstrated such a personal interest in the case that his impartiality could reasonably be questioned."

The New Haven Teachers welcomed the decision, stressing that the state high court sustained the position long held by the union.

Frank Carrano, president of the AFT local and head of the New Haven AFL-CIO, said the union will now have an opportunity to go before a new superior court judge "to argue our position that Saden's order to incarcerate and fine the teachers did constitute excessive punishment."

Downey Introduces Package

Labor's Tax Proposals Embodied in House Bill

(Continued from Page 1)

Downey's bill, which he titled the Economic Recovery Tax Act (H.R. 6257), is co-sponsored by Rep. James M. Shannon (D-Mass.), also a member of the Ways & Means Committee. A third member of the committee, Rep. Frank Guarini (D-N.J.), had earlier sponsored a key element of the tax reform package—a limit of $700 a year on 1982 and 1983 individual income tax cuts.

THE $700 CAP, which would not affect most households with incomes of up to $40,000, would raise an estimated $27.7 billion through Fiscal 1984.

The Downey bill would also repeal the indexing provisions of last year's tax law, with savings starting at $9.8 billion in Fiscal 1985 and climbing rapidly thereafter.

A provision increasing the percentage of long-term capital gains included in taxable income from 40 percent to 50 percent would raise $1.2 billion next year and more than double that amount the following year.

The phaseout of the windfall oil profits tax would be halted, adding more than $2 billion in revenues over the next two years.

LEASING provisions of the 1981 tax law, which allow firms to buy and sell tax credits through paper transactions would be repealed except for mass transit equipment, saving the Treasury $1 billion this fiscal year, $2.9 billion in 1983 and $4.6 billion the following year. Repeal of foreign tax credits would save $9.7 billion over two years.

Taxation of foreign income when earned would bring in $8.8 billion over the first two years, rising in future years. Reduction of the regular investment tax credit rate from 10 percent to 7 percent would bring in $3.6 billion next year and $8.1 billion the following year.

Other substantial savings would come from such measures as limiting the reduced tax rates on the first $100,000 of corporate income to small corporations, and ending various windfalls for oil and gas producers.

Whatever faint hope there may have been for a bipartisan consensus on the budget evaporated when the President stood firm on his refusal to abandon the tilted-to-the-rich tax cuts that are the heart of his "supply-side" economics.

WHEN THE bipartisan gambit failed, Republicans on the Senate Budget Committee worked out their own deal with the White House.

The GOP plan, which Committee Chairman Pete V. Domenici (R-N.M.) said Reagan will "endorse and support," does not specify how Congress is to achieve $40 billion in social security reductions.

It would freeze all government salaries and pensions for one year, and limit federal employees to a 4 percent raise in the next two years. Defense spending would rise, but all other government programs would be held to current spending ceilings for the next three years, which translates into a reduction each year in after-inflation constant dollars.

THE FIRST budget resolution, which is supposed to clear Congress by May 15, will set spending "targets" for various broad categories of government programs, leaving it to the legislative committees responsible for these programs to take the action needed to stay within the spending ceiling. And it would be up to the tax-writing committees to bring to the floor legislation to achieve the revenue goals.

The House Budget Committee has not yet begun its markup of a budget resolution. Last year, Reagan was successful in breaking the Democratic majority in the House with the votes of a bloc of conservative Democrats while holding the support of moderate Republicans.

This year, with the Reagan recession in full swing, the White House grip is much less firm. At a Republican fund-raising dinner in Washington, Reagan sought to rally his congressional troops.

"LET'S GO to the American people," Reagan urged. "Let's remind them of the economic mess we inherited when we took office."

The Budget Coalition had a different interpretation. The current recession started last July, the coalition noted, six months after the change of Administration. Policies embraced by the Reagan Administration, the coalition said, have thrown businesses into bankruptcy, hurt farmers and "brought 9.9 million Americans to the unemployment rolls, sending their families into poverty."

RALLY FOR FAIR WAGES drew over 1,500 union members and their families to a march through downtown Mobile, Ala., protesting use of local bond money to finance non-union construction projects paying substandard wages. The demonstration, led by the city's building trades, also pointed up the need to reinstate Alabama's prevailing wage law, repealed in 1979.

Election Viewed as Chance To Send Signal to Reagan

New York—America's voters must give President Reagan a strong signal in this year's elections that there can be no more cuts in employment and entitlement programs, AFL-CIO Social Security Director Bert Seidman told the Jewish Labor Committee's biennial convention.

"We must elect candidates who can make America what it can be—a nation which provides jobs for all who can work and compassion for those who cannot," he stressed.

"THOUSANDS OF elderly people have died during the past winter because they have faced the cruel choice of heating or eating. A generation of poor children—especially blacks and other minorities in the crowded ghettos of our cities—have been stunted by the cruel cuts in unemployment insurance, welfare, food stamps, Medicaid, immunization and school lunch programs."

Seidman told the 700 convention delegates that Reagan has temporarily refrained from imposing deep slashes in social security benefits he sought a year ago only because of the strong public outcry.

"But make no mistake about it," he warned, "social security is still in dire jeopardy. Even now, some members of Congress, with the connivance of the White House, are considering immediate cutbacks in social security cost-of-living protection.

"AFTER THE election, the wraps will be off and the Administration can be expected to launch once again an unrelenting attack on the very foundations of the system."

Another major speaker, Ambassador Max Kampelman, chairman of the U.S. delegation to the Madrid conference on the Helsinki accord, accused the Soviet Union of violating human rights of trade unionists and Jews.

He said the Soviets are throwing union activists in jails and mental institutions in attempts to prevent the emulation of a Polish-style Solidarity movement in Russia.

KAMPELMAN ALSO charged that "the Soviet Union is clearly identified with a pattern of anti-Semitic behavior that could not function without government support or acquiescence."

In the USSR, he said, psychiatry has been perverted into an instrument of cruel political repression and men and women exercising their rights as human beings continue to be condemned to institutions where they are silenced with drugs.

Kampelman formerly served on the staffs of the Ladies' Garment Workers and the Clothing & Textile Workers.

THE CONVENTION re-elected Donald Slaiman, deputy director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization & Field Services, as JLC president. President Albert Shanker of the Teachers was elected to a new two-year term as secretary. Also re-elected was JLC Executive Director Emanuel Muravchick.

Delegates adopted resolutions reaffirming support for the AFL-CIO's positions on the Equal Rights Amendment, the federal budget, the Polish Solidarity movement, imports and foreign trade, and affirmative action.

EPA Sued for Data on Toxic Pesticides

The AFL-CIO and six environmental organizations are suing the Environmental Protection Agency for the release of information on 11 toxic pesticides that pose serious health risks to workers and the public.

A suit filed in federal district court in Washington accuses EPA Administrator Anne M. Gorsuch of illegally blocking access to documents on the hazardous substances.

The labor and environmental groups sought scientific data on the pesticides that are suspected of causing nerve damage, cancer, birth defects, sterilization, genetic mutations and other health damage to humans.

Producers, distributors and sellers of the chemicals must submit pre-market testing data to EPA under a 1972 federal law, and the agency is required to make the information available to the public under 1978 amendments to the law.

But Gorsuch slapped a "moratorium" on the release of the information "at the urging of several major pesticide producers in direct violation of federal law," the AFL-CIO and the National Resources Defense Council (NRDC) charged in a joint statement.

IN ADDITION to the federation and NRDC, other parties to the suit are the California Agrarian Action Project, Environmental Defense Fund, Friends of the Earth, National Coalition Against Misuse of Pesticides and the Sierra Club.

In asking the federal court to order Gorsuch to release the data, the suit notes that EPA also foiled attempts by the parties to obtain the test results under the Freedom of Information Act.

The labor and environmental groups have expressed concern that the test results are essential in determining the threat to public health and safety posed by the chemicals as well as in establishing limits on the amounts of pesticide to be used on food and animal feed.

THE AFL-CIO and NRDC pointed out that recent findings show that the scientific data submitted to the EPA is often incomplete, inadequate or fraudulent.

"A series of congressional investigations uncovered evidence of fraud by the largest domestic source of these studies—the Industrial Bio-Test Laboratory, Inc.," they charged.

Four officials of the testing laboratory have since been indicted "in connection with these fraudulently conducted health and safety studies," the joint statement noted.

Even so, some 200 pesticides registered by the EPA on the basis of the laboratory's questionable studies continue to be used throughout the country.

AFTER CONGRESS passed the 1978 amendments to the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide & Rodenticide Act (FIFRA), the pesticide industry attempted unsuccessfully to have the law overturned through court challenges.

With FIFRA now up for extension, AFL-CIO Occupational Safety Director George H. R. Taylor warned that industry is lobbying Congress to weaken the safeguards in the law. On the other hand, labor is seeking to strengthen worker protection because of the "major cutbacks in the EPA enforcement program," he said.

Directly Affiliated Local Joins OPEIU

New York—President John Kelly of the Office & Professional Employees announced that the 1,100-member Directly Affiliated Local Union 98 in Cincinnati has voted to join OPEIU.

"Local 98's interest in affiliating with the OPEIU is to pursue continued organizing of workers in related industries and in the white-collar field," Kelly said.

Other new membership additions to the union include the chartering of Local 512, the Michigan Institutional Supervisors, in Lansing, Mich. and the affiliating of some 350 Coca Cola Bottling Co. employees in Chattanooga, Tenn.

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

5/8/82

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII | Saturday, May 15, 1982 | No. 19

Jobless Rate Hits 9.4%, Reagan Policies Scored

House Adopts Subsidy Plan On Mortgages

By David L. Perlman

The House rebelled against a do-nothing Administration and approved mortgage interest subsidies for moderate-income homebuyers.

A lopsided 349-55 majority passed the bill in defiance of a presidential veto threat, sending it on to the Senate. The House then followed through by adding the $1 billion cost to an "urgent" appropriations bill carrying funds for the remainder of this fiscal year.

THE AFL-CIO had endorsed mortgage subsidies as one phase of a broader housing expansion, including rental assistance and public housing. But while the scope of the House-passed bill is limited, its enactment would be a boon for the unemployment-plagued housing industry as well as families priced out of the market by high interest costs.

Rep. Fernand St Germain (D-R.I.), floor manager for the bill, termed it "much more than a housing bill," even though it would "provide thousands of American families with decent housing."

It is also "clearly a jobs bill," he told his colleagues, generating work for the building trades and also for timber workers and "the panorama of industries which manufacture products that go into houses."

ST GERMAIN estimated that at least 74,000 new housing units would be built under the program. He said the $1 billion in federal budget authority "would assist in the creation of 140,000 new jobs in housing-related industries; would increase federal, state and local tax revenues by $1.2 billion, and would have the effect of increasing the gross national product by $11 billion."

Under the legislation, priority would be given to first-time home buyers.

For families with incomes of 115 percent or less of the area median income, the subsidy would last at least seven years and could amount to as much as 6 percentage points below the market rate, but not below 9.5 percent.

THOSE WITH incomes between 116 and 130 percent of the median could get a subsidy of up to 4 percentage points, but not below 10 percent, for a five-year period.

Purchasers would have to pay at least 25 percent of their income toward the mortgage in order to qualify. The homeowner would have to repay the subsidy on selling the home or else pay 50 percent of the increase in the value of the property, whichever is less.

Housing assistance could continue beyond the seven-year and five-year limits if assistance is still necessary and money is available from funds paid back on resales.

David A. Stockman, Reagan's budget director, wrote House Republican Leader

(Continued on Page 7)

LABOR'S HIGHEST HONOR, the Murray-Green-Meany Award, is presented to Msgr. George G. Higgins by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue. Joining in the presentation at the national Community Services conference in Chicago is Walter G. Davis, director of the Dept. of Community Services.

For Humanitarian Services

Labor's Highest Award Given to Msgr. Higgins

Chicago—The AFL-CIO presented its highest award for humanitarian services to Msgr. George G. Higgins, a staunch ally and constructive critic of the trade union movement, at a dinner highlighting the federation's national community services conference.

Higgins accepted the Murray-Green-Meany Award "on behalf of all of my associates in the Catholic social action movement" who remain committed to social justice and "defense of human freedom at home and abroad."

The award, presented by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue, honored a clergyman who over a 40-year period has marched with farm workers, brought the AFL-CIO's greetings to the first convention of Poland's Solidarity labor federation, and won the affection of several generations of union leaders. He retired last year from his post with the U.S. Catholic Conference and is currently associated with Catholic University in Washington.

AFL-CIO Vice President Alvin Heaps, president of the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union, was master of ceremonies for the banquet. Heaps chairs the federation's community services committee.

Higgins spoke to the group of his recent trips to Poland and Brazil and of his deep conviction that "the labor movement, with all of its faults, has an indispensable role to play, at home and abroad, in promoting social justice and safeguarding human freedom."

He pointed out that Poland, a communist-dominated nation, and Brazil, a military dictatorship, have one thing in common—"they will not tolerate free and autonomous labor unions."

HE ADDED: "This represents a very serious international crisis. Of all the organizations able and willing to face up to this problem in an effort to turn it around, the Church and organized labor are the most important."

Donahue, in presenting the award, said that Higgins has been all over the country and all over the labor movement and the Church in the fight for human and economic justice.

"The $5,000 and the medallion are secondary and are only outward and visible

(Continued on Page 2)

Job-Creation Steps Pushed By Kirkland

By James M. Shevis

Organized labor called on Congress to scrap President Reagan's economic policies in the face of the highest unemployment rate in more than 40 years, and turn its full attention to writing a new economic program that makes the creation of jobs the nation's No. 1 priority.

"The New Hooverism is a failure," said AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland as the Bureau of Labor Statistics announced an increase of four-tenths of 1 percent in the jobless rate, to 9.4 percent in April.

"IT IS TIME to promote the recovery before we slide into a new depression," Kirkland declared.

Last month's jobless rate was the highest the nation has seen since the 9.9-percent annual average recorded for 1941 at the end of the Great Depression. BLS did not begin keeping monthly statistics on unemployment until 1947. The April jobless rate, reflecting 10,307,000 unemployed Americans, eclipsed the 9-percent postwar peak set during the severe 1973-75 recession and matched last March.

"Reaganomics has increased unemployment by nearly one-third in less than a year," said Kirkland. "Instead of the economic recovery the Administration promised, this spring has brought the worst recession in 40 years."

SINCE LAST July, when most analysts agree the nation's eighth business recession since the end of World War II began, the national unemployment rate has risen more than 2 percentage points, from 7.2 to 9.4 percent, and the number of unemployed workers has increased by 2.5 million, BLS reported.

Kirkland called April's increase in

(Continued on Page 8)

Social Security Panelists Hit Senate Budget Scheme

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland and four other members of the National Commission on Social Security Reform charged that the integrity of the bipartisan study has been jeopardized by the attempt of Senate Republicans and the White House to use the congressional budget process to dictate the outcome.

Their protest was directed at the budget resolution adopted by the Senate Budget Committee on a party-line vote and warmly endorsed by President Reagan. It mandates a $40 billion "savings" in social security outlays over the next three years—with the cuts to achieve this supposedly based on recommendations of the national commission later this year.

SUCH AN ASSUMPTION prejudges the commission's conclusions and flatly contradicts President Reagan's assurance just days before that social security cuts wouldn't be used "to balance the budget," the five commissioners charged.

Joining in the statement, in addition to Kirkland, were Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan (D-N.Y.); Rep. Claude Pepper (D-Fla.); Robert M. Ball, who headed the Social Security Administration for more than a decade, and Martha Keys, a former member of the House from Kansas.

THEY WERE among the 10 persons named to the commission last December by House and Senate leaders. Five others, including Chairman Alan Greenspan, were appointed by President Reagan.

The commission will have until Jan. 1, 1983 to submit its recommendations but the Senate Budget Committee asked that

(Continued on Page 6)

OSHA Assailed For Blackout of Enforcement Data

The AFL-CIO has accused the Occupational Safety & Health Administration of imposing a blackout on public information dealing with enforcement activities of the agency.

OSHA has failed to honor the federation's requests for monthly compliance activity reports since last December, AFL-CIO Occupational Safety Director George H. R. Taylor charged. As a result, the federation is invoking provisions of the Freedom of Information Act in an effort to obtain the data.

In a letter to OSHA Administrator Thorne G. Auchter, Taylor pointed out that compliance reports and other information were readily provided under four

(Continued on Page 7)

UNION-BUSTING TACTICS of Litton Industries are protested by 500 members of the Coalition of Labor Union Women at the corporate headquarters in Beverly Hills, Calif. CLUW convention delegates joined in the protest.

Labor Gives Top Award to Msgr. Higgins

(Continued from Page 1)

signs of our inner feelings toward someone who has established milestones on the road to human solidarity that the rest of us can try to follow," he said.

"Higgins has faith in the labor movement, but he has not been uncritical . . . he has restored our sense of proportion by pointing out to us and to our Maker all the things that yet remain to be done. In that way he helps see to it that we keep looking ahead, as he does, instead of looking back."

DONAHUE observed that Higgins's message of "human solidarity, human responsibility and human hope" is also transmitted by the AFL-CIO's network of community service workers whose task has grown harder with every cutback or cancellation of resources for federal, state and local social programs.

He noted, for example, that "plant closings are overwhelming the resources of both public and private social agencies, and yet the doors are closing and the shutters are going up at nearly all the federal agencies created by the people of America after the Great Depression to prevent any repetition of the disasters visited on human beings by an uncontrolled market economy."

Donahue recalled that on Solidarity Day, last Sept. 19, more than 400,000 persons protested the "inhuman social policies" of the Reagan Administration. "They will march again," he said, on Nov. 2—Solidarity Day II—to elect a Congress "to get back on the road to human justice and human brotherhood."

HIGGINS, in his response, said President Reagan is "off base" when he places the burden of social services on church, labor and private social agencies.

"The President . . . is woefully out of touch with reality," he said, "if he really thinks that individual Good Samaritans can solve the enormously complex social and economic problems of 20th-Century America.

"He is also whistling in the dark if he thinks that churches and other voluntary agencies, in a period of very high unemployment, can make up for his own massive budget cuts in the field of social welfare."

Churches know "that they have an important social service role to play and are prepared to develop a balanced and realistic partnership with government," Higgins said. "They are not about to take the blame, however, for the government's decision to default on its own responsibilities."

Reagan Policies Draw Heavy Fire At Community Service Conference

Chicago—"Building Effective Coalitions for Labor and the Community" was the central theme of the 21st National AFL-CIO Conference on Community Services here, but the message of speakers was that President Ronald Reagan's methods and policies have placed too many burdens on American working families, the jobless and the poor.

The conference was held at "a difficult time for our nation and our labor movement . . . never has there been a greater need for community services," President John J. Sweeney of the Service Employees told the 372 delegates in a luncheon address.

SWEENEY SAID labor has succeeded over the years in the face of endless employer opposition and unending political attack. "We have confronted discrimination and we're on our way to overcoming it," he declared. "Now we are confronting Ronald Reaganism and we will overcome that, too."

He hailed the community service staff representatives for developing programs to "improve the quality of life outside the plant gate, outside the shop and outside the office or store" and integrating union members and their families in community affairs.

"THE REAGAN plan is simple," he said. "We must have less so the rich and the corporations can have more. We must live in an unhealthy environment and work in an unsafe workplace so that corporate profits may increase. We must pay more taxes so big business may pay none."

Sweeney reminded social service agencies supported by labor that they have a responsibility to encourage organization of their employees and to bargain with them.

"We cannot support those who fight us," he said, noting that in Chicago the Lutheran Welfare Agency is using United Way Funds to pay fees of union-busters.

WALTER G. DAVIS, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Community Services which organized the conference, declared in his keynote address that the nation is in a state of economic, social and political decline under an Administration that is seeking to wipe out 50 years of social progress.

"Workers are in double jeopardy," Davis said. "Reagan economic policy kills their jobs, then their benefits are curbed by budget cuts. We are alarmed because millions of people who rely on Aid to Families with Dependent Children for life support have no chance to get out of poverty."

He warned that difficult times lie ahead for state and local central bodies and community services representatives. When the President's Task Force in Private Sector Initiatives "self-destructs," he said, governors and mayors will be asked to create similar committees; organized labor must be in on the ground floor when these groups are organized. He said labor action in this area will show that unions care and can help people in need.

MUCH OF the conference was devoted to workshops dealing with the Human Side of Plant Closings, Labor and Employee Assistance Programs, Present Status of Day Care, Central Labor Councils and Community Services, the Impact of Budget Cuts on Community Services, and Union Counseling in the '80s.

Bert Seidman, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, said labor is fighting the rash of withdrawals of hospitals from the social security system as a tax-saving measure that is detrimental to employees. Once hospitals pull their workers out of the system, he pointed out, they can't get back into the program.

"There is no substitute for social security, "he said. "There is no program that offers the same kind of protection."

SEIDMAN SAID labor must continue to fight cuts in vital health care programs, work with broad-based coalitions for health and other social programs, and go to the polls on Solidarity Day II next November "to elect a Congress that cares about people and their problems."

Robert M. Ball, senior consultant to the Study Group on Social Security and former head of the Social Security Administration, warned that President Reagan, while appearing to retreat, still is out to gut the social security system. He said the early cuts in the program won by Reagan are nothing compared to his subsequent proposals.

"You don't save a program by destroying large parts of its protections," Ball observed.

He explained that while social security has some short-term financing problems, the long-range outlook is very good.

William R. Hutton, executive director of the National Council of Senior Citizens, blistered the Administration for attempting to reverse the positive policy on aging that the nation has developed over the years. He attacked the budget cuts that deepen the hardships of the elderly in such areas as housing and health care.

THE AGED are asked to accept an intolerable burden while only the rich have been helped by the "corrective action" of Reagan economic policy, Hutton asserted.

Other speakers included William A. Aramony, president, United Way of America; John H. Filer, chairman, Committee on Liaison with National Organizations, President's Task Force on Private Sector Initiatives; George M. Elsey, president, American Red Cross; and Robert E. Gibson, president, National Foundation for Consumer Credit.

Committee Votes Endorsement for Public Jobs Bill

A public service jobs bill targeted to areas of highest unemployment won a 19-9 endorsement from the House Education & Labor Committee despite strong Administration opposition.

The labor-supported measure, sponsored by Rep. Augustus Hawkins (D-Calif.) as a companion to the job training package the committee approved last month, leaves the scope of the program to the congressional appropriations process. Committee studies estimate about 225,000 job opportunities.

Long-term unemployed would be given hiring preference for jobs repairing and rehabilitating public facilities and in public safety and public health fields. Grants to eligible communities would have to be used within one year so as to achieve the goal of economic stimulus.

The committee also approved by voice vote a Civilian Conservation Corps program for youths between 16 and 25, to be financed by revenues from federal timber sales or leasing of mineral rights.

President Urged to Invoke Safeguards of Trade Law

Enforcement of existing laws would best achieve the goal of bills that seek to lower barriers other nations have erected against U.S. products, the AFL-CIO testified at Senate hearings.

Legislative Rep. Stephen Koplan said President Reagan already has powers under the Trade Act to retaliate against countries that impose non-tariff obstacles to American exports while taking advantage of open access to the vast U.S. market.

HE EXPRESSED the AFL-CIO's concern that the "reciprocity" bills being considered by a Senate Finance subcommittee "divert attention from the real problem," which is failure to enforce existing laws.

This Administration has an even poorer record than its predecessors, Koplan testified. "Year after year," he said, "the strong, broad-based industrial machine that was America has been weakened and its workers displaced" because of foreign trade practices.

He said the AFL-CIO appreciates the efforts of members of Congress who have introduced bills to achieve reciprocity in international trade. But "it is our belief that existing laws covering unfair trade practices, such as dumping and allowing for countervailing duties, were designed to establish fair and reciprocal trade," he observed.

KOPLAN NOTED that while the Reagan Administration continues to give lip service to the principle of reciprocity, it has no such concept in its pending Caribbean Basin Initiative, which would allow "funnelling imports from the world through the Caribbean countries into the U.S. market."

Likewise, he noted, the "trigger price mechanism" established to counter subsidized steel imports has been removed "despite the fact that employment in the U.S. steel industry is the lowest since the Depression year of 1933."

"The AFL-CIO believes that this nation cannot afford a U.S. policy that substitutes rhetoric for effective programs and action to make reciprocity a reality," Koplan testified. "Enforcement of existing law and change in trade policy are long overdue."

Organizing Rally Hears Kirkland

Houston Project Termed Long-Term Commitment

Houston—Organizing in a "right-to-work" state like Texas requires a greater effort, but the trade union movement is making progress toward unionizing this city's rapidly expanding workforce, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland said. Labor is not about to pack up and leave the field to businesses seeking bigger profits at the expense of workers, Kirkland declared at a rally of some 1,000 Houston construction workers and union officials.

"WE ARE HERE for the long pull," Kirkland said. "We don't expect any gifts, any easy victories or short-term successes. We are here to build and consolidate a union community that will endure as a great positive force for Houston and Texas."

At a news conference following the rally, held during the federation's regional conference here, Kirkland compared the AFL-CIO's six-month-old Houston Organizing Project to the labor drive launched in Los Angeles nearly 20 years ago. Still in operation, the Los Angeles campaign has netted 400,000 new union members.

"That's what we're building in the Houston campaign—a long-term, solid, consistent program," Kirkland said. About 125,000 Harris County workers are now organized, and the potential new membership is believed to exceed 800,000, he observed.

The Houston conference was immediately preceded by a similar meeting in Birmingham, Ala. The last of this year's regional conferences will be in Hartford, Conn., May 20-22.

Kirkland told the Houston rally that it was "altogether logical" to select that area as the target for a major organizing effort because the city "embodies the changes taking place in American industrial society." It is here and in other Sunbelt areas where new industries have sprung up and older companies have relocated, he observed.

"Many of these companies have had what in effect is a free ride—they have paid inferior wages and benefits, they have cut corners and job security provisions, and taken advantage of a political climate that has made the bosses sanctified figures who can do no wrong," Kirkland said.

Noting that 28 AFL-CIO unions have contributed staff personnel and financial resources to the Houston project, Kirkland said:

"THIS IS JUST one more example of the spirit of cooperation and solidarity that marks the labor movement in the era of the 1980s, as we begin our second century."

An "unintended educational effect" of the devastating results of President Reagan's economic programs has been to underscore the value of union membership in hard times, Kirkland pointed out, and this is proving to be an organizing asset.

During the Reagan recession, now in its ninth month, union contracts have protected organized workers from discriminatory layoffs while the unorganized have had to "stand unarmed in front of their bosses, and voiceless in the halls of Congress where decisions sealing their fate are made," he said.

The economic misery generated by Reagan's budget cuts and tight-money policies is now so widespread, so complete, that "some have called the situation a repression," Kirkland said. "That is something past a recession on the way to becoming a depression."

WHILE TEXAS and Houston are not suffering as badly as other parts of the country, it is clear that the ravages of Reaganomics are beginning to have some impact, Kirkland noted. The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported last week that unemployment in Texas rose from 5.9 percent in March to 6.5 percent in April as the national jobless rate soared over the same period to 9.4 percent, the highest level since the end of the Great Depression.

"Organized labor is the positive force, the historic movement which has brought prosperity and security to millions of Americans," Kirkland said. "The union makes workers strong in periods of distress, perhaps even more importantly than in times of prosperity."

HARDHAT AUTOGRAPHS and mini-press conferences marked the day for AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, shown here on the 61st floor of an all-union construction job in downtown Houston. Kirkland also visited with a Steelworkers in-plant committee at the suburban Chance Collar Co. and addressed a major downtown rally during his day touring the Houston Organizing Project.

Leadership Courses Scheduled for Women

Four regional summer schools for trade union women will offer special training to help them play more active roles in their unions. The one week schools are sponsored by the University and College Labor Education Association together with the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education and the Coalition of Labor Union Women.

The leadership training institutes will be taught on university campuses and are open to all union women. The Southern School will be held at St. Edward's University, Austin, Tex., June 13-18; the Eastern School will be at the University of Connecticut, Storrs, July 18-24; the Midwest School at the University of Indiana, Bloomington, July 25-30; and the Western School at the University of Oregon, Eugene, July 25-30.

Applications for enrollment are available from national and international unions or from state labor federations.

Additional information is available from the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education.

Airline Bankruptcies Feared From FAA 'Slot' Allotments

The financial problems of established airlines will be exacerbated by the federal government's plan to increase the new airlines' share of scarce service "slots" at flight-restricted airports, the AFL-CIO Airline Labor Coordinating Committee warned.

It said immediate efforts are needed to address the problems and head off "some major upheavals, including the real possibility of several bankruptcies."

SINCE THE committee issued its warning, debt-ridden Braniff International announced suspension of all flights on May 12, and told most of its employees not to report for work. The 54-year-old company appeared on the verge of liquidation or filing for reorganization under federal bankruptcy laws. Braniff employs about 9,000 workers, most of them unionized.

Special treatment for the "new entrant" airlines would cause further hardship to airline employees represented by the five unions comprising the committee, it said in a letter to a House aviation subcommittee. The unions representing 200,000 airline workers are the Machinists, Railway & Airline Clerks, Transport Workers, Air Line Pilots and the Flight Engineers.

DETERIORATING financial conditions of the air transport industry that resulted largely from deregulation measures have had a devastating impact "on the livelihoods of our members and their families," the committee said.

"Faced with this situation, the airlines have turned to us and the employees we represent and literally demanded that we accept wage cuts and deferrals, relaxation of work rules and massive furloughs to solve their problems."

The committee told subcommittee Chairman Norman Mineta (D-Calif.) that the way takeoff and landing slots are being allocated under the Federal Aviation Administration's Interim Operations Plan would further hurt established carriers.

SINCE THE Air Traffic Controllers went on strike last August and their subsequent firing by President Reagan, the FAA has sharply cut back operations at 22 major airports.

"To date, the FAA plan for capacity reduction has caused the airlines to reduce their schedules substantially and to furlough over 11,000 workers," the coordinating committee noted.

While recognizing that it will take time to rebuild the air traffic control system, the committee said it was getting upset over the FAA's treatment of the new entrants.

"We see new airlines, some of which have not yet begun to operate, being guaranteed scarce slots at congested airports while hundreds of airplanes are parked against the fence and thousands of our members are out of work," the committee told Mineta.

PRESIDENT John J. O'Donnell of the Air Line Pilots branded the allocation plan "unfair," charging that it would give nonunion new airlines "a leg up over the long-established carriers at the expense of union employees."

O'Donnell also said union airline workers are bearing the brunt of tactics by airline management to pay for reduced fares through wage deferrals and productivity concessions. Despite savings of millions of dollars from lower labor and fuel costs, airlines are still losing money because of the "suicidal rate wars," he said.

IT'S TIME to turn the economy around, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland told participants in the federation's regional conference at Birmingham. Reaganomics, with its tight-money policy and distorted priorities, has spread economic misery throughout the nation, he said. Alabama's unemployment rate is nearly 14 percent.

Bricklayers to Restore Historic Annapolis House

The Bricklayers have purchased a historic house in Annapolis, Md., that the union plans to restore as a monument to the craftsmen who built it 200 years ago.

Union President John T. Joyce said the "Brice House" will become part of the National Masonry Center and will also serve as a museum containing displays and exhibits open to the public. The restoration is expected to take two years, he said.

The structure, having a brick exterior and a fine plaster work interior, is situated near the Maryland State House in the historic section of Annapolis. It was purchased at auction for $1.3 million.

Election-Year Stirring

BELATEDLY, Congress is starting to realize that this Administration has no program to end the recession or to alleviate its hardships. Clearly, if the economy is not to be left twisting slowly in the breeze, it is up to the legislative branch of government to take the initiative.

The House sent a welcome signal in its 349-55 vote for mortgage interest subsidies that are strongly opposed by the White House, although it would be a mistake to read too much into that single vote. A politically attractive assist to homebuyers and to the moribund homebuilding industry by itself doesn't spell conversion to the broad-based economic recovery program the AFL-CIO has advocated.

Unfortunately, despite some declarations of repentance, this is still the same Congress that just a year ago jerked obediently to every White House knee tap.

STILL, THERE has been at least committee approval of job training legislation that goes beyond the tokenism the Administration advocated and, on the House side, for a public jobs program so desperately needed. There is growing congressional interest in a bill to add 13 weeks of extended unemployment benefits while the jobless rate remains at near-depression levels—even by some of those who last year voted to kill off such programs.

There have been suggestions that these signs of movement away from the failed supply-side rigidity are the restless stirrings of an election-year Congress.

If so, all to the good. A lot more stirring will be needed to get the economy unstuck. And if an approaching election provides the motivation, that's what elections are all about.

Where the Money Goes

THE DOLLAR may not buy as much these days, but some people do manage to accumulate an awful lot of them.

Just yesterday, it seems, company presidents and board chairmen were content with $500,000 paychecks. Now, we find a single corporation, Phibro, paying its two principal officers well over $2 million each in salaries and bonuses last year.

That's the corporate equivalent of breaking the four-minute mile. Meanwhile, the million-dollar-a-year club of company executives has grown so large its prestige has dimmed.

FOR MANY in the club, however, direct earnings are just the tip of the iceberg. Business Week magazine cites examples of tax-sheltered stock options that added as much as $7 million to executive incomes.

At one time, progressive income tax laws enabled the super-rich to contribute to the common weal in some rough approximation of their ability to do so. But a generation of loophole-enlarging was climaxed last year by the supply-side tax cut that President Reagan insists must be preserved at all costs.

To make up for the loss of tax revenue, the President and his congressional allies want to cut still further federal programs for the needy, aged and unemployed.

Let them eat dividends.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
LANE KIRKLAND, President
THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward	Murray H. Finley
Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts	Sol C. Chaikin
Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco	Charles H. Pillard
J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride	David J. Fitzmaurice
Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps	Wm. W. Winpisinger
William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell	John DeConcini
Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss	William Konyha
Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney	Douglas A. Fraser
Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield	Barbara Hutchinson
Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto	Gerald W. McEntee

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop John R. Oravec
David L. Perlman James M. Shevis

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, May 15, 1982 No. 19

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

LABOR PRESS AFL-CIO/CLC

Lesson One

A Place to Hide

Balanced Budget Amendment Convenient Ploy for President

By Gus Tyler

IN HIS TELEVISED address on the budget, the President of the United States called upon Congress "to pass as soon as possible a constitutional amendment to require balanced federal budgets."

This balanced budget idea was recently labeled by Rudolph Penner, resident economist of the conservative American Enterprise Institute as the "nonsense amendment." And nonsense it is because it is impossible—yes, impossible—for Congress or the President to draft such a budget. The reasons are simple:

TO BALANCE a budget, it is necessary to know in advance just what the income of the government will be and what the expenditures will be. If you don't know how much will come in and how much will go out, you can't balance the budget. Yet, the government cannot know these two basic facts and no amendment to the Constitution can magically fill the heads of the budgeters with the necessary prescient wisdom.

The government cannot know its income. The amount the government takes in depends upon the condition of the economy. If the economy booms, federal revenues boom; if the economy goes bust, federal revenues go bust. But since every Administration, especially this one, has proven repeatedly that it cannot forecast what will happen in the economy in the coming year, to assume that the government will know what its income will be is just so much nonsense.

THE GOVERNMENT does not know what its expenditures will be. If unemployment rises by three percentage points in the year, the cost to the federal government will be $75 billion. If the rate of interest rises, the cost to the federal treasury will rise. If the cost of steel, ships, guns or transportation rise, the cost to government will rise. If farmers produce great quantities of butter, wheat, corn, tobacco, rice, etc., the government will have to spend more on farm subsidies. If more men and women go on to social security than expected, the government will have to pay out more than expected.

None of these costs is predictable at the beginning of the fiscal year. And these are but a few random items. There are many, many more.

No Administration ever has been able to lay out a budget at the beginning of the year that was confirmed in fact at the end of the year. Some Administrations budgeted surpluses and ended up with deficits; other Administrations planned deficits and ended up with surpluses. Everybody knows this—or should know it. The record is there to read.

NO ADMINISTRATION has, of course, been as unable to predict income or outgo as the present Administration. The original forecast for 1982 was a deficit of $34 billion; as we got into the year, the estimated deficit was upped to $60 billion, then $80 billion, and now $100 billion or more.

How did Reagan go so wrong? He believed that his tax cut would so stimulate the economy that total income would increase. But he was wrong. The economy went down instead of up—and so did government revenues. So we're getting the greatest deficit in our history.

Yet, incredibly, the Administration that committed the greatest budgeting boo-boo in history now publicly proposes to make the balance mandatory. Maybe that's exactly why Reagan did what he did. What better way to hide the greatest goof ever than to call for a law that will make any future goof "unconstitutional?"

Copyright 1982, Gus Tyler Columns

Free Bargaining Pays Dividends to All Sides

We have a message for the business community of Houston: Free collective bargaining has great benefits for you, too. . . .

There is plenty of evidence to show that union workers are better workers, and that the mutual respect gained through free collective bargaining brings economic dividends for those on both sides of the table.

Organized labor is the positive force, the historic movement which has brought prosperity and security to millions of Americans—the force that has built the most efficient and productive economic system in the world.

—AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland at Houston regional conference, May 6, 1982.

'A Curious Game' with the Churches

Administration 'Off Base' in Bid To Shift Responsibility for Poor

The following is excerpted from the address by Msgr. George G. Higgins on his acceptance of the AFL-CIO's Murray-Green-Meany Award, May 5, 1982, Chicago.

SINCE THE MURRAY-GREEN-MEANY Award is sponsored by the Community Services Dept. of the AFL-CIO, it may be appropriate to add a word about the relationship between voluntary service agencies of this type and the federal government—a relationship which is currently up for grabs. This is a problem faced by church-related service organizations as well as by labor-sponsored agencies such as your own. In my judgment, the present Administration is off base in its handling of this problem, as witness President Reagan's recent meeting at the White House with top representatives of church-related and other voluntary service agencies.

The President called on the churches and these other agencies to accept more responsibility for the needy "rather than leaving it to the bureaucracy." In a luncheon speech at the White House, before an audience of more than 100 religious leaders of all denominations, the President talked of what he called the churches' traditional "catalyst" role in helping the poor, adding that he believed that the social welfare field has been "co-opted by government." To clinch his point, he cited the New Testament story of the Good Samaritan. This story, he said, "has always illustrated to me what God's challenge really is. He (the Good Samaritan) didn't go running into town to look for a case worker to tell him that there was a fellow out there that needed help. He took it upon himself."

THIS KIND of sentimental Biblical fundamentalism is embarrassing, to say the least. The President means well, of course, but he is woefully out of touch with reality if he really thinks that individual Good Samaritans can solve the enormously social and economic problems of 20th-Century America. He is also whistling in the dark if he thinks that the churches and other voluntary agencies, in a period of very high unemployment, can make up for his own massive budget cuts in the field of social welfare.

The President is correct, of course, in saying that the churches have traditionally played a "catalyst" role in helping the poor. It goes without saying that they will continue to play this role to the limit of their resources, but it is completely unrealistic to assume that they can do much more than that.

The President's reading of American history is also wide of the mark. He seems to be under the impression that the federal government, at the time of the Great Depression of the late 1920s and 1930s, deliberately "co-opted" the welfare role of the churches and other voluntary agencies. This kind of anti-government rhetoric does violence to the historical record.

The fact is that the government got into the field of social welfare because the problem was too big for the churches and other private agencies to handle. Alas, the problem is still too big for them to handle, and the President is wasting his time trying to persuade the churches that he magnanimously wants to get the government off their backs so that they can resume their proper role in the field of social welfare.

IT IS A CURIOUS game that the Administration is playing with the churches. Having convinced themselves that they have a solemn mandate to reduce the role of government to an absolute minimum, the President and his advisers are now trying to put the monkey on the back of the churches.

The churches are not being taken in by this ploy. They know that they have an important social service role to play and are prepared to develop a balanced and realistic partnership with government. They are not about to take the blame, however, for the government's decision to default on its own responsibilities.

My purpose in elaborating on this point is to suggest that there is no easy or simplistic answer, from the point of view of social ethics, to the twin problem of unemployment and inflation or to any of the other complex economic problems confronting our nation and indeed the entire world at the present time.

My former organization, the U.S. Catholic Conference, while fully prepared to carry its weight in directly aiding the poor, favors a high degree of governmental intervention to solve the problem of unemployment. Specifically, it supported the Humphrey-Hawkins Full Employment Act.

I CONCUR WITH this endorsement, but I fully realize—and I am sure that those who drafted the position papers on this matter also fully realize—that reasonable people may legitimately favor other options.

From the point of view of sound social ethics, however, it seems to me that there can be little room for disagreement with the position taken by the conference and organized labor and many other groups in the United States that full employment is a compelling ethical imperative, that solving the problem of inflation by creating high levels of unemployment runs contrary to the dictates of social justice, and that voluntary agencies cannot be expected to pick up all the slack.

Public Concern Mounting

Donahue Predicts '82 Election Will Repudiate Reagan Policies

THE POLITICAL PULSE of the current series of regional meetings between AFL-CIO national officers and state and local union leaders indicates that the Reagan coattails will be a heavy handicap in the 1982 congressional elections, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue said in a network radio interview.

Citing a "growing fear among working people about unemployment" and the prospects that one out of four blue-collar workers faces layoff this year, Donahue said "those brave or foolhardy enough to run on a Reagan program" face a steep uphill battle in the fall. The Administration's policy that "inflation is the only issue to be dealt with and ought to be controlled at the price of accepting this unthinkable level of unemployment" is unacceptable to the American people, he said.

Questioned by reporters on the Mutual radio interview, Labor News Conference, Donahue pointed out that a wide array of economists now agree that unemployment—already at 9.4 percent—will continue to rise, and that "even the Administration doesn't pretend that it is going to come down with any great speed"—probably no more than a point a year.

"That's a terribly painful prospect," he observed, one that leads not only to such consequences as increased drug use and crime but also to the "destruction of lives of kids who are growing up today in the ghettos of this country and who now have no hope—just no hope."

Donahue said the Administration's cutoff of training and job-creation programs has left these young people with little or no chance of fitting into the job market and is creating "a whole new group of problems" for the nation.

HE SAID that while the Administration talks about America being equal to the technological future, it also contends that there is "no role for the national government in planning for those times—in looking ahead to how many scientists, how many computer operators, how many of whatever specialty employment we will need."

Instead, it is seeking to shift that responsibility to the states—a burden that the states are incapable of handling, he asserted.

By Press Associates, Inc.

THERE ONCE WAS a powder-puff fighter named Joey Maxim who was an artist at bobbing and weaving and slipping punches. They couldn't lay a glove on him, as the saying goes. Even the great Sugar Ray Robinson chased Maxim for 15 rounds in vain.

President Reagan certainly must rate as the Joey Maxim of politics.

Last year, the President set out to cut taxes, cut social spending, raise defense spending and balance the budget, all at the same time. The supply-side concept of rational expectations was based on the argument that since people knew they were getting three straight annual tax cuts, they would invest, work hard and prosper, knowing they could keep their gains.

What actually happened was that big business and the wealthy took the money and ran.

The Reagan recession got under way last July, and it was clear the economy was starting to slide as hardnosed businessmen saw through Reaganomics. Reagan's response was that his program hadn't started yet; wait until the fiscal year began October 1st.

But the economy continued downward and unemployment moved upward.

THE TROUBLE WAS, Reagan said, the tax cut for individuals only took effect in July and it should have been retroactive to January. If it had, people would have had more savings to invest and the "magic of the marketplace" would have worked.

The harsh winter came. Unemployment continued to rise. Now the budget cuts in federal programs were being felt and the lines of hungry people grew longer. Reagan's response was to unload surplus cheese from government warehouses which cost too much to store and besides was getting moldy.

By spring, when Treasury Sec. Donald Regan said the economy would come "roaring back," unemployment was setting postwar records.

The President was unfazed. He blamed the nation's problems on 40 years of spending by Democrats. On Mar. 31, he told a press conference that emergency actions didn't work during the seven recessions since World War II. He failed to add that three recessions occurred under Eisenhower.

THERE'S NOTHING the government can do, Reagan said. It's the interest rates, that's what it is. They're staying up because the money markets just don't believe we'll stay the course.

Unemployment worsens and now the horror stories are being reported across the land. Small business bankruptcies are setting records. Plants are shutting down all over.

It's the media's fault, Reagan said. The media keeps up "a drumbeat of pessimism" which prevents people from going out and spending money. Why is it news that a guy in South Succotash loses his job? Interview a guy who is working.

It's the women, the President tells a group of editors and broadcasters. Part of the unemployment is not so much the recession as it is—pardon me, ladies—the increase in women workers.

NOW EVERYONE is repeating Reagan's favorite campaign question: Are you better off today than you were a year ago? Critics believe the answer is self-evident. Millions of workers denied extended jobless-benefits. School breakfasts and lunches cut back. Aid to Families with Dependent Children cut back or ended for 750,000 families, with another 921,000 families threatened this year. Supplemental Security Income benefit cuts threatened for half the poor, elderly, blind or disabled. Food stamps and child nutrition programs victimized by cuts.

Not true, say Reagan and the hard-eyed, thin-lipped bookkeepers of this Administration. On national TV, they hold up charts showing that federal programs are increasing all the time; they are just cutting the rate of increase and getting "cheaters" off the rolls.

GROWING FEAR of layoffs for blue-collar workers will make the Reagan coattails a heavy handicap in the 1982 congressional elections, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue said on Labor News Conference. Questioning him were Jerome Cahill, left, of the New York Daily News and Drew Von Bergen of United Press International. The AFL-CIO produced public affairs program is aired weekly over Mutual radio.

Drive Seeks Nursing Home Board Seat

The AFL-CIO Food & Beverage Trades Dept. is spearheading a campaign to get Arthur S. Flemming elected to the board of directors of Beverly Enterprises, Inc., which operates the largest chain of nursing homes in the country.

Flemming, a former U.S. Commissioner on Aging, is seeking one of the six seats on the board as a "public" candidate to give consumers a voice in company decisions.

ACCORDING TO FBTD findings, more than 60 percent of Beverly's revenues comes from Medicaid reimbursements. For fiscal 1981, the company's operating revenues amounted to $486 million.

The election will be conducted at Beverly's annual stockholders meeting in Pasadena, Calif., in late May, where the FBTD will also be leading a proxy fight to block a $31 million purchase of Beverly shares by Hospital Corp. of America, the nation's largest profit-making hospital chain. HCA currently owns 18 percent of Beverly stock.

Through its subsidiaries, Beverly operates 479 nursing homes and other care facilities in 31 states and the District of Columbia. At the end of last year, Beverly had 39,000 employees, but less than 10 percent were union-represented.

FBTD President Robert F. Harbrant said, "We're not trying to unseat the entire Beverly board—just attempting to place one highly qualified public director for some balance."

HARBRANT SAID no current member of the Beverly board fully represents patient or public interests.

Flemming, who served as Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare during the Eisenhower Administration, is currently president of the National Council on Aging.

"There should be a consumer representative on the board of companies involved in activities which have such a significant impact on the lives of older people," Flemming said in a statement.

AFTER TWO YEARS of fruitless negotiations, Steelworkers picket the Procter & Gamble soap plant at Kansas City, Kan., to protest the company's refusal to agree to a settlement. Meanwhile, the USWA has called for a worldwide boycott of 10 P&G soap products: Ivory, Joy and Dawn liquid detergents; Zest, Camay and Ivory soap bars, and Tide, Cheer, Oxydol and Bold laundry detergents.

Global Boycott of P&G Soap Launched by Steelworkers

New York—The Steelworkers, locked in a fierce organizing battle to represent workers of the Procter & Gamble Co., called for a worldwide boycott of 10 P&G soap products.

In announcing the international campaign at a press conference, USWA President Lloyd McBride also charged that P&G is marketing laundry detergent which contains a chemical that is hazardous to workers and consumers.

THE AFL-CIO had initiated a national boycott against the company's soap products last November. The 10 P&G labels on the boycott list are Ivory, Joy and Dawn liquid detergents; Zest, Camay and Ivory toilet soap bars, and Tide, Cheer, Oxydol and Bold powdered laundry detergent.

McBride said the worldwide boycott was launched in cooperation with the Geneva-based International Federation of Chemical, Energy & General Workers. The ICEF and the USWA earlier formed a world labor council of P&G unions in 12 countries to coordinate organizing efforts at the company's plants around the globe.

Until the USWA organized P&G's soap plant at Kansas City, Kan., in 1980, none of the workers at the company's 38 production facilities in the United States was represented by an AFL-CIO affiliate. Most had been under "company unions," the USWA said.

NOT ONLY has P&G stymied any kind of settlement at the Kansas plant after 60 collective bargaining sessions, but it attempted to oust the USWA and replace it with a weak "independent" union, McBride charged.

However, the day before the international boycott was announced, the Kansas soap plant workers voted 249 to 149 in a National Labor Relations Board decertification election to retain the Steelworkers.

USWA members at the P&G plant, who have been denied wage increases since 1979, fully support the boycott action, the union reported.

Citing the Kansas plant struggle, McBride said that "as we have found through bitter experience that a company which is indifferent to the rights of workers is frequently indifferent to the health and safety of consumers as well, we have embarked on this campaign" of the worldwide boycott.

McBRIDE SAID the USWA discovered that P&G was putting the hazardous compound NTA (trisodium nitrolotriacetate) in laundry detergent from information exchanged at a meeting of the world labor council in March.

Based on 1976 studies conducted by the National Cancer Institute, NTA has been described as a cancer-causing agent. The government studies revealed that laboratory animals exposed to NTA developed tumors in the bladder, kidney and urinary tract.

At the press conference, McBride displayed a box of Tide laundry detergent purchased in Indianapolis which listed NTA as one of its ingredients.

"If P&G associates itself in multimillion-dollar advertising campaigns with 'purity,' I ask how can they violate the public trust by selling a soap product known to be hazardous."

The company's performance on premarketing testing has not been good, McBride charged, "especially when we recall the recent controversy in P&G's selling of Rely tampons."

Social Security Panelists Hit Senate Budget Scheme

(Continued from Page 1)

the timetable be advanced so that the report can be considered in November at a post-election "lame-duck" session of Congress.

The controversy over a budget resolution flared at the commission's first meeting following the Senate committee action, but there was also a significant step toward accord.

Sen. John Heinz (R-Pa.), a commission member, announced his sponsorship of legislation to take the social security program out of the federal budget process, a move that the AFL-CIO has repeatedly urged. Senate Finance Committee Chairman Robert J. Dole (R-Kans.) also expressed his support.

MEANWHILE, there have been strong signs in both the House and Senate of Republican concerns over home-state outrage at this latest attempt by the Administration to get around President Reagan's pledge not to reduce social security protections.

House Republican Leader Robert H. Michel (Ill.) told the White House bluntly that he and most other Republicans will oppose any budget resolution that includes social security cuts. The subject should not even be touched before the commission has made its recommendations, he insisted.

In the Senate, GOP leaders had to come up with a hastily-drafted "compromise" substitute resolution in order to prevent widespread defections to a Democratic motion to undo the social security provisions of the budget resolution.

AFL-CIO Social Security Director Bert Seidman sharply challenged the Administration claims of a dire crisis in the social security system unless benefits are cut back.

"There is no need to cut benefits, now or later," Seidman insisted in a recorded statement for radio stations.

Social security's financial problems "are not major" and "can easily be corrected by inter-fund borrowing and other minor adjustments."

The cause of the Administration's deficit problems, he stressed, is "last year's excessive tax giveaways to the wealthy and the corporations." Social security "belongs to the American working people" and should be kept separate from the budget debate, he said.

SEIDMAN ACCUSED the Reagan White House of putting up "a semantic smokescreen" by calling for reductions in "entitlement programs" instead of referring directly to social security. He said the promise of "no cuts for current beneficiaries" is used by the Administration to refer to this year only, concealing the fact that "benefits would be reduced in the future for all retirees" if its proposals were adopted.

George Dooley Retires From United Way Labor Post

George J. Dooley has retired as Northeast regional director of United Way of America's labor participation department. As liaison representative between the United Way and the AFL-CIO Dept. of Community Services for the past 30 years, Dooley coordinated community service activities at the state local level. He comes out of the Teamsters.

2 Sea Unions Link Efforts To Save Jobs

New York—The nation's two largest unions of unlicensed seamen, the Seafarers and the National Maritime Union, announced a joint campaign to preserve American seagoing jobs.

NMU President Shannon Wall, SIU President Frank Drozak, and four other top officers from each union will meet monthly to discuss mutual problems and coordinate their activities in a number of areas. These include:

- Legislative and political activities, including joint lobbying efforts on Capitol Hill and support for the candidacies of legislators who have shown their interest in the need for a strong U.S. merchant marine.
- Organizing non-union or company-union maritime operations throughout the country.
- Developing a joint policy toward manning levels, "especially in regard to civilian crewed vessels under charter by the Military Sealift Command." The union officials expressed concern that unlicensed crew sizes have been drastically cut in all military and privately owned operations while licensed crew levels have remained constant, or increased.
- Sharing, on a 50-50 basis, the crewing of all new vessels operated by companies not now under contract to either union. This could include the crewing of government-owned vessels chartered by the Military Sealift Command for crewing and operation by private industry.

In a joint statement, Drozak and Wall said U.S. unlicensed crews "have shouldered an inordinate amount of the crew cutbacks ordained by automation and economic factors."

RECENT FIGURES show that American unlicensed crews are more than cost-competitive with unlicensed crews of other Western nations, they said. According to the U.S. General Accounting Office, Wall and Drozak said, the cost of employing an able seaman on a Japanese ship now runs over $300 a month more than the cost of employing an able seaman on a U.S. ship.

The joint statement said the new cooperative spirit between the two unions "will go a long way to meeting competitive requirements of a fast-changing maritime industry, and to spread more equitably among all the maritime unions the burdens of keeping the U.S.-flag merchant marine competitive in worldwide commerce."

Kirkland Leads U.S. Delegation to ICFTU Meeting

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland headed a three-member American delegation to a meeting of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions general board that opened in Brussels May 13.

Serving with Kirkland as delegates were Vice Presidents Martin Ward and Douglas Fraser. Also at the meeting, the first to which the AFL-CIO has sent representatives since reaffiliating with the ICFTU on Jan. 1, were five alternate delegates: Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue, AFL-CIO European representative Irving Brown, and Vice Presidents Glenn Watts, Albert Shanker, and Sol C. Chaikin.

WITH HEADQUARTERS in Brussels, the ICFTU comprises labor federations from more than 60 nations with a global membership in excess of 58 million. The AFL-CIO withdrew from the confederation in 1969. It voted last fall, just prior to its 14th biennial convention, to return.

Brown also will serve as the U.S. worker delegate to the International Labor Organization's 68th annual conference in Geneva next month. Michael Boggs, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of International Affairs, was named substitute delegate.

Spur to Housing

House Votes Subsidy For Home Mortgages

(Continued from Page 1)

Robert H. Michel (Ill.) that the legislation is "inconsistent" with the President's program and the Administration "strongly opposes passage."

BUT WHILE Michel and 42 other Republicans backed the President's position, 135 bolted to join all but 12 House Democrats in support of the bill.

A somewhat smaller-scaled measure has been approved by the Senate Banking Committee.

In other congressional developments:

- The House Banking Committee approved a larger $3.5 billion mortgage subsidy in a separate bill for the 1983 fiscal year, that starts next Oct. 1. Included in the legislation is a labor-sought provision to help homeowners who have lost their jobs avoid foreclosure on their mortgages.
- The 13 weeks of extended unemployment benefits now available in states with exceptionally high jobless rates would be stretched to 26 weeks under a labor-supported, Administration-opposed bill that has been approved by a House Ways & Means subcommittee. Some 628,000 unemployed workers in 31 states are in their final weeks of eligibility under the present program.
- A union-sought provision restoring supervision of surface mining of stone, clay, sand, gravel and phosphate to the Mine Safety & Health Administration was included in the supplemental appropriations bill passed by the House. If the Senate concurs, it would reverse earlier action by Congress curtailing the agency's jurisdiction. The Steelworkers, the Cement, Lime & Gypsum Workers and the Operating Engineers lobbied hard on the issue and labor's position was upheld on a 220-186 vote.
- The Senate Commerce Committee imposed new curbs on the Federal Trade Commission as the price of a bill to extend the life of the FTC. The Republican-controlled committee voted to bar the FTC from scrutinizing restrictive or deceptive practices of professionals, including doctors, lawyers, dentists, engineers and accountants. It also barred the FTC from prohibiting advertising the agency considers "unfair" even though not outright deception.

FTC CHAIRMAN James Miller, a Reagan appointee, protested the Senate committee action as "bad law, bad economics and bad politics" because it would create "a privileged class immune from laws."

A Wall Street Journal news story on the committee action noted that political action committees of doctors and dentists had contributed heavily to the campaigns of members of congressional committees that oversee the FTC.

- A Senate Immigration subcommittee approved a bill providing civil fines and criminal penalties for employers who knowingly hire illegal aliens and directing the Justice Dept. to devise within three years a foolproof system to identify legal residents. The bill cleared the subcommittee unanimously but faces renewed scrutiny when it is considered by the full Judiciary Committee.
- A House Ways & Means subcommittee approved a version of President Reagan's Caribbean Basin Initiative, which labor opposes as worsening the job-wrecking import problem. The panel did tighten up the Administration bill by excluding from the tariff exemption imports of luggage, handbags, work gloves, leather apparel and belts. It also curtailed slightly the loophole that would allow other countries to channel goods throughout the Caribbean area with only a token local input.

ON OPENING PROGRAM of a 27-part television series on American labor, Ladies' Garment Workers President Sol C. Chaikin discusses workplace changes with Dr. Phillip C. Dolce of Bergen Community College in New Jersey, which is producing the series for early-morning viewing on the CBS network—and possible college credits. The series begins on Channel 2 in New York City on May 17 at 6 a.m., with Monday, Wednesday and Friday shows. Elsewhere, it will be shown Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, starting on May 18, with times varying locally.

Union Demands Investigation Of Grain Elevator Explosion

The Grain Millers called on the Agriculture Dept. to make immediate use of appropriated federal funds to investigate an Iowa grain elevator explosion in hopes of preventing further death and injury to grain workers.

Five workers were killed and at least 22 injured in the blast that rocked Council Bluffs, Iowa, on Apr. 20. The facility, operated by the Bluffs Elevator Co., is one of about 400 grain elevators in the state that has had no safety inspection since 1974 because of a lack of funds, according to the Iowa labor commissioner's office.

BUT GRAIN MILLERS President Frank T. Hoese noted in a wire to Agriture Sec. John R. Block that the department's Federal Grain Inspection Service (FGIS) has yet to spend one penny of the $50,000 Congress appropriated for 1982 for on-site inspections even though two explosions at grain elevators have occurred this year.

In calling for FGIS action on the Council Bluffs explosion, Hoese told Block that "the very lives of our members depend on the results that can be derived from these on-site inspections."

The AFL-CIO Food & Beverage Trades Dept. pointed out that the Council Bluffs explosion is the latest in a long list of similar tragedies at grain handling facilities. In the past seven years, the FBTD noted, more than 149 grain explosions killed 111 workers and injured 337 others while causing more than $100 million in damage.

ACCORDING TO experts, grain dust can be more explosive under certain conditions than coal dust or dynamite.

The Occupational Safety & Health Administration, which has yet to develop a federal grain dust standard, has conducted only a limited number of safety inspections. Of the more than 10,000 grain facilities across the country, OSHA inspected only 273 grain elevators in fiscal year 1980. The number of inspections was cut in half in fiscal 1981 because of sharp reductions in OSHA's budget by the Reagan Administration.

FBTD President Robert F. Harbrant said corrective action by the federal government is long overdue.

"DESPITE THE recurrence of these tragic explosions, and the needless death, injury and destruction they produce, the government has failed to strengthen safety regulations for grain facilities," Harbrant said.

Citing a USDA report on the grain dust problem, Harbrant said 90 percent of the explosions are preventable if proper systems and controls are used at grain elevators.

"The United States has possessed the necessary knowledge and many of the prevention techniques for at least 60 years," he said. "It is obvious that they have not been adequately implemented."

OSHA Assailed For Blackout of Enforcement Data

(Continued from Page 1)

previous OSHA administrations—both Republican and Democratic.

"Under your administration, however, there evolved a change in policy as to the availability of such public information," he wrote Auchter.

Taylor further noted that it took three months to get an explanation from the agency as to why the information was being withheld.

After being put off on several occasions, Taylor said he was told that OSHA was totally overhauling its data-compiling and recording system, and that when the changes are completed, the reports would be available only quarterly to the public.

But Taylor said he was also informed that the system would be out of operation for several months and the reports would not be released until next October or January 1983.

"As a result of your blackout of facts and figures for an entire year, or perhaps longer," Taylor wrote Auchter, public interest groups such as the AFL-CIO and even Congress "will have no idea of what is going on in OSHA compliance activities."

The AFL-CIO had been using the reports to analyze OSHA's performance since the Reagan Administration took office. Based on 1981 data, the federation found that OSHA's workplace inspections dropped 21 percent from the year before; follow-up inspections were off 72 percent. The AFL-CIO study also showed a 75-percent drop in findings of "willful violations" and a reduction of 48 percent in proposed penalties for violations.

Health Planning Act Credited With Savings to Consumers

The AFL-CIO urged Congress to renew the National Health Planning Act, which gives consumers a strong voice in the type of health care facilities in their communities and provides a check on wasteful duplication of expensive equipment.

AFL-CIO Social Security Director Bert Seidman told a House subcommittee considering the issue that savings achieved through the review process "have meant lower insurance premiums and out-of-pocket payments for working Americans."

SEIDMAN NOTED that Congress cut the program's budget by 63 percent last year at the request of the Reagan Administration, which now wants to let the law expire on Sept. 30, thus killing the program entirely.

Despite recurrent underfunding, Seidman testified, the program has overcome most of its early problems and achieved significant savings in many areas.

"We now have a corps of technical experts knowledgeable enough to carry out the mandate of the law," he noted. "Local consumers of health services have been brought into the decision-making process. . . . States have been given strong financial incentives to make the difficult decisions concerning the allocation of health care resources."

MORE comprehensive measures are needed to deal with health planning and health costs, Seidman emphasized, including changes in the manner of reimbursing health care providers. But eliminating the modest planning program now in place is no way to start, he said.

Meanwhile, an attempt to get a reprieve for the law through the Senate Labor & Human Resources Committee lost on an 8-8 tie vote.

The effort was made by Sen. Lowell P. Weicker, Jr. (R-Conn.) as an amendment to a bill reauthorizing two of the National Institutes of Health.

WEICKER GOT the support of all seven Democrats on the committee but was unable to bring any of his fellow Republicans with him on the vote. He said he will try again when the legislation is on the Senate floor.

The House measure to renew the program with some changes is sponsored by Rep. Henry A. Waxman (D-Calif.), chairman of the subcommittee that held the hearings.

Safety Council Awards Honor Five Unionists

San Francisco—The National Safety Council's labor division honored five trade union safety directors with its top award at the division's annual spring meeting here.

Recipients of the Distinguished Service to Safety award are: Joseph Leonard of the Longshoremen, Dale Marr of Operating Engineers Local 3, Murray Naquin of Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers Local 4-447, Frank Rapp of the Auto Workers and F. T. (Pete) Sennett of Rubber Workers Local 186.

Strike Activity in '81 Down to 15-Year Low

Strike activity dropped last year to the lowest level since the mid-1960s, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

Work stoppages in 1981 accounted only for 0.11 percent, or 24.6 million workdays, of the total working time logged by the U.S. labor force. This compares with 0.14 percent, or 33.2 million workdays, in 1980.

The BLS attributed the decline in strike activity to a relatively light bargaining year in 1980, as well as to a number of major collective bargaining agreements reached without strikes in the airline, railroad, longshoring and maritime industries, and the U.S. Postal Service.

The number of workers involved in strikes last year declined to 1.1 million from 1.4 million in 1980. Strike activity has declined steadily in the past six years, BLS reported.

'New Hooverism' Assailed

Jobless Rate of 9.4% Tied to Reaganomics

(Continued from Page 1)

joblessness "another cruel turn on the ratchet of unemployment" which is punishing millions of Americans. If the number of so-called "discouraged" workers—those who say they have given up seeking jobs—and the number of workers employed part-time because full-time work is not available were added to the total unemployed, the "true" jobless rate would be much higher.

Kirkland aimed his sharpest criticism at Reagan's "supply-side" economic advisers, whom he described as "quacks who practice their trade like the leech doctors of old who believed you can cure a patient of all ills by bleeding him to death."

Private economist Michael Evans predicted that the jobless rate would continue to climb. "It is a lead-pipe cinch it will go to 10 percent, and it is a 1-in-4 chance it will go to 12 percent by the end of the year, which most people would call a depression. We are looking at a potentially explosive situation," he warned.

THE HIGHEST unemployment figure in the nation's history was the 24.9-percent jobless rate recorded at the depth of the Great Depression in 1933, when the labor force was only half its present size of 109.6 million.

In Chicago, where he addressed a group of regional editors, President Reagan conceded that some parts of the country were in a "near depression," a fact borne out by BLS figures on unemployment in the 10 largest states. Michigan, hard hit by slumping auto sales, had a seasonally adjusted jobless rate of 15 percent in April, Ohio 12.4 percent, Pennsylvania 10.7 percent, and Illinois 10.4 percent.

Layoffs in construction and manufacturing industries and a decline in retail jobs were largely responsible for throwing 453,000 more Americans out of work in April, BLS said. The bureau found more than 99,340,000 people still employed, but this was 152,000 fewer than a month earlier even though 301,000 more people were looking for jobs.

IN AN APPEARANCE before the congressional Joint Economic Committee, BLS Commissioner Janet L. Norwood noted that businesses usually tend to increase their workforces as spring weather sets in and large numbers of people resume job searches as chances for outdoor work increase.

"This April, however, the continued impact of the recession dampened all of these developments," she observed.

Norwood pointed out that unemployment—unadjusted for seasonal fluctuations—declined by 330,000 from March to April. But since the drop was much less than usual for that time of year, the adjusted figures showed a rise of 453,000 in the number of unemployed workers and this produced the increase in the jobless rate. Economists rely on seasonally adjusted data, because they take into account factors such as weather and normal trends during the year to show the effect of the economy on unemployment.

IN ADDITION to those thrown out of work by the recession, 5.8 million people were forced to work part-time in April because they could not find full-time jobs, the most since BLS began to collect these statistics in 1955. It was a rise of 117,000 from March and 1.5 million from last July.

The jump in unemployment affected nearly every worker category in the economy. Among teenagers, the rate overall rose from 21.9 to 23 percent over the month. Among black teenagers, joblessness increased from 46 to 48.1 percent.

Unemployment among adult men rose to a postwar high of 8.2 percent from 7.9 percent in March. For women, the jobless rate went from 7.9 to 8.3 percent. Black unemployment, which climbed to 18.4 percent from 18 percent in March, was the highest since BLS began recording this statistic a decade ago. The jobless rate for whites rose from 7.9 to 8.4 percent over the month.

AMONG MARRIED men, usually one of the last groups hit by economic downturns, the unemployment rate rose to a postwar high of 6 percent in April from 5.5 percent in March. For full-time workers, the rate jumped from 8.9 percent in March to 9.2 percent. Only the rate for workers of Hispanic origin improved over the month, declining to 12.5 percent from 12.7 percent the previous month.

The jobless rate for blue-collar workers soared to another postwar record, 13.7 percent; it was 12.9 percent in March and 9.5 percent last July. The rate for white-collar workers was about unchanged over the month, up one-tenth of 1 percent at 4.9 percent; it has risen by about a percentage point since July.

Unemployment among construction workers rose from 17.9 percent in March to 19.4 percent in April. Construction employment over the month was down 85,000. In the last year, nearly one in 10 construction jobs has been lost, BLS said.

Factory jobs declined by 80,000 in April, with most of the reduction occurring in durable goods industries. The largest cutbacks were in machinery, primary and fabricated metals, and transportation equipment.

SERVICE JOBS declined for the second month in a row, with a drop of 65,000 posted among retail trade workers and 25,000 among government employees.

Even as these workers were being laid off, others were working shorter hours. BLS said the average workweek of production workers on nonfarm payrolls in April was 34.8 hours, down one-tenth of an hour over the month.

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

5/15/82

GERMAN POSTAL WORKERS Union President Ernst Breit, second from left, confers with members of the AFL-CIO International Affairs Committee during his recent visit to Washington. Breit, who is also president of the Postal, Telegraph & Telephone International, an international trade secretariat, earlier met with representatives of PTTI affiliates in the United States. From left, are PTTI Sec.-Gen. Stefan Nedzynski, Breit, and Federation Vice Presidents Martin J. Ward and Glenn E. Watts. Ward chairs the International Affairs Committee.

Uphill All the Way

Pennsylvania Delegates Elect New Officers, Map Program

Pittsburgh — Delegates to the Pennsylvania AFL-CIO's annual convention here elected new top officers and adopted a program keyed to defending labor's gains from legislative attacks.

Julius Uehlein was elected president to succeed Harry Boyer, who has held the office since 1962. Uehlein is currently secretary-treasurer of the Steelworkers Legislative Committee in Pennsylvania.

THE 2,000 DELEGATES elected Judy Heh to the new post of secretary-treasurer and Robert T. McIntyre as executive vice president. Heh, now on the staff of State, County & Municipal Employees Council 13, has also been president of the union's local in Pittsburgh.

McIntyre, president of International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 81 in Scranton, had been treasurer of the federation since 1971. He is the federation's COPE director.

Harry Block is retiring as secretary of the state body and the convention voted to merge the offices of secretary and treasurer beginning June 1 when the new officers begin their four-year terms.

Boyer and Block had served as co-officers when the Pennsylvania AFL and CIO merged in 1960. Block had been president of the State CIO since 1946, and Boyer had been president of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers District 1.

In his speech to the delegates, Uehlein pledged to continue the programs of the federation that serve Pennsylvania workers. In today's economic and political climate, he said, the State AFL-CIO must "redouble its efforts to protect gains working people have made, and to make even more progress."

Uehlein scored the Reagan Administration's economic program as "wreckanomics," and stressed that "we must make today's labor strong for labor's tomorrow."

Among some 160 resolutions acted on by the delegates to the state federation's largest convention was a strong condemnation of the Administration's "unfair, job-destroying" programs and damaging cuts in the budget for social programs.

The convention amended the federation's constitution to require retirement of officers at age 70.

DELEGATES URGED passage of an agency shop law in Pennsylvania for public employees and strengthening of the public employee bargaining law, including protections from "legislative attacks" on public workers' wages and conditions.

The federation's "citizen of the year" award was given to State Supreme Court Justice Robert N. C. Nix for "his demonstrated commitment to demystifying the judiciary and to making the system work for and protect" the needs of ordinary people.

Nix will become the court's chief justice in 1983 and will be the first black person to hold that post.

Other speakers included Sen. John Heinz (R-Pa.), who received the convention's endorsement for re-election, and Rep. Allen E. Ertel (D-Pa.) whose bid to unseat Republican Gov. Richard L. Thornburgh was also endorsed by the State AFL-CIO.

Labor speakers at the three-day meeting included Steelworkers President Lloyd McBride; AFSCME President Gerald W. McEntee; AFL-CIO Region III Director Walter Waddy; Paul Ornburn, national representative of the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept.; and Ruth Colombo, COPE eastern region VIP director.

Auto Workers Affiliate With Professional Employee Dept.

The Auto Workers have joined the AFL-CIO Dept. for Professional Employees, raising the number of department affiliates to 27, DPE President Albert Shanker announced.

The UAW was one of the founding unions of DPE's predecessor organization.

Senate GOP Drops Plan for Social Security Cuts

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII Saturday, May 22, 1982 No. 20

Senate Republican leaders, facing up to political reality, revised their proposed budget for fiscal year 1983 by dropping a plan to realize $40 billion in social security slashes over the next three years.

Sen. Pete V. Domenici (R-N.M.), chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, which earlier this month had reported out a budget resolution, announced the change only a day after defending the panel's proposal to make the social security reductions.

AS MANY as eight Republican moderates up for re-election this fall indicated they would desert their party if the social security cutback were kept in the budget.

The Republican-controlled Senate sought to complete its version of the budget by late Thursday or Friday after the AFL-CIO News press time. The House, meanwhile, girded for debate over at least four different budget plans, and was not expected to complete floor proceedings until the middle of next week.

As the skirmishing over the politically volatile social security issue died down, Sen. Robert C. Byrd (D-W.Va.), the Senate minority leader, said: "I congratulate the majority party for coming around to our point of view."

THE BUDGET plan worked out and approved by the Senate Budget Committee, after this week's additions, envisions a projected deficit of $115.3 billion in the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

Of the plans introduced so far in the House, that offered by Rep. David R. Obey (D-Wis.) on behalf of himself and other Democratic liberals is the only one that includes a job-creation stimulus package.

THE MEASURE, which has the support of the AFL-CIO, would result in a $99 billion deficit in the 1983 fiscal year. Obey's plan calls for fewer domestic spending cuts, largely by a restructuring and reduction of proposed Administration tax cuts.

In the Senate, following deletion of the $40 billion from the social security program, the Republicans tightened ranks to defeat the first of many Democratic efforts to place Republicans on record against adding funds for social programs. A move by Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan (D-N.Y.) to

(Continued on Page 8)

Economy Continues Steep Slide

AFL-CIO'S REAFFILIATION with the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions after a 13-year absence is applauded by delegates to the ICFTU's 80th executive board meeting in Brussels. The federation's delegation included, front row, Vice Presidents Douglas Fraser and Martin Ward and President Lane Kirkland; second row, Vice Presidents Albert Shanker and Sol C. Chaikin and Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue.

ICFTU Board Welcomes Return of U.S. Delegates

Brussels—The war over the Falkland Islands and continuing repression of workers and their unions in Poland, Turkey, Bangladesh, and elsewhere in the world figured prominently in discussions at the 80th executive board meeting of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions here.

The meeting in this Belgian capital marked the first since July 1968 that representatives of the AFL-CIO have attended and the first since the federation reaffiliated last Jan. 1. ICFTU President P. P. Narayanan, who chaired the meeting, welcomed the AFL-CIO delegation to applause from the 60 representatives from national trade union centers in the free world who attended. There were also representatives from half a dozen international trade union secretariats.

REPRESENTING the federation were President Lane Kirkland and Vice Presidents Douglas A. Fraser and Martin J. Ward, the AFL-CIO delegates. Alternate delegates who attended were Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue, European Rep. Irving Brown, and Vice Presidents Glenn Watts, Albert Shanker, and Sol C. Chaikin.

The executive board, which is the ICFTU's highest decision-making body after its World Congress, acted on a heavy agenda during the two-day meeting. Besides adopting a number of resolutions concerning ICFTU activities in various countries, delegates disposed of a wide range of internal matters.

On the crisis in the South Atlantic, where Argentina and Britain appear to to have reached an impasse in peace talks, the board reiterated its condemnation of the use of force to solve territorial disputes. It called on both countries to respect United Nations Security Council resolution 502 and give UN Sec.-Gen. Javier Perez de Cuellar a chance to help the two nations reach a negotiated accord.

THE ICFTU board also expressed its full solidarity with the Argentine workers "who are the victims of a military dictatorship that prevents freedom, human, and trade union rights in that country."

(Continued on Page 7)

Downward Trend Persists In Factory Output, Housing

By James M. Shevis

A drumfire of negative reports on the economy showed industrial activity declining while unemployment continued to rise as the Reagan Recession raged on.

A Federal Reserve Board announcement that production by the nation's factories and mines fell in April for the eighth month in the past nine was followed with these other gloomy economic reports from the government:

- Factory use by American manufacturers skidded to 71.1 percent of capacity in April, matching the lowest rate since the severe 1973-75 recession.
- Housing starts in April fell 6.4 percent to an annual rate of 881,000 units, the lowest level since last November and the ninth consecutive month under the million mark, half of what the industry considers a good year.
- Economic growth declined at a greater rate in the first three months of 1982 than first reported, 4.3 percent rather than 3.9 percent. The figures are annual rates, adjusted for seasonal trends, and stripped of inflation's impact.

AT THE SAME time, the Commerce Dept. reported that Americans' personal income rose a weak, seasonally adjusted three-tenths of 1 percent last month, following an adjusted four-tenths of 1 percent rise in March. Personal spending increased by five-tenths of 1 percent in April, following a decline of six-tenths of 1 percent in March.

Economists say that recovery from the recession will require a steady rise in personal consumption spending over a protracted period.

The April decline in industrial production—six-tenths of 1 percent—was less than the March decline of eight-tenths of 1 percent and much less than the declines of more than 1 percent a month last winter. But it still left output where it was last January, the production low point so far and a sign, Commerce Dept. Economist Robert Ortner said, that the nation's economy "has not turned around yet."

THE STRONGEST area in April was the rise in production of consumer durables, including autos and home goods. New cars were assembled at an annual rate of 5.1 million units, up more than 40 percent from their "extraordinarily low rate" in January, the Fed said. But it noted that assemblies still remained "depressed compared to earlier periods."

On the down side, the report said large reductions occurred in April in output of business equipment, construction supplies, and durable goods materials.

In reporting the April drop in factory utilization rate, the Federal Reserve Board

(Continued on Page 6)

Budget Amendment Called 'Serious Threat' to Nation

Senate consideration of a resolution to establish a rigid constitutional amendment requiring a balanced federal budget while imposing severe restrictions on the taxing authority of Congress raises the issue to the level of a "a serious threat to America's constitutional and economic well-being," the AFL-CIO warned.

The Administration-backed proposal cleared the Senate Judiciary Committee this spring and is expected to come to the floor of the full Senate soon.

IN A LETTER to each Senator, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland urged opposition to its enactment for compelling reasons, particularly its potentially adverse impact on the economy.

Kirkland said an arbitrary constitutional mandate to balance the budget would "immobilize congressional authority to use its fiscal powers—taxing and spending authority—to abate such problems as depression, inflation, natural disasters, or other economic crises, each of which presents a different set of economic circumstances demanding a different kind of economic response."

THE AMENDMENT, which would require Congress to balance the budget each year except by a three-fifths vote in both houses, is principally sponsored by Senators Pete V. Domenici (R-N.M.), Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.), and Orrin Hatch (R-Utah). To be adopted, it requires a two-thirds vote in both houses, and then ratification by three-fifths of the states.

In a separate approach, the legislatures of 31 of the necessary 34 states have already adopted measures calling for a

(Continued on Page 3)

PED Study Finds Reagan Policies Deepening Slump

The Reagan Administration has no one to blame but itself for the current recession, and the economy would be better off if the President's policies had never been adopted, a study released by the AFL-CIO Public Employee Dept. asserts.

PED President Kenneth Blaylock at a news conference releasing the results pointed out that the data compiled for the department show that the Administration's policies of budget cuts, massive tax cuts and high interest rates are directly responsible for the worsening economic downturn. If these policies stay in place, Blaylock warned, they will "deepen, broaden and lengthen" the recession.

THE STUDY compares the expected performance of the economy in fiscal years 1982 and 1983 under the Administration's hand with a hypothetical model that forecasts economic conditions as they would be without the Reagan policies in place. The economic models and analysis were obtained from Data Resources, Inc., an independent research firm.

According to the study, the Administration's policies have already contributed directly to declines in economic growth and business investment, to escalating unemployment, to drops in auto sales and housing starts, to shortfalls in state and local revenues and to a sharp increase in the federal budget deficit. These conditions will worsen in 1983, the study predicts.

"The nation is in the midst of the Reagan Recession," Blaylock said, "and the

(Continued on Page 8)

Crowds Hail Union-Industries Show

Products, Skills Spotlighted At Pittsburgh Exhibition

By Susan Dunlop

Pittsburgh—Pride in union-made goods and services was the keynote of the 37th AFL-CIO Union-Industries Show which opened here May 14 for a six-day run.

Thousands of visitors from the Pittsburgh area attended the exhibition at the city's convention center that showcased the skills and productivity of union workers alongside the array of goods and services labor and industry cooperate to produce.

THE FREE, public show is produced and managed by the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept.

Steelworkers President Lloyd McBride underlined the show's theme in his speech at the opening day ceremonies.

McBride, whose union is based in Pittsburgh, praised the show as a "unique opportunity" for the public to see first-hand how the "joint efforts" of union workers and their employers contribute to the nation's economic wealth.

Another equally important theme of the show, McBride said, is the "display of an attitude that is the basic thrust of the American labor movement—the goal of building a better nation through the exercise of the collective bargaining system."

AMERICA'S unions—and its progressive companies—see their collective bargaining system as a way to solve problems "in their mutual interest and with just results," McBride said.

The products of those companies "bear the union label, and that is why that label is well worth looking for," he declared.

McBride expressed "disappointment" with the Reagan Administration's approach to the issue of trade and unfair competition from imports. Fair trade, contrasted to "free" trade, is a "more realistic and an achievable goal," he said, adding that fair trade "should be actively sought and vigorously fought for" as a path to preserving jobs.

THE STEELWORKERS unveiled a new exhibit at their hometown show, featuring a colorful display of the diversified jobs members hold in many industries and the benefits of union membership. Topping off displays of many of the products made by USWA members was an inflatable hard hat, eight feet high by 16 feet wide.

Among the more than 300 other exhibits in the show was the AFL-CIO's own, where the emphasis was on registering voters and urging them to participate in "Solidarity Day 1982," Election Day. Registrars were on duty to provide materials and information to all visitors.

Pride in the products made by union members was the focal point of the Allied Industrial Workers, whose exhibit showed off members' skills in making everything from toys to tractor-trailer trucks, and pride in their many skills was the theme of the Theatrical Stage Employees' lively display.

THE SHOW makes the point that union members are found working in virtually every industry. The Aluminum, Brick & Clay Workers, for example, displayed products ranging from basic aluminum to fine dinnerware.

Members of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers at the show explained their jobs in oil refining as well as in the making of such consumer products as soaps, shampoos and detergents. The Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union's booth pointed to members' jobs in industries ranging from snack foods to health care.

Special skills that go into the making of glass products were on display at the Flint Glass Workers exhibit and at a display of high technology hearing aids made by the Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers.

PRIZE GIVEAWAYS were staged by many exhibitors at the show, including drawings for many union-made major appliances at the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers colorful booth.

The Seafarers offered a week-long cruise to Hawaii aboard a U.S.-flag cruise ship to underscore the importance of a U.S.-registry fleet, and at their booth held drawings for SIU-produced canned seafood products.

At the Molders' exhibit, visitors had a chance to win superior quality cookware by playing a "slot machine" game that stressed the benefits of union membership.

Huge bags filled with a variety of products made by Grain Millers members drew crowds to each drawing, and the chance to take home a portrait by a professional caricaturist had visitors lined up at the Painters' "art gallery" showcasing union members' skills.

UNION-MADE clothing proved popular prizes at the Clothing & Textile Workers booth, and Ladies' Garment Workers members reminded visitors to look for the union label and the union skills behind it with bonnets that could be converted to aprons stitched up before the prize-winners' eyes.

RIBBON-CUTTING ceremonies officially open the 37th AFL-CIO Union-Industries Show May 14-19 at the Pittsburgh Convention Center. From left are Food & Commercial Workers President William H. Wynn, Steelworkers President Lloyd McBride, and Glass Bottle Blowers President James E. Hatfield, who also heads the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept., which produces and manages the showcase of union skills and union-made products.

Live demonstrations of skills and services by many unions proved popular with show visitors who could take home a four-color poster of the Space Shuttle "hot off the press" at the Graphic Arts Union's exhibit or watch virtuoso culinary artists preparing their specialties at the Hotel Employees & Restaurant Employees display which also featured one of the city's most creative ice carvers.

The Postal Workers and Letter Carriers joined in a booth that included a working post office with memorabilia from U.S. postal history, including an antique mail truck. The Communications Workers explained long distance telephone technology.

THE BAKERY, Confectionery & Tobacco Workers cake decorators showed off their special skills to visitors who also had chances to win the union-made cakes, breads and tobacco products. Nearby, a member of the Upholstery Workers showed the complex skills required in the making of fine furniture.

Adventurous visitors could try their hand at soldering copper pipe at the Plumbers & Pipefitters exhibit or welding at the Boilermakers display, and they could see a demonstration of one of the most ancient skills at the Glass Bottle Blowers show.

A free blood pressure check at the Service Employees booth stressed that union's deep involvement in the health care industry. The Chemical Workers magic show underscored the many products made by its members through "the magic of chemistry."

The Food & Commercial Workers multimedia arena was the setting for prize giveaways that pointed up members' skills and services in many industries including retailing, meat cutting, and shoe manufacturing. A highlight of the Pittsburgh show was the Barbers & Beauticians annual Hair Fashions Spectacular, a national competition for men's and women's hairstylists held for the first time in connection with the show.

SKILLS WERE also the focal point of exhibits staged by building trades unions such as the Bricklayers, whose free-standing exhibit, as large as a small house, featured every trick of the trade.

Colonial copper lanterns made at the show and given away as prizes drew visitors to the Sheet Metal Workers booth. An information exhibit of highly detailed, scale-model working cranes made by a local member was a similiar attraction to the Operating Engineers display, while scale models of the city's unique skyscrapers highlighted the special skills of Ironworkers.

The Paperworkers booth featured a miniature papermaking machine.

History was the theme of the Carpenters booth which included its dramatic centennial exhibit tracing the growth of the union from its earliest days to its continued service to members today. And the union's state council held its apprenticeship contest at the show.

THE INTEREST of union members in the community was made clear in the Machinists exhibit, which included a live demonstration by a blind worker of how guide dogs are trained and made available by International Guiding Eyes, founded by a Machinists' member.

The energy-saving importance of mass transit was the focus of the Amalgamated Transit Union's exhibit, and visitors to the Government Employees booth had the chance to sign a petition urging Congress to enact job-creating programs.

The Fire Fighters booth included the newly designed "Pittsburgh Pumper," a scaled-down engine made especially for getting through the city's narrow streets.

The Cement, Lime & Gypsum Workers used the show as an opportunity to promote the many products made by its members and to ask visitors to boycott Kosmos Cement. At the Rubber Workers exhibit, information on the Michelin tire boycott was balanced with the chance to win a set of union-made tires.

THE INTEGRAL part played in the U.S. economy by the railroad industry and its workers was the theme of the exhibits of the Railway Clerks, the Railway Carmen and the Signalmen. The Maintenance of Way Employes pointed to the history of unions on the railroad with a film featuring famous railroad songs.

One of the most enjoyable demonstrations of the pride union members take in their work was provided by the Musicians, whose members performed at a "theatre" at the entrance to the show, welcoming each visitor and sending each home on a pleasant note.

FIRM BELIEVER in the union shop, owner Richard P. Herdman of Composition Systems, Inc., in Arlington, Va., has been named the Small Businessman of the Year for the Washington metropolitan area. Herdman, a member of the International Typographical Union for 35 years, checks a job with typesetter William Terrell, a member of ITU Local 101. "I like running a union shop," Herdman said. "You can count on a professional job and know the work will be done on time."

Michael Pinto New Manager Of Safety Council Labor Unit

Chicago—Michael A. Pinto has been named manager of the National Safety Council's labor department. Formerly grant administrator and administrative analyst for the Michigan Dept. of Labor, Pinto replaces Richard Gaw, who has left the NSC.

Kirkland Hits Bid to Impose Budget Plank

(Continued from Page 1)

constitutional convention to consider a balanced budget amendment. If a convention were called, an amendment would still require approval by three-fourths of the state legislatures.

Other AFL-CIO objections to the measure cited by Kirkland:

- Congress would be unable to make timely, majority decisions to prevent economic crises from quickly deteriorating into catastrophes.
- Enactment would assure a return to the boom-and-bust economic cycles of the pre-Depression era by effectively dismantling the fiscal weapons needed to combat both unemployment and inflation.

During recession, for example, the amendment would inhibit the shifting of income from the government to the private sector through such built-in economic stabilizers as unemployment compensation and social welfare payments, Kirkland noted.

- Congress would diminish its own role as the elected representative of the people in the development of economic policy.

A BALANCED budget amendment would have significantly deepened past recessions, Kirkland added. If it had been in effect last year, the fiscal 1982 budget cuts would have to have been far deeper, "producing an even more debilitating economic morass than we now face," he said.

Earlier, President Gerald W. McEntee of the State, County & Municipal Employees reported the findings of a private study on the effects that the amendment would produce. In a speech to the National Press Club, McEntee said the study by Data Resources, Inc., predicted the following results if the measure were implemented in fiscal 1985, the earliest year possible:

- An increase in unemployment of 2.6 million people by 1987.
- A $220-billion decline (5.6 percent) in gross national product by 1987.
- A $165-billion cutback (14 percent) in federal spending by 1987.
- A $49-billion annual cutback in state and local revenues by 1987, more than four times the amount of 1981-82 Reagan cuts in federal aid to state and local governments.

"All major federal functions, including defense and social security, would have to be drastically reduced," and state and local government programs would be devastated, he said.

Bikers Rally to Save 'Harley'

A convoy of 100 motorcycles carried members of the Allied Industrial Workers from their home local in Milwaukee to the Wisconsin state capital in Madison to protest the purchase of Japanese motorcycles by the state and federal governments.

In the midst of a month-long layoff from the Harley-Davidson Motorcycle Co. in Milwaukee, members of AIW Local 209 voiced their concerns for the survival of the domestic cycle industry, threatened by an ever-rising flood of imports.

In recent months, the Wisconsin State Patrol and two U.S. Army divisions bought Japanese-made cycles, the AIW reported.

Local 209 President Jerry Knackert, above left, pointed out that Harley-Davidson has been building police motorcycles since 1906 and has supplied American military forces in two World Wars.

Teachers Score Narrow Victory In California Vote

San Jose, Calif.—The American Federation of Teachers claimed victory by a narrow margin in the runoff election to choose a bargaining representative for the 20,000-member faculty of the California State University system.

The United Professors of California (UPC), affiliated with the AFT, won 6,473 votes to 6,454 votes for the Congress of Faculty Associations. CFA is an amalgam of the National Education Association, American Association of University Professors and the California State Employees Association.

Final certification depends on the disposition of 508 challenged ballots, but the AFT expressed confidence its winning margin will be bolstered in the final count.

THE CALIFORNIA Public Employees Relations Board conducted the election and said it may take six months to reveiew the 508 challenges.

The AFT said the California victory would bring to more than 100,000 the number of higher education professionals it represents in collective bargaining.

Mississippi Fed Boosts Per Cap, Sets Voter Drive

Jackson, Miss.—Delegates to the Mississippi AFL-CIO convention approved a 10-cent increase in per capita payments and endorsed a call by the state executive board to establish a voter education fund.

The monthly payments, currently 30 cents, will rise to 35 cents next Jan. 1 and to 40 cents in 1984. Five percent of the payments will be channeled into the voter education fund, which will also rely on voluntary monthly contributions of 5 cents from each member.

IN ADOPTING a political action resolution, the 300 convention delegates stressed the need for a checkoff system of voluntary contributions to support efforts to elect labor-endorsed candidates. It pointed out that lavishly financed corporate political action committees in 1980 were a major factor in the election of an anti-labor Administration and Senate.

The convention re-elected President Claude Ramsay and Sec.-Treas. Thomas Knight by acclamation to new two-year terms. Five of six vice presidents were re-elected and M. M. Hedgline of the Rubber Workers was elected as the sixth vice president.

The convention also voted to expand the number of at-large executive board seats from 10 to 12. But the outcome of the board election was delayed pending a recount of ballots on one contested position.

IN HIS keynote address, Ramsay said Mississippi is feeling the adverse impact of President Reagan's economic policies and the recession. He criticized the state legislature for failing to pass Gov. William Winter's programs to develop new sources of revenue to replace those lost through Reaganomics.

However, labor did succeed in pushing through an increase in weekly jobless benefits from $90 to $105 and improving the workers' compensation law so that victims of job-related injuries may choose their own physicians, Ramsay noted.

HE CALLED for continued emphasis on union organizing efforts throughout the state, citing marked gains in union membership from the cooperative campaign with the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. and the reactivation of the Mississippi Building & Construction Trades Council.

Resolutions adopted at the three-day convention called for rejection of loans to anti-union firms from pension plan funds that unions are involved in, congressional passage of domestic content requirements on autos sold in the United States, and the wider use of union contractors in plant construction.

City Bus Drivers Upheld On Right to Overtime Pay

Philadelphia — The 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reinstated the claims of 21 bus drivers for overtime pay, reversing a lower federal court decision that said Pennsylvania's New Castle Transit Authority didn't have to comply with the federal wage-hour law.

The appellate court, ruling in favor of Local 89 of the Amalgamated Transit Union, held that since local and state governmental transit systems rely greatly on federal grants and funds, they cannot use the states' rights provisions of the Constitution to deny workers overtime pay.

THE CLAIMS, totaling more than $50,000, are based on two hours overtime per week for more than two years, the ATU said. Another legal dispute involving $1.5 million in unpaid overtime compensation for some 700 members of ATU Local 694 in San Antonio is expected to come before the Supreme Court later this year.

In blocking the New Castle transit workers' claims, the federal district court cited a 1976 Supreme Court ruling that states and their political subdivisions are immune from the overtime pay provisions of the federal Fair Labor Standards Act.

Embracing the 10th Amendment, the 1976 decision held that the FLSA did not extend to states when they were "engaged in traditional government functions."

BUT THE appellate court noted that the scope of the 1976 decision was sharply limited by the Supreme Court's ruling in March 1982 that workers can't be prohibited from striking a state-operated railroad. In that case, New York State attempted to invoke its Taylor Law to bar a strike by the United Transportation Union against the state-run Long Island Railroad.

Citing the UTU-LIRR decision, the appellate court said, "states are not free to assume functions historically performed by the private sector and thereby insulate those activities from federal regulation of interstate commerce."

It noted that until passage of the 1964 Urban Mass Transit Act, states were not traditionally involved in the operation of local mass transit systems. With a few exceptions, the local bus and railway lines were owned and operated by private companies.

THE COURT observed that since the 1964 law went into effect, there has been an accelerated pace of local transport companies being switched from private ownership to public ownership.

In some cases, the court said, funds and grants are provided on a 80 percent federal/20 percent local matching basis.

"The federal government has, through the matching funds programs, maintained an intimate involvement with the operation of such public systems," the court noted.

"Since it is undisputed that the national government can set employment relations in the area of mass transit, it would be unjustified to allow the states, by acquiring functions performed by the private sector, to erode federal authority in this area."

THE ATU FILED for overtime pay claims on behalf of its San Antonio members in 1976. The Labor Dept. in 1979 ordered the local transit authority to make the payments. But the publicly operated system persuaded a federal district court in Texas to block the payment order on constitutional grounds.

The Justice Dept. has now asked the Supreme Court to overturn the federal court ruling.

Postal Unions Hit Television Ad as Unfair, Insulting

Postal unions are using the mails themselves to protest a Federal Express television commercial that portrays their members—employees of the U.S. Postal Service—as lazy and rude.

Postal Workers President Moe Biller said the ad for the private overnight delivery company "insults the integrity of some 670,000 postal employees, the overwhelming majority of whom are diligent, courteous and efficient."

Vincent R. Sombrotto, president of the Letter Carriers, asserted that the ad "maligns and belittles the efforts of a dedicated and conscientious workforce."

Both officers have written the major television networks and Federal Express President Fred Smith asking that the ad be withdrawn.

Biller urged APWU members, retirees and other workers to write and call local television stations when the spot is aired to voice their objections to its content.

The ad portrays two postal employees leaning on their windows discussing their pensions and their "6,000 days to retirement" while ignoring and then rebuffing a customer's inquiry about express mail service. The narrator talks up the company's overnight service and promises "you'll never have to deal with the Postal Service again."

The APWU said the commercial "oversteps the bounds of fair advertising" because it "exploits workers in a competitive advertising scheme by holding them up to scorn and ridicule" instead of selling the merits of the company's own services.

A Senate Lemon

THE UNITED STATES SENATE, whose members are seldom to be seen shopping around in used car lots, nevertheless has rallied to the cause of used automobile dealers by voting to kill a Federal Trade Commission rule requiring the dealers to disclose any major defects in the cars they sell.

If the House follows suit, the result will be a legislative veto, killing the FTC rule designed to protect consumers from shady dealer practices that conceal major faults in a car that make it dangerous to drive or expensive to fix.

The National Automobile Dealers Association had protested that the rule was unfair and that the paper work involved in posting a sticker listing the car's defects and the warranty rights being offered would push up prices to consumers.

Now, would you buy a used car from anyone who makes that argument?

OBVIOUSLY, not all dealers are out to bilk their customers. But the industry is the biggest single source of complaints from consumers over shoddy goods, misrepresentation and failure to follow through on warranties.

The Senate's action, however, has much broader significance as a sign of how deep the conservative gospel of deregulation has taken root. Other FTC rules that face trouble in Congress are disclosure requirements for funeral directors and clothing manufacturers.

One of the few remaining champions of consumer interests among federal agencies, the FTC has come under increasing attack from conservative business interests that feel fettered by any constraints on their marketplace philosophy of "let the buyer beware."

The legislative veto process itself faces a Supreme Court review on its constitutionality. If it goes through, used car buyers had better beware. The Senate has produced a lemon, and the House should refuse to buy it.

The Only Real Way

AFTER PRESIDENT REAGAN'S press conference (May 13), we're still not sure which budget he's for and we're beginning to wonder if the President does. He had one he wouldn't compromise on, then he endorsed the Senate Republican version.

We in the American labor movement have an alternative that we know would work. It would finance recession-fighting programs by curtailing some of the most inequitable tax giveaways in the Reagan program. That program, enacted last year, has shattered records for unemployment and budget deficits.

Representatives Downey of New York and Shannon of Massachusetts have introduced legislation that would restore buying power through fair tax cuts and at the same time get America started on the road to full employment. That's the only real way to bring the budget into balance, lower interest rates and put America back to work.

Workers need jobs and the only way to get them is to create them, directly and immediately. The President should now know that giveaways to the rich do not create jobs, so it is time to turn his program around.

—AFL-CIO Research Director Rudy Oswald, May 14, 1982.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
LANE KIRKLAND, President
THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward	Murray H. Finley
Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts	Sol C. Chaikin
Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco	Charles H. Pillard
J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride	David J. Fitzmaurice
Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps	Wm. W. Winpisinger
William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell	John DeConcini
Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss	William Konyha
Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney	Douglas A. Fraser
Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield	Barbara Hutchinson
Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto	Gerald W. McEntee

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop John R. Oravec
David L. Perlman James M. Shevis
AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, May 22, 1982 No. 20

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

LABOR PRESS AFL-CIO/CLC

'You Need the Right Tool!'

The Caribbean Caper

Reagan's 'Marketplace Magic' Done with Government Mirrors

By Gus Tyler

THE ISLAND OF Jamaica shall become the showplace of the Caribbean. That is the resolve of President Reagan. He says that we will do this by applying the "magic of the marketplace." But by the time the President is finished, he may well prove quite the opposite; namely, that the free market—left to itself—could not do the job and that the U.S. government had to step in.

Jamaica is rich in bauxite, the ore for aluminum. Jamaica also suffers from an unemployment rate of 25 percent. If the "marketplace" operated as they say it does, Jamaica should not be in this fix. Private enterprise should be mining the bauxite, giving jobs to jobless Jamaicans who, in turn, would make purchases to give jobs to other jobless Jamaicans.

BUT THAT is not happening. American aluminum companies hesitate to make a big investment in Jamaican bauxite because they are not quite certain how big a market there will be for aluminum and because they are not quite sure that their investment will be secure against war or revolution in the unstable Caribbean.

Indeed, a group of American businessmen, who call themselves the U.S. Business Committee on Jamaica, quite candidly admit that "pure private investment in the more traditional sense will not do the trick by itself." The "private" investors need two assurances: first, that there will be a guaranteed market; second, that there will be protection for their investment in the event of a political upheaval.

Enter Uncle Sam—the government. The General Services Administration, at the behest of President Reagan, has taken steps to buy $67 million worth of Jamaican bauxite to be added to the stockpile of American strategic materials. Not that we need the stuff. In fact, to justify the purchase, the Federal Emergency Management Agency had to reorder its priorities because, up to now, bauxite did not enjoy a top priority.

BUT UNCLE SAM'S help—$67 million of the taxpayers' money and the juggling of priorities—did not end there. The General Services Administration waived the rule for competitive bidding and brushed aside the additional rule for the transport of such purchases in American vessels. In explaining why he had to bend the rules, the GSA commissioner said: "I follow the directives of the President."

So—Uncle Sam will not be getting the bauxite from the lowest bidder and Uncle Sam will not be protecting the jobs of American sailors. Instead, Uncle Sam will be pushing profits for a couple of aluminum companies by manufacturing a market for them and by holding down their shipping costs.

But even these interventions by government in the "marketplace" do not exhaust the largess of the Administration on behalf of the aluminum companies. The government will insure the investment of the aluminum companies in Jamaica through OPIC (Overseas Private Investment Corp.). To do so, the government had to violate its own policy which says that no more than 10 percent of OPIC insurance shall apply to any one country. (Jamaica is well over the 10 percent.) But, as the vice president of OPIC explains: "The President says we want to help the Caribbean and Jamaica, so we can bend the rules."

FROM ALL these shenanigans, two questions emerge:

First, is Reagan out to help Jamaica or to help a couple of aluminum companies—at the expense of the American taxpayer and the American seafarer?

Second, if this Caribbean caper does succeed in helping Jamaica, will it prove the "magic of the marketplace" or the "magic" of government intervention in the economy?

Copyright 1982, Gus Tyler Columns

Full Measure of Quality!

3/4 Ingredients of All
1/2 Union Products
1/4 and
Union Services

UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT., AFL-CIO

Kirkland Spells Out Objections

Balanced Budget Amendment Undermines Role of Congress

The following is excerpted from a letter to all senators from AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland spelling out labor's objections to a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced federal budget and urging them to oppose the measure.

THE AFL-CIO is strongly opposed to Senate Joint Resolution 58, which would establish a rigid constitutional amendment requiring a balanced federal budget while imposing severe restrictions on the taxing authority of the Congress. This drastic constitutional revision could be considered in the near future by the full Senate, which elevates this legislation to the level of a serious threat to America's constitutional and economic well-being. Major objections to this legislation are:

1. Economic problems and appropriate fiscal policy should be addressed within the confines of the normal legislative process rather than by way of an arbitrary constitutional mandate. The congressional budget process, as embodied in the 1974 Budget Act, permits Congress by majority vote to make any fiscal policy decision it desires. More importantly, that law maintains the necessary flexibility to make and readjust those economic decisions by preserving for Congress its ability to consider the state of the economy as the primary basis for its budgetary actions. The proposed amendment would deny Congress that flexibility. Its constitutional straitjacket would immobilize congressional authority to use its fiscal powers—taxing and spending authority—to abate such problems as depression, inflation, natural disasters or other economic crises.

2. Congress would be effectively prevented from making timely, majority decisions to prevent economic crises from quickly deteriorating into economic catastrophes. Section I of the amendment demands a three-fifths vote of the full membership of both Houses of Congress to unbalance the federal budget for any reason or for any national emergency except war. Given the present difficulty of achieving a majority consensus on the direction for the fiscal 1983 budget, the three-fifths requirement could well result in frequent legislative stalemates and recurring constitutional crises.

3. A balanced budget amendment would have significantly deepened past recessions. A 1976 study by the Joint Economic Committee evaluating the impact of different fiscal strategies between 1965 and 1974, found that this requirement would have substantially reduced economic growth, increased unemployment, and, in some cases, would have worsened inflation.

Had the proposed amendment been in force last year, the fiscal 1982 budget cuts would have to have been far deeper, producing an even more debilitating economic morass than we now face.

4. The enactment of the proposed amendment would assure a return to the boom and bust economic cycles of the pre-Depression era by effectively dismantling the fiscal weapons needed to combat both unemployment and inflation. During recession, for example, the amendment would inhibit the shifting of income from the government to the private sector through such built-in economic stabilizers as unemployment compensation and social welfare payments.

Conversely, during periods of inflation, the amendment would exacerbate the inflationary cycle. The progressive nature of our tax system now contains effective built-in stabilizers to prevent this because tax receipts tend to rise faster than national income during economic upswings—a process that helps curb inflation. Under the arbitrary tax-limitation requirement of the amendment, Congress would be required to cut taxes during inflation, pumping income into an already over-heated economy, and thus undercut the stabilization process.

5. Congress would diminish its own role as the elected representative of the people in the development of economic policy. Congressional abandonment of its fiscal prerogatives would upset the delicate balance of power within our tripartite system of government and allow the fiscal policy decision-making process of the Executive Branch to expand at the expense of Congress.

Meanwhile, the monetary policies of the Federal Reserve Board—an unelected body usually unresponsive to the economic concerns of both Congress and the President—would be enhanced even though its powers are by themselves incapable of preventing a relatively mild economic downturn from degenerating into a recession.

6. The amendment would seriously undermine the concept of majority rule. The requirement of a three-fifths vote of the entire membership of both houses of Congress to permit deficit spending in effect hands over to a minority of Congress the control over the power of the purse. The political will of the American people as determined in the federal election process would be circumvented. Congress, already faced with criticism for paralysis on the budget issue, would be seen as a helpless debating society.

The Founding Fathers designed the Constitution as a framework for a lasting government capable of meeting the needs of the people but leaving the definition of those needs to the three branches of the government. They were careful to craft a constitutional blueprint which would discourage the intrusion of transient issues that would render it a meaningless repository of economic and social theories quickly outdated by shifting political trends.

The compelling constitutional and economic objections are overwhelming. We urge you to refrain from cosponsoring S.J. Res. 58 and to oppose this constitutional amendment when it comes before the full Senate.

End Run Around Congress

Move to Decontrol Gas Prices Shifts to Federal Energy Panel

FACING PROBABLE rejection of any effort to decontrol natural gas prices by law, the Administration is now trying to deliver on its campaign promise to the industry with an end run around Congress to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, Howard Marlowe, associate director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation, charged.

If the Administration's tactic of bypassing Congress works and the commission lifts the price controls on "old gas" (deposits discovered before 1978) the average household that heats and cooks with gas would face cost increases of $400 to $600 a year, Marlowe said.

Total and immediate decontrol of all natural gas—both old and new—the Administration's ultimate aim, would add about $1,000 a year to average household costs through a combination of direct rate hikes and higher price tags on manufactured items, he added. Marlowe appeared on the network radio interview, Labor News Conference, aired weekly by Mutual Radio.

MARLOWE SAID the coalition of union, consumer and senior citizens groups that helped develop substantial opposition to decontrol in Congress is now focusing its efforts on the FERC. He pointed out that since the commission is an independent agency within the Executive Branch controlled by the Administration, the President's push can be much more persuasive there than on Capitol Hill.

But, he stressed, the commission is fully aware of the strong congressional opposition to "back door decontrol or any other move to allow the price of natural gas to increase significantly" and of the potential fallout from acting over the objections of people throughout the country."

Marlowe said that adding a windfall profits tax to decontrol would not overcome the opposition.

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

THERE IS A MOVE afoot in Congress to strip the federal courts of their power to protect constitutional rights in several important areas.

The 97th Congress has been flooded by some 30 bills which would nullify the authority of the federal courts—and even the U.S. Supreme Court in some versions—in the areas of school desegregation, school prayer, and abortion.

While Americans may disagree over the particular issues addressed by the various bills, the point stressed by critics is that the bills attack the independence of the third branch of government—the judiciary—and thus undermine the delicate system of checks and balances designed by the framers of the Constitution.

By trampling the power of the federal courts, the Legislative Branch would be limiting the access of citizens to a time-tested avenue for seeking justice. A dangerous precedent would be established and the liberty of all would be threatened.

This is why the "court-stripping" bills are being opposed not only by labor, minority, civil liberties and women's groups, but also by the American Bar Association, scholars of constitutional law and many religious groups.

On the other side, Congress has felt strong pressure for the "social issue" legislation from such right-wing zealots as the Moral Majority, which for years has lambasted the courts for being overly "activist" in protecting the rights of minorities. The congressional push for the legislation is led by Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.).

THE SOCIAL ISSUE legislation which has moved farthest through Congress is the so-called Helms-Johnston anti-busing amendment to a Justice Dept. appropriations bill. The Senate passed the amendment by a 57-37 vote Mar. 2 following a lonely filibuster attempt by Sen. Lowell Weicker (R-Conn.). The bill is now pending in the House.

The Helms amendment would forbid the Justice Dept. to become implicated in any school desegregation case involving pupil transportation. It prevents the federal courts from ordering busing beyond the neighborhood school even if it is the only means of desegregation.

Further, the amendment authorizes the Attorney General to reopen closed desegregation cases if they require busing. Every case since the 1954 Brown ruling by the Supreme Court would be subject to review, regardless of the disruptive effects.

Thus, the amendment stands the Constitution and the 1964 Civil Rights Act on their heads by permitting the Justice Dept. to aid people whose action may violate constitutional rights, but not those who are being denied their rights.

David R. Brink, president of the American Bar Association, said that "these bills all must be deemed legally unconsitutional."

Brink said that by turning issues involving constitutional rights over to state courts, the bills would "convert America into a kind of league of independent states instead of one nation"

EVEN IF the Supreme Court were to declare the Helms amendment to be unconstitutional and void, the national disharmony created would be extreme, Brink observed. He said "those bills are leading us to the most serious constitutional crisis since our Civil War."

These bills, Brink continued, "threaten forfeiture of our progress in broader access to law and justice, equal protection of all citizens, including minorities and the poor, and eradication of discrimination of all kinds."

"But more than that," said Brink, "they threaten the rights of all of us. Once the door is opened, the rights of free speech, free press, free assembly and free exercise of religion could be the next to be abolished or curtailed."

PRESIDENT REAGAN is trying to lift price controls on natural gas with an end run around Congress to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, Associate Director Howard Marlowe of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation, center, charged on Labor News Conference. He was questioned by Calvin Zon, left, of Press Associates, Inc., and Dale McFeatters of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers. The AFL-CIO produced public affairs program was broadcast on Mutual radio.

Energy Costs Down Sharply At Wholesale

Wholesale prices in April rose by only one-tenth of 1 percent, largely the result of a record decline in energy prices, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

The slight rise in the government's producer price index for finished goods followed declines of one-tenth of 1 percent in both February and March. The index measures the prices of goods ready for sale to the ultimate user.

ALONG WITH the small rise in the finished goods index in April, there was a drop of six-tenths of 1 percent in the index for goods at the intermediate stage of production, the third consecutive monthly decline.

But raw materials prices, bolstered by a 3.5-percent rise in foodstuffs and feedstuffs, jumped 1.8 percent.

The finished goods index, which is a rough measure of the kind of inflation consumers likely will face in the near future, was up 3.1 percent from April 1981, BLS said.

The index for finished consumer foods soared 1.6 percent over the month, following a decline of two-tenths of 1 percent in March and a rise of five-tenths of 1 percent in February. Farther back in the supply line, at the intermediate stage, foods and feeds jumped 2.4 percent while raw foodstuffs and feedstuffs climbed even higher, 3.5 percent.

THESE SHARP price rises for food were almost offset by a 5.2 percent drop in energy prices over the month, however. Gasoline prices fell 7.2 percent, and prices of home heating oil dropped 8.8 percent.

New car prices for dealers declined 1.3 percent in April, duplicating February's rebate-caused drop in prices despite the disappearance of many of the price promotions, BLS said.

Capital equipment prices, including factory machinery, rose four-tenths of 1 percent, about the same as in March. Wholesale prices also increased for furniture, newspapers and magazines, home electronic equipment, jewelry and cosmetics. Prices for clothing fell.

U.S. DELEGATES to the International Labor Organization's conference on coal mining in Geneva confer during a break in sessions. From left, Barbara Dunkak of the Labor Dept.'s bureau of international affairs, Miness Pridemore of the Mine Workers and William C. Waggoner of the Operating Engineers.

Polish Junta Assailed at ILO On Absent Worker Delegates

Geneva—Poland's military dictatorship was sharply denounced by trade unionists for failing to include worker representatives on its delegation to a 21-nation International Labor Organization conference here on the coal mining industry.

International federations of miners and other unions voiced indignation because Poland was represented only by government delegates despite its importance as a coal producing country.

A SPOKESMAN for ILO Director General Francis Blanchard assured the delegates that any government that fails to observe the cardinal ILO rule requiring member countries to include trade unionists and employers on their delegations must explain this failure. The ILO Governing Body will receive a report on the explanations given.

The Polish government delegates did not attempt to respond to the criticism, nor did any of the allies of the union-busting Warsaw regime. The Polish junta abolished the Solidarity labor union when it imposed martial law last December.

At the end of its 10-day session, the conference called for the "improvement of working and living conditions" for miners everywhere as the coal industry expands production to help solve the world's energy problems.

"THE OBJECTIVE should not be that miners work harder but that more efficient means of production be developed," the unanimously adopted conclusions stressed.

With the key issues of retirement age and benefits and of employment and training "well covered," the session was termed a success by the worker representatives on the U.S. delegation.

William C. Waggoner, vice president of the Operating Engineers, sat on the committee that examined retirement questions, while Miness Pridemore, Mine Workers' board member, worked on the committee that drafted the conference's recommendations on employment and training

The emphasis in the latter committee was on the promotion of the health and safety of coal miners. Governments were urged to join with unions and mine operators to assure the adoption of national laws for "minimizing hazards and anticipating problems."

THERE IS "no inherent conflict between safety and health legislation and a high level of productivity," the conference pointed out.

Most of the guidelines drafted by the conference were aimed at helping developing countries to bring their mining standards more in line with those already in effect in the industrialized world, Pridemore said when commenting on the session's work.

"But getting together and getting to understand each other better was important because we all have the same problems in the coal mines," he said.

No attempt was made to recommend a uniform retirement age because, as worker delegates stressed, life expectancy varies from country to country. Instead, they urged removal of all obstacles preventing miners from benefiting from their retirement "in dignity."

NOTING THAT "early retirement is already recognized in many countries," the conference said that because of their taxing work, miners should be able to benefit from "voluntary early retirement benefits starting at a lower age" than that set in social security legislation as the general rule.

The conference's conclusions go to the Governing Body for follow-up action, which can include formal proposals that the organization's 147 member states adopt new international conventions to upgrade the living and working standards set earlier by the ILO.

Labor Says Pension Plans Need Investment Flexibility

Unions fully recognize the need for pension fund investments in home mortgages to spur housing construction, but these funds must not be expected to subsidize economic recovery at the expense of jeopardizing workers' retirement income, the AFL-CIO told a Senate Finance subcommittee.

Flexibility in investment policy is essential to pension plans, Director Henry B. Schechter of the federation's Office of Housing & Monetary Policy testified. He voiced objection to proposals floated in Congress that would require that a certain portion of pension fund investments be put into residential mortgages as a condition of continued tax exemption.

"SUCH A statutory requirement would place a constraint upon the pension funds in obtaining the highest market yield for a given degree of risk for beneficiaries," he said. "Nobody is suggesting similar legislation for mutual life insurance companies, or 'IRA' or 'Keogh' accounts which also hold large amounts of long-term capital funds."

Many union pension funds are already involved in residential mortgage investments and that commitment is expected to grow, he said, but "we object to such mandatory requirements."

Schechter pointed out that the AFL-CIO has operated its non-profit Mortgage Investment Trust Fund since 1964 and is now seeking government approval for a Pooled Investment Trust to channel funds into real estate mortgages.

He also noted that the Building & Construction Trades Dept. launched a major effort earlier this year to bring pension fund investments into unionized construction projects.

But any arrangement what would place mandatory requirements on union pension investments would be inequitable and actually have little practical impact on the availability and cost of mortgage money.

"Given the great need for housing—particularly for low- and middle-income housing—and the need to revive a depressed economy, there should be some federal support to help fill the gap between market and affordable interest rates," he stressed.

THE HOUSE took a big step in that direction when it voted 349-55 over strong Reagan Administration opposition for mortgage interest subsidies for moderate-income homebuyers.

BCTD President Robert A. Georgine, testifying as chairman of the National Coordinating Committee for Multiemployer Plans, said pension funds should be "enthusiastically encouraged" to invest in residential mortgages.

He said such investments would satisfy two key pension fund objectives:

- Provide a reasonable return on the investments.
- Create additional jobs that would in turn bring more money into the funds.

"It is the type of investment which will help stimulate our national economy and provide a chance for individuals and families to participate in the American dream of owning their own home," Georgine stressed.

Reports Show Economy Still Headed Down

(Continued from Page 1)

said the last time the rate was lower was in May 1975, when it was at 70.3 percent. The 71.1-percent figure was the same as last January's rate, which many economists believe was held down by unusually bad weather.

THE OPERATING rate for motor vehicle and parts plants increased for the third straight month in April, but the industry still was using less than 55 percent of capacity, the Federal Reserve said.

Perhaps the surest sign of the deepening recession was the Commerce Dept.'s report of a 6.4-percent decline in housing starts in April. At the same time, the department revised its March figure to show a four-tenths of 1 percent decline from the February level instead of the 2.5-percent gain originally reported.

"Against the backdrop that everyone is looking for hopeful signs of an economic upturn, this is a disastrous report," said the department's Ortner.

Mark J. Riedy, executive vice president of the Mortgage Bankers Association of America, and Michael Sumichrast, chief economist for the National Association of Home Builders, agreed that housing is unlikely to show much recovery until interest rates—now holding at 17 percent—come down substantially.

In its report on economic growth, the Commerce Dept. said "real" gross national product, or the value of the total output of the nation's goods and services expressed in 1972 dollars, was down $16.2 billion to $1.482 trillion. Real GNP fell 4.5 percent in the fourth quarter of 1981 and for all of last year showed a 2-percent increase over 1980.

Actors, Extras Merger Loses In SAG Balloting

Los Angeles—The proposed merger of the Screen Actors Guild with the Screen Extras Guild has been narrowly defeated by the SAG membership.

Results of the mail balloting were 11,394 or 56.7 percent in favor of the merger and 8,670 or 43.3 percent opposed. The measure required 60 percent approval for passage.

The SEG membership had already approved the merger by a 76 percent vote in March.

SAG National Executive Secretary Ken Orsatti expressed disappointment at the results, noting that the union's board had supported the merger as being "in the best interest of the membership." He said defeat of the merger "will be a blow to the extras we already represent in New York and the surrounding areas. However, we pride ourselves in being a democratic union, and the membership has spoken."

SAG President Edward Asner predicted that the rejection would strengthen management's position and said it could lead to further erosion of the extras jurisdiction.

"The membership has voted, and we shall abide by their decision," Asner said. "However, I hope we shall be able to carry on further discussions within the membership and reconsider the matter at a later date."

IUE Adds Unit of 400 At Mississippi GM Plant

Brookhaven, Miss.—The Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers will represent 400 workers at the General Motors Corp. plant here, the union announced.

Under a special agreement between the IUE and GM, the union achieved bargaining rights without a representation election because a majority—56 percent—of the GM employees signed union authorization cards.

AGENDA ITEMS at ICFTU meeting in Brussels are studied by two members of the AFL-CIO delegation, Vice President Glenn Watts, left, and Irving Brown, the federation's European representative, next to Watts. In photo at right, ICFTU staff officers confer with Otto Kersten, the confederation's general secretary, center. From left, are: John Vander Verken, assistant general secretary; Enzo Friso, director of ICFTU's Latin American affairs department; Kersten; P.P. Narayanan, president, and Peter de Jonge, director of the confederation's Asian affairs department. The AFL-CIO reaffiliated with the ICFTU this year.

Federation Delegates Draw Warm Welcome from ICFTU

(Continued from Page 1)

A resolution on the struggle of Polish workers for human and trade union rights called on affiliated organizations of the 85-million member ICFTU to continue and intensify their protests in support of the Poles and to urge their governments to put the strongest possible pressure on Polish authorities to end martial law; free all those interned for their activity in behalf of Solidarity, the suspended free union federation, and open negotiations with legally chosen Solidarity representatives on ways to solve the country's immense social and economic problems.

A STRONG and early supporter of Solidarity, the ICFTU said in a background paper that the massive turnout of Solidarity backers on May 1 and 3 in Warsaw and other major Polish cities confirmed the popularity and strength of the independent labor movement and showed that "the spirit of August 1980 is still very much alive." Solidarity emerged at that time from a wave of strikes that swept Poland.

"The public acts of protest that have taken place so far prove the unflinching desire to continue the struggle for independent trade unions," the ICFTU paper observed.

"It is also very significant that in the five months of open terror, with civil rights being suspended, the political police have achieved only meager success, having been unable to arrest the well-known Solidarnosc leaders who are in hiding, or suppress the editorial cells and printing facilities of the independent union."

THE ICFTU resolution also called on the Polish military junta to allow an International Labor Organization fact-finding mission to enter Poland. (The Associated Press later reported from Geneva that an ILO envoy had met with Polish authorities to discuss pending revisions in Poland's trade union legislation and the plight of interned trade union members, and was preparing a report for ILO Director Gen. Francis Blanchard.)

In other resolutions, the ICFTU board registered a strong protest over the "persistent harsh oppression of human and normal trade union rights" in Turkey and the continued suspension of a number of trade unions freely founded under Turkish law. Another resolution deplored the repression of trade union rights to strike and bargain collectively in Bangladesh under the new military regime and called for an ICFTU mission to assess the matter.

THE BOARD also adopted a measure renewing its demand for Soviet withdrawal of troops from Afghanistan and the right of the Afghan people to determine their own future free of outside constraints.

In other matters, the board:

- Accepted the membership application of the Council of Unions of South Africa, an umbrella organization in Johannesburg established in September 1980 that currently comprises nine unions. CUSA seeks to develop an awareness and consciousness of the black community in South Africa which has been denied any leadership role.
- Ratified the appointment of Evelyn D'Souza of the Indian National Trade Unions Congress as an executive board member, filling a vacancy.
- Elected AFL-CIO Vice President Joyce D. Miller a member of the ICFTU/ITS Committee on Women Workers' Questions.
- Scheduled the ICFTU's 13th World Congress at Oslo, June 23-30, 1983.

In addition, delegates accepted reports on ICFTU educational activities and financial matters and heard others dealing with Africa, Asia, Europe, and Latin America, particularly El Salvador.

Equal Rights Needs Stressed To Japanese Women's Parley

Tokyo—The need to improve the status and working conditions of women is a major concern of both the U.S. and the Japanese labor movements, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland stressed in a message to delegates at a conference on women's issues here.

Women in the United States still experience discrimination, "and the trade union movement continues to place great emphasis on the need for equal treatment of women in all aspects of employment," Kirkland said in a cable to the 23rd National Women's Assembly of Japan.

THE ASSEMBLY, organized by Domei, the Japanese labor federation, marked the anniversary of the extension of voting rights to Japanese women in 1960.

Kirkland said the primary concern of the AFL-CIO is that working women "continue to suffer from widespread wage discrimination in the workplace."

The federation has redoubled its efforts to see that all workers are paid equally for work of comparable value, and to remove all barriers to equal opportunity for women, Kirkland said.

IN THE United States, he pointed out, many women are the principal or sole support of their families "and any policy by which they receive less pay than would a man for comparable work we consider an infringement of their civil rights."

The assembly, held May 20-21, drew more than 1,000 delegates from throughout Japan. Its theme was "Aiming for Equal Rights, Independence, Solidarity and Action."

Among the resolutions considered by the delegates was support for the United Nations convention on elimination of all forms of discrimination against women.

Canada's Jobless Rate Jumps to 9.6 Percent

Ottawa—Unemployment in Canada rose from 9 percent in March to 9.6 percent in April, a post-World War II high, the government announced.

Statistics Canada, a federal agency, said the seasonally adjusted figure was the highest since at least 1946, when the government began compiling unemployment data on a monthly basis. The jobless rate meant that, in a work force of 12.5 million, 1.2 million were officially out of work.

The government said it could not do much to alleviate the situation until the Reagan Administration relaxes its tight-money policy. Canada has felt obliged to keep its short-term interest rates in step with those in the United States to protect its currency.

"The key to world recovery at the present time, for the United States and for other countries, is a change in the monetary policy that is being pursued in the United States," Finance Minister Allan MacEachen told the House of Commons.

Labor Endorses Bills to Extend Credit Controls

The AFL-CIO welcomed bills introduced in both the House and Senate to extend the Credit Control Act, declaring that the seldom-used law "is too valuable as an inflation-cutting tool to let it die."

Economist Henry Schechter, director of the AFL-CIO Office of Housing & Urban Affairs, termed credit control "an alternative to tight money, high interest rates, unemployment and bankruptcy" in the fight against inflation.

The 1969 law, which will expire on June 30 unless Congress acts, allows the President and the Federal Reserve Board to curb credit for such unproductive purposes as speculation and corporate takeovers in order to free funds for job-creating industries and housing.

WHEN USED briefly by President Carter, it "gave the economy a strong boost" and interest rates declined, Schechter noted.

A bill to extend the law has been introduced in the Senate by Alan Cranston (D-Calif.) and is sponsored in the House by Banking Committee Chairman Fernand St Germain (D-R.I.).

Cranston told a Capitol Hill news conference that $70 billion in credit is tied up in financing corporate mergers. "That's one of the big reasons why interest rates are high," he said.

In a statement recorded for radio news programs, Schechter noted that "credit controls are one of the most effective tools that Japan uses to hold down inflation, interest rates and unemployment." The United States, he urged, "needs credit controls for the same reasons."

Home-Taping Fee Endorsed Under Copyright Law

A copyright law amendment that would impose a modest royalty fee on recording devices and blank video and audio tapes was endorsed by the AFL-CIO and its Dept. for Professional Employees as the most equitable solution to a dispute over home-taping of broadcasts.

The Senate Judiciary Committee is considering legislation that would amend the Copyright Act so as to allow individuals to tape telecasts for their own use. It would negate the effect of a federal appellate court's ruling that taping of a broadcast program is a copyright violation.

DEPARTMENT Director Jack Golodner, who also testified for the AFL-CIO, urged instead the version proposed by Sen. Charles McC. Mathias, Jr. (R-Md.).

The Mathias amendment would also legalize home tapings. But it would assure compensation for the copyright owners by directing a Copyright Royalty Tribunal to set reasonable fees to be paid by manufacturers and importers of both audio and video recorders and the blank tapes used for recordings.

Golodner stressed that the labor-supported legislation seeks a balancing of interests, and not the suppression of technological advances such as video cassettes.

The Mathias amendment is the fairest approach, he testified. "It would legitimize home audio and video taping of copyright materials for in-household, non-commercial purposes and it would assure that all individuals will be able to fully utilize these technologies for their personal benefit," Golodner said. "In return, copyright holders would be assured a limited share of the revenues that are now realized principally by the manufacturers and importers of video and audio recording equipment and blank tapes that would never exist but for the creators of the works which these machines and tapes copy."

DESPITE THE earnings of a few big stars, Golodner reminded the committee, most creative and performing artists experience high unemployment and relatively poor pay and work in a marginal and unstable industry.

"Through films, recordings and tape, they now serve hundreds of millions with their art. They have not been able to share in the profits made from their labors because the copyright laws in this country are blind to the new technologies," he testified.

Humanities Grant Aids Work of Meany Archives

The AFL-CIO's George Meany Archives is the beneficiary of a grant to help collect and prepare for exhibit and reference materials related to the late federation president's career and AFL-CIO history.

The grant for $99,000 from the National Endowment for the Humanities will permit the hiring of two archivists and underwrite additional services over a two-year period, archives Executive Director Ernest S. Lee said.

The George Meany Center for Labor Studies will administer the grant.

PED Study

Reagan Policies Found Aggravating Recession

(Continued from Page 1)

President can no longer blame his predecessors."

THE BLAME must also be shared by the President's supporters in the House and Senate, he added. Blaylock is president of the Government Employees.

He said the Administration can't take credit for reducing inflation, either, since factors beyond its control are the major reasons for the decline in prices, among them the worldwide oil glut which has held down energy costs and good harvests that have meant lower food prices.

To compare the performance of the economy, the PED study used an alternative or "baseline" economic model that held federal spending at current levels, scaled back personal income tax cuts by $20 billion through fiscal year 1983, reduced tax loopholes for corporations, and slightly increased the money supply.

This model forecast greater economic growth, lower unemployment and a reduced federal budget deficit at the cost of only a slight rise in the inflation rate.

But if the Administration's policies are allowed to continue, the study predicts:

- Unemployment up by 700,000—200,000 by the end of fiscal 1982 and 500,000 in fiscal '83.
- A decline in real economic growth of 0.6 percent in 1982 and 1.3 percent in 1983.
- A drop-off in business investment of 2.1 percent in 1982 and 3.2 percent in 1983.

Auto sales are forecast to drop 1.2 million by 1983, and housing starts will drop by another 500,000 in that period.

DESPITE THE President's calls for a balanced budget, the study predicts the Administration's own policies will jack up the federal deficit by about $19 billion in fiscal 1982 and $48 billion in fiscal 1983.

State and local governments will take a beating thanks to the Administration's policies, the study says. It predicts a $2.9 billion tax receipt loss, and states whose codes for taxing corporations follow federal standards will suffer even greater losses as a result of the Administration's accelerated depreciation allowance.

Another $29.5 billion over the two-year period will be lost to the states in decreased federal grants, PED pointed out.

Taken together, the Administration's economic programs will swell the unemployment rolls in all states, the study forecasts.

HARDEST HIT will be the major industrial states where additional unemployment for New York could top 54,000; Pennsylvania, 35,000; Ohio, 33,000; Illinois, 36,000; Michigan, 26,000; New Jersey, 23,000; and Massachusetts, 20,000.

The study estimates that heavy job losses in the construction industry will be especially hard on California with a loss of 77,000 jobs; Texas, 49,400, and Florida, 29,700.

Blaylock told the reporters that the PED commissioned the study in response to President Reagan's scoldings that critics of his program haven't given it a chance to begin to work.

"Not only is Ronald Reagan's program responsible for the current recession, but if it stays in place much longer the situation will only get worse: We can't afford to wait," Blaylock said.

THE NATION'S deepening recession is the direct result of President Reagan's economic policies, President Kenneth T. Blaylock of the AFL-CIO Public Employee Dept. declared in citing findings of a PED-commissioned study. With Blaylock at a press conference announcing results of the study were PED Sec.-Treas. Albert Shanker, left, and Executive Vice Presidents John J. Sweeney and Vincent R. Sombrotto.

American Motors Accord Ratified

Detroit—The Auto Workers announced full ratification of the union's new three-year contract with American Motors Corp., after UAW Local 12 members in Toledo, Ohio, voted in a second balloting to approve the pact.

Local 12 members had rejected the same proposal May 3 by a 1,530 to 1,309 vote but this time accepted it by a margin of 1,840 to 806. The union said about 400 votes were left to be counted and that a final tabulation would be released later.

"After a long and difficult process, which tested the democratic procedures of the UAW, a history-making agreement with AMC has been ratified," UAW Sec.-Treas. Ray Majerus said in a statement.

THE SETTLEMENT had already been approved by AMC locals in Milwaukee and Kenosha, Wis.

Under the agreement, the union's 14,000 AMC members would defer six quarterly cost-of-living increases and general pay increases through 1985, plus a number of paid personal holidays. The company would invest the savings—expected to exceed $100 million—in financing new product developments. The deferred wages would be repaid at 10 percent interest.

The UAW earlier agreed to concession contracts with General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co.

Senate GOP Abandons Plan For Social Security Slashes

(Continued from Page 1)

restore about $10 billion over three years to Medicare payments to the elderly was turned back by a 60-39 vote. Only one GOP senator voted for the amendment, while seven Democrats crossed over to the Republican side.

The Senate also refused to reduce military spending, rejecting a proposal by Sen. Nancy L. Kassebaum (R-Kan.) to cut the rate of real growth in the military budget from 9.7 to 7 percent in the coming fiscal year. The proposal would have cut defense spending by $13.9 billion over the next three years from the level endorsed by President Reagan and the Senate Budget Committee.

DEMOCRATS IN the Senate sought to shelve Reagan's 10-percent income tax cut scheduled for July 1983. Sen. Ernest F. Hollings (D-S.C.) is chief sponsor of a bill that would reduce the budget deficit nearly $77 billion cumulatively over the next three years by doing away with the 1983 income tax reduction.

In other congressional action:

- The House Judiciary subcommittee on Immigration, Refugees & International Law approved a revision of immigration law to make it a crime to knowingly hire illegal aliens. Sponsored by Rep. Romano L. Mazzoli (D-Ky.), the bill is similar to one sponsored in the Senate by Alan K. Simpson (R-Wyo.). Employers knowingly hiring illegal aliens in this country would be subject to civil and criminal penalties, including jail terms.
- The Senate voted 69 to 27 to overturn a Federal Trade Commission rule requiring used car dealers to warn customers about known defects in the vehicles they sell. The AFL-CIO and a number of consumer groups support the rule. If the House also votes to overturn the rule, it would be the first congressional veto of a proposed FTC regulation.
- The Senate Appropriations Committee approved a $5 billion program in mortgage subsidies over the next five years—including a $1 billion emergency appropriation for the current fiscal year to revive the ailing housing industry. Opposed by the Administration as too costly, the program would give a subsidy of mortgage interest for qualified buyers of new homes. The subsidy would be four percentage points the first year and decrease by three-fourths of a point each year after that.

The House already has passed a $1 billion emergency housing subsidy bill that differs in many details from the Senate bill. Both the House and the Senate measures would generate work for building trades and timber workers, as well as provide thousands of American families with decent housing.

Stiffer Penalties Backed on Pay Chiseling

The Fair Labor Standards Act has been eroded by a cutback in enforcement, wrist-slapping penalties for violators and slippage in the real value of the minimum wage, the AFL-CIO testified.

A House Labor Standards subcommittee is considering a bill by its chairman, Rep. George Miller (D-Calif.), that would toughen penalties for violations of the wage-hour law. It would require employers to pay victimized workers three times the amount of the underpayment—and to deposit the amount due with the Labor Dept. if a former employee can't be located.

AFL-CIO RESEARCH Director Rudy Oswald agreed with Miller that present penalties are so light as to constitute an incentive for violations. As Miller noted, the "worst thing that could happen" to a lawbreaking employer under existing law is to be required to reimburse a worker for what he should have been paid earlier. But if the worker is no longer employed at the establishment and can't be notified, the employer merely pockets the illegal "profit."

That point was stressed also in earlier hearings the subcommittee held in New York, where Ladies' Garment Workers President Sol C. Chaikin and Service Employees President John J. Sweeney were among the witnesses.

Several trade association representatives also testified in favor of tougher penalties, which Oswald said points up the fact that fair employers will be helped by a crackdown "against unscrupulous employers" who cheat their workers.

THE MINIMUM WAGE Study Commission recommended stiffer penalties and Labor Sec. Raymond J. Donovan indicated support for toughening the law, Oswald noted. But he said the trade union movement has difficulty reconciling the Administration's words with its cutback of enforcement funds.

Last year, Oswald stressed, the number of wage-hour compliance officers was reduced more than one-third, from 1,107 the previous year to 732.

Oswald urged that any consideration of Fair Labor Standards Act changes also include a provision for indexing the minimum wage annually to reflect changes in average hourly earnings in the private sector. He noted that a staff study for the minimum wage commission had concluded that such a system of "regular and predictable increases would be noninflationary and would help minimum wage workers keep up with inflation."

CONGRESS lessened the erosion of the minimum wage in a 1977 law that provided annual step-ups in 1978, 1979, 1980 and 1981, to reach the present level of $3.35 an hour. But its value has slipped unchecked since then, Oswald noted.

"Justice for low-wage workers demands immediate action to raise the minimum wage," he testified. "The economy needs—and must have—the added purchasing power these increases will provide."

French Steel Firms Accused of Dumping

The Steelworkers and a U.S. industry group accused five French companies of dumping steel imports on the American market—that is, selling the material at lower prices in the United States than in France.

The anti-dumping action filed with the Commerce Dept. by the USWA and 11 American specialty steel producers charged that the French firms are undercutting prices of stainless sheet and strip steel goods as much as 38 percent, thereby undermining U.S. jobs and sales.

"French producers, facing a depressed home economy, have sought to maintain employment and maximize use of capacity by dumping in the U.S. market," the petition charged.

The Specialty Steel Industry and the union initiated similar action against West German producers last month. The union-industry group has also filed a countervailing-duty action against Spain on stainless bar and rod imports.

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

5/22/82

Council Presses Jobs Program, Calls Reagan Policy Disastrous

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII | Saturday, May 29, 1982 | No. 21

House Rejects Job-Creating Budget Plan

By David L. Perlman

The House rejected by a 268-152 vote a labor-supported budget resolution that would have funded an economic recovery program with revenues gained through tax reforms.

It then turned to what the AFL-CIO viewed as a "lesser-of-evils" choice. At one end was a second round of Reaganomics in a budget resolution supported by most House Republicans and some hard-core conservative Democrats. Its chief competitor was the Budget Committee version supported by the House Democratic leadership. This sought to mitigate some of the hardships of the Reagan Recession, but offered little stimulus for recovery and relied more heavily on spending cuts than tax reforms.

A THIRD "compromise" version and dozens of amendments to all three budget packages were also before the House when the AFL-CIO News went to press.

At the start of the weeklong budget debate, the AFL-CIO had urged House members to support the budget resolution sponsored by Rep. David R. Obey (D-Wis.) as "the best starting point for creating jobs and economic growth."

It would generate more than a million new jobs, AFL-CIO Legislative Director Ray Denison wrote, and recoup about half of the revenues lost in the tax cut bill passed last year. Revoking such giveaways as "safe harbor leasing" and new oil industry windfalls would enable "dramatic reductions" in the federal deficit in future years, Denison noted.

THE REPUBLICAN leadership's substitute, he warned, would continue Administration policies "which have worsened the hardship of the recession."

(Continued on Page 8)

DISCUSSION ON efforts to achieve a trade union consensus on endorsement of a 1984 presidential candidate is opened by AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland at the federation's Executive Council meeting in Washington. He is flanked by Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue and Vice President Lloyd McBride.

'OSHA Watch' Launched

Conference Condemns Assault on Safety Laws

By John R. Oravec

Organized labor called for an immediate halt to the Reagan Administration's assault on job safety laws and backdoor attempts to gut worker protections.

That demand was brought to Washington by several hundred union safety representatives from across the country at the AFL-CIO national Occupational Safety & Health Conference. They underscored their concerns in meetings with congressional delegations, at political strategy sessions and at a street demonstration.

THE AFL-CIO launched a nationwide "OSHA Watch" campaign at the conference to keep close tabs on the federal job safety agency's performance on enforcement from the shop level on up. Since Reagan appointees took over the agency, there has been a sharp drop in inspections, citations for violations and penalties.

In keynoting the two-day meeting, Federation President Lane Kirkland pledged that labor will continue to battle the Administration's drive to enfeeble the Occupational Safety & Health and Mine Safety & Health Acts.

"OSHA and MSHA are workers' laws," he stressed. "They belong to us. Organized labor worked long and successfully to see them enacted."

Pointing to the annual workplace death toll of 114,000, Kirkland said, "We have seen enough funerals for workers killed on the job in accidents, or who died the tragic and slow death of exposure to chemicals and other toxic agents."

KIRKLAND PROTESTED the Administration's deregulation onslaught, charging that it comes from the cozy relationship with employers under the banner of "cost effectiveness," while side-stepping the intentions of Congress and the Supreme Court. The retreat on enforcement by the Occupational Safety & Health Administration gravely cheapens worker protections, he observed.

Corporations and the Administration

(Continued on Page 7)

Support for El Salvador Aid Tied to Land Reform Effort

By James M. Shevis

The AFL-CIO is "watching very carefully" the Salvadoran government's handling of the land redistribution program in El Salvador and has made it clear that "we are serious" about the terms of the federation's 1981 convention resolution conditioning support for aid to that country on completion of agrarian reform.

Federation President Lane Kirkland told a news conference at the Executive Council's spring meeting that the AFL-CIO has made strong representations to Congress and to the government of El Salvador opposing suspension of a decree designed to turn over land to the Salvadoran peasants who work it.

"Our contacts and our association are with the free trade union movement of El Salvador. We have given assistance in the development and growth of that movement, in the training of its people, and in technical assistance in the pursuit of the land reform program," Kirkland said. "We'll continue to do that."

Representatives of the Salvadoran trade union movement, the Popular Democratic Union (UPD), after meeting earlier with AFL-CIO leaders, held a Washington news conference to sound an alarm over the apparent delay in the land reform process.

THE UPD leaders, who also met with members of Congress and the State Dept., issued a statement warning that the May

(Continued on Page 2)

Tax Justice, Credit Curbs Top Agenda

By John M. Barry

The AFL-CIO Executive Council renewed its attack on the Reagan Administration's "supply-side" economic policies, branding them a "disaster for America and American workers" and calling on the President and Congress to develop a "realistic, workable" program to restore full employment.

"More Americans are suffering economic hardships than at any time since the Great Depression," the council declared at its spring meeting in Washington.

ITS STATEMENT on "The Reagan Recession" detailed the scope of the hardships—the highest unemployment rate in more than 40 years, total loss of income for millions of workers as their unemployment insurance benefits run out, home mortgage delinquencies and foreclosures at record highs, business bankruptcies at a post-depression peak, idle factories, declining profits and a continuing drop in business investments since early last year "despite the Reagan Administration's huge tax giveaways which were supposed to stimulate a job-creating investment boom."

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, at a news conference between council sessions, stressed the federation's view that the recession is "the direct product" of the Reagan Administration's policies:

"THE COMBINATION of tight money, high interest rates and irresponsible tax program that in effect borrows money in order to cut taxes for the rich, coupled with the drastic attack on those social and economic programs which shelter those who are the weakest and the least privileged in our society . . . that's the essence of it."

On the current congressional debate over the federal budget and deficit, the council said "the political rhetoric . . . ignores the social and economic deficit resulting from too few jobs, too little housing, too few public services and public facilities and too little use of this nation's vast public and private resources to add to the nation's wealth and welfare."

To counteract the budget crisis, the council called on Congress to enact a tax program along the lines proposed by the AFL-CIO and embodied in legislation introduced by Rep. Thomas J. Downey (D-N.Y.). This would raise $150 billion in revenue over a three-year period and "move the nation's tax structure closer to

(Continued on Page 3)

Affiliates Asked To Defer Choice Of '84 Candidate

The AFL-CIO has asked its affiliates not to make "premature endorsements for the 1984 presidential election."

A unanimously adopted Executive Council resolution urged unions to withhold commitments to presidential candidates "pending the development of an AFL-CIO process whereby this question can be addressed by all affiliates in concert."

The goal, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland explained at a news conference, is to seek a consensus on labor's choice for the presidency before the selection of delegates for the presidential nominating conventions.

He said the council's Committee on Political Works will try to draw up a pro-

(Continued on Page 2)

TWO-DAY MEETING of the AFL-CIO Executive Council, held at the federation's headquarters, dealt with the economic crisis arising out of the Reagan recession and spelled out labor's program to get the economy rolling.

Council Designates Shop Stewards Week

The AFL-CIO Executive Council designated the first week in September as National Shop Stewards Week, in recognition of "their commitment and contribution to achieving the goals of the labor movement and of their hard work and personal sacrifice."

A statement adopted at the council's May 26 meeting urged Congress and state and local governments to endorse the week of recognition.

Union stewards, the council said, are "the union member's first line of defense against arbitrary action by management," and play a vital role in achieving justice on the job.

Credit Act Powers Held Key To Lowering Interest Rates

The AFL-CIO urged Congress to renew the Credit Control Act and called on President Reagan to make immediate use of its powers to bring down interest rates and get the economy rolling again.

Unless Congress acts, the credit control authority will expire on June 30. "This valuable inflation-cutting tool should not be allowed to die," the Executive Council said.

The council statement blamed the high interest rate policies fostered by the Administration and the Federal Reserve for the spread of bankruptcies and unemployment.

"It has brought havoc to the housing, auto and farm sectors" of the economy, the council charged.

IT SAID THE Credit Control Act provides "an alternative to this ruinous monetary policy" if Reagan would make use of it.

But while the situation "cries out for the President to exercise his control authority," he shows no signs of doing so "despite his public statement that interest rates should be lowered to 10 percent," the council observed.

The expiring law allows the President to authorize the Federal Reserve Board to regulate credit expansion and to channel available credit away from speculation, corporate takeovers and other unproductive uses, the council noted. "Thus, more credit would be available at lower rates for constructive investments such as home building, farming and industrial production."

A BRIEF USE of credit controls in 1980 "was helpful in bringing down interest rates and getting the economy out of a recession," the council said. One result was to drop interest rates on new mortgages from a peak of 16 percent to 12.5 percent and to bring the prime lending rate charged by banks down from 19.5 percent to 11 percent.

The council urged passage of legislation to continue credit control authority which was introduced in the House by Banking Committee Chairman Fernand J. St Germain (D-R.I.) and in the Senate by Alan Cranston (D-Calif.), the minority whip.

Support for El Salvador Aid Tied to Land Reform Effort

(Continued from Page 1)

20 suspension of Decree 207 by El Salvador's Constituent Assembly virtually annuls the agrarian reform begun in 1980 and "gives rise to doubt and frustration, creating anew the conditions for a real civil war." The UPD is an alliance of moderate organizations including trade unions representing the majority of El Salvador's urban and rural workers.

William C. Doherty Jr., executive director of the federation's American Institute for Free Labor Development (AIFLD), said the U.S. labor movement has joined UPD over the past two years in backing American aid to El Salvador, "but with certain very clear restrictions as to how that aid would be used." These conditions have included protection of human rights in El Salvador, investigation of the 1981 murders of two AIFLD representatives and a Salvadoran union leader who headed the land reform project, and completion of the agrarian reform that would permit campesinos, or peasants, to buy the small plots of land they work as tenant farmers or sharecroppers.

SUSPENSION OF Decree 207, or the "land to the tiller" law, "would prevent thousands of workers from getting land and give owners a de jure blessing for the de facto clearing of peasants from the land" rightfully theirs, he said.

Since the law was enacted early in 1980, no peasant has received a clear title. Of the 150,000 potential beneficiaries, provisional titles have gone to some 29,000 peasants while 7,000 others have filed claims. Thousands of others have been intimidated from applying for titles under threats from right-wing "death squads," Doherty said.

The agrarian reform program was initiated in an effort to persuade the campesinos from supporting the leftist-led revolution that has torn the Central American country.

PRIOR TO the Mar. 28 Constituent Assembly elections, the Reagan Administration stressed that U.S. aid would depend in part on continuation of successful land reform.

Two congressional units, reflecting U.S. disillusionment with the Salvadoran government's handling of the land reform process, voted this week either to cut back or eliminate American aid to El Salvador next year.

First, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee pared the Administration's request for $166.3 million in fiscal 1983 aid to El Salvador by $100 million. The panel also stipulated an end to all aid if the land reform program is terminated.

LATER, the House Appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations rejected the Administration's entire 1982 foreign military aid supplemental package that included $35 million for El Salvador.

Francisco Zaldana, secretary-general of El Salvador's Federation of Unions of Construction, Transport & Allied Workers, said at the news conference that suspension of the reform program is "definitely against the interests of the campesinos; it means the total suspension of their rights."

Jorge Camacho, secretary-general of the Association of Integrated Cooperatives of Agrarian Production, charged that the real intention of the rightist-dominated assembly "is to do away with the reforms that have been started in our country." He said that the problem definitely has a "political face."

ANOTHER UPD leader, Sec. Samuel Maldonado of the Salvadoran Comunal Union, said that the Salvadoran agrarian reform program must go forward because it is the key to the solution of El Salvador's social, political, and economic problems. El Salvador, a country about the size of Massachusetts, is basically an agricultural nation, with 60 percent of its population peasants, he pointed out.

Jose Luis Grande, secretary-general of the Salvadoran Workers' Central, said the UPD has urged Salvadoran President Alvaro Magana to veto the legislative action of the Constituent Assembly if that meant depriving peasants of their right to gain title to land. Magana, a centrist, was elected by the assembly to succeed Jose Napoleon Duarte, who had headed a military-civilian junta for two years.

Affiliates Asked To Defer Choice Of '84 Candidate

(Continued from Page 1)

posal on procedures for arriving at a consensus. If this proves feasible, Kirkland indicated, the full Executive Council will consider the issue at its next scheduled meeting, in August.

Kirkland said he has urged exploration of a pre-convention endorsement that would enable AFL-CIO affiliates to unite their efforts in the presidential primaries. Past practice has been for the federation to withhold an endorsement until after the presidential nomination.

As a result, Kirkland said, "more often than not," affiliates have gone off "in several different directions" in presidential nominating contests. They thus "nullify each other's efforts" and lessen the effectiveness of America's workers "in that vital part of the whole political process."

Kirkland said the council members participating in the discussion all indicated a willingness to hold off on any presidential endorsement to allow efforts to develop a consensus.

The request to all affiliates to do likewise was a unanimous action, he reported.

Bid to Scuttle Rail Pension System Hit

The AFL-CIO Executive Council registered strong opposition to the Administration's plan to destroy the 45-year-old Railroad Retirement System that railroad workers have worked and paid for, warning of possible labor-management disruptions and enormous losses.

"In creating the system, the federal government entered into a social contract with railroad workers to enhance the stability of a workforce vital to the nation's commerce," the council said.

"Now the Reagan Administration proposes to break that contract through legislative budget proposals."

RAILROAD RETIREES are protected by a uniform national system of Tier I benefits instead of social security and Tier II benefits comparable to a supplementary private pension plan. Reagan proposes to eliminate both programs and put railroad retirees under social security and a negotiated private multi-employer pension system. The President also proposes to fragment rail unemployment benefits among the 50 states.

The system, which serves almost a million railroad retirees and covers 500,000 current employees, is paid for by employer payroll withholding taxes. The only use of general revenues is for the dual benefit, which is phasing out through attrition of recipients.

THE COUNCIL said that if railroad workers are put under social security they will lose their right to retire without penalty before age 65. The effect of throwing Tier II recipients into a private pension system, details of which have not been provided by the Administration, could lead to financial losses disruptions.

"The uniformity and predictability of the current system which has provided industry stability would be destroyed," the council said.

Balanced Budget Proposal Opposed As Unworkable

A proposed constitutional amendment to compel a balanced budget is wrong in principle and would be unworkable in practice, the AFL-CIO Executive Council warned.

It urged Congress to reject the attempt by "right-wing political forces" to write their economic theories into the nation's constitution. And it called on Americans from all walks of life to join with the trade union movement "in the fight to defeat this unsound proposal."

THE BALANCED budget amendment that has been approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee and endorsed by President Reagan would compel Congress to adopt a balanced budget each year unless three-fifths of the House and Senate voted an exception.

That would "erode the power of our elected representatives to act," the council protested. It would block Congress from adjusting tax and spending levels to meet national needs, it said, and recessions would be transformed into major depressions.

"Taxes cannot be raised high enough or spending reduced low enough" when the economy is in a downturn, the resolution warned. "A balanced budget in today's climate would be an invitation to a new Great Depression."

THE COUNCIL statement stressed that "the only way to reach a balanced budget is to return the nation to full employment and economic growth, while restoring fairness to the tax system and protecting the helpless."

It urged Congress to "reject the diversionary tactic of amending the Constitution and accept its responsibility for generating economic health through well-tested, equitable fiscal and monetary policies."

Council Presses Action to Create Jobs

(Continued from Page 1)

fairness and tax justice," the statement said.

"FAIRNESS AND compassion are not in conflict with efficiency and economic progress," the council declared. "We insist that economic progress and social justice go together."

In other actions relating to the state of the economy and specific proposals of the Administration, the council:

- Called for renewal of the Credit Control Act, which otherwise is scheduled to expire June 30, and for President Reagan to exercise his authority under the act to curb high interest rates.
- Expressed firm opposition to a constitutional amendment that would force a balanced budget, a proposal that President Reagan has embraced.
- Strongly opposed the Administration's plan to destroy the Railroad Retirement System.
- Denounced a section of the Administration's maritime program that would give U.S. ship operators permanent authority to build and repair their ships abroad and still be eligible for federal subsidies, a measure that the council said would force the closing of U.S. shipyards at a cost of 170,000 jobs.
- Condemned the Labor Dept.'s final regulations on the Davis-Bacon Act, which were due to be published in the Federal Register on the day after the council meeting. The council said organized labor's "worst fears have been exceeded" by the new rules, which would emasculate the prevailing wage concept on federally financed construction, redefine the "helper" classification to the detriment of workers affected by it, and eliminate the requirement for weekly payroll reports.

On the political front, the council urged federation affiliates to refrain from endorsing presidential candidates for the 1984 election pending development of a new endorsement process by the AFL-CIO.

OTHER COUNCIL statements endorsed a consumer boycott of the Furniture Workers against the products of the Indiana Desk Co. in Jasper, Ind., designated the first week in September as National Shop Stewards Week, endorsed the establishment of an American Labor Museum at the Botto House in Haledon, N.J., and urged full support of striking members of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers at Texaco's refinery in Port Arthur, Tex.

The statement on the Reagan recession called for congressional enactment of specific measures to counter the recession, stimulate the economy and create jobs:

- A five-year program of grants to states and communities for public service jobs, as set forth in a bill sponsored by Rep. Augustus F. Hawkins (D-Calif.).
- A comprehensive jobs and training program "consistent with the mandate of the Humphrey-Hawkins Full Employment & Balanced Growth Act."
- Legislation already passed by the House under the sponsorship of Rep. Fernand St Germain (D-R.I.) to provide mortgage interest assistance for moderate-income home-buyers, and a bill introduced by Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez (D-Tex.) that includes rental assistance, public housing and mortgage relief payments for jobless homeowners.
- Creation of a new Reconstruction Finance Corp. to rebuild the nation's industrial base with a specific endorsement of legislation introduced by Rep. Frank J. Guarini (D-N.J.) to accomplish that purpose.
- Direct attention by Congress to the problems of unemployment and deteriorating neighborhoods in the major cities and rejection of the Administration's "enterprise zone" scheme that would only "reshuffle jobs and undercut government safeguards and public investment."
- Enactment of domestic content requirements in bills by Rep. Richard L. Ottinger (D-N.Y.) and Sen. Wendell Ford (D-Ky.) to restore jobs in the auto and auto-related industries.
- Extension of the current 39-week maximum for unemployment insurance benefits to 65 weeks for jobless workers who have exhausted their regular and extended benefits, along with restoration of the national trigger for extended benefits, maintenance or reduction of state trigger points, and the inclusion of extended benefit recipients in the calculation of the triggers.

KIRKLAND EXPANDED on the council's actions at his news conferences and responded to questions on other topics with these comments:

—The situation in Poland should not stand in the way of proposed summit talks between President Reagan and Soviet leaders, but in fact should be one of the matters under discussion. "I don't think the refusal to talk is a particularly significant sanction or form of inducement. We have urged that sanctions be imposed in the form of calling the Polish debt into default, the end of further credits, and trade restrictions on the Soviet Union. If we're going to sell them the rope with which they're going to hang us, we ought to at least make them pay cash for it and not give them credit."

—Not only is President Reagan failing to live up to his commitment to proceed with stronger sanctions against Poland and the Soviet Union if the crackdown against Polish workers and other citizens is not eased, "but he is in the process of abandoning sanctions that were previously imposed, limited though they were," by permitting resumption of negotiations for future grain sales to the USSR.

—The allegations of wrong-doing against Labor Sec. Raymond J. Donovan are "matters of deep concern" but still must be proven. The AFL-CIO's differences with the Labor Dept. are over the role it has been given by the "landlord"—the Reagan Administration—"to undermine, weaken, and gut programs with which we are vitally concerned and which are of vital interest to working people and to their welfare."

AT NEWS CONFERENCE following the opening session of the AFL-CIO Executive Council, President Lane Kirkland answers questions from reporters.

—The state of the federation's relations with the Reagan Administration flows from "deep, principled disagreement" over policies and programs and has nothing to do with personalities. "We don't believe that the policies that this Administration has advanced—in the form of irresponsible tax giveaways, stripping the public purse of the resources needed to fulfill the responsibilities of a modern industrial society, and demolishing programs and protections that have been developed with our strong support over the last 50 years or so—are in the best interests of the public and of the welfare of the country."

—Based on historical precedent, a "modest gain" can be expected in the 1982 congressional elections from labor's point of view, but "the great imponderable is the enormous amounts of money that the right-wing and the conservative groups have available to dump into the elections." The growing importance of television exposure to candidates has made money more important in modern elections than ever before.

—He has discussed the creation of a labor liaison committee within the Republican Party with GOP Chairman Richard Richards and is scheduled to meet with Richards soon to pursue the matter. He has offered to be as helpful as he can and has encouraged the party "to begin to express some concern for the vital role of working people in American life, including American political life."

KIRKLAND ALSO gave the council a brief review of this year's regional conferences and a detailed report of the recent meeting in Brussels of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions executive board.

Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue reported for the Finance Committee, the Committee on State & Local Central Bodies and the Committee on Review of Article XX, the internal disputes plan.

Other committee reports were presented by Vice Presidents William Konyha, Housing: Frederick O'Neal, Civil Rights; J. C. Turner, relations with the United Way; John Sweeney, the Equal Rights Amendment; William H. Wynn, Restrictive Legislation; John H. Lyons and Vincent R. Sombrotto, Defense.

SUMMARIES of departmental activities were given by Legislative Director Ray Denison, Organization & Field Services Director Alan Kistler, COPE Director John Perkins, Community Services Director Walter Davis, and Information Director Murray Seeger.

The council approved contributions of financial aid to the following: the City of Berlin for the reconstruction of Congress Hall, Great American Flag Labor Committee, Citizens Committee for Immigration Reform, Citizen/Labor Energy Coalition, Consumer Energy Council, Economic Education for the Clergy, Inc., Afro-Asian Institute of Histadrut, Save Our Security Coalition, the Joseph D. Keenan Biography Committee, and the Industry Labor Council.

The fiscal 1983 budget for the George Meany Center for Labor Studies was set at $2,861,583, with net operating expenses projected to be $1,695,583.

FUNDS ALSO were approved for the George Meany Center for Labor Studies, the Asian-American Free Labor Institute, special assistance projects of the American Institute for Free Labor Development, and the Research & Documentation Center of the federation's Paris office.

The next council meeting will be held in New York, Aug. 3-5.

Senate Urged to Ratify Arms Limitation Treaty

The Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty —SALT II—"offers the most fruitful beginning" toward arms control and reduction and should be ratified immediately, the Executive Council declared.

With certain modifications, the proposed treaty offers a number of advantages over other current proposals for nuclear arms reductions, the council said in a statement, which was accompanied by a background paper prepared by the council's Committee on Defense.

RATIFICATION of SALT II, the council said, would:

- Offer reassurance to millions of Americans and America's allies that the United States is seriously committed to arms reduction.
- Present an immediate and realistic opportunity "to move quickly toward the control and reduction of strategic arms."
- Allow the United States to decide domestically whether to proceed with planned weapons systems as an inducement to the Soviets to negotiate seriously.

Reaffirming its 1979 position on strategic arms control, the council noted that SALT II has already been accepted by the Soviet Union and is still before the Senate where it has bipartisan support.

WHILE ADVOCATES of a nuclear freeze have made an important contribution in turning public attention to the danger of nuclear war, the council said the AFL-CIO position takes a significant step beyond proposals for an immediate freeze. Such proposals are necessarily tied to the complex and technical issue of parity and would perpetuate the existing theater nuclear force imbalance in Europe, the council warned.

Senate approval of SALT II should stipulate that SALT III, or START (Strategic Arms Reduction Talks), limit warheads, which SALT II permits to increase dramatically in numbers and accuracy. The council said U.S. negotiators also should be directed to set a time limit in SALT III by which agreement must be reached on strategic force reductions.

Noting the mounting concern of Americans that the unchecked growth of nuclear arsenals poses a threat to civilization, the council said the AFL-CIO joins with those who seek an end to the nuclear arms race through serious negotiations leading to mutual, balanced, and verifiable strategic force reductions which both parties have a compelling interest in observing.

"UNFORTUNATELY, public protests against nuclear weapons—especially when they pressure only the West—will not by themselves lead to our goal of drastically reducing the number of such weapons nor will they bring about a deterrence to their use of such weapons," the council said.

The council statement on strategic arms control was adopted by a vote of 17 to 4.

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, responding to questions at a news conference following the council sessions, said the four dissenters—Vice Presidents Gerald W. McEntee, William H. Wynn, Murray Finley and William W. Winpisinger—would have placed "priority and primary emphasis on support for the so-called nuclear freeze resolution" and were not opposed to SALT II as such.

KIRKLAND SAID his own view was that ratification of SALT II would be a legislative act with legislative force and effect, whereas a Senate non-binding resolution would be "an expression of a point of view—a hope."

"It's our view, and the view expressed in this resolution," he said, "that the most expeditious way to get to the ultimate goal of significant reductions—a turndown in the level of forces—is to proceed promptly to SALT III with a stipulation to the negotiators that they had better bring back an instrument that significantly reduces nuclear arms, most particularly the thing that arrives on target—the warheads."

The council said it was under "no delusion" that the USSR can be trusted to live up to any agreement—unless it is clearly in its interest to do so.

"It will agree to real arms reductions if it sees the alternative as an American buildup," the council added. "We must not unilaterally remove that alternative."

The Reagan Recession

MORE AMERICANS are suffering economic hardships than at any time since the Great Depression. The misdirected policies of the Republican Reagan Administration have produced this catastrophe. It is time to turn the economy around, to reverse the Reagan Recession and to put people back to work.

Ten million American workers are officially unemployed—an increase of 2.5 million jobless workers since last July. The unemployment rate of 9.4 percent is the highest in more than 40 years.

In addition to the officially recorded jobless workers, many more millions of workers and their families are losing work-time and income while threatened with imminent layoff as big, medium, and small-sized business firms retrench or go broke.

Over the 12 months of 1982, more than one-fourth of the workforce—close to 30 million workers—will suffer some unemployment, and nearly half of all workers will feel the direct impact of the recession through job loss or cuts in hours and earnings.

MORE THAN two million jobless workers have seen their unemployment compensation benefits run out during the past 10 months. Cutbacks in extended unemployment insurance benefits demanded by the Reagan Administration and enacted by the Congress have deprived millions of unemployed workers of desperately needed unemployment compensation benefits. Another 600,000 jobless workers receiving extended benefits will soon be faced with a total loss of income.

Home mortgage delinquencies and foreclosures are at record highs. Business bankruptcies are at the highest levels since the Great Depression. Corporate profits are dropping. Manufacturing is operating at only 71 percent of capacity. Business investment has been going down since early 1981—despite the Administration's huge tax giveaways to business which were supposed to stimulate a job-creating investment boom. "Supply-side" economics has been a disaster for America and American workers.

President Reagan . . . stubbornly clings to the same job-destroying, trickle-down economic policies that produced the current economic crisis—high interest rates, shattered social programs and tax giveaways to the wealthy.

The economic and social waste of recession and high unemployment are forgotten in the political maneuvering on federal budget and tax policy. The political rhetoric surrounding the federal deficit debate ignores the social and economic deficit resulting from too few jobs, too little housing, too few public services and public facilities and too little use of this nation's vast public and private resources to add to the nation's wealth and welfare.

TOO MANY elected officials now are rejecting the unique role that only the federal government can play in stimulating the economy, creating jobs, and meeting human needs.

The AFL-CIO calls upon the President and the Congress to develop with all possible speed a realistic, workable economic program to bring America back to full employment, to balanced economic growth and to fairness in taxation with compassion for those who have least.

Fairness and compassion are not in conflict with efficiency and economic progress. We insist that economic progress and social justice go together.

—From AFL-CIO Executive Council statement on the Reagan Recession, May 26, 1982, Washington, D.C.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
LANE KIRKLAND, President
THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward	Murray H. Finley
Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts	Sol C. Chaikin
Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco	Charles H. Pillard
J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride	David J. Fitzmaurice
Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps	Wm. W. Winpisinger
William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell	John DeConcini
Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss	William Konyha
Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney	Douglas A. Fraser
Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield	Barbara Hutchinson
Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto	Gerald W. McEntee

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop John R. Oravec
David L. Perlman James M. Shevis

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, May 29, 1982 No. 21

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

LABOR PRESS AFL-CIO CLC

'Not to Worry!'

Issue for Summit

U.S. Economic Policies Test Patience of European Nations

By Gus Tyler

THE ECONOMIC SUMMIT meeting at Versailles in June will not be an easy moment for President Reagan. He will find himself under fire—no matter how courtly the tone of the gathering.

The object of the conference is to air the economic issues that cross national lines. As of the moment, the big one is unemployment, running at about 8 to 9 percent in Western Europe.

The European countries charge that the United States is responsible for this rising unemployment. They attribute their difficulties to the high interest rates in America.

THE EUROPEANS claim that high interest rates in America have drawn off much needed capital to the United States. Why should a German, French, or British investor collect only 9 or 10 percent interest on his money in his own country, if he can get 14 or 16 or more percent in the United States?

To compete, European countries have to raise their interest rates. But the result here is the same as in the United States. The high rates make it difficult for both consumers and producers to borrow, thereby choking the economy.

That's the European charge against current American policies. Reagan will have difficulty making a suitable reply because of developments since the last economic summit meeting in Ottawa.

At that time, Reagan made a plea for patience. Yes, he agreed, interest rates were too high. Yes, he agreed, the high rates hurt us and hurt our friends. But, given time, all would be well.

REAGAN COUNTED on a balanced budget to set things straight. According to Reaganomics, this is the way it works:

Unemployment is caused by inflation since things are too expensive for people to make purchases. Inflation, in turn, is caused by federal deficits, since they bloat the money supply. Ergo, the balanced budget solves the problem of inflation and unemployment. And, as a bonus, since a balanced budget makes it unnecessary for the government to go into the money market to borrow, there is that much less pressure on interest rates to raise.

That's the Reagan reasoning. Whether it is right or wrong is a matter of deep debate. But at the summit meeting Reagan will have to admit that the United States is not balancing its budget, that the budget is far more unbalanced than it was last year, and that it threatens to be worse next year.

He can, of course, blame it on Congress for not going along with the budget cuts. But that will not be convincing to the heads of other states who know perfectly well that if all of Reagan's cuts were enacted the budget would still show the greatest deficit in America's history.

THEY WILL BE unconvinced too because they know that the high interest rates came before—not after—the $100 billion deficit. They also remember that the U.S. spokesmen in the past said that high interest rates were necessary in order to "cool the economy" as a way to check inflation.

No doubt, the President will repeat his plea for patience with our allies as he has with the American people. But how long will our allies or the American voters be patient?

Copyright 1982, Gus Tyler Columns

Budget Amendment Abuses Constitution

Right-wing political forces are attempting to write economic theory into the Constitution.

To amend the Constitution to force a balancing of the federal budget would undermine the essential separation of power principles on which American government rests and erode the power of our elected representatives to act.

To transfer budget-balancing authority to the Constitution would make no workable allowance for economic recession, inflation, or for problems affecting the nation's security.

The only way to reach a balanced budget is to return the nation to full employment and economic growth, while restoring fairness to the tax system and protecting the helpless.

—From AFL-CIO Executive Council statement, May 26, 1982.

Against Reagan Assault

Kirkland Pledges All-Out Battle To Preserve Job Safety Laws

The following is excerpted from remarks by AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland to the national Conference on Occupational Safety & Health, Washington, D.C., May 24, 1982.

THE REAGAN Administration has made clear its determination to enfeeble the Occupational Safety & Health Act and the Mine Safety & Health Act. We are here to make equally clear our determination to resist.

OSHA and MSHA are the workers' laws. They belong to us. Organized labor fought long and successfully to see them enacted. We have seen enough of funerals of workers killed on the job in accidents, or who died the tragic and slow death of exposure to chemicals and other toxic agents.

WE WERE SICK of toothless state programs that accomplished nothing while 114,000 workers were being killed every year from occupational accidents and illnesses.

Imagine—every decade more than one million needless deaths. It is as though, every decade, the people of Buffalo or Indianapolis were wiped off the map.

Yet, to carry out the purposes of OSHA, the federal government grudgingly doles out the equivalent of about $3 for each worker. Is it worth no more than $3 to save a worker's life or health?

A term in the jargon of regulatory economics is "cost-effectiveness." It means that a regulatory agency like OSHA or MSHA should analyze alternative methods of complying with a health or safety rule. A responsible policy would require the choice of whichever method most effectively reduces the hazard to safe levels.

CORPORATIONS and the Administration, however, would require the choice of whichever method is least costly to management. This means that, instead of reducing noise through engineering controls, employers force workers to wear earplugs. Instead of removing unsafe concentrations of dust or chemicals, employers encase the workers in respirators. The worker is engineered, not the workplace.

OSHA has taken administrative steps to do just that. The Administration has rolled back advances made when Ray Marshall and Eula Bingham were in charge.

A new compliance directive makes it harder for workers to file complaints with OSHA over hazardous job conditions. OSHA warns an employer, by letter, when a worker files a complaint—which is close to violating the Act's prohibition against giving advance notice of inspections.

Assistant Labor Sec. Thorne Auchter's scheme for targeting general schedule safety inspections would exempt 73 percent of manufacturing firms from such inspections—thus depriving nearly 13 million workers of the protection of the law.

The Assistant Secretary heaps self-praise on his cost-effective administration of OSHA and on the efficient deployment of his small compliance staff.

He neglects to mention that under his targeting system inspectors first visit the workplace to check its records. If the records show no evidence of hazard, the inspector simply departs—without inspecting the plant. Yet the Assistant Secretary insists that these are real inspections.

LIKE THE ECONOMIC indicators, the OSHA indicators all point down. Inspections, complaints, follow-ups—down. Citations and penalties—down. Field personnel—down by 272. OSHA field offices—one-third closed down.

Nor has OSHA escaped the "New Federalism" virus that eats away at the foundations of national government. Greater reliance on state OSHA programs is the order of the day—as if the passage of OSHA had not been occasioned by the states' inability or unwillingness to protect worker health and safety.

Let the Administration understand—and let the politicians who seek our support in this election year understand—that our commitment to the survival and improvement of OSHA is tenacious.

We will defend the health and safety of workers anywhere—the courts, the legislatures, the bargaining table, the streets, if necessary, and wherever public opinion is shaped.

THE RIGHT to a safe and healthful workplace is as basic as the right to freedom of speech, religion, or a fair and speedy trial. None of those rights should be subordinated to the supposed right to make profits.

We face a hard fight. The Administration's assault on OSHA is only part of a larger assault on the philosophy and programs that we helped to shape over the last half century.

Reagan Refuses to Move

Excessive Interest Rates Tied To Inaction on Credit Controls

PRESIDENT REAGAN'S refusal to have more credit channeled into productive investment areas is a big factor in continuing the high interest rates that have a stranglehold on homebuilding, auto production and other economy-stimulating expenditures, AFL-CIO Economist Henry Schechter declared on Labor News Conference.

Pointing out that the Credit Control Act of 1969 empowered the President to "authorize the Federal Reserve Board to regulate credit, in practically any manner, when necessary to fight inflation," Schechter said the President also shows poor economic judgment in his failure to ask Congress to extend the law beyond its scheduled June 30 expiration.

Schechter said the law is essential as a standby weapon that can be used if the recession sinks still deeper, as many economists believe it will.

"Precluding or tightening terms for unproductive uses," such as corporate takeovers and highly speculative ventures, "would leave more available for productive uses and get interest rates for things like home loans down," Schechter asserted. He is director of the AFL-CIO Office of Housing & Monetary Policy.

Also appearing on the network radio interview was Arthur Weimer, economic consultant to the U.S. League of Savings Associations, who agreed that the credit control statute should be continued.

"Just the fact that it's there can be helpful," Weimer stressed.

Weimer said the Administration's objection to the credit control law is more philosophic than practical. The Federal Reserve, he noted, actually imposes a number of "indirect controls" with Administration approval by setting rates, reserve requirements and handling of federal funds.

The money and credit markets "are far from running free," he observed.

NOTING THAT BILLS to extend the Credit Control Act are now before both houses of Congress, Schechter and Weimer said support for the measures is growing in the wake of the mounting outcry "from the people back home who don't want to continue (the Administration's) very painful way of fighting inflation" with tight money, high interest rates and depression-level unemployment.

They said that if the Administration continues to drag its feet, "the leadership to keep the Credit Control Act alive may well emerge in Congress."

Reporters questioning Weimer and Schechter on the AFL-CIO's public affairs production were Alan E. Adams of Employment Relations Report and Robert Cooney of Press Associates, Inc. The program is aired weekly over the Mutual radio network.

By Press Associates, Inc.

TODAY'S YOUNG families, the elderly and the needy must regard home ownership and decent housing as dreams deferred.

The nation's housing industry is in the throes of a deep depression—the most serious since World War II.

Slumping under the weight of high interest rates for the past three years, the industry has been devastated by the Reagan recession.

For nine months in a row now, housing starts have fallen under an annual rate of one million units a year. Some 2.5 million units are needed yearly for new families and to replace obsolete housing.

NEARLY 6 MILLION Americans are living in what the government defines as substandard housing. Nearly a million construction workers are unemployed and there are an equal number of jobless in industries dependent on home construction. Home builders have been going bankrupt in record numbers.

In these circumstances, people's eyes naturally turn toward Washington for some national leadership. Some hoped the President's Commission on Housing, a 30-member advisory panel appointed by President Reagan last June, would provide some direction.

They were sadly disappointed. The commission's report proposed less—not more—government help to the ailing industry. Private enterprise, said the commission, could pick up the slack left by a reduced federal role.

The National Association of Home Builders, normally conservative and Republican, said the commission's report had "ignored today's economic crisis" and had proposed "eliminating all housing production-oriented programs" in favor of "the trickle-down theory."

"THIS PARTISAN commission," said the home builders' association, "recommends a radical departure from this nation's traditional housing policies. It favors policies and a credit market that would destroy the unique relationship between the private building industry, specialized financial institutions and government that has made it possible to provide housing unmatched in quality and numbers for the American people in the last 35 years."

Specifically, the President's housing commission proposed to phase out the GNMA mortgage-backed security program, which is an important component to FHA insurance and VA guaranteed programs.

As the home builders' association noted: "It proposes phasing down the government's role in assuring middle-income Americans access to affordable mortgage credit, and instead places its full faith in the now evolving financial system, where home buyers are forced to compete for their mortgage credit against corporate giants and the federal government."

THE COMMISSION proposes to end new construction under Section 8 of the Housing Act for low-rent public housing—nearly half of which serves low-income elderly people.

The commission also proposes to undermine state or local rent controls by forbidding such controls on housing insured or partly financed by the federal government.

What the commission ignored was that new housing is particularly needed during the current economic downturn. The private market does not produce enough for special groups such as large families, the elderly and the poor even in the best of times.

Fortunately, Congress appears to be rejecting the laissez-faire philosophy of the President's housing commission.

The House, despite strong Administration opposition, recently approved by an overwhelming margin a $1 billion mortgage subsidy program for moderate-income homebuyers. It was a small step in the right direction.

THE STRANGLEHOLD of high interest rates on economy-stimulating investments could be eased if President Reagan would use the credit control authority Congress gave him, AFL-CIO Economist Henry Schechter, left, and Arthur Weimer, economic consultant to the U.S. League of Savings Associations, said on Labor News Conference. They were questioned by Alan Adams, right, of Employment Relations Report and Robert Cooney of Press Associates, Inc. The AFL-CIO produced public affairs program is aired weekly on Mutual radio.

Court Upholds Ban on Non-Union Subcontracts

The Supreme Court has unanimously upheld the legality of construction industry collective bargaining agreements that forbid subcontracting of work to non-union firms.

That was the position argued by the AFL-CIO and building trades unions in a joint brief to the Supreme Court. It was also the conclusion that had been reached by the National Labor Relations Board and the 9th Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals in the two cases that were decided.

THE AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. expressed "great satisfaction" with the 9-0 decision. "Our position has been fully vindicated," President Robert A. Georgine said.

Justice Thurgood Marshall, who wrote the decision, noted that the language and the legislative history of the 1959 Landrum-Griffin Act left no doubt as to the intent of Congress.

That law imposed new restrictions intended to protect "neutral" third-party employers from being disadvantaged by secondary boycotts and by "hot cargo" prohibitions.

But, Marshall stressed, the law clearly stated that the new restrictions would not apply "to an agreement between a labor organization and an employer in the construction industry relating to the contracting or subcontracting of work to be done at the site of the construction. . . ."

HE ALSO quoted, as had the union brief, the explanation of the bill given by then-Sen. John F. Kennedy, who was chairman of the Senate conferees in the negotiations with the House that shaped the final terms of the legislation.

Kennedy explained that the Senate conferees had successfully insisted that the new restrictions should not affect the pattern of collective bargaining on construction sites or in the clothing industry. Subcontracting agreements in construction that had been legal would continue to be legal, the future president said.

Construction employer associations challenging the right of unions to seek protections against subcontracting to non-union firms based their argument in part on a 1975 Supreme Court decision, known as the Connell case, which went against the union involved on antitrust grounds.

JUSTICE MARSHALL held, however, that the 1975 case was not comparable, since it involved an attempt to restrict the subcontracting actions of a general contractor who did not have a bargaining relationship with the union and whose employees were not represented by a union.

That precedent was not applicable, the court said, because the cases before the court involved subcontracting clauses "sought or negotiated in the context of collective bargaining relationships."

The Supreme Court did not deal with an employer claim that even if a subcontracting clause were lawful, a union couldn't strike or picket to get a construction industry employer to agree to such a clause.

THE 9TH CIRCUIT appellate court had rejected that argument, holding that unions were free to do so. Similar conclusions had been reached over the years by other appellate courts in cases that did not reach the Supreme Court.

In this case, the Supreme Court noted that the employer had not raised the argument before the NLRB and therefore could not do so at the appellate level. Thus, both the appellate court and the Supreme Court were without jurisdiction to decide the issue.

On two other cases of interest to labor, the Supreme Court refused to review decisions by appellate courts and thus made them final. Left intact were:

- A decision by the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals that the E. W. Scripps Co., which published the Cincinnati Post, was bound by an agreement to provide employment for the remainder of their working lives to some 100 printers whose jobs were affected by a new printing process. The company sought to abrogate its agreement with the Typographical Union after it closed down its separate printing operations to go into joint production with a rival newspaper. The appellate court held that the employment guarantee was not nullified by the expiration of the collective bargaining contract under which it was negotiated.

- A decision by the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals upholding an NLRB policy involving the right of reinstatement in so-called "mixed-motive" discharge cases. The NLRB had found that the dismissal of a clerical employee of a Dallas trucking firm on work-related grounds was motivated at least in part by retaliation against the employee for engaging in actions protected by federal labor law, including initiating a protest against the company's vacation policy.

The appellate court rejected the employer's challenge to an established NLRB policy that once there is "prima-facie" evidence that an employee's protected activity was a motivating factor in the discharge, the burden is on the employer to prove that the same punishment would have been levied if the worker had not engaged in such activity.

PICKET LINE at the Triangle Plastic & Wire Co. at Jewett City, Conn., is joined by AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, Connecticut AFL-CIO President John Driscoll and a busload of delegates from the federation's regional conference in Hartford. They made the 55-mile trip to back up 243 members of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers who had been locked out for three weeks. The union and company reached a settlement that same evening.

Picket Line Rally Helps Turn Lockout into IBEW Victory

Jewett City, Conn.—With a little help from some friends, including AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, Local 255 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers turned a lockout into a fair settlement.

Negotiations were under way between the union and Triangle Plastic & Wire Co. on May 21 when Kirkland and a busload of delegates left the AFL-CIO's regional conference in Hartford, 55 miles away, to shoulder picket signs with the IBEW members who had been locked out since May 3 after turning down a take-it-or-leave-it offer from the manufacturer of specialty cable and wire products.

WITH THREATS that it would shut down and move if it did not get its way, Triangle offered a flat 25-cents-an-hour increase for one year with no benefit improvements, then closed the doors on its 243 union workers when they said no thanks but offered to keep working under the old contract.

The AFL-CIO's participation on the picket line was widely covered by television and newspaper reporters. That evening, the union and the company reached a settlement.

Local 255 members now have a contract that calls for hourly wage improvements of 40.8 cents an hour now, 40 cents in the second year and 45 cents in the third year. The current average hourly rate is $8.62.

Major medical coverage for workers and their families was increased from $80,000 to $1 million and for retirees from $20,000 to $80,000. X-ray and lab test coverage was substantially improved.

Frank Capacchione, the local's business manager, stressed that the union's major interest was in improved pension benefits, and the contract now calls for an increase in the monthly benefit of $1 for each year of service in the first year, $2 in the second year and $3 in the third year of the pact.

HOURLY PREMIUMS of 3 cents and 5 cents were won for the second and third shifts; the safety shoe allowance was raised, and workers in the departments where the dirtiest work is done will now get $50 a year toward work clothes.

The company quickly began to change its hard line, Capacchione pointed out, when the state of Connecticut upheld the workers' claims to unemployment compensation beginning from the date of the lockout to May 24, the day they returned to work.

Regional Conferences Focus On Political Change in '82

Hartford, Conn.—"We want to change the course of our government and that means changing the people who run it," AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland said in a windup to the federation's 1982 series of regional conferences.

The May 20-22 meeting here, the last of seven, concentrated on political action aimed at electing labor-supported candidates in the November state and congressional elections.

ELECTION DAY will be "Solidarity Day II," Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue told the participants.

Kirkland emphasized that the labor movement must work toward the election of a Congress that will change the Reagan Administration's course "from the road to ruin and restore hope to the millions of Americans who are badly hurt and sorely afraid."

The federation officers spoke at a rally that was the final session of the three-day conference. All seven meetings ended on a similar note, following two days of workshops keyed to the nuts and bolts of political action.

The sessions included discussion of the major economic and social campaign issues, grass roots lobbying techniques, communications and technical workshops on COPE activities including endorsements, campaign activities and voter registration and turn-out drives. The election prospects in each state within the region were reviewed with emphasis on marginal districts.

Earlier conferences were held in March, April and May in Dearborn, Mich.; Louisville, Ky.; Phoenix; Seattle; Birmingham, Ala., and Houston.

ABOUT 600 representatives of labor organizations in Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Vermont attended the conference in Hartford.

Over the course of the regional meetings more than 3,000 people took part, including officers of AFL-CIO state and local labor councils and major locals along with many shop stewards and international representatives of affiliated unions.

Kirkland led a busload of delegates from the Hartford conference to Jewett City, about 55 miles away, to join the picket line of International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 255 at Triangle Plastic & Wire Co. The 243 employees had been locked out by the company for three weeks after refusing a take-it-or-leave-it offer. The union and the company were able to reach a settlement later that evening.

It was the third time Kirkland had gone from a regional conference to support striking union members. In Louisville he walked with members of the Cement, Lime & Gypsum Workers striking Kosmos Cement Co., the target of an AFL-CIO-endorsed boycott. Kirkland also picketed with striking Laborers at the Carter-Glogau Laboratories in Phoenix.

EACH CONFERENCE included workshops on cooperation with allied groups on voter registration and participation. The groups include the A. Philip Randolph Institute, the National Council of Senior Citizens, the Concerned Seniors for Better Government, the Labor Council for Latin American Advancement, Frontlash and the Coalition of Labor Union Women.

Other workshops dealt with relations with local political party organizations and building coalitions with community allies including the NAACP, the National Organization for Women as well as consumer, environmental, youth, religious and other organizations.

Representatives of many such groups participated in the political action rallies that rounded out each conference.

Featured speakers at the rallies throughout the country included Senators Donald W. Riegle (D-Mich.), Paul S. Sarbanes (D-Md.), Henry M. Jackson (D-Wash.), and Spark M. Matsunaga (D-Hawaii) as well as Norman Hill, executive director of the A. Philip Randolph Institute.

IN HIS SPEECH to the participants at the rallies, Kirkland stressed that the AFL-CIO had been among the first to strongly protest the Reagan Administration's social and economic policies and offer alternatives.

But the labor movement "is no longer a voice in the wilderness," and "the bloom is off the President's self-proclaimed mandate," he asserted.

"The spreading recognition that the nation is in trouble and that the Administration is floundering does not mean that labor's views will prevail on their merits alone," Kirkland said. "It means that more people—in the political arena, in the media and even in the executive suites—are taking a second look at the policies we have been advocating."

Kirkland pointed out that the AFL-CIO today has a larger audience for its alternative proposals, but that it is still essential "to reach out not only to our familiar friends but to the unconverted and the confused.

"It is not enough to win hearts and minds; we have to win elections," he said.

Shipyard Jobs Imperiled by Reagan Plan

The AFL-CIO urged Congress and the Administration to keep America's shipbuilding capacity intact and scrap a proposal that would close down U.S. shipyards and shift the building and repair of American-flag merchant ships to foreign countries.

An Executive Council resolution protested a section of the Reagan Administration's maritime program that would lift all restraints on foreign construction of vessels entitled to federal operating subsidies.

IF THIS were done, the council said, ship construction and repair would go to foreign yards "where low construction costs are made possible by host nation subsidies." And the United States would lose "the yards, tools, technology, workers and skills of an industry that provides jobs for 170,000 American workers."

The council resolution urged the Administration and Congress to restore the construction subsidy and loan guarantee programs to revitalize the U.S. shipbuilding industry.

It called also for establishment of a U.S. cargo policy that includes ratification of a United Nations shipping code and the negotiation of bilateral shipping agreements for bulk cargoes with major U.S. trading partners.

"A STRONG, private shipbuilding industry and merchant fleet are vital to the nation's economy and security, and must not be dismantled," the Executive Council declared.

The council statement noted that the shipbuilding industry has already been severely eroded because of the decline of the American-flag fleet, which now carries less than 4 percent of the nation's exports and imports.

Britain's current experience "clearly demonstrates the need for a merchant marine available for immediate reassignment to military support," the council said. "Only a strong, modern, home-based shipbuilding capability can produce, repair and maintain those vessels," it stressed.

The council warned that abandonment of America's shipyards would leave the nation's maritime strength "in the hands of foreign shipyards whose only allegiance is to a balance sheet."

Indiana Desk Co. Added to Labor's 'Don't Buy' Listing

The products of Indiana Desk Co. were added to the AFL-CIO boycott list by the AFL-CIO Executive Council which endorsed the action called by the Furniture Workers.

The hiring of a union-busting consultant by the Jasper, Ind., office desk manufacturer soured 30 years of stable bargaining relations and forced 170 production and maintenance employees to strike Mar. 29 after working several months without a contract, the council's statement reported.

The council pointed out that the company had stalled negotiations until four days before expiration of the agreement early this year and then asked to take away the union's pension and insurance plans as well as the right to grieve on incentive rates.

THE COMPANY'S strategy "was designed and executed by an Indianapolis 'consulting' firm with a record of seeking union decertification elections," the council said. Earlier, the company's lawyer had been dismissed for talking openly of plans to "stop the union" at the Jasper plant and two other firms owned by Indiana Desk.

The company's medium-priced office and executive desks are marketed under the brand name Indiana Desk.

CONTINGENT OF DELEGATES from the AFL-CIO national job safety conference masses outside the Labor Dept. headquarters to protest the Reagan Administration's steep cutbacks in federal enforcement activities. The two-day conference drew several hundred union safety representatives from 40 states.

Safety Conference Launches Drive To Counter Cutbacks in Protection

(Continued from Page 1)

prefer to have an OSHA program that is least costly to management, he said.

"Instead of reducing noise through engineering controls, employers force workers to wear earplugs. Instead of removing unsafe concentrations of dust or chemicals, employers encase workers in respirators. The worker is engineered, not the workplace."

Kirkland pledged that labor would not retreat from its goal of attaining safe and healthful workplaces for all American workers.

"LET THE Administration understand, and let the politicians who seek our support in this election year understand, that our commitment to the survival and improvement of OSHA is tenacious," he warned.

"We will defend the health and safety of workers anywhere—the courts, the legislatures, the bargaining tables, the streets, if necessary, and wherever public opinion is shaped."

Federation Vice President J. C. Turner, who chaired the conference, traced OSHA's enforcement rollback to deep staff reductions and the closing of one-third of the agency's offices and field stations across the country.

DR. EULA BINGHAM, administrator of OSHA during the Carter presidency, accused the current holder of the office—Thorne G. Auchter—of mismanaging the agency. Because of Auchter's policies, she charged, there has been a mass exodus of competent scientists who on ethical grounds could not justify remaining with the agency.

Although "deregulation may be a sexy word in Washington," she said, "it is not fashionable in Pittsburgh, East Chicago, or Harlan County, Ky." She warned that new occupational hazards are emerging as OSHA retreats.

Bingham commended the labor movement for pursuing additional worker protections through municipal ordinances and state statutes to replace abrogated federal safeguards. She noted that unions have just succeeded in gaining "right-to-know" measures in Wisconsin and Norwood, Ohio, that require employers to inform workers fully about toxic substances they are exposed to.

UNIONS MUST continue to use litigation, pressures, protests and the ballot box, to attain their goals on job safety and health, she stressed.

Bingham, a professor of toxicology at the University of Cincinnati, also heads a political action committee working to elect candidates who support effective job safety programs.

Federation COPE Director John Perkins told delegates that the restoration of federal safety protections and other vital social programs are contingent on the election of labor-endorsed candidates in November.

"The assault against OSHA has been matched step for step on almost every program important to working people and their families," Perkins observed.

A SERIES of conference workshops focused on local, state and regional COPE campaigns keyed to occupational safety issues.

Other workshops explored:

- OSHA's slowdown in the development of safety and health standards, as well as Administration efforts to weaken existing regulations.
- Strategies to combat the reduction in federal enforcement through full participation of AFL-CIO affiliates in the "OSHA Watch" campaign.
- Worker education and training to replace programs slashed by Auchter and methods of obtaining essential information from OSHA.
- Worker rights under state-operated programs, activities of the National Institute of Occupational Safety & Health, activities of the mine safety agency, safety protections for federal and public employees, and the impact of the Reagan cutbacks in safety on women and minorities.

Between sessions and workshops, delegates also met with congressmen and senators on Capitol Hill and demonstrated outside the Labor Dept. headquarters to protest OSHA's retreat on protections.

Federation Occupational Safety Director George H. R. Taylor said the conference helped spell out to delegates the "poor Reagan record" on safety and to bring Congress a clear message of labor's concerns. The delegates can now spread the message back home and help lead the fight to reverse the Administration's anti-OSHA policy, he said.

Striking Texaco Oil Workers Draw Council's Full Support

Texaco "appears to have no respect for its contractual commitments" or the rights of its employees, the AFL-CIO Executive Council charged in a statement condemning the company's refusal to negotiate a settlement with the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers unless the union agrees to gut pension protections.

Over 4,000 OCAW members have been on strike at the company's Port Arthur, Tex, plant since Jan. 8 even though other segments of the industry have agreed to contract terms.

TEXACO IS trying to use the bargaining process to get around a federal court decision upholding the union's position that the company violated the previous contract when it increased the percentage used to discount retirement benefits when workers took them in a lump sum, the council said.

The company is demanding removal of contract clauses that guard against cuts in retirement benefits, the council noted, and Texaco refuses to talk about settling other issues until the union "surrenders" on the pension dispute and agrees to "sweeping changes" in work practices.

The council urged AFL-CIO affiliates to inform their membership of Texaco's actions. The company "is not an economically distressed" company and has "handsome profits rolling in from worldwide holdings," the council noted.

MINE WORKER Barbara Angle of UMW District 31 in West Virginia, whose arm was mangled in a 1979 mine accident, was among the victims of industrial hazards in the AFL-CIO rally for stronger protections. Another was Leon Krutchen of the Food & Commercial Workers who lost an arm on the job. But Jimmy Good, an Asbestos Workers' local business agent from Baltimore, was unable to attend the demonstration. He was in the hospital for lung-cancer treatments.

Anti-Recession Plan Rejected

House, Senate Snarled In Budget Controversies

(Continued from Page 1)

Whatever version the House adopts will then have to be reconciled in conference with the budget resolution adopted by the Republican-controlled Senate, which largely follows the Administration's blueprint for further spending cuts and a freeze or ceiling on most benefit payments.

The Senate did rebel against the Administration's attempt to cut back on railroad retirement. It adopted, 57-40, a labor-supported amendment by Sen. Jim Sasser (D-Tenn.) to restore the slashed funds, and then tabled a GOP "half-loaf" compromise by 53-44.

BUT IT rejected, 52-42, an attempt by Sen. Robert G. Byrd (D-W.Va.) to assure funding for an additional 13 weeks of extended unemployment compensation. And it defeated, 60-39, an attempt by Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan (D-N.Y.) to restore $2.6 billion cut from Medicare and Medicaid.

Meanwhile, the Senate was tangled in its own parliamentary snarl—over a House-passed "urgent" supplemental appropriations bill.

The House had included in the measure $1 billion to launch a new program of mortgage interest rate subsidies for moderate-income purchasers of new homes. Labor supported the move as a needed stimulus for home construction and a step towards lower interest rates.

The Reagan Administration wanted the Republican-controlled Senate to kill that provision, warning it could lead to a presidential veto.

But home builders were pushing the other way, and a bipartisan majority of the Senate joined in sponsoring a move by Sen. Richard G. Lugar (R-Ind.) that included in the appropriations measure a five-year authorization fo the mortgage subsidy program and contract authority to enable an immediate large-scale startup.

Republican leader Howard Baker moved to drop the housing provisions from the bill to defuse the veto confrontation. But the Senate insisted on keeping the provision by a stunning 70-23 margin.

FURTHER ACTION on the bill was delayed by filibuster tactics of an opponent of the housing stimulus, Sen. William L. Armstrong (R-Colo.).

One of his delaying amendments, however, proved a morale-booster for labor in resisting attacks on the Davis-Bacon Act.

Armstrong proposed an amendment to the appropriations bill that would have virtually repealed prevailing wage coverage. It was tabled, and thus killed, by an overwhelming voice vote.

In other developments:

- The House joined the Senate in adopting a resolution of disapproval that kills a Federal Trade Commission regulation that would have required used car dealers to notify buyers of any known defects in autos. The AFL-CIO and consumer groups had backed the FTC regulation, which was 10 years in the making. But used car dealers mounted a heavily-financed lobbying effort which paid off in a 69-27 vote in the Senate and a 286-133 vote in the House.

Under a 1980 law, an FTC regulation can be blocked by a vote of the House and Senate, without the need for the President's signature. A recent federal court decision invalidated a "legislative veto" provision of the 1978 Natural Gas Policy Act and a court challenge is expected to the constitutionality of the FTC provision.

- The Senate Labor & Human Resources Committee gave unanimous approval to a compromise bill that restricts coverage under the Longshoremen's & Harbor Workers' Compensation Act and makes a number of changes designed to hold down costs. But the committee cropped from the bill a number of cutbacks that waterfront unions most vigorously opposed.

Labor Museum Lauded At Historic Botto House

Creation of the American Labor Museum at Botto House in Haledon, N.J., was applauded by the AFL-CIO Executive Council, which cited its efforts to teach young people about the labor movement and increase public knowledge and appreciation of the contributions of working people to American society.

The house, designated a state and national historic site since 1975 at the urging of the Textile Workers, was owned by Pietro Botto. During the historic 1913 strike of 20,000 silk workers in nearby Paterson, Botto opened his home to the workers for meetings and rallies during the five-month-long struggle.

In 1981, a non-profit institution was set up to establish a museum on the site.

'Somehow, It Doesn't Make Me Feel Better!'

Real Wages Decline in April Despite Moderate Price Rise

The real earnings of American workers dropped in April even though consumer prices rose only moderately as the recession tightened its grip on the economy.

Although consumer prices rose only two-tenths of 1 percent over the month, "real" or inflation-adjusted earnings fell by as much during the same period, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported. The decline—part of a 2-percent falloff over the past year—cut average real earnings by 36 cents a week.

BLS SAID THAT while gross weekly earnings of nonfarm production workers averaged $263.09 in April, a $10.33 increase over the year-earlier level, earnings in constant 1977 dollars averaged $168.54 a week, or $3.64 less than in April 1981. The figures are adjusted for seasonal price fluctuations.

The earnings decline was due entirely to the modest CPI increase as a three-tenths of 1 percent rise in average hourly earnings in April was offset by a three-tenths of 1 percent decline in average weekly hours, two other factors that can change real earnings. The April earnings decline was the first since January. In March, constant-dollar earnings averaged $168.90 a week.

In a separate report, BLS found no change in real median earnings over the first quarter of 1982. The bureau said that median weekly earnings of wage and salary workers with full-time jobs rose to $304 in the January-March period, up 7.4 percent from a year earlier. But, since consumer prices rose at the same pace during the same one-year period, real median earnings stood still.

APRIL'S CPI increase was accounted for by higher food and housing costs. But these increases were largely offset by another sharp drop in energy prices. The index was 6.3 percent higher over the year.

Food and beverage prices rose three-tenths of 1 percent last month as meat prices rose sharply. Food prices declined two-tenths of 1 percent in March. Housing costs jumped nine-tenths of 1 percent, after falling three-tenths of 1 percent the month before, chiefly because of a 2.1-percent increase in home-financing costs.

Gasoline prices declined by 6.7 percent, however, the fourth consecutive month they have gone down. The April price for all types of gasoline fell 5.8 cents to $1.21 a gallon.

Medical care costs increased 1 percent in April after average increases of 7.5 percent over the previous four months.

House Panel Votes Jobless Aid Extension

The House Ways & Means Committee has voted 23-5 approval of an additional 13 weeks of extended unemployment benefits for hundreds of thousands of workers whose payments will be cut off before plant hiring gates open.

Labor had sought the extension of benefits "to forestall economic disaster for the long-term unemployed," although the committee-approved bill fell short of the AFL-CIO's proposals and was marred by a regressive tax law change.

Under existing law, the maximum duration of unemployment benefits is 39 weeks—normally 26 weeks of state payments plus up to 13 weeks of state-federal payments in jurisdictions where the extended benefits program has been triggered by exceptionally high insured jobless rates.

The committee bill would stretch eligibility to 52 weeks in the jurisdictions where extended benefits are in effect—currently 31 states, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. The final 13 weeks of benefits would be totally federally financed.

TO FUND THE added 13 weeks of benefits, the committee voted to lower the income threshold at which unemployment compensation payments are subject to the federal income tax. Present law makes benefits taxable for individuals with an annual income over $20,000 or over $25,000 in the case of a couple filing a joint return. The committee would lower the cutoff to $12,000 for an individual or $18,000 for a couple.

The tax change would be permanent, although the added 13 weeks of extended benefit eligibility would expire on Sept. 30, 1983.

In a letter to the committee before the vote, AFL-CIO Legislative Director Ray Denison protested that subjecting unemployment benefits to taxation amounts to imposing "a means test."

Denison also urged the committee to cancel a raise in the trigger level for extended unemployment benefits that Congress enacted last year, to take effect on Sept. 25, 1982.

PRESENT LAW triggers extended benefits if, over a 13-week period, the insured unemployment rate (IUR) is at least 5 percent, or both 4 percent and 120 percent of the rate for the same period of each of the past two years. The IUR is a measurement that is always significantly lower than the overall unemployment rate.

The change scheduled for next September would raise the trigger to a 6 percent IUR rate or 5 percent along with a 20 percent rise over the previous two years.

THE COMMITTEE rejected an amendment by Rep. William D. Brodhead (D-Mich.) which would have repealed the scheduled raising of the trigger level. But it also rejected a Republican attempt to reduce the number of unemployed workers eligible for the final 13 weeks of benefits by requiring a longer period of work in covered employment during the year before the worker filed for unemployment compensation.

The 13-week extension bill had been approved earlier without the restrictive tax provision by a subcommittee headed by Rep. Harold E. Ford (D-Tenn.). A similar bill introduced by 22 Senate Democrats on May 18 is to be considered by the Senate Finance Committee.

John D. Connors Dies, Headed Education Dept.

John D. Connors, who served as the AFL-CIO education director during the 1950s and retired in 1969 after nine years as a special assistant to the federation president, died May 22 of cardio-pulmonary arrest at Chevy Chase, Md. He was 79.

Connors began his trade union career as a volunteer organizer in Massachusetts for the American Federation of Teachers and was elected president of an AFT local in 1932. He also was an AFT vice president from 1937 to 1948. Connors became the first education director of the AFL in 1954 and was appointed education director of the merged federation the following year. In 1960 he was made special assistant for safety to AFL-CIO President George Meany.

He is survived by his wife Gertrude. A memorial Mass will be said June 5 at Christ the King Church in Silver Spring, Md.

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

5/29/82

NLRB Orders Bargaining Despite Election Loss

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII Saturday, June 5, 1982 No. 22

By James M. Shevis

The National Labor Relations Board took a new approach to unfair labor practices by employers as it ordered an Edison, N.J., company to bargain with a union which had lost a representation election following a vicious anti-union campaign by management.

The landmark ruling against Conair Corp., a manufacturer of hair care products, stems from events in 1977 when Ladies' Garment Workers Local 222 sought to organize the firm's 350 employees.

OVER A nine-month period, the NLRB said, the employer committed a series of unfair labor practices so "outrageous and pervasive" that they precluded holding a fair election to select or reject a union as bargaining agent.

Except in one other case, remanded by the 3rd Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals, the NLRB had not previously taken such action.

The Conair case is the first in which the board has acted without a court's direction to issue a bargaining order in such a case, thus setting a new policy of the NLRB itself.

Board Members John Fanning, Howard Jenkins, Jr., and Don A. Zimmerman formed the 3-2 majority imposing the bargaining order against Conair. Upholding an earlier finding of an NLRB administrative law judge, the board said the case was clearly the "exceptional' type envisioned by the Supreme Court in its 1969 Gissel Packing Co. decision. In that ruling the high court suggested that where flagrant employer violations preclude a fair election, the board might issue a bargaining order "without need of inquiry into majority status on the basis of cards or otherwise."

SEPARATE DISSENTS were written by President Reagan's two NLRB appointees, Chairman John Van de Water and Member Robert P. Hunter.

Both argued that the NLRB lacked statutory authority to order bargaining and that it was improper to impose a union representative on a body of workers without proof of majority preference.

(Continued on Page 7)

VOTER REGISTRATION drive on wheels operated by New York City hospital workers will roll through the city's minority communities this summer with a bilingual registration and voter education program. State, County & Municipal Employees Local 420, representing 14,000 non-professional hospital workers, is pressing the campaign from the union's "Freedom Bus," shown here outside a Harlem hospital.

New Rules Scored As Bid to 'Repeal' Wage Protections

By David L. Perlman

New Labor Dept. rules will virtually demolish the prevailing wage safeguards of the Davis-Bacon Act, and building trades unions are exploring legal action to keep the law from being "repealed by administrative fiat."

The rules changes that "shocked and angered" the AFL-CIO Executive Council were welcomed by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce as a "pleasant surprise."

THE CHAMBER, which speaks for anti-union employers, termed the final version of the Davis-Bacon Act regulations "a substantial improvement" over the damaging but less extreme changes the Administration had proposed last year.

By the Labor Dept.'s own estimate of "savings," the new regulations will cost workers on government-funded construction projects some $600 million a year in lost earnings.

Most of the "savings" would come by wiping out jobs for skilled journeymen and allowing contractors almost unlimited use of low-paid, semi-skilled "helpers" who could be used for any type of construction work.

PRESIDENT Robert A. Georgine of the Building & Construction Trades Dept. said a byproduct of such a rules change would be the scuttling of apprenticeship programs that have been bringing an increasing number of blacks and other minorities into the skilled ranks.

The "helper" category would close off the apprenticeship route and create a "permanent second-class status" in the construction trades, he charged.

The Labor Dept.'s own estimates pointed up the wage loss. It computed potential "savings" by calculating that a contractor could hire a helper for an average of $6.70 an hour less than he would pay a journeyman. And if helpers were also used to replace experienced construction laborers, a contractor could save from $4.95 to $5.71 an hour on a laborer's rate.

Last August, the Labor Dept.'s proposals for changes in Davis-Bacon rules called for allowing one helper for every five journeymen, along with other measures that labor strongly protested as weakening the prevailing wage law.

THE CHAMBER of Commerce said at the time that the proposed rules changes moved "in the right direction" but not fast enough for its satisfaction.

It was the Labor Dept.'s decision to allow contractors to use two helpers for every three journeymen that came as such a "pleasant surprise" to the Chamber.

The reaction bore out the prediction of Labor Sec. Raymond J. Donovan in a memo to Vice President George Bush that was quoted in the Bureau of National Affairs publication, Daily Labor Report.

DONOVAN WROTE Bush, who is head of the President's Task Force on Regulatory Reform, that the new regulations "should be very well received by contractor groups." But he acknowledged that unions "may react unfavorably."

(Continued on Page 2)

Mine Safety Coverage Put Before Conferees

A House-Senate conference committee will decide on safety coverage for tens of thousands of workers in above-ground stone, clay, sand, gravel and phosphate mining.

Mine owners last year lobbied through Congress as part of a general funding resolution a provision that took jurisdiction away from the Mine Safety & Health Administration (MSHA), which has mandatory inspection schedules and more stringent safeguards than the Occupational Safety & Health Administration (OSHA).

Both agencies are part of the Labor Dept., which joined the trade union movement in opposing the shift.

THE CHANGE in jurisdiction took effect last December, and workers and their unions say fatalities have already doubled over the same period a year ago.

Last month, the House listened to them and voted 220-186 to restore MSHA jurisdiction. The Steelworkers, the Cement, Lime & Gypsum Workers and the Operating Engineers were especially active.

But the mine owners carried the day when the appropriations bill reached the Senate, although by a reduced margin. The Senate voted 52-38 to delete that provision of the House bill. It was a closer vote, however, than the 63-35 margin the previous year. The next move is up to the House-Senate conference committee on the supplemental appropriations bill.

THE SAME conference committee will consider whether to provide funds that will allow a partial rollback of the heavy postage rate increases for publications of nonprofit organizations.

Last year's budget axe jumped postage costs far beyond the previously scheduled increase, forcing many union newspapers and magazines to abandon or cut back publication. The International Labor Press Association has been among the groups pressing for a reprieve.

The Senate by voice vote approved $62 million to allow a rollback effective June 20, and it will be up to the conference committee whether to include it in the final version.

In some other congressional developments:

- The full Senate Labor & Human Resources Committee gave unanimous approval to a modified version of a bill intro-

(Continued on Page 3)

House Goes Back For New Attempt To Draft Budget

The House will make a new attempt to pass a budget resolution that will set binding spending ceilings for the fiscal year that starts Oct. 1 and will determine tax changes needed to meet revenue targets.

The Senate has already done so, and a final congressional budget was scheduled to be worked out in a House-Senate conference. But the House wrestled for more than a week with eight alternative budget proposals and ended up defeating them all.

HOUSE MEMBERS were able to vote for more than one version, and many ended up voting for three or four. But none could muster a majority.

The chief Republican bill, which the AFL-CIO warned would worsen the hardships of the recession, lost by only 235-192. That was the closest of the votes.

The version endorsed by the Democratic leadership was defeated, 253-171. And the budget the AFL-CIO said would best fuel economic recovery and achieve tax justice lost on a 268-152 vote.

(Continued on Page 3)

Senate Moves to Increase U.S. Pressure on Poland

The Senate took a labor-urged step to put new economic pressure on the rulers of Poland to abandon repressive measures and to put political pressure on President Reagan to back up words with actions.

It adopted an amendment to an appropriations bill that seeks to stop the Administration from covering loan guarantees to firms and banks that have extended credit to Poland—unless the Polish government has first been declared in default of its financial obligations.

IN A LETTER to senators, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland said failure to declare Poland in default has sent a message to the Polish people that the United States "will continue to underwrite their rulers as they step up their brutal campaign against Solidarity," the suppressed trade union federation.

"Solidarity's leaders have urged stronger economic sanctions by the West as the most effective means of pressuring the junta to relax martial law and enter negotiations with the union movement," Kirkland noted.

He reminded the Senate that President Reagan had promised stronger economic sanctions if the Polish repression was not eased. But instead, the U.S. government has bailed out Poland's rulers.

The original wording of the amendment, co-sponsored by Senators Robert W. Kasten, Jr. (R-Wis.) and Daniel Patrick Moynihan (D-N.Y.) would have allowed a U.S. payment to cover the Polish debt without default only if the President certified to Congress that the payment "is in the national security interest."

IT WAS modified to allow the President to handle the certification requirement on a monthly basis rather than for each separate transaction. It passed by an 83-10 vote and will be considered in a House-Senate conference. The House has no such provision in its bill.

GRASS-ROOTS involvement by individual union members is the key to a louder voice on Capitol Hill if working people want to be heard in the battle to save valued programs now under attack by the Reagan Administration, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue told participants at the Paperworkers' legislative conference in Washington. At left is George H. O'Bea, UPIU vice president and political education director. Paperworkers' President Wayne E. Glenn is at right. The 500 delegates met with their home-state senators and representatives during the three days of sessions.

Donahue Calls on Workers To Speak Out to Congress

Working people must make themselves heard on Capitol Hill in "self-defense," AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue declared at the Paperworkers' legislative conference in Washington.

Involvement in the political and legislation process, Donahue said, is necessary as a defense "on the part of people whose right to a secure place in their own jobs and in their own communities is under ruthless attack from the policies of the Reagan Administration."

"IT'S YOUR job and mine and the job of every trade unionist to rally and organize a defense against that attack," he told the 500 local union officers attending the three-day meeting.

The conference included addresses by UPIU President Wayne Glenn and Sec.-Treas. Nicholas Vrataric and the union's legislative representatives as well as members of Congress. Two afternoons were open for visits with senators and representatives on Capitol Hill.

Other speakers included Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.), Rep. David Obey (D-Wis.), Sen. James Sasser (D-Tenn.), Sen. Howard Metzenbaum (D-Ohio), Rep. Marc Marks (R-Pa.), Sen. William Bradley (D-N.J.), Rep. Millicent Fenwick (R-N.J.), Sen. John Glenn (D-Ohio), Sen. Donald Riegle (D-Mich.), Sen. Robert Byrd (D-W.Va.) and Sen. George Mitchell (D-Me.).

DONAHUE observed that President Reagan and his supporters in Congress have been "mighty selective about what they choose to hear." They are deaf to the government's own statistics on massive unemployment, bankruptcies and plant closings, foreclosures on homes and farms, deteriorating public facilities and growing social problems, he charged.

"The Great Communicator in the White House is not only ignoring the facts, he is doing all he can to drown them out," Donahue contended.

Enormous tax windfalls to corporations and the rich are the President's answer to stimulating new investment and industries, Donahue observed. But industrial expansion is unlikely "when 30 percent of the industrial capacity that already exists is standing idle," and new ventures are in doubt "when you have to pay 18 or 20 percent interest to the bank before you can look for a nickel in profit," he told the conference participants.

SOME OF the Administration's supporters in Congress and the business community have become "disenchanted with lunacy," Donahue said, "but they find President Reagan as deaf to them as he is to workers."

Donahue cited a recent Washington Post/ABC News poll which found 43 percent of those surveyed agreeing that President Reagan "cares more about cutting taxes for the wealthy and eliminating social programs than he does about helping the nation's economy."

There is evidence in the voting records in Congress, he said, that the labor movement's message is getting through.

"NOW IS the time for Congress to enact an honest, realistic budget that meets America's needs, including anti-recession, job-creating programs and stimulation of the private sector," Donahue urged.

He called on the local union officers and political action committee leaders to encourage members to speak up on all issues that affect their jobs and their families.

Labor 'Shocked, Angered'

New Davis-Bacon Rules Gut Wage Protections

(Continued from Page 1)

His forecast was something of an understatement.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council, which was in session when the new regulations were announced, said the final version exceeds labor's "worst fears."

The Building & Construction Trades said the Administration is trying to use "massive unemployment in the construction industry as an excuse to lower workers' wages and destroy labor standards which have existed for 50 years."

Georgine said the regulations clearly flout the intent of the Davis-Bacon Act, and the department will pursue all legal options to challenge them.

THE CHAMBER of Commerce said it will urge Congress to make permanent changes in the Davis-Bacon Act "along the lines of the new regulations," presumably to forestall any legal challenge and block a future Administration from undoing the anti-union tilt.

Ironically, the first step toward revision of Davis-Bacon Act regulations was shaped in relative labor-management accord in the final months of the Carter Administration. These changes, which met some employer objections, were to have become final on Feb. 17, 1981.

But when President Reagan took office, he froze all pending regulaitons, and the Labor Dept. undertook its own review keyed to "cost-effectiveness" considerations.

The Executive Council's statement noted that the Labor Dept. promised at the time that the views of unions would be carefully considered. Instead, the original proposals were worsened, effectively destroying "any last vestige of protection" for workers, the council observed.

EMPLOYERS won their campaign to end the "30-percent rule" that set prevailing rates for each craft at the pay received by the largest number of such workers in a locality, provided that this included at least 30 percent of the workers surveyed.

Under the new rule, the 30-percent factor is raised to 50 percent. Otherwise, rates will be set on an average brought down by substandard open-shop employers.

Another change, which Georgine termed especially damaging, will ignore construction sites where Davis-Bacon rates are currently paid in surveying area wage rates.

THE LABOR Dept. also announced that it will no longer require employers to submit weekly payroll records to determine Davis-Bacon compliance. Instead, it will rely on self-certification by contractors that they have complied with the law.

A building trades statement noted that labor has shown its willingness to share in sacrifices needed to get the economy back to health and that the Administration had promised that workers would not have to shoulder the burden alone. It said the new Davis-Bacon regulations "betray that promise."

Article XX Sanctions Placed On Retail-Wholesale Union

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland has notified all affiliates that the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union has been found to be in non-compliance with the decision of an impartial umpire under the AFL-CIO's internal disputes procedures and is therefore subject to sanctions under the federation's constitution.

The finding was reached by a subcommittee of the AFL-CIO Executive Council consisting of Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue and Vice Presidents William H. Wynn and Frank Drozak.

THE FINDING, Kirkland said, followed the refusal of the RWDSU "to withdraw from a raid at the Connecticut Health Care Employees."

In his notification to affiliates, Kirkland said the union, effective May 13, 1982, would be subject to the following provisions of Section 15 of Article XX of the AFL-CIO Constitution:

"1. The non-complying affiliate shall not be entitled to file any complaint or appear in a complaining capacity in any proceeding under this article until such non-compliance is remedied or excused as provided in Section 16;

"2. The federation shall, upon request, supply every appropriate assistance and aid to any organization resisting the action determined to be violation of this article;

"3. The federation shall appropriately publicize the fact that the affiliate is not in compliance with the constitution;

"4. NO AFFILIATE shall support or render assistance to the action determined to be in violation of this article."

In addition to the RWDSU, the following unions are currently in non-compliance with an impartial umpire's decision: the International Typographical Union, the Graphic Arts International Union and the National Association of Broadcast Engineers & Technicians.

Schedule for June Listed By Labor Studies Center

Institutes on organizing and public sector negotiating and a special three-day Labor Song Exchange highlight June activities at the George Meany Center for Labor Studies, Silver Spring, Md. Four unions are using the campus for leadership training during the month, along with the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation and the American Institute for Free Labor Development. The schedule:

Organizing Techniques, June 13-18—A review of elements in a successful organizing campaign: the preliminary survey, in-plant committees, developing winning issues, making house calls and responding to employer attacks. Labor Board procedures will be explained.

Negotiating Techniques for Bargaining with State and Local Agencies, June 20-25—An opportunity for negotiators in public sector unions to sharpen their bargaining skills. Participants will bargain out an agreement in a typical public sector situation. The exercise will be videotaped.

Labor Song Exchange, June 14-16—How to be a song leader, write union songs for demonstrations and celebrations, perform before labor audiences, and plan and produce programs of labor songs. The exchange ends with a song fest in the campus theater, at 8 p.m. Wednesday, June 16.

Affiliates using the campus for their own leadership development programs are: Fire Fighters, June 1-4; Flight Attendants, June 7-10; Cement, Lime & Gypsum Workers, June 27-July 2; School Administrators, June 27-July 2.

The AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation will sponsor a round-table discussion for AFL-CIO field representatives on grass-roots lobbying, June 2-4.

The AIFLD's 103rd class, made up of 20 trade unionists from Brazil and 20 leaders of Carribbean unions, completes six weeks on campus June 11. Class 104, consisting of 40 trade union women from Latin America, will check in June 21.

Information on these and other labor studies programs may be obtained from Fred K. Hoehler, Jr., executive director, George Meany Center for Labor Studies, 10000 New Hampshire Ave., Silver Spring, Md. 20903. Telephone 301/431-6400.

3 Union Presidents Named To Maritime Advisory Panel

Three union presidents have been appointed to a new Maritime Advisory Committee created by the Dept. of Transportation.

The three union officials are Presidents Jesse M. Calhoon of the Marine Engineers, Thomas W. Gleason of the Longshoremen and Shannon J. Wall of the National Maritime Union. Other members represent shipping, shipbuilding, and transportation and financial companies.

Unions Fight Trade Deal on Subway Cars

The AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. and three of its affiliates plan to file an unfair practice complaint under the 1974 Trade Act to block the purchase of some $1 billion worth of subway equipment from Canada and Japan by the New York Metropolitan Transit Authority.

The complaint focuses on export financing subsidies given by the Canadian government to Bombardier Inc. of Montreal for a $685-million sale of 825 subway cars to MTA, and subsidies by the Japanese government on a $274.5 million sale of 325 subway cars from the Kawasaki Corp. to MTA.

THE UNIONS—the Machinists, Auto Workers, and Steelworkers—contend that the Budd Corp. in Troy, Mich., was the low bidder against both Kawasaki and Bombardier and lost the sales solely because of subsidized export credits, which they charge are illegal.

The job loss from the transfer of the subway car sales away from the United States is estimated by the unions at about 25,000. Remedies which the unions plan to seek would void the contracts with Bombardier and Kawasaki and give the work to the Budd Corp. and its workers and suppliers.

The IUD charges that the subway cars are being purchased abroad only because of heavily subsidized export financing from the Canadian and Japanese governments. Commercial rates of interest for long-term U.S. loans currently are 15 percent, while the Canadian government provided financing at only 9.7 percent and the Japanese government at 12.25 percent.

WINNING APPRENTICE Chris Combe of Sheet Metal Workers Local 312, Salt Lake City, shows off work that brought him first place among fourth year contestants in the national apprentice contest at Minneapolis. At right is Mike Cooper, training coordinator for the National Training Fund of the Sheet Metal Industry which sponsors the annual competition.

Irving Brown Named to Head Dept. of International Affairs

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland has announced the appointment of Irving Brown as director of the federation's Dept. of International Affairs succeeding Ernest S. Lee, whom Kirkland named Apr. 15 to be executive director of the George Meany Archives.

In taking his new post, Brown will continue to supervise the operation of the AFL-CIO European Office in Paris where he has been stationed since 1973.

James Baker, director of AFL-CIO Region VI based in San Francisco, will be assigned for a year in Paris as deputy European representative for the federation.

KIRKLAND SAID a major aim of Brown's assignment will be to develop appropriate coordination of the AFL-CIO's international programs, including the work of its institutes for Asia, Africa and Latin America, with the activities of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, headquartered in Brussels, Belgium. The AFL-CIO reaffiliated with the ICFTU, the worldwide organization of non-communist unions, in January of this year.

Born in New York on Nov. 20, 1911, and a graduate of New York University, Brown has devoted his life to the trade union movement. Following the footsteps of his father, a pioneer labor organizer, Brown spent his early career organizing in the automobile and metal industries.

He served as the labor representative on the War Production Board during World War II. In 1945, he became the European representative of the AFL and worked to build non-communist unions on the continent during the post-war, rebuilding years. After the AFL-CIO merger in 1955, Brown continued to serve the merged federation in Europe.

From 1962 to 1965, he was the ICFTU delegate to the United Nations in New York. He was the first director of the AFL-CIO's African-American Labor Center, which was formed to provide technical assistance to free trade unions in Africa.

IN 1973, Brown returned to Paris as the AFL-CIO representative to free European trade unions and international organizations. He is the U.S. Worker Delegate to the International Labor Organization.

Baker, born in Berkeley, Calif., on Sept. 23, 1953, joined the AFL-CIO staff as a field representative in November 1975. In January 1979, he was named director of Region VI, covering ten western states. Baker was a member of the Auto Workers, a Communications Workers representative and a staff member of the Oregon AFL-CIO before joining the field staff.

Judge Holds Firm Liable For Plant Closing Damages

Newark, N.J.—A federal judge has found the Singer Co. to be liable for damages to employees of its sewing machine factory in Elizabeth, N.J., for reneging on a promise to keep the plant open and make it more efficient in return for their union's concessions on worker benefits.

Judge Herbert J. Stern of the U.S. District Court said that while he lacked the power to order the company to halt the plant closing, scheduled by the end of 1982, "we will not permit a company in clear breach of its collective bargaining agreement to escape its responsibility to answer in damages.

"INSTEAD, the court will award plaintiffs monetary damages in an amount to be measured either by the value of the union 'givebacks,' which will be determined at trial," or by the $2 million Singer promised, but failed, to spend in restructuring the plant, whichever is greater.

Singer agreed to deposit $2 million with the court as a fund from which damages ultimately could be withdrawn. The court has appointed a receiver to invest the money pending the final outcome of the litigation.

Stern said Singer's promise during 1981 negotiations to modernize the plant and use its best efforts to keep it open fell short of an enforceable obligation not to close the facility, yet it was clear that the firm stood in breach of its obligations.

A SUIT to halt the plant closing was filed by employees and by Local 461 and District 3 of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. At its peak, the 100-year-old plant employed 10,000 workers. As recently as 1973, it employed 3,500, but by the time of contract negotiations in the spring of 1981, this number had shrunk to 598. There are now 400.

As part of the negotiated package signed on June 21, 1981, management also committed itself to devote "attention to the procurement of defense work compatible with the plant's machine shop capabilities" to keep the facility open. In exchange, the union gave up two floating paid holidays a year and two 10-minute rest breaks a day. It also agreed to a decrease from 10 to seven hours in the number of paid hours shop stewards could devote to union business.

At the conclusion of negotiations, Singer prepared a document in which it estimated the value of these "givebacks" as $1,853,000. Some five months after the signing of the contract, the company stopped all efforts to secure defense work and last February officially announced that it would close the plant this year.

SINGER ADMITTED in court that it breached the agreement, but took the position that it owed the workers nothing in damages because it would have been forced to close the plant in any event in light of an unprecedented decline in market demand. Stern rejected this position as untenable.

"It would be grossly unfair to permit a company, which admits that it breached a three-year collective bargaining agreement within months after it had been signed, to close this facility and walk away from these workers without paying one cent in damages," the judge said.

Boycott Ends Against New Galax Mirrors

Galax, Va. — The Furniture Workers have ended their boycott of products of New Galax Mirror Co. following the signing of a contract with the employer here.

The AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept. announced it has removed the glass and mirror manufacturer from the list of boycotts endorsed by the federation's executive council. The company had been on the list since November 1981.

The 65 workers at the plant voted for representation by Furniture Workers Local 253 in March 1981 and were forced to go on strike in September after the company refused to bargain and fired and harassed employees.

Ban on Formaldehyde Urged In Barber, Beauty Shops

The Food & Commercial Workers called on state governments to ban the use of formaldehyde in barber shops and beauty parlors for equipment sterilization.

The UFCW warned that the chemical can seriously jeopardize the health of barbers, beauticians and their customers. Formaldehyde has been labeled a "potential human carcinogen" on the basis of U.S. and international studies.

Mine Safety Coverage Put To Conferees

(Continued from Page 1)

duced by Sen. Sam Nunn (D-Ga.) that would crack down harder on union officials who take employer payoffs and on employers who bribe union officials.

PAYOFF OF more than $1,000 would be made a felony. Persons convicted of abusing their trusts would be immediately removed from office, subject to reinstatement with pay if the conviction is reversed on appeal. Persons convicted would be barred from union office or from corporate posts involving labor-management relations for a period of from five to 10 years.

At hearings last fall, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland suggested some changes in the original bill, but said tougher penalties against union officials who betray their trust would be in labor's "best interests."

- The Senate scheduled the Voting Rights Act as its first major business when it reconvenes June 8 after a weeklong recess.

THE HOUSE-PASSED bill came out of the Senate Judiciary Committee with its key provisions intact, and only a hard-core of opponents—too few to mount a successful filibuster—are expected to fight its passage.

- A more divisive civil rights battle is brewing in the House over a bill the Senate passed last year that would strip federal courts of authority to require busing of schoolchildren to overcome segregation. The bill has been bottled in the House Judiciary Committee, and proponents are seeking to force it to the floor through a discharge petition.

- Soon to come up in the Senate is the proposed constitutional amendment to compel a balanced federal budget unless three-fifths of the House and Senate vote otherwise. The AFL-CIO has termed the proposal wrong in principle and unworkable in practice.

House Goes Back For New Attempt To Draft Budget

(Continued from Page 1)

The same cross-currents that split the House more than two ways are tugging at the House Budget Committee, which is expected to bring to the floor a Democratic budget proposal, a Republican alternative —and possibly the original Reagan budget which the Senate unanimously rejected.

VOTES ON amendments to the various budget resolutions showed members opposed both to heavy cuts in popular social programs such as Medicare and to repeal of supply-side tax cuts for the wealthy that forced a choice between huge deficits and huge program cuts.

Congress can authorize programs and appropriate funds without a budget resolution. And the original concept of a first budget resolution was merely to set spending and revenue targets in general terms, with binding ceilings operative only through subsequent actions.

But last year, the Reagan Administration used the budget process to achieve what amounted to instant enactment of most of its legislative program. Congress not only set spending targets, but gave its legislative committees a firm deadline to change laws so as to cut back or abolish programs the Administration opposed.

THESE COMMITTEE actions were then combined into a single "reconciliation" bill that cleared the House and Senate before most members were even aware of its ingredients.

The reaction against the steamroller tactics and the falloff in White House influence has been a factor in the slowing of the budget process this year.

Gutting Davis-Bacon

IF TIMES are hard enough, someone can always be found to do a job for less pay.

This country had a taste of such dog-eat-dog competition for scraps of jobs in the Great Depression, and it nearly wrecked the economy. The bitter experience helped turn workers to strong unions and prompted government to enact minimum wage and prevailing wage laws.

Even today, the bare-bones minimum wage needs constant enforcement because there are still poor and desperate people looking for any work and employers willing to exploit them.

In a large segment of the construction industry, it will no longer be necessary to break the law in order to push down wage scales. In fact, the new Davis-Bacon Act rules announced by the Dept. of Labor will encourage such tactics. The non-union contractor who can take advantage of massive unemployment to get people to work for less now has government sanction to do so.

UNDER THE new rules, close to half the workforce can be made up of low-paid "helpers," a second-class job category that replaces both skilled journeymen and apprentices learning a trade. If that were not enough, contractors will apparently also be able to hire "helpers" to replace construction laborers—at less pay, of course.

In a memorandum to Vice President Bush, the Secretary of Labor predicted that the new Davis-Bacon rules would be "well-received" by employers. But he cautioned that labor may "react unfavorably." How right he was.

Keeping the Budget Score

THE HOUSE of Representatives has been having the most difficult time reaching agreement on a budget resolution, and that is understandable.

There is near-unanimous agreement that the budget submitted by President Reagan just won't do. Conservatives are shocked by its huge deficit, liberals and moderates by its inadequacies in terms of the nation's needs. And as the recession drags on, few still believe in the upside-down logic of supply-side economics.

By a regrettable 268-152 vote, the House has rejected the budget alternative that was most likely to propel the economy out of recession. It also was the budget option most likely to point the way to a balanced budget—through a combination of full employment and tax reforms.

SO, REALISTICALLY, there is little prospect that this Congress will take the bold steps that are needed. But there will still be choices, as the budget process moves to completion, as new legislation is shaped and appropriations voted.

In many cases, the choices will determine whether unemployment lines grow or shrink. In others, the choice will be equality of sacrifice—whether those with the least will suffer still further cuts in their standard of living and health care so that those with the most can preserve the huge tax breaks that Congress voted last year. It is by these decisions that members of Congress make the record on which they will be judged in November.

The labor movement will try to keep score.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

LANE KIRKLAND, President

THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward	Murray H. Finley
Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts	Sol C. Chaikin
Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco	Charles H. Pillard
J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride	David J. Fitzmaurice
Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps	Wm. W. Winpisinger
William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell	John DeConcini
Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss	William Konyha
Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney	Douglas A. Fraser
Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield	Barbara Hutchinson
Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto	Gerald W. McEntee

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman, James M. Shevis

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W. Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, June 5, 1982 No. 22

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

LABOR PRESS AFL-CIO CLC

Workers as Capitalists

Pension Funds Provide Bulk Of New Business Financing

By Gus Tyler

THIS YEAR, most of the capital to finance American business will not come from capitalists. It will come from pension funds for workers.

That is the essence of a report on how America will finance its economy. The facts and figures, as set forth in a recent issue of Business Week, give us a sense of living in a topsy-turvy world in which—to quote Gilbert and Sullivan—"things are seldom what they seem."

FIRST, CONSIDER the facts. In 1982, Business Week estimates, net new investments in corporate bonds and stocks and in commercial mortgages will come to $53.6 billion. Of this, $43 billion will come from pension funds made up of contributions from or on behalf of working people.

This means that a huge 81 percent of all net new investment will come from these reservoirs of money whose ultimate beneficiaries are workers.

The most startling statistic is the one that describes how corporations floating new issues—reaching out for fresh money to set up a facility, to expand or maintain an operation—will be financed. The expectation is that just about all the purchases of new issues, will come from pension funds.

INDIVIDUAL investors will actually end up as minus contributors toward the financing of corporate stock. Business Week estimates that such "individuals" will be withdrawing almost $20 billion while pension funds will be buying more than $21.1 billion.

When it comes to corporate bonds, the pension funds will be investing almost three and a half times as much as commercial banks, thrift banks, casualty companies, and life insurance companies put together, with $15 billion coming from the pension funds and only $4.6 billion from all the others.

It is expected that in the future pension funds will play an even greater role in financing the American economy. The reasons are double:

FIRST, PENSION funds are huge and getting huger. At the end of World War II, the assets of pension funds totaled $5 billion; now they are $800 billion and by 1995 will be $4 trillion.

Second, individual investors—the traditional "capitalists"—are moving their money out of long-term investments and putting their bets on short-term gambles.

What this really means is that the "capitalists" are speculating rather than investing in long-range productive enterprises and that "workers" (or the funds set aside on their behalf) are the true investors, shunning the short-term caper and putting their money into the development of the American economy.

THE IRONY in all this is that, under our tax law, the gamblers get all kinds of tax breaks so they can have more money with which to gamble. But the worker who puts money into a pension fund gets no break at all on his or her contribution, although it is this money—not the quick buck made by the speculator—that is providing the capital for new investments in the economy.

In other words, the capitalist is getting the breaks because he is expected to provide the "capital," which he is not, while workers are treated merely as workers although they are, in effect, the "capitalists."

Copyright 1982, Gus Tyler Columns

Labor Must Make Itself Heard on Hill

We need to make ourselves heard.

Congressmen and senators get a lot of calls from the White House, from corporate headquarters and from right-wing pressure organizations.

They need calls and letters and personal visits from their own constituents, who are the people most affected by the votes they cast.

In the House, 152 of our friends voted to adopt the Obey budget package . . . to ease suffering, rebuild public facilities and provide jobs and job training. Those 152 deserve our thanks and support, and our sober recognition that there are too few of them.

Keep those COPE voting scorecards and use them. If we're going to reward our friends and punish our enemies, we have to know who they are.

—AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue at legislative conference of the Paperworkers, May 28, 1982.

Executive Council Statement

Senate Approval of SALT Held Quickest Route to Arms Control

The following statement on Strategic Arms Control was adopted by the AFL-CIO Executive Council, May 27, 1982, Washington, D.C.

THE AFL-CIO SHARES the heightened concern of millions of Americans that the unchecked growth of nuclear arsenals poses a threat to civilization. This concern has been manifest in demonstrations, referenda, and the emergence of a variety of proposals for a "nuclear freeze" and other steps toward arms control.

The AFL-CIO joins with those who seek the end of the nuclear arms race through serious negotiations leading to mutual, balanced and verifiable strategic force reductions which both parties have a compelling interest in observing.

Unfortunately, public protests against nuclear weapons—especially when they pressure only the West—will not, by themselves, lead to our goal of drastically reducing the number of such weapons nor will they bring about a deterrence to their use.

THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL believes that the proposal it offered in 1979 provides a sound basis for moving toward reducing the threat of a nuclear holocaust. The council therefore urges that:

1. The Senate approve ratification of the SALT II Agreement, with such updating modifications as may be required by the delay in the ratification process, and with the stipulation that:

2. U.S. negotiators be directed, in SALT III (or START), to establish a time limit by which agreement must be reached on significant strategic force reductions, so as to ensure an early test of the seriousness of the negotiations and to avoid their protraction while the arms buildup continues;

3. Senate approval of SALT II stipulate that SALT III (or START) must limit warheads, which SALT II permits to increase dramatically in numbers and accuracy.

As the Council stated in 1979, the U.S. should insist on "the dismantling of warheads to a level of parity significantly (at least 30 percent) below the existing level of the higher party in each leg of the triad. . . . Once these limits are set, the basis will then exist for further annual across-the-board percentage reductions." This formula would broadly resolve the question of parity while simultaneously producing reductions.

IMMEDIATE ratification of SALT II, with the noted modifications, offers the most fruitful beginning toward strategic arms control and reduction. It has already been accepted by the Soviet Union; its terms are being observed by both sides; it has bipartisan support; it does not presuppose parity or prevent the development of any planned U.S. weapons systems; it would require the dismantling of hundreds of Soviet systems; it would reassure the American people and our allies that we are seriously intent on pushing nuclear arms control; and it would provide an interim measure of strategic stability and predictability during negotiations for deeper cuts.

The advocates of a nuclear freeze have made an important contribution in turning public attention to the danger of nuclear war and the urgency of taking steps to curb the arms race. They have performed a service by encouraging public debate and prodding the Administration to give arms control a higher priority on its agenda.

The AFL-CIO believes that our position takes a significant step beyond the proposals for an "immediate" freeze. Such proposals are necessarily tied to the complex and technical issue of parity and would perpetuate the existing theatre nuclear force imbalance in Europe. The SALT II treaty, still before the Senate, provides an immediate opportunity to move quickly toward the control and reduction of strategic arms.

THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL is under no illusion that the Soviet Union can be trusted to live up to any agreement—unless it is clearly in its interest to do so. It will agree to real arms reductions if it sees the alternative as an American buildup; we must not unilaterally remove that alternative.

It is in the Soviet interest to abide by agreements if violations on its part exact a heavy price. The Soviets have not had to pay a heavy price for their violations of the Helsinki Accord, their invasion of Afghanistan, and the crushing of Solidarity in Poland. Success in arms control requires a reassertion of Western will to use the strong non-military weapons at its disposal to enforce Soviet compliance.

Hitting Where It Hurts

Long-Term Unemployed Face Disaster as Benefits Run Out

CONGRESS AND the Administration are turn- their backs on millions of Americans who, because of recession-bred, record-high unemployment, have been cut off from the meager protection of an unemployment insurance system that even in the best of economic times is inadequate.

That view was expressed in a network radio interview by AFL-CIO social insurance specialist Arleen Gilliam, who said that because of budget slashes adopted last year at least 3.2 million workers who have searched without success for jobs for more than six months have no further unemployment compensation rights.

"We simply don't have what is necessary to keep these long-term jobless workers from facing total economic disaster," Gilliam said.

Worse still, she stressed, the traditional mechanisms that would have somewhat softened the impact of unemployment—food stamps, welfare, job training, public service employment and others —no longer exist or are severely restricted as the result of other budget reductions.

Gilliam, who is an assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, was questioned by reporters on Labor News Conference, aired weekly over the Mutual Broadcasting System.

She noted that the business community, as well as the working community, has a direct stake in making it possible for families to meet mortgage and rent payments, buy food and clothing and buy other necessary items during periods of temporary unemployment.

The countercyclical effects of unemployment insurance benefits, she emphasized, result in every dollar "turning over six or seven times in the community." She said that to overlook the important help the program means, especially to small businesses, is short-sighted.

GILLIAM REJECTED the contention that unemployment compensation payments are "a disincentive to work." She noted that in many states, maximum amounts are less than minimum wage income, and in higher-wage industrial states that pay higher benefits, the maximum amounts are far less than the statewide average weekly wage.

Average weekly benefits in the various states range anywhere from $72 a week to about $122 a week, she observed. In the current recession, these benefits do not begin to provide adequate replacement of income for higher wage earners who are being laid off, Gilliam added.

"Even in terms of maximum weekly benefit amounts, while there have been improvements over the years, those are still insufficient," she said.

Reporters questioning Gilliam on the AFL-CIO-produced public affairs program were Ben Rathbun of the Bureau of National Affairs and Robert Cooney of Press Associates, Inc.

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

EVERY YEAR, an estimated 14,000 workers die in industrial accidents, approximately 100,000 die from job diseases, and millions more are disabled.

These are real people, yet one wouldn't know it from the way the Reagan Administration is slashing workplace inspections and weakening standards. Thus it was a sobering reminder of reality when a few victims related their experiences before the recent AFL-CIO Conference on Occupational Safety & Health.

Barbara Angle, a member of United Mine Workers Local 1829, was a young West Virginia coal miner with a one-year-old child when she was assigned to drive a coal shuttle car—"an underground version of a Mack truck," she called it.

Weighing 18 tons unloaded, the huge shuttles often clear the walls of narrow mine tunnels by inches. Since the shuttles are not equipped with lights, miners have to lean out of the cars and use their helmet lamps to see ahead in the darkest parts of the tunnels.

On Apr. 19, 1978, Barbara missed the three-inch clearance on a turn and ran the shuttle into a mine rib. The shuttle overturned, trapping her underneath. The shuttle canopy crushed her right arm.

HER CO-WORKERS managed to lift the shuttle enough to get her out, but her arm was badly mangled and required extensive surgery to save it.

Her accident needn't have happened. Barbara said a visiting group of Welsh miners had been amazed that shuttles like the one she drove were still used in American mines. They had long ago been abandoned in Wales because of poor design.

Jimmy Good, business agent for Asbestos Workers Local 11 in Baltimore, couldn't appear before the conference. He had to return to the hospital, but he wrote out his story and his attorney read it to the delegates.

A few months after he became business agent, Jimmy was organizing the files when he came across a stack of death certificates for the local's members.

"I was amazed at how many workers had died of cancer or heart problems," he wrote.

Then he came across his father's death certificate. Like Jimmy, he worked most of his life with asbestos. The doctors had told Jimmy that his father died of heart failure at age 53. But the certificate said his father had died of mesothelioma, a rare cancer that is caused by exposure to asbestos.

JIMMY WAS convinced his co-workers were in danger. He arranged for X-ray screenings at an area hospital. Of the first 60 workers screened, 83 percent had an asbestos-related disorder.

Jimmy said he hadn't intended to take the X-ray because he felt "fine," but other members ribbed him about setting a good example.

So he had an X-ray and it revealed a large mass in his lungs. When the doctors told him it was cancer, "the words crushed me like a 10-ton ball. . . . It seemed like a death sentence," he said.

"I learned it was from exposure to asbestos," he wrote. "The manufacturers knew of the dangers for 40 years, but did nothing to prevent it. I am a victim of the corporation. It killed my father, many of my friends and maybe me."

His doctors think Jimmy's cancer is arrested, but he is still fighting for his life and the lives of other asbestos workers.

None of these tragedies need have occurred. They were preventable. But as Barbara Angle told the delegates, "Nobody's doing nothing—not the company, not the government."

MILLIONS OF JOBLESS Americans are cut off from the meager protection of unemployment compensation because their job search in this record-high unemployment period has stretched beyond the six-month limit intended for much better economic times and White House and Congress refuse to provide emergency help, AFL-CIO Assistant Social Security Director Arleen Gilliam said on Labor News Conference. She was questioned by Ben Rathbun, center, of the Bureau of National Affairs and Robert Cooney of Press Associates, Inc. The AFL-CIO-produced program is aired by Mutual Radio.

House Rollcalls on Key Budget Issues

These are the AFL-CIO's key votes on the budget resolutions considered by the House on May 27.

Column I shows the 268-152 defeat of the labor-supported budget proposed by Rep. David R. Obey (D-Wis.), which would have expanded job-creating programs and mandated tax reforms to hold down the deficit. Right votes (R) were cast by 144 Democrats and 8 Republicans. Wrong votes (W) against the measure came from 176 Republicans and 92 Democrats.

Column II is the 235-192 defeat of the labor-opposed budget introduced by Rep. Delbert Latta (R-Ohio) for the Republican leadership. It would have worsened the recession's hardships. Right votes against the Latta budget came from 215 Democrats and 20 Republicans. Voting wrong were 171 Republicans and 21 Democrats.

Numerals show congressional districts. A—absent; PR—paired right; PW—paired wrong; P—present but not voting or paired.

	I	II
ALABAMA
1. Edwards (R)	W	W
2. Dickinson (R)	W	W
3. Nichols (D)	W	W
4. Bevill (D)	W	R
5. Flippo (D)	W	R
6. Smith (R)	W	W
7. Shelby (D)	W	W
ALASKA
AL Young (R)	W	W
ARIZONA
1. Rhodes (R)	W	W
2. Udall (D)	R	R
3. Stump (D)	W	W
4. Rudd (R)	W	W
ARKANSAS
1. Alexander (D)	W	R
2. Bethune (R)	W	W
3. Hammerschmidt(R)	W	W
4. Anthony (D)	W	R
CALIFORNIA
1. Chappie (R)	W	W
2. Clausen (R)	W	W
3. Matsui (D)	R	R
4. Fazio (D)	R	R
5. Burton, John (D)	A	A
6. Burton, Phillip (D)	R	R
7. Miller (D)	W	R
8. Dellums (D)	R	R
9. Stark (D)	R	R
10. Edwards (D)	R	R
11. Lantos (D)	R	R
12. McCloskey (R)	A	W
13. Mineta (D)	R	R
14. Shumway (R)	W	W
15. Coelho (D)	R	R
16. Panetta (D)	R	R
17. Pashayan (R)	W	W
18. Thomas (R)	W	W
19. Lagomarsino (R)	W	W
20. Goldwater (R)	W	W
21. Fiedler (R)	A	W
22. Moorhead (R)	W	W
23. Beilenson (D)	R	R
24. Waxman (D)	R	R
25. Roybal (D)	R	R
26. Rousselot (R)	W	W
27. Dornan (R)	W	W
28. Dixon (D)	R	R
29. Hawkins (D)	R	R
30. Vacancy
31. Dymally (D)	R	R
32. Anderson (D)	W	R
33. Grisham (R)	W	W
34. Lungren (R)	W	W
35. Dreier (R)	W	W
36. Brown (D)	R	R
37. Lewis (R)	W	W
38. Patterson (D)	R	R
39. Dannemeyer (R)	W	R
40. Badham (R)	W	W
41. Lowery (R)	W	W
42. Hunter (R)	W	W
43. Burgener (R)	W	W
COLORADO
1. Schroeder (D)	R	R
2. Wirth (D)	W	R
3. Kogovsek (D)	W	R
4. Brown (R)	W	W
5. Kramer (R)	W	W
CONNECTICUT
1. Kennelly (D)	R	R
2. Gejdenson (D)	R	R
3. DeNardis (R)	W	R
4. McKinney (R)	W	R
5. Ratchford (D)	W	R
6. Moffett (D)	R	R
DELAWARE
AL Evans (R)	W	W
FLORIDA
1. Hutto (D)	W	W
2. Fuqua (D)	W	R
3. Bennett (D)	R	R
4. Chappell (D)	W	R
5. McCollum (R)	W	W
6. Young (R)	W	W
7. Gibbons (D)	W	R
8. Ireland (D)	W	W
9. Nelson (D)	W	R
10. Bafalis (R)	W	W
11. Mica (D)	W	R
12. Shaw (R)	W	W
13. Lehman (D)	R	R
14. Pepper (D)	R	R
15. Fascell (D)	R	R
GEORGIA
1. Ginn (D)	W	R
2. Hatcher (D)	W	R
3. Brinkley (D)	W	R
4. Levitas (D)	W	R
5. Fowler (D)	W	R
6. Gingrich (R)	W	W
7. McDonald (D)	W	R
8. Evans (D)	W	W
9. Jenkins (D)	W	R
10. Barnard (D)	W	R
HAWAII
1. Heftel (D)	R	R
2. Akaka (D)	R	R
IDAHO
1. Craig (R)	W	W
2. Hansen (R)	W	W
ILLINOIS
1. Washington (D)	R	R
2. Savage (D)	R	R
3. Russo (D)	W	R
4. Derwinski (R)	W	W
5. Fary (D)	R	R
6. Hyde (R)	A	W
7. Collins (D)	R	R
8. Rostenkowski (D)	W	R
9. Yates (D)	R	R
10. Porter (R)	W	W
11. Annunzio (D)	R	R
12. Crane, Philip (R)	W	W
13. McClory (R)	W	W
14. Erlenborn (R)	W	W
15. Corcoran (R)	W	W
16. Martin (R)	W	W
17. O'Brien (R)	W	W
18. Michel (R)	W	W
19. Railsback (R)	W	W
20. Findley (R)	W	W
21. Madigan (R)	W	W
22. Crane, Dan (R)	W	W
23. Price (D)	R	R
24. Simon (D)	R	R
INDIANA
1. Benjamin (D)	R	R
2. Fithian (D)	R	R
3. Hiler (R)	W	W
4. Coats (R)	W	W
5. Hillis (R)	W	W
6. Evans (D)	R	R
7. Myers (R)	W	W
8. Deckard (R)	W	W
9. Hamilton (D)	W	R
10. Sharp (D)	W	R
11. Jacobs (D)	R	R
IOWA
1. Leach (R)	W	R
2. Tauke (R)	W	W
3. Evans (R)	W	W
4. Smith (D)	W	R
5. Harkin (D)	R	R
6. Bedell (D)	R	R
KANSAS
1. Roberts (R)	W	W
2. Jeffries (R)	W	W
3. Winn (R)	W	W
4. Glickman (D)	W	R
5. Whittaker (R)	W	W
KENTUCKY
1. Hubbard (D)	W	R
2. Natcher (D)	W	R
3. Mazzoli (D)	W	R
4. Snyder (R)	W	R
5. Rogers (R)	W	W
6. Hopkins (R)	W	R
7. Perkins (D)	R	R
LOUISIANA
1. Livingston (R)	W	W
2. Boggs (D)	W	A
3. Tauzin (D)	W	W
4. Roemer (D)	W	W
5. Huckaby (D)	W	R
6. Moore (R)	W	W
7. Breaux (D)	W	W
8. Long (D)	W	R
MAINE
1. Emery (R)	W	W
2. Snowe (R)	W	W
MARYLAND
1. Dyson (D)	R	W
2. Long (D)	W	R
3. Mikulski (D)	R	R
4. Holt (R)	W	W
5. Hoyer (D)	R	R
6. Byron (D)	W	W
7. Mitchell (D)	R	R
8. Barnes (D)	R	R
MASSACHUSETTS
1. Conte (R)	W	W
2. Boland (D)	R	R
3. Early (D)	R	R
4. Frank (D)	R	R
5. Shannon (D)	R	R
6. Mavroules (D)	R	R
7. Markey (D)	R	R
8. O'Neill (D)	Speaker
9. Moakley (D)	R	R
10. Heckler (R)	R	R
11. Donnelly (D)	R	R
12. Studds (D)	R	R
MICHIGAN
1. Conyers (D)	R	R
2. Pursell (R)	W	W
3. Wolpe (D)	R	R
4. Siljander (R)	W	W
5. Sawyer (R)	W	W
6. Dunn (R)	W	R
7. Kildee (D)	R	R
8. Traxler (D)	R	R
9. Vander Jagt (R)	W	W
10. Albosta (D)	R	R
11. Davis (R)	W	R
12. Bonior (D)	R	R
13. Crockett (D)	R	A
14. Hertel (D)	R	R
15. Ford (D)	R	R
16. Dingell (D)	R	R
17. Brodhead (D)	R	R
18. Blanchard (D)	R	R
19. Broomfield (R)	W	W
MINNESOTA
1. Erdahl (R)	W	W
2. Hagedorn (R)	W	W
3. Frenzel (R)	W	W
4. Vento (D)	R	R
5. Sabo (D)	R	R
6. Weber (R)	W	W
7. Stangeland (R)	W	W
8. Oberstar (D)	R	R
MISSISSIPPI
1. Whitten (D)	W	R
2. Bowen (D)	R	R
3. Montgomery (D)	W	W
4. Dowdy (D)	R	R
5. Lott (R)	W	W
MISSOURI
1. Clay (D)	R	R
2. Young (D)	W	R
3. Gephardt (D)	W	R
4. Skelton (D)	W	R
5. Bolling (D)	R	R
6. Coleman (R)	W	W
7. Taylor (R)	W	W
8. Bailey (R)	W	W
9. Volkmer (D)	W	R
10. Emerson (R)	W	W
MONTANA
1. Williams (D)	R	R
2. Marlenee (R)	W	W
NEBRASKA
1. Bereuter (R)	W	W
2. Daub (R)	W	W
3. Smith (R)	W	W
NEVADA
AL Santini (D)	W	R
NEW HAMPSHIRE
1. D'Amours (D)	R	R
2. Gregg (R)	W	W
NEW JERSEY
1. Florio (D)	R	R
2. Hughes (D)	R	R
3. Howard (D)	R	R
4. Smith (R)	W	W
5. Fenwick (R)	A	W
6. Forsythe (R)	W	W
7. Roukema (R)	W	W
8. Roe (D)	R	R
9. Hollenbeck (R)	R	R
10. Rodino (D)	R	R
11. Minish (D)	R	R
12. Rinaldo (R)	R	R
13. Courter (R)	PW	W
14. Guarini (D)	R	R
15. Dwyer (D)	R	R
NEW MEXICO
1. Lujan (R)	W	W
2. Skeen (R)	W	W
NEW YORK
1. Carney (R)	W	W
2. Downey (D)	R	R
3. Carman (R)	W	W
4. Lent (R)	W	W
5. McGrath (R)	W	W
6. LeBoutillier (R)	W	W
7. Addabbo (D)	R	R
8. Rosenthal (D)	R	R
9. Ferraro (D)	R	R
10. Biaggi (D)	R	R
11. Scheuer (D)	R	R
12. Chisholm (D)	R	A
13. Solarz (D)	R	R
14. Richmond (D)	R	R
15. Zeferetti (D)	R	R
16. Schumer (D)	R	R
17. Molinari (R)	W	R
18. Green (R)	W	R
19. Rangel (D)	R	R
20. Weiss (D)	R	R
21. Garcia (D)	R	R
22. Bingham (D)	R	A
23. Peyser (D)	R	R
24. Ottinger (D)	R	R
25. Fish (R)	W	W
26. Gilman (R)	W	R
27. McHugh (D)	R	R
28. Stratton (D)	W	R
29. Solomon (R)	W	W
30. Martin (R)	W	W
31. Mitchell (R)	W	W
32. Wortley (R)	W	W
33. Lee (R)	W	W
34. Horton (R)	W	W
35. Conable (R)	W	W
36. LaFalce (D)	R	R
37. Nowak (D)	R	R
38. Kemp (R)	W	W
39. Lundine (D)	W	R
NORTH CAROLINA
1. Jones (D)	W	R
2. Fountain (D)	W	R
3. Whitley (D)	W	R
4. Andrews (D)	W	R
5. Neal (D)	A	R
6. Johnston (R)	W	W
7. Rose (D)	W	R
8. Hefner (D)	W	R
9. Martin (R)	W	W
10. Broyhill (R)	W	W
11. Hendon (R)	W	W
NORTH DAKOTA
AL Dorgan (D)	W	R
OHIO
1. Gradison (R)	W	W
2. Luken (D)	W	R
3. Hall (D)	W	R
4. Oxley (R)	W	W
5. Latta (R)	W	W
6. McEwen (R)	R	W
7. Brown (R)	A	W
8. Kindness (R)	W	W
9. Weber (R)	W	W
10. Miller (R)	W	W
11. Stanton (R)	A	W
12. Shamansky (D)	W	R
13. Pease (D)	R	R
14. Seiberling (D)	R	R
15. Wylie (R)	W	W
16. Regula (R)	W	W
17. Vacancy
18. Applegate (D)	R	R
19. Williams (R)	R	R
20. Oakar (D)	R	R
21. Stokes (D)	R	R
22. Eckart (D)	R	R
23. Mottl (D)	R	R
OKLAHOMA
1. Jones (D)	W	R
2. Synar (D)	W	R
3. Watkins (D)	W	R
4. McCurdy (D)	W	W
5. Edwards (R)	W	W
6. English (D)	W	R
OREGON
1. AuCoin (D)	R	R
2. Smith (R)	W	R
3. Wyden (D)	R	R
4. Weaver (D)	R	R
PENNSYLVANIA
1. Foglietta (D)	R	R
2. Gray (D)	R	R
3. Smith (D)	R	R
4. Dougherty (R)	W	R
5. Schulze (R)	W	W
6. Yatron (D)	R	R
7. Edgar (D)	R	R
8. Coyne, James (R)	W	W
9. Shuster (R)	W	W
10. McDade (R)	R	W
11. Nelligan (R)	W	W
12. Murtha (D)	R	R
13. Coughlin (R)	W	W
14. Coyne, William (D)	R	R
15. Ritter (R)	W	W
16. Walker (R)	W	W
17. Ertel (D)	R	R
18. Walgren (D)	R	R
19. Goodling (R)	W	W
20. Gaydos (D)	R	R
21. Bailey (D)	R	R
22. Murphy (D)	A	R
23. Clinger (R)	W	W
24. Marks (R)	W	R
25. Atkinson (R)	R	W
RHODE ISLAND
1. St Germain (D)	R	R
2. Schneider (R)	R	R
SOUTH CAROLINA
1. Hartnett (R)	W	W
2. Spence (R)	W	W
3. Derrick (D)	W	R
4. Campbell (R)	W	W
5. Holland (D)	W	R
6. Napier (R)	W	W
SOUTH DAKOTA
1. Daschle (D)	R	R
2. Roberts (R)	W	W
TENNESSEE
1. Quillen (R)	W	W
2. Duncan (R)	W	W
3. Bouquard (D)	W	R
4. Gore (D)	R	R
5. Boner (D)	W	R
6. Beard (R)	W	W
7. Jones (D)	W	R
8. Ford (D)	R	R
TEXAS
1. Hall, Sam (D)	W	W
2. Wilson (D)	W	R
3. Collins (R)	W	W
4. Hall, Ralph (D)	W	W
5. Mattox (D)	P	R
6. Gramm (D)	W	W
7. Archer (R)	W	W
8. Fields (R)	W	W
9. Brooks (D)	W	R
10. Pickle (D)	W	R
11. Leath (D)	W	W
12. Wright (D)	W	R
13. Hightower (D)	W	W
14. Patman (D)	W	R
15. de la Garza (D)	W	R
16. White (D)	W	W
17. Stenholm (D)	W	W
18. Leland (D)	R	R
19. Hance (D)	W	R
20. Gonzalez (D)	W	R
21. Loeffler (R)	W	W
22. Paul (R)	W	W
23. Kazen (D)	W	R
24. Frost (D)	R	R
UTAH
1. Hansen (R)	W	W
2. Marriott (R)	W	W
VERMONT
AL Jeffords (R)	W	R
VIRGINIA
1. Trible (R)	W	W
2. Whitehurst (R)	W	W
3. Bliley (R)	W	W
4. Daniel, Robert (R)	W	W
5. Daniel, Dan (D)	W	W
6. Butler (R)	W	W
7. Robinson (R)	W	W
8. Parris (R)	W	W
9. Wampler (R)	W	W
10. Wolf (R)	W	W
WASHINGTON
1. Pritchard (R)	W	W
2. Swift (D)	R	R
3. Bonker (D)	R	R
4. Morrison (R)	W	W
5. Foley (D)	W	R
6. Dicks (D)	R	R
7. Lowry (D)	R	R
WEST VIRGINIA
1. Mollohan (D)	R	R
2. Benedict (R)	W	W
3. Staton (R)	W	W
4. Rahall (D)	PR	R
WISCONSIN
1. Aspin (D)	R	R
2. Kastenmeier (D)	R	R
3. Gunderson (R)	W	W
4. Zablocki (D)	R	R
5. Reuss (D)	R	R
6. Petri (R)	W	W
7. Obey (D)	R	R
8. Roth (R)	W	W
9. Sensenbrenner (R)	W	W
WYOMING
AL Cheney (R)	W	W

UAW Suit Hits Closeout of Job Training

The Auto Workers filed suit in U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia to require Labor Sec. Raymond J. Donovan to provide training benefits for thousands of workers laid off as a result of the rising volume of imports.

The union contends that Donovan violated the Trade Act of 1974 when he determined that training for eligible participants may be denied if sufficient funds are not available.

THE UAW is seeking an injunction that would force Donovan to notify all state agencies processing applications for benefits under the Trade Act that availability of funds is not to be considered in determining whether to approve a workers' training program under the provisions of the law.

The union also seeks an order for resumption of benefits that were terminated as of last Oct. 1 and payment for training for workers who became eligible or would have become eligible for benefits after that date. The UAW estimated that some 15,000 of its members and thousands of workers in other industries would be affected by such an order.

The suit came just two days after Representatives Don J. Pease (D-Ohio) and Sam Gibbons (D-Fla.) introduced a bill in the House to make the government live up to its commitments to train workers who lost their jobs due to the impact of imports on their industry.

Denial of benefits for training, the UAW says, is the result of Donovan's instructions to cooperating state agencies last November that training should be approved if criteria under the law were satisfied and also if "sufficient funds allocated to pay the costs of such training are available."

ASIAN-AMERICAN FREE LABOR INSTITUTE annual meeting gets a report on 1981 developments in Asia and the Middle East and their impact on the institute's programs from AAFLI Executive Director Morris Paladino. AAFLI is an auxiliary of the AFL-CIO. Federation President Lane Kiirkland chaired the Washington meeting. Other board members present included AFL-CIO Vice Presidents J. C. Turner, John Lyons, and David J. Fitzmaurice.

Connecticut Labor Registers Gains in Worker Protections

Hartford, Conn. — The Connecticut AFL-CIO pushed through improvements in jobless benefits, workers' compensation coverage and new occupational health safeguards during the 1982 session of the state legislature which ended recently.

At the same time, labor succeeded in blocking attempts by the employers' lobby to reinstate a waiting week before the unemployed can start collecting benefits, State AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Betty L. Tianti reported.

THE LEGISLATURE'S action on the jobless benefits will raise the weekly maximum payment by $10 to $156 this July and to $168 in October 1983, with $12 annual increases continuing in subsequent years. Previously, maximum benefit increases were limited to $6 a week.

Tianti, who is also the state federation's legislative agent, said the change will add an estimated $3 million in unemployment payments during the next six months.

Connecticut also joined the growing list of states to enact a "right-to-know" law, which requires employers to inform workers about the contents and hazards of some 400 toxic substances they may encounter on the job. The governor signed the bill in late May.

The AFL-CIO initiated the state-level campaign for right-to-know laws after the Reagan Administration scrapped a federal toxic labeling standard proposed during the Carter Administration.

IMPROVEMENTS in workers' compensation include a boost in weekly minimum benefits and a requirement that employers continue health and life insurance for workers and their dependents during their disability.

In other action, the legislature barred investments in South Africa by the state employees pension fund to protest the country's human rights and worker violations, extended collective bargaining rights to part-time state employees and rejected labor-opposed changes in construction trades licensing boards. Also signed by Gov. O'Neill was a bill giving municipal employees the right to bargain over promotion procedures.

NLRB Adopts New Tactic on Union-Busting

(Continued from Page 1)

In a companion decision issued at the same time as the Conair ruling, all five members of the board declined to issue a bargaining order. The case involved United Supermarkets, Inc., a Texas chain with principal offices in Lubbock, and Retail Clerks Local 368.

In the Conair case, the board found that after ILGWU Local 222 launched its organizing campaign in April 1977, management undertook a campaign of employee intimidation in its efforts to defeat the union. It called meetings on numerous occasions, promising benefits to workers and threatening them with a loss of benefits if workers supported or sought assistance from the union. Top company officials also threatened to close the Edison plant and move production to a factory in Hong Kong in which Conair had an interest.

A STRIKE to protest unfair labor practices followed, and Conair fired all strikers and offered non-strikers increased benefits and improved working conditions. The firm conditioned the return of striking employees on their signing away of statutory self-organizational rights. Some strikers eventually were reinstated only to be treated as new hires with no seniority, then discharged later because of previous involvement in protected activities.

After more than five months, the union gave up the strike. As an NLRB representation election neared, Conair continued its unlawful conduct, implementing a profit-sharing plan for non-union workers only, engaging in coercive interrogation, soliciting grievances, and promising better conditions for deserting the union while again threatening to shut down the plant if Local 222 won.

Despite the employer's misconduct, about a third of the voters still cast ballots in the election favoring representation by the ILGWU, the NLRB majority observed.

IN THE ONE previous case where the facts were similar to the Conair case—a 1979 NLRB decision involving the United Dairy Farmers Cooperative Association—the board declined to issue a bargaining order because the union involved had failed to obtain a card majority.

Upon review, however, the 3rd Circuit Appeals Court remanded the case and directed the board to consider whether a bargaining order should be issued. The NLRB then found that United Dairy's behavior had "completely foreclosed the possibility of a fair election" and that even though the union had failed to demonstrate majority support, a bargaining order was justified.

Key Senate Votes on Budget Issues

The Senate on May 21 adopted an Administration-endorsed budget resolution that curtails domestic programs but leaves scheduled tax windfalls for the wealthy intact. Following are three key votes on amendments:

Vote No. 1 killed a labor-supported effort by Sen. Robert C. Byrd (D-W.Va.) to fund an additional 13 weeks of extended unemployment insurance for workers whose benefits have run out. It was tabled 52-42.

Vote No. 2 was in accord with labor's position. A 53-44 majority of the Senate stuck with a previous decision to continue full cost-of-living protection for retired railroad workers.

Vote No. 3, taken May 19, shows the 60-39 defeat of an attempt by Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan (D-N.Y.) to restore $2.6 billion in Medicare and Medicaid funds so that costs to patients would not rise.

In all three rollcalls, R shows "right" votes from labor's viewpoint, W shows "wrong" votes. PR is paired right; PW—paired wrong; A—absent and not paired.

	1	2	3
ALABAMA
Denton (R)	W	W	W
Heflin (D)	R	R	R
ALASKA
Murkowski (R)	W	W	W
Stevens (R)	W	W	W
ARIZONA
Goldwater (R)	W	W	W
DeConcini (D)	R	R	W
ARKANSAS
Bumpers (D)	R	R	R
Pryor (D)	R	R	R
CALIFORNIA
Cranston (D)	R	R	R
Hayakawa (R)	W	W	W
COLORADO
Hart (D)	R	R	R
Armstrong (R)	W	W	W
CONNECTICUT
Weicker (R)	R	R	R
Dodd (D)	R	R	R
DELAWARE
Roth (R)	W	R	W
Biden (D)	R	R	R
FLORIDA
Chiles (D)	W	R	R
Hawkins (R)	W	R	W
GEORGIA
Nunn (D)	R	R	W
Mattingly (R)	W	W	W
HAWAII
Inouye (D)	R	R	R
Matsunaga (D)	R	R	R
IDAHO
McClure (R)	W	W	W
Symms (R)	W	W	W
ILLINOIS
Percy (R)	W	W	W
Dixon (D)	R	R	R
INDIANA
Lugar (R)	W	W	W
Quayle (R)	W	W	W
IOWA
Jepsen (R)	W	W	W
Grassley (R)	W	W	W
KANSAS
Dole (R)	W	W	W
Kassebaum (R)	W	W	W
KENTUCKY
Huddleston (D)	PR	A	R
Ford (D)	R	R	R
LOUISIANA
Long (D)	W	R	R
Johnston (D)	PW	R	R
MAINE
Cohen (R)	W	W	W
Mitchell (D)	R	R	R
MARYLAND
Mathias (R)	W	R	W
Sarbanes (D)	R	R	R
MASSACHUSETTS
Kennedy (D)	R	R	R
Tsongas (D)	R	R	R
MICHIGAN
Riegle (D)	R	R	R
Levin (D)	R	R	R
MINNESOTA
Durenberger (R)	R	R	W
Boschwitz (R)	W	W	W
MISSISSIPPI
Stennis (D)	R	R	A
Cochran (R)	W	W	W
MISSOURI
Eagleton (D)	R	R	R
Danforth (R)	W	W	W
MONTANA
Melcher (D)	A	R	R
Baucus (D)	R	R	R
NEBRASKA
Zorinsky (D)	W	R	W
Exon (D)	W	R	W
NEVADA
Cannon (D)	R	R	R
Laxalt (R)	W	W	W
NEW HAMPSHIRE
Humphrey (R)	W	W	W
Rudman (R)	W	W	W
NEW JERSEY
Brady (R)	W	W	W
Bradley (D)	R	R	R
NEW MEXICO
Domenici (R)	W	W	W
Schmitt (R)	A	A	W
NEW YORK
Moynihan (D)	R	R	R
D'Amato (R)	W	W	W
NORTH CAROLINA
Helms (R)	W	W	W
East (R)	W	W	W
NORTH DAKOTA
Burdick (D)	R	R	R
Andrews (R)	W	R	W
OHIO
Glenn (D)	R	R	R
Metzenbaum (D)	R	R	R
OKLAHOMA
Boren (D)	PW	R	W
Nickles (R)	W	W	W
OREGON
Hatfield (R)	PR	A	W
Packwood (R)	R	W	W
PENNSYLVANIA
Heinz (R)	R	R	W
Specter (R)	R	R	W
RHODE ISLAND
Pell (D)	R	R	R
Chafee (R)	R	W	W
SOUTH CAROLINA
Thurmond (R)	W	W	W
Hollings (D)	R	R	R
SOUTH DAKOTA
Pressler (R)	W	R	W
Abdnor (R)	W	W	W
TENNESSEE
Baker (R)	W	W	W
Sasser (D)	R	R	R
TEXAS
Tower (R)	W	W	W
Bentsen (D)	W	R	R
UTAH
Garn (R)	W	W	W
Hatch (R)	W	W	W
VERMONT
Stafford (R)	W	W	W
Leahy (D)	R	R	R
VIRGINIA
Byrd (D)	W	W	W
Warner (R)	W	W	W
WASHINGTON
Jackson (D)	R	R	R
Gorton (R)	W	W	W
WEST VIRGINIA
Randolph (D)	R	R	R
Byrd (D)	R	R	R
WISCONSIN
Proxmire (D)	R	R	W
Kasten (R)	W	W	W
WYOMING
Wallop (R)	W	W	W
Simpson (R)	W	W	W

Firestone, Goodyear Tire Pacts Approved

Workers at Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. and Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. ratified new three-year agreements similar to the pattern settlement approved by B. F. Goodrich Co. employees last month.

The contracts with the Big Four tire firms cover some 42,000 workers. The pattern settlement does not provide general wage increases but does include a cost-of-living contract. It also improves benefits in areas such as pensions and life insurance.

Mismanagement Charged

Public Employees Ask Probe of Printing Office

By Susan Dunlop

The AFL-CIO Public Employee Dept. has called for a congressional investigation of what it called mismanagement of the Government Printing Office by Public Printer Danford L. Sawyer, Jr.

PED Executive Director John F. Leyden urged the hearings in a letter to Sen. Charles McC. Mathias, Jr. (R-Md.), chairman of the Joint Congressional Committee on Printing.

LEYDEN REFERRED to Sawyer's "recent media campaign of distortions and exaggerations concerning the 'overcompensation' of GPO employees" as "a smokescreen to hide his sad stewardship of the nation's oldest and best publishing house."

The committee should look into Sawyer's "poor performance" and his use of government equipment and funds "to mount a massive negative public relations effort directed against his own employees," Leyden urged.

The GPO handles printing for the executive and legislative branches of the federal government, including the Congressional Record, the President's Budget and many government documents, publications and pamphlets. Its budget is based on fees paid by other agencies for its services.

SAWYER, a Florida advertising executive appointed by President Reagan, has charged in press interviews, speeches and nationally distributed mailings that GPO's personnel costs are "outlandish" and "the highest in the western world," and he blamed union workers' wages for "financial losses."

After taking office, Sawyer announced a "furlough" system that would have substantially cut wages. Sawyer rebuffed a call by the 22 unions at the GPO for negotiations over the furloughs, and when the Joint Committee on Printing stepped in and voted to prohibit the furlough plan, Sawyer threatened to ignore the order.

The unions charge that the GPO is not in the red, but is in a similar financial position compared to previous years with the situation likely to improve as the normal annual cycle of government printing orders picks up.

WILLIAM BOARMAN, president of Columbia Typographical Union No. 101, stressed that union printers at the GPO are paid wages directly comparable to union wages in private sector firms.

Leyden pointed out that between 1976 and 1981, privately employed offset printers had annual wage increases of 10.3 percent while comparable workers at the GPO were receiving increases of only 6.5 percent.

Sawyer is correct in saying that the GPO's overhead costs are higher than the private printing industry, Leyden observed, but he said this is the result of "a top-heavy management structure" which Sawyer has aggravated "by hiring more highly-paid professionals to help coordinate his anti-labor PR and marketing activities and by increasing the number of highly paid GPO supergrades."

LEYDEN SAID Congress should prohibit Sawyer from instituting furloughs, reductions-in-force (RIFs) or any other major personnel changes until the Joint Committee on Printing has had time "to thoroughly investigate such actions."

The two-year contract at GPO expires June 18, and the unions at the facility rejected Sawyer's proposal for a flat 22-percent wage cut over three years.

In addition, Sawyer refused to negotiate on the furlough system. He told a meeting of an anti-union group that he thought the committee's prohibition of his plan "has no effect in the law."

IN HIS SPEECH to the Public Service Research Council, an anti-public employee group, Sawyer called for abolition of the Joint Committee on Printing and the concentration of all control over GPO in his hands.

Early this year, the committee overruled Sawyer's plan to close GPO bookstores outside Washington, but the government printing unions said Sawyer is trying to slash the GPO budget in other ways, including stepped-up "contracting-out" of work to private sector firms which could be done as economically, or cheaper, by the GPO.

Under the terms of the 1924 Kiess Act, which Sawyer wants repealed, GPO employees may bargain for wages unlike most other federal workers with the exception of postal employees.

THE GPO UNIONS have asked for a wage increase of 8.5 percent in the first year and 5 percent in the second plus an annual cost-of-living raise in December of each year, capped at 3 percent. Under the law, the negotiations, now at an impasse, have moved to the joint committee which has hired an arbitrator to conduct fact-finding hearings on which the committee will act.

In his letter to Congress, Leyden said an investigation was in order simply on the fact that GPO "was a perennial money-maker" until Sawyer's tenure, and that its operating funds were in the black prior to his taking office.

STRONG OPPOSITION to the re-election of Texaco's chairman to the board of directors of Manufacturers Hanover Corp. was voiced by AFL-CIO Regional Director Michael Mann at the bank's annual stockholders meeting in New York. Opposition to John K. McKinley's election was led by the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers, whose Local 4-23 has been on strike in Port Arthur, Tex., since January. A principal issue in the dispute is Texaco's demand that OCAW renounce a federal court ruling that found the company had illegally slashed lump-sum pension payments of retirees. OCAW contends that Texaco has short-changed pensions more than $50 million by the discounting practice.

High Court Denies Review Of Asbestos Victims' Case

The Supreme Court blocked attempts by workers seeking personal injury compensation as victims of asbestos disease in refusing to hear a constitutional challenge to New York state's statute of limitations.

The case involved several former Brooklyn Navy Yard workers or their survivors who sued Johns-Manville and several other asbestos firms for damages.

TWO NEW YORK courts denied their claims on the ground that they were not filed within the three-year limitation after their last exposure to asbestos. But it is not uncommon for asbestos diseases—lung cancer, mesothelioma and asbestosis—to go undetected for 20 years or more after exposure to the toxic mineral.

In another occupational health case, the high court asked the Justice Dept. to submit views on charges that American Cyanamid Co. required women workers to be sterilized in order to retain their jobs at a West Virginia plant.

The company is seeking review of a federal appeals court decision won by the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers.

IN THE asbestos case, lawyers for the workers argued that the victims were deprived of their constitutional rights by the court's denial of their claims.

Application of the three-year limitation for product liability cases is unreasonable when asbestos is involved, the attorneys insisted.

Citing the long latency period in the detection of the diseases, "thousands of New York asbestos workers exposed in the 1940s-'60s will attempt suit in future years," they told the justices. But the statute of limitations "will not permit them inside the courthouse door," the lawyers observed.

There are several thousand lawsuits pending across the country against manufacturers and suppliers of asbestos products.

THE AMERICAN Cyanamid case stems from a company policy instituted in 1977 that barred women workers who could bear children from jobs exposing them to certain toxic substances. Five women underwent sterilization to keep their jobs. Those who refused to be sterilized were transferred to lower-paying jobs and lost benefits.

In response to an OCAW complaint, the Occupational Safety & Health Administration cited the company for violating the federal job safety law. But the Occupational Safety & Health Review Commission dismissed the citation.

OCAW won a federal appeals court ruling to obtain a review of the dismissal, but the union delayed further action pending the company's request for a review by the Supreme Court. In asking the Justice Dept. for its views on the dispute, the justices did not indicate whether they would take up the review.

IN OTHER action, the court upheld the firing of 15 Teamster business agents by a newly elected local union president in Toledo, Ohio. The business agents, who had supported the incumbent ousted in the local's election, sought reinstatement in their jobs under provisions of federal labor law.

The justices ruled unanimously that the law, while protecting union members from retaliatory discipline related to union election campaigns, does not protect union staff members.

Economic Signals Weak, Slump in Housing Deepens

A government measure designed to show the trend of future economic performance rose in April for the first time in a year, but analysts cautioned that the increase does not signal an end to the Reagan Recession.

The increase of eight-tenths of 1 percent in the Commerce Dept.'s index of leading economic indicators "is far from a harbinger that the recession is over," AFL-CIO Research Director Rudy Oswald warned. "Some of the indicators that were positive in April have since turned negative—stock prices, for example."

ONLY FIVE of the 10 indicators that make up the monthly index showed an increase in April. Besides stock prices, they were the length of the average workweek, building permits, the money supply, and change in liquid assets.

Four others declined—new orders for consumer goods, crude material prices, plant and equipment orders, and the number of companies receiving slower deliveries from vendors. Initial claims for state unemployment benefits were unchanged.

Commerce Sec. Malcolm Baldrige welcomed the April rise in the index, but noted that most of the strength was in the financial indicators, with little improvement in basic sectors. On the basis of the April report, he said, it would be "premature to draw any firm conclusions about the timing of a business upturn."

OSWALD pointed out that even though Citibank of New York dropped its prime lending rate to 16 percent from 16.5 percent recently—the first lowering of the key rate by a major bank since March—other big banks failed to follow suit. The rate is that which the banks charge their best corporate customers.

"Continued high interest rates have not relaxed their stranglehold on the economy," he said. "High levels of unemployment and the growing number of exhaustees of unemployment insurance benefits offer dramatic evidence of the toll that the recession continues to exact."

Industry analysts blamed high mortgage rates and high prices for a 15.3-percent plunge in sales of new houses in April. There were an estimated 30,000 new homes sold during the month, the lowest rate since the government began gathering single-family home sales data in 1963, the Commerce Dept. said.

EARLIER, the department reported that construction spending fell another six-tenths of 1 percent in April. At the same time, an industry group reported a record number of homeowners—about 100,000—were forced into foreclosure in the first three months of the year, unable either to keep up large monthly payments or sell their houses to avoid a forced sale.

The Mortgage Bankers Association said the foreclosure trend appeared to worsen during the current quarter. Those parts of the country with the highest jobless rates are showing the highest foreclosure rates, the association noted.

Mark Riedy, executive vice president of the bankers' group, said that most of the foreclosures appeared to be linked to expensive, high-interest mortgage loans of the past few years. He blamed the poor housing market for preventing homeowners in financial trouble from selling their houses before foreclosure.

6/5/82

Correspondence about address corrections should be sent with attached mailing label to: Subscriptions, Room 209, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XXVII | Saturday, June 12, 1982 | No. 23

Widening Slump Sends Jobless Rate Up to 9.5%

Policy Shift Demanded By Kirkland

By James M. Shevis

The nation's steadily rising unemployment rate, up another tenth of 1 percent to 9.5 percent last month, "demonstrates forcefully the need for public policies to provide job opportunities," the AFL-CIO declared.

Federation President Lane Kirkland renewed organized labor's demands for more public-service jobs, aid to the housing and auto industries, and extended benefits for the long-term jobless as unemployment moved to a new post-Depression high in May.

HE ALSO called on President Reagan, the Federal Reserve Board, and Congress to use their credit allocation authority to lower interest rates for productive investments. High interest rates resulting from the Fed's Administration-supported tight-money policies have been largely responsible for the Regan Recession, now nearly a year old.

"Without such actions, the recession will continue to worsen month after month, with high unemployment and more lost output," Kirkland said.

The number of Americans looking for work but unable to find it rose last month to 10.5 million, adjusted for seasonal factors, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported. At 9.5 percent, the jobless rate was the highest since the United States entered World War II. Unemployment averaged 9.9 percent for all of 1941.

THE JOBLESS rate was 7.4 percent when Reagan took office in January 1981. Since July 1981, when the current recession got under way, some 2.7 million

(Continued on Page 3)

SAMUEL GOMPERS PAPERS microfilm edition is examined by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue while President Lane Kirkland leafs through a guide to the edition. The project's editor and sponsors presented the 144-reel microfilm edition to the AFL-CIO June 4. With Kirkland and Donahue are, left to right, Stuart Kaufman, editor of the papers; W. E. Kirwan, vice chancellor at the University of Maryland; George Vogt of the National Historic Publications & Records Commission, and George Farr, assistant research director of the National Endowment for the Humanities. (Story, Page 7.)

Aid to Needy Cut Deeply in House Budget

By David L. Perlman

The House adopted a budget that demands new sacrifices from the needy but preserves virtually intact the generous tax windfalls Congress has voted for the wealthy.

As happened in last year's budget fight, Republicans broke the Democratic majority in the House with the help of the self-described "boll weevils"—conservative Democrats who have aligned themselves with the Reagan Administration.

The conservative coalition victory came on a 220-207 vote.

JUST MOMENTS before, the House had defeated the Democratic budget plan, which the AFL-CIO had endorsed as "the clearly superior alternative." It included $3 billion for job-generating programs to help the nation out of recession. It would have averted a threatened cutoff of extended unemployment benefits in 25 states. And it would have taken at least a step toward tax reform to raise revenues and avoid deep new cuts in Medicaid, family assistance, food stamps and Medicare.

The Democratic plan was defeated, 225-202.

On the first key vote, 39 Democrats voted against their party's position and three Republicans crossed over to support the Democratic budget plan.

THE REPUBLICAN substitute, which was then adopted by the 220-207 margin, drew 46 Democratic votes. But 15 Republicans voted against it. In a comparable situation a year ago, the conservative coalition mustered a 253-176 margin for the Reagan-endorsed budget. At that time, Republican ranks were unbroken and 63 Democrats joined them.

Ironically, the Republican budget adopted by the House was harsher on most social programs than the version rejected two weeks earlier. That was the result of the contradictory "compromises" GOP leaders made in an attempt to win votes. To gain the support of some so-called "moderate" Republicans, the second version restored part of the heavy slashes originally scheduled for Medicare. Instead of slashing $23 billion over three years, the budget resolution would only cut $11.5 billion.

BUT THE restored funds were more than recouped by slashing Medicaid and other programs for the poor deeper than the earlier plan.

This was done to keep Republican right-wingers—who wanted the deficit cut without significant tax increases—from bolting.

Both the Democratic and Republican budgets allowed for an additional 13 weeks of extended unemployment insurance payments in recognition of the fact that the job outlook has worsened while benefits for hundreds of thousands of unemployed are on the verge of running out.

There was one big difference. The Democratic bill anticipated revoking a change

(Continued on Page 3)

ILO Warns Polish Junta To Restore Union Rights

Geneva—The International Labor Organization has warned the Polish military dictatorship that its continued persecution of the banned Solidarity free trade union will only plunge Poland deeper into chaos.

The Soviet Union was isolated as the ILO's Governing Body approved, 45-3, the demand of its Freedom of Association Committee that the Polish government open "real and frank discussions" with the interned trade unionists.

Such discussions are "vital for the return to a normal situation," the committee said after receiving a report describing Poland as being at a "serious impasse" that would not be resolved without a "return to normal trade union activity."

ONLY TWO communist delegates went along with Soviet government representative Dmitri Kolesnik in the show-of-hands vote which he demanded on the committee's findings.

These were largely based on the report of Nicolas Valticos, a highly respected retired ILO official, after a six-day visit the Polish government permitted him to make on behalf of ILO Director Gen. Francis Blanchard.

Valticos has confided privately to several associates that only after he threatened to cut short his visit and return to Geneva without completing his mission was he given authorization to meet with Lech Walesa, the interned Solidarity leader, for two hours on May 4.

WALESA WAS said in the Valticos report to have complained that he had had "no serious meetings with members of the government for two months."

During the conversation Walesa made clear that Solidarity was ready to cooperate with the government in an effort to overcome the nation's economic plight. "Independence was the essential thing for the trade unions, all the rest was negotiable," he was said to have explained.

Leading off on behalf of the worker delegates in the Governing Body's discus-

(Continued on Page 8)

Congress Prodded to Act On Job Needs, Tax Reform

The AFL-CIO prodded Congress to use the powers of government to put people back to work and end the "economic and social waste" caused by recession and high unemployment.

It's time to turn away from the Reagan Administration's disastrous economic blueprint, AFL-CIO Economist Markley Roberts told a House Banking subcommittee that had invited labor's views on the nation's slumping economy.

"NOW IS THE time for Congress to enact an honest, realistic federal budget that meets America's needs," he urged. It should include job-creating programs plus "tax reform that moves the nation closer to tax justice and closer to adequate tax revenue."

The "social and economic deficit" Congress should be most worried about stems from "too few jobs, too little housing, too few public services and public facilities," Roberts insisted. It results from "too little use of this nation's vast public and private resources to add to the nation's wealth and welfare."

Typical of the Administration's blindness and callousness, Roberts said, is the reduction in unemployment benefits and elimination of job training programs just as "more and more workers are being thrown out into the streets."

ROBERTS URGED early House action on the emergency jobs program sponsored by Rep. Augustus F. Hawkins (D-Calif.)

(Continued on Page 8)

Labor Protests Move to Scuttle Safety Standards

By John R. Oravec

The AFL-CIO will strongly oppose the Reagan Administration's plan to revoke 194 general industry safety and health standards and to lift record-keeping requirements on workplace injuries and illnesses for nearly a half-million employers.

Federation Safety Director George H. R. Taylor said formal protests will be lodged with the Occupational Safety & Health Administration over the continuing campaign to weaken worker protections.

ASSISTANT LABOR Sec. Thorne G. Auchter initiated action to void the nearly 200 consensus standards, contending that they are unenforceable because they contain the word "should" rather than "shall."

Instead of voiding the standards, Taylor said, OSHA could strengthen workplace safety by making the regulations manda-

(Continued on Page 7)

Primaries Shape Lineup for November Ballots

California Democrats picked two proven vote-getters to head their party's ticket in November, New Jersey Republicans rejected a right-wing ideologue's bid for the Senate, and Ohio Democrats denied renomination to a congressman who last year cast key votes for Reagan Administration cutbacks.

But for the most part, incumbents of both parties seeking renomination were easy winners in the nine states that held primaries on June 8, and in a string of primaries held in recent weeks.

An obvious exception was in cases where redistricting forced incumbents of the same party into head-to-head competition. That happened to two sets of Democrats in Pennsylvania, where a Republican legislature drew the congressional district lines, and to a pair of Republicans in California, where Democrats drew up the new districts.

These are some of the primary contests that attracted national interest:

CALIFORNIA — The top-of-the-ticket primary battle was on the Republican side but the best-known candidates are the Democratic winners. Running for the Senate is two-term Gov. Edmund G. Brown, Jr., who won the Democratic nomination by beating writer Gore Vidal among others. He will face San Diego Mayor Pete Wilson, who led a Republican field that included three House members—Paul N. McCloskey, Jr., Barry M. Goldwater, Jr., and Robert K. Dornan—and Maureen Reagan, the President's daughter.

For governor, Los Angeles Mayor Thomas Bradley was the easy Democratic winner and may become the nation's first black governor. A heated Republican primary was won by state Atty. Gen. George Deukmejian.

In California's battle of two incumbent Republican congressmen, the winner was David Dreier whose COPE record in the first session of Congress was 0 right and 15 wrong. He beat Wayne Grisham, who had 1 right, 14 wrong votes by labor's standards.

There was considerable interest and some confusion in the 30th Congressional District, which had been represented by Democrat George E. Danielson until he resigned this year to take a judgeship appointment.

There was a special election to fill the balance of Danielson's term under a procedure in which all candidates would run and if no one received a majority, a runoff would be held between the top Democrat and the top Republican. COPE-Backed Democrat Matthew G. Martinez led the field and will face Republican Ralph Ramirez in the July 13 runoff.

But the district lines will be changed for the new Congress, so Martinez also sought and won the Democratic nomination in the new 30th District. And there, the Republican candidate in November will be incumbent John H. Rousselot, who is on the far-right fringe of his party. Rousselot would have faced another Republican incumbent as a result of redistricting, so he shifted his candidacy to the open 30th District.

NEW JERSEY—National media attention was on the Republican Senate contest and on Millicent Fenwick, the 72-year-old veteran of four House terms who won it. She beat Jeffrey Bell, a 38-year-old Reagan ideologue. Four years ago, Bell ousted liberal Sen. Clifford P. Case, in the GOP primary, but was soundly beaten in the general election.

In a crowded Democratic field, the Senate nomination went to Frank R. Lautenberg, a party-fund raiser who used television to effectively boost his name recognition.

Among House races, there was special interest in the Trenton area 4th District seat that had long been held by Democrat Frank Thompson, Jr. After Thompson's Abscam indictment in 1980, Republican Christopher H. Smith was the unexpected winner. COPE-backed Joseph P. Merlino, a former state senate president, won the Democratic primary and will try to take back the seat.

OHIO—Incumbent Howard M. Metzenbaum was an easy winner in the Democratic Senate primary. His opponent will be a Republican legislator, Paul E. Pfeifer, who had been given little chance until the death in April of Rep. John M. Ashbrook, the clear favorite.

In the governor's race, former Lt. Gov. Richard F. Celeste won the Democratic nomination and nine-term Congressman Clarence J. Brown is the Republican nominee. Incumbent Gov. James A. Rhodes, a Republican, is ineligible to succeed himself.

There was national interest in the successful, labor-backed effort to defeat four-term Congressman Ron Mottl in the Democratic primary in a suburban area near Cleveland.

Mottl had embraced Reaganomics and was Reagan's staunchest Democratic supporter last year, although some of his recent votes swung back to the Democratic center. He was defeated in a close vote by Edward F. Feighan, who had COPE endorsement.

While Mottl got Democratic Party campaign money in the primary as an incumbent, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr., said the outcome "sends a message to other Democrats" that support of Reaganomics can be politically costly.

IOWA—After five terms, Republican Robert Ray is not seeking re-election as governor, and Democrats see a chance for a pickup. Their candidate is COPE-backed Roxanne Collins, a former U.S. attorney. Lt. Gov. Terry Branstad is the GOP candidate.

In the 3rd District, Democrat Lynn G. Cutler will try to regain the House seat she narrowly lost two years ago to Republican Cooper Evans. Redistricting and the sagging economy should help her.

SOUTH CAROLINA — Incumbent Democratic Gov. Richard Riley will face Republican William D. Workman, Jr., a retired newspaper editor, in November. Runoffs will be necessary to pick Democratic candidates in three of the state's six congressional districts.

VIRGINIA — Most candidates were chosen by party conventions, but a primary in Virginia's 10th Congressional District brought victory to labor-endorsed Ira Lechner over more conservative opponents. He will try to oust Republican Frank R. Wolf, who is seeking a second term.

In state conventions, Democrats turned to Lt. Gov. Richard J. Davis to run for the Senate, and Republicans picked Paul S. Trible, a congressman with a 13 right, 83 wrong COPE record. Sen. Harry F. Byrd, Jr., the conservative incumbent who had been elected as an independent but caucused with the Senate Democrats, announced that he was sticking to his decision not to seek re-election.

MONTANA — Incumbent Sen. John Melcher won more easily than anticipated in the Democratic primary. Republicans nominated Larry Williams, who ran unsuccessfully in a 1978 race for the state's other Senate seat.

ARKANSAS—Former Gov. Bill Clinton, who had COPE support in a runoff for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, will face incumbent Republican Gov. Frank D. White in November. White narrowly beat Clinton two years ago.

MAINE—Incumbent Sen. George J. Mitchell was unopposed in the Democratic primary and will face Rep. David F. Emery in November.

Democrat Joseph E. Brennan will seek a second term as governor, facing Republican Charles L. Cragin.

PENNSYLVANIA — Redistricting squeezed four Democratic incumbents with similar voting records into two congressional districts.

In the battle of incumbents, Thomas M. Foglietta edged out Joseph F. Smith in the Philadelphia 1st District. And in western Pennsylvania, John P. Murtha defeated Don Bailey for the 17th District nomination.

Two districts without incumbents seeking re-election are rated marginal in the November election. In the Harrisburg area 17th District, incumbent Allen E. Ertel sought and won the Democratic gubernatorial nomination. He will face incumbent Gov. Richard L. Thornburgh, who was unopposed in the GOP primary. In the 21st District, which includes Erie, Republican Marc L. Marks is stepping down for health reasons. Earlier this year, he broke with the Reagan Administration and apologized to his jobless constituents for having voted for the Administration's recession-breeding economic program.

Labor-backed Democrats were nominated in both districts—Larry J. Hochendoner in the 17th and State Sen. Anthony Andrezeski in the 21st.

In the Senate contest, Republican John Heinz, who has had labor support, was unopposed in his party's primary. Democrats nominated Allegheny County Commissioner Cyril H. Wecht.

NEW MEXICO—Right-wing Republican Harrison Schmitt is seeking a second term in the Senate. His Democratic opponent will be COPE-endorsed Jeff Bingaman, the state attorney general who defeated former Gov. Jerry Apodaca in the primary.

Incumbent Democratic Gov. Bruce King is ineligible to succeed himself. Labor-backed Toney Anaya won the Democratic gubernatorial primary and will face a conservative Republican, John Irick, in November.

The two incumbent congressmen, both Republicans, won renomination. Democrats have high hopes of winning in the new 3rd District, which includes Hispanic and Indian areas as well as the city of Sante Fe. Bill Richardson, former executive director of the state Democratic Party, won the primary.

OREGON — Democrats nominated COPE-backed Ted Kulongoski to run for governor against incumbent Republican Victor L. Atiyeh.

All four incumbent congressmen were renominated. But the lone Republican in the group, Denny Smith, chose to seek re-election in the newly-created 5th District. That left his 2nd District seat open and Democrats hope to take it with Larryann Willis, a Democratic national committeewoman, who had labor endorsement.

CLC Condemns Wage Control Moves

Winnipeg, Man.—The 14th convention of the Canadian Labor Congress expressed strong opposition to government-imposed wage controls and union "give-backs" in collective bargaining.

In a toughly worded statement adopted nearly unanimously by the 2,500 delegates, the CLC warned that "in one fell swoop, workers and their trade unions will be hurled back into the 30s" if they agree to wage and benefit concessions.

RESPONDING to various proposals for wage controls by federal and provincial governments, the delegates warned in another resolution that "the trade union movement will not accept that workers be made the scapegoats for disastrous government economic policies that are the real cause of inflation and high unemployment."

The resolution mandated the CLC "to mobilize maximum opposition" to controls "up to and including, after consultation with affiliated unions and provincial federations, a general strike."

Solidarity between public and private sector unions was a watchword of the convention, with the passage of resolutions urging protection of the right to strike and supporting public employee unions in the province of Quebec, where a moratorium on previously negotiated wage increases has been legislated. Delegates also demanded the resignation of the top government negotiator, who has said that public sector wages are too high and should be rolled back.

CLC PRESIDENT Dennis McDermott, who was re-elected by acclamation to another two-year term, charged in his keynote address that wage and benefit concessions are "systematic blackmail of workers." He warned legislators and right-wing economists that the Canadian labor movement "is going to fight back."

"If we thought for one moment that making concessions would help to rejuvenate this economy, we would be prepared to recommend it," McDermott said. "If we thought that further sacrifice on our part would materially assist in our economic salvation, we wouldn't hesitate to advocate it.

AFL-CIO Vice President Murray Finley, who was the federation's fraternal delegate to the convention, told the delegates that the U.S. economy "is very sick indeed," observing that "those in government authority show no sign of taking positive action to improve it or even to prevent it from getting worse."

Finley, who is president of the Clothing & Textile Workers, pointed to the link between the U.S. and Canadian economies, which he noted is so close that "when one is hurt, the other feels almost instant pain."

CANADIAN AND American union members, as well as all the world's workers, "share the same problems, just as they share the same goals," Finley said, adding that "the close ties of mutual concern that exist between the CLC and the AFL-CIO are an excellent foundation on which to build closer cooperation among the trade union movements of the world."

National and international organizations of workers must have a voice in solving such international problems as energy and food shortages, trade barriers and the effects of technological change, Finley declared.

The convention reaffirmed Canadian labor's support for the New Democratic Party after NDP Leader Ed Broadbent received a standing ovation from delegates and observers.

Broadbent told the delegates the Canadian government should adopt an economic policy aimed at lowering interest rates and rebuilding the devastated Canadian manufacturing industry.

RE-ELECTED BY the delegates, in addition to McDermott, were Executive Vice President Shirley Carr and Sec.-Treas. Don Montgomery. Richard Mercier of the Food & Commercial Workers was elected to succeed retiring Executive Vice President Julien Major.

The six vice presidents, elected to new terms are Gerard Docquier of the Steelworkers, W. C. Y. McGregor of the Railway & Airline Clerks, Huguette Plamondon of the Food & Commercial Workers, Grace Hartmen of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, Jack Munro of the Woodworkers and Bob White of the Auto Workers.

The ten vice presidents at-large elected by the delegates are James Buchanan of the Canadian Paperworkers Union, Sam Fox of the Clothing & Textile Workers, John Fryer of the National Union of Provincial Government Employees, Jean Lavalee of the Quebec Federation of Labour construction department, Jean-Claude Parrot of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, Dave Patterson of the Steelworkers, Fred Pomeroy of the Communication Workers of Canada, Neil Reimer of the Energy & Chemical Workers Union, Mike Rygus of the Machinists, and Pierre Samson of the Public Service Alliance.

Ben Segal Dies at 66, Former Labor Educator

Ben D. Segal, a former union education and international affairs specialist who has been a wage-hour analyst with the Labor Dept. since 1978, died June 4 after a heart attack. He was 66.

Segal headed the education and international affairs department of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers during the 1950s and had been on the education staff of the Textile Workers Union of America in the 1940s. He also had served as associate education director of the CIO.

Survivors include his wife Elizabeth and three daughters. A memorial service was held June 11 at the Friends Meeting House in Washington.

To Bolster Organizing

Distillery Workers Vote Boost in Per Capita Tax

Montreal—Confronted by the reality of a 5,000-member loss during the past five years, the Distillery, Wine & Allied Workers' 21st biennial convention unanimously approved a $1 increase in the monthly per capita payments as part of a program that gives top priority to organizing.

The per capita boost, which brings the total to $3.45 a month, involves two adjustments of 50 cents each, effective Sept. 1, 1982, and Sept. 1, 1983. Minimum local union dues were similarly increased, from $10 to $12 monthly, effective June 1, 1982.

OTHER CONSTITUTIONAL changes overwhelmingly approved by the 150 delegates were an increase in strike fund benefits from $35 to $49 weekly, effective June 1, 1982, and the extension of the period between conventions from two to four years, following the 1984 convention scheduled for Miami Beach, Fla.

The latter provision was coupled with a proviso that each of the five regions would hold educational conferences annually to orient local union officers and shop stewards on their responsibilities. Also approved was a slight increase in the separate per capita used for funding the staff pension plan.

The erosion of DWU membership was attributed by President George J. Oneto to the shifting tastes of American consumers in alcoholic beverages—especially the trend toward white wine—and to the negative impact of the Reagan Administration's economic policies which he characterized as "soaking the poor to benefit the rich."

Oneto observed that "the long-festering economic recession has created massive double-digit unemployment and the deterioration of this country's industrial base."

He stressed, however, that this does not justify demands on the part of employers in contractual relations with DWU affiliates for contract "takebacks" and "giveaways."

Reaganomics also came under heavy attack in addresses by DWU Sec.-Treas. George J. Orlando and Robert F. Harbrant, president of the AFL-CIO Food & Beverage Trades Dept.

ORLANDO BLASTED the President's budget cuts as "the last refuge of those who care nothing about the poor, the young, the old and the weak and helpless, let alone the working men and women." He said "we in organized labor strongly object to having not the general welfare, but the almighty dollar be the scale on which we weigh the decision to wipe out a half-century of progress toward social justice."

Harbrant charged that in the pursuit of profit, "health and safety regulations are being stripped from American working men and women" while the government "subsidizes the oil industry and promotes the biggest wave of corporate mergers in our history."

He called for "maximum support" in labor's political activities against a "concerted effort to destroy organized labor in this country."

Other speakers included John Mara, secretary-treasurer of the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept. and Charles Bronfman, chairman of the executive committee of Seagram's, Inc.

OPPOSITION TO increases in excise levies and the need for a more constructive sugar policy were among the policies spelled out in 50 resolutions adopted during the week-long deliberations.

Other resolutions, each adopted unanimously, called for establishment of COPE committees in each local union, and support for the AFL-CIO position against Reagan's dismantling of federal job safety and health programs.

The DWU's political action program was kicked off at the convention and resulted in voluntary contributions equivalent to 50 percent of the union's COPE quota in 1982.

LIVING HISTORY is recalled by 101-year-old Rosina Tucker, narrator of the film, "Miles of Smiles, Years of Struggle," that traces the course of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters. Mrs. Tucker, wife of one of the original members, helped in early organizing campaigns and administration of the fledgling union, which eventually merged with the Railway & Airline Clerks in 1978. BRAC is a co-sponsor of the film which was screened at a special showing at AFL-CIO headquarters. With Mrs. Tucker are AFL-CIO Civil Rights Director William E. Pollard and Education Director Dorothy Shields.

Survey Reveals 70% Joblessness For Some Crafts

A new survey by the AFL-CIO's Building & Construction Trades Dept. shows that joblessness has soared to between 70 and 90 percent for some crafts in many parts of the United States.

While the official government unemployment rate for the construction industry as a whole jumped to 19.4 percent in April, from 17.9 percent in March, bricklayers in Gadsden, Ala., had an 80 percent jobless rate, the rate for Portland, Ore., carpenters was 70 percent, and for roofers in Pittsburgh the unemployment rate was 75 percent, to cite a few examples of the findings.

THE RESULTS of the nationwide survey were announced by BCTD President Robert A. Georgine at a meeting of the department's governing board. The 15-member panel consists of the presidents of BCTD affiliated unions representing a total of 4.1 million workers.

Georgine said joblessness in the construction industry has spread to virtually every part of the country, to both big cities and small towns, and that many construction workers are leaving their trades altogether.

"The loss of such valuable human resources and the suffering experienced by the workers and their families are irreparable," Georgine said.

"All of these projects will require vast numbers of skilled trades workers, workers who are now being driven from the industry and apprentices who are now being discouraged from seeking work in the industry," Georgine asserted.

The building trades survey was compiled over the first four months of 1982 as the industry plunged into its worst slide since the Great Depression of the 1930s. Georgine said the crisis in the construction industry is "the basic contributing factor to the current recession."

Jobless Rate Reaches 9.5%, New Post-Depression Peak

(Continued from Page 1)

workers have lost their jobs. And unemployment is expected to climb further this month as tens of thousands of high school and college youths seeking summer employment join millions of adults already on layoff.

The entry of a large number of young people into the labor force and another decline in manufacturing activity were the leading causes of the May rise in joblessness, BLS figures showed. The labor force rose sharply, by over one million, to 110.7 million after seasonal adjustment. Total employment increased sharply also, by 777,000, the first substantial rise since the recession began last July. But the net result was an increase of 242,000 in the number of jobless workers.

The true extent of unemployment was far wider than revealed by official statistics, which do not factor in the number of "discouraged" workers and those who are working part-time because they are unable to find full-time employment. If these two groups were made part of the equation, true unemployment in May would have totaled 14,961,000 and the jobless rate would have been 13.4 percent.

Among the major categories of workers, the jobless rates for adult men, 8.4 percent, and teenagers, 23.1 percent, were the highest since BLS began figuring them in 1948. The previous highs, 8.2 percent for adult men and 23 percent for teenagers, were reached in April.

Unemployment among white workers edged up to 8.5 percent in May from 8.4 percent the month before, the highest level since 1954.

BLACK UNEMPLOYMENT climbed to 18.7 percent from 18.4 percent in April, the highest rate since BLS began keeping these statistics a decade ago. The jobless rate for black teenagers rose to a record 49.8 percent from 48.1 percent in April.

The jobless rate among workers of Hispanic origin increased sharply, rising to 13.9 percent in May from 12.5 percent in April. The rates for adult women and full-time workers, at 8.3 and 9.2 percent respectively, remained unchanged from the previous month.

Despite the rise in joblessness, BLS Commissioner Janet L. Norwood saw "some small signs of improvement" in the May unemployment report. More people came into the labor force and found employment, she noted, and the number of hours worked in a week rose slightly, from 34.9 in April to 35 in May. Economists regard a rise in work hours as a healthy sign during a recession because employers tend to lengthen workers' hours before rehiring laid-off employees.

AMONG INDUSTRY categories the jobless rate increased from 11.3 to 11.6 percent in manufacturing, from 10.1 to 10.6 percent in wholesale and retail trade, and from 14.6 to 18.2 percent for farm workers. The rate for construction workers dropped to 18.8 percent in May from 19.4 percent in April.

Funds for Needy Slashed Deeply In House Budget

(Continued from Page 1)

that Congress made last year which will have the effect of ending extended benefits in about half the states—even though unemployment hasn't gone down. The Republican budget had no such provision. Thus, in those states affected by the new formula, workers would not be entitled even to the existing 13 weeks of extended benefits and would lose out also on the additional 13 weeks of payments that would be authorized.

TWO WEEKS earlier, the House had struggled with eight separate budget plans and dozens of amendments under a complex voting system. In the end, no plan mustered a majority.

The deadlock was finally broken under a more restrictive rule that gave the House a simple choice between the budget package supported by the Democratic leadership and the version shaped by the Republicans. If both had been defeated, the House would have then voted on the original Reagan budget which Republicans in both the House and Senate had disavowed nearly unanimously.

The Republican-controlled Senate had previously adopted an even more restrictive budget, and a House-Senate conference will try to mesh the two plans. President Reagan had given his blessing to both the House and Senate versions.

Recession Bypasses Executive Salaries

Recession or not, top executives of large American corporations received huge pay increases in 1981.

In its annual survey of executive compensation, Business Week magazine found that total remuneration of top officers in 288 companies rose an average of 15.9 percent last year, compared with a 13.7 percent jump in 1980. The average pay gain for union workers under major contract settlements in 1981 was 10.1 percent, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

THE HIGHEST-PAID executive in 1981—the year the nation sunk into the current recession—was Roland Genin, executive vice president of operations at Schlumberger, Ltd., who received total compensation of nearly $5.7 million. Frank G. Hickey, president and chief executive officer of General Instruments, was runnerup with a total of $5,261,000.

Salaries and bonuses are only part of what most corporate executives receive. Assorted extras such as stock options and stock-appreciation rights sweeten the pot, often making up the bulk of total compensation. In Genin's case, only $438,000 of his $5.7 million was salary and bonus.

The rest came from one-shot exercises of long-term income bonuses.

So-called "incentive stock options"—new under the Reagan economic program adopted last year by Congress—permit an executive to withhold tax payment until he sells his shares, and then up to $100,000 of his gain is taxed only at the capital gains rate of 20 percent.

OTHER HIGHLY PAID company officers in 1981 included John W. Kluge, chairman and president of Metromedia, $4,231,000; Jean Riboud, chairman and president of Schlumberger, $3,029,000; Harry J. Gray, chairman, president and chief executive of United Technologies, $2,971,000, and Ray C. Adam, chairman and chief executive of NL Industries, $2,904,000.

As the magazine noted in its headline over the article on executive compensation, there was "no sign of recession in pay at the top" last year.

The Polish Oppression

IT HAS BEEN almost six months to the day—Dec. 13, 1981—since Soviet-directed Polish police and security forces swooped down in the night to stamp out Solidarnosc, the first free trade union movement to rise up in a communist-ruled country.

This Sunday, as demonstrations and other activities are held to mark the six-month anniversary of that brutal repression of human rights, we would do well to reflect on two important aspects of the Polish people's plight.

First, the military junta of Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski has not succeeded in destroying Solidarity, which came to life nearly two years ago as the hope of the whole of Poland's people. The people have not given up that hope.

Last month's May Day demonstrations in Warsaw and other Polish cities showed that the spirit of Solidarity is very much alive and that Poles hunger for the political freedoms that the independent workers' association won for them in the Gdansk agreement of 1980.

SOLIDARITY DID NOT die when it was suspended by the junta. It continues to operate to this day from underground bases, and its clandestine radio station continues to beam messages of hope to Poles, urging them to keep up the pressure for the release of the detained Solidarity leaders and for the restoration of free trade union rights.

The other important point to keep in mind about Poland today is the utter failure of the junta to solve any of the country's social and economic problems.

This must be obvious even to those who six months ago pictured the regime as a moderating force in a nation threatened by financial woes of the greatest magnitude. Those problems remain and, but for the Reagan Administration's rush to cover $71 million owed to American bankers, Poland would already be in default of its financial obligations.

In rescuing the bankers, the Administration transferred the Polish debt to American taxpayers in the face of obvious sentiment in Congress to the contrary. Under an amendment to a supplemental appropriations bill proposed by Senators Daniel P. Moynihan (D-N.Y.) and Robert W. Kasten Jr. (R-Wis.), the Administration would be prohibited from continuing to bail out the Polish military government.

AMERICAN LABOR, which continues its support of the Solidarity trade unionists in every way possible, believes that economic pressure of the sort typified by the Moynihan-Kasten amendment is what is needed now to advance the cause of freedom in Poland.

Soon after martial law was imposed in Poland six months ago, President Reagan announced limited sanctions against the Polish government and promised more if the junta did not relax its iron grip on the country.

Rather than let up, the regime has consolidated itself and shows no sign of releasing Solidarity leader Lech Walesa and other political detainees or resuming a genuine dialogue with Solidarity and the Catholic Church aimed at solving Poland's massive problems.

Six months is too long a grace period for oppression. It is time for the President to match his promises with action.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
LANE KIRKLAND, President
THOMAS R. DONAHUE, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

John H. Lyons	Thomas W. Gleason	Frederick O'Neal
S. Frank Raftery	Martin J. Ward	Murray H. Finley
Albert Shanker	Glenn E. Watts	Sol C. Chaikin
Edward T. Hanley	Angelo Fosco	Charles H. Pillard
J. C. Turner	Lloyd McBride	David J. Fitzmaurice
Kenneth T. Blaylock	Alvin E. Heaps	Wm. W. Winpisinger
William H. Wynn	John J. O'Donnell	John DeConcini
Wayne E. Glenn	Robert F. Goss	William Konyha
Joyce D. Miller	John J. Sweeney	Douglas A. Fraser
Frank Drozak	James E. Hatfield	Barbara Hutchinson
Richard I. Kilroy	Vincent R. Sombrotto	Gerald W. McEntee

Director of Information: Murray Seeger
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Susan Dunlop, John R. Oravec
David L. Perlman, James M. Shevis

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
Telephone: (202) 637-5032

Vol. XXVII Saturday, June 12, 1982 No. 23

The AFL-CIO News (ISSN 001-1185) is issued weekly except for the last week of the year at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D.C. The AFL-CIO does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publications in the name of the AFL-CIO.

LABOR PRESS AFL-CIO/CLC

'Have No Fear, The Bottom's Near!'

As Economy Sputters

Federal Reserve Challenged On Its Defiance of Congress

By Gus Tyler

IS THE FEDERAL Reserve Board answerable to no one but itself?

That question is getting hot right now in Washington because it is becoming increasingly apparent that the high interest rates—established and perpetuated by the Fed—are responsible for the recession/depression that plagues the economy.

The question as to its "independence" was recently put bluntly to the Fed by Rep. Henry S. Reuss (D-Wis.), chairman of the Joint Economic Committee. In a letter to Paul A. Volcker, chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, Reuss demanded to know whether the Fed will heed a "directive" from Congress or will go its own sweet way.

REUSS ARGUES, at some length, that Congress created the Fed and that it is responsible to Congress. In his letter, he quotes from past chairmen of the board.

In 1956, then Sen. Paul Douglas of Illinois questioned William McChesney Martin as to whether the Fed was "an agency of the Executive or the agent of Congress." Martin replied: "I regard it as an independent agency of the government." Douglas persisted: "To whom is it responsible? To the Executive or the Congress?" To which Martin replied: "It is responsible to Congress. . . . The indenture of this trusteeship was written by the Congress in the Federal Reserve Act, and can be altered at any time by the Congress."

In 1968, Sen. William Proxmire put a similar question to Chairman Arthur Burns: "You do acknowledge, do you not, only Congress has the constitutional authority to regulate the money supply, and the Federal Reserve is an agent of Congress independent of the Executive branch?"

BURNS ANSWERED plainly: "I have no quarrel with that. I know the Constitution and I am a law-abiding citizen."

Rep. Wright Patman jumped into the colloquy: "I have never been able to find a sentence in the Federal Reserve Act that indicated that the Federal Reserve should be independent of the government. Would you tell me where it is?"

To which Burns replied: "I have not claimed that the Federal Reserve is independent of the government. . . . I have recognized not only in the past but again this very morning that the Federal Reserve is a creature of the Congress, and that it is a servant of Congress."

Reuss summarized his letter with a bold challenge: "In view of the overwhelming weight of law, precedent and past testimony concerning the relationship of Congress to the Federal Reserve, it is vital for Congress to know whether the Federal Reserve will now accede to the directive of Congress, or instead assert that it is a fully independent fourth branch of government accountable to no one."

THIS QUESTION has long been with the country. It has been brought to a head because economic policy in Washington is a two-headed horse with each head heading in an opposite direction.

Fiscal policy—taxes and expenditures—is set by Congress and the President, both of whom claim that they would like to see the economy grow.

Monetary policy—the money supply, including interest rates—is set by the Fed which wants the economy to be restrained.

So we end up with one branch of government stepping on the gas and the other stepping on the brakes and both doing their opposite thing at the same time. That smoke you smell is the brake burning.

Copyright 1982, Gus Tyler Columns

AFL-CIO
Announces a New Service For The Media
Brief recorded statements on labor's viewpoints and attitudes on current issues, updated several times a week.
Throughout the nation:
1-800-368-5744
In Washington, D.C.:
(202)-638-4821
For more detailed information, special requests, interviews, etc.,
AFL-CIO Department of Information
815-16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006
Murray Seeger, Director of Information
Rex Hardesty, Assistant Director of Information
Charlie Hughes, Audio Services
202-637-5010

Donahue Cites Shared Goals

Lack of Opportunity Thwarts Strides Toward Racial Justice

The following is from an address by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas R. Donahue to a Catholic Interracial Council dinner in New York honoring Federation Vice President Frederick O'Neal and lawyer William Shea.

FOR THE MOMENT, the immense strides that were made toward racial justice and social unity during and after the civil rights revolution —in which the church and the labor movement played so large a role—have come to a standstill.

I say "for the moment" because I know well that all progress toward these goals is ultimately irreversible. This country will move ahead again, but meanwhile we have to fight with all our energy to retake ground that is being lost.

Bull Connor's dogs and clubs are a thing of the past. I never expect to see again, in any public place, a sign that says "White only," or even "No Irish need apply."

But there will be no end to discrimination in housing until there is enough housing to go around. There will be no end to discrimination in education until all parents can afford to provide their children with all the education they can possibly absorb. And there will be no equal employment opportunity until there is opportunity for all, until there is a job for every man and woman who is able and willing to work.

FOR THE MOMENT, what we face is the undoing of the progress we have made, and the division of the American people along economic lines or racial lines or sex lines or age lines or any other lines that are handy, and the restoration of the frozen, unjust social and economic order of the past.

The vital question is, "Am I my brother's keeper?" The church and the labor movement have always answered with a resounding yes. But those who preach the gospel of supply-side economics say the question is irrelevant.

They have no wish to talk about public health, public education, public welfare as human values or even as public capital investment that enriches and enlarges the society of which we are a part. They think of these things only as consumer expenditures that increase public spending and reduce the return on private capital.

When irresponsible tax concessions to the rich and the corporations have sent the budget deficit into orbit, their solution is to shoot down $40 billion in social security benefits—or at least it was until the Senate rebelled at that solution.

WITH 10½ MILLION human beings desperately looking for jobs that do not exist, they cut emergency job programs, job training programs, public service jobs and unemployment compensation programs, and promise only that things will get better soon.

It was actions like these that led Congressman Henry Reuss of Wisconsin to say that these policies are "not just mistaken; they are wicked." To that I would add that they are deeply, shamefully frivolous.

The real capital of this nation is its human capital. No wealth has ever existed that is not the product of human hands and minds and hearts. To squander that capital by deliberately denying human beings the opportunity to develop to their highest potential is not only morally wrong but something that those responsible look upon as a far worse sin: Imprudent business management.

The American labor movement and the church have long stood together on the questions of this nation's human capital—not really as "capital" but as "humanity."

WE HAVE SHARED the simple goals of equality for all and the recognition of the dignity of every person. Actually those goals are not simple at all. They are simply stated—but their fulfillment has been a central occupation of labor and the churches for many years.

We need the laws and the courts, most assuredly, to set a legal framework for dignity and equality, but we need to shape the minds, hearts and acts of people—we need to truly love one another—if we are ever really going to "assure these rights." We have to keep pressing for dignity and equality and have to keep on pressing against the "outer limits."

After Dec. 13, when the Polish government moved to crush Solidarity, the amazing analyses by some of our commentators was that those brave Polish trade unionists had pressed against the outer limits and tried to achieve too much. It's a line that never made a bit of sense.

For people who seek reform, for those who would disturb the status quo, for those who seek dignity and equality, there are only outer limits. There are no inner limits which fall easily. Every push is against an outer limit that some other person or force has set.

When a worker joins a union and seeks recognition of his dignity on the job, he or she presses against the outer limits of the boss's authority.

WHEN A BLACK seeks the full measure of equality, in any form, he or she presses against the outer limit of some ancient prejudice. When the Poles sought a voice in their state, when the black South African seeks a voice on the job, when the South American peasant fights for land, they all press against the outer limits that some person or group seeks wrongly to impose.

It has to be our business to continually press against those outer limits until they all finally crumble.

In 1983 Budget

Congress Draws Battle Lines On Funding Social Programs

MODERATES IN CONGRESS face an uphill fight to stave off deep cuts in social security and Medicare despite the apparent rejection of conservative demands that sent the House back to the drawing board for a 1983 budget plan, AFL-CIO Social Security Director Bert Seidman said.

Seidman pointed out that whatever budget the House finally adopts will be further tested in the "development of some kind of compromise" with the Senate version that makes "very deep cuts" in health, welfare and other "essential programs that people in this country depend on." He said the House debates and votes did show that the "tremendous outcry" from constituents against the "unmerciful slashes" proposed by the Administration in social security, Medicare and other programs that are critical to the unemployed and disadvantaged is making an impact on Capitol Hill.

He warned that ultra-conservative and New Right forces may make a "now-or-never attempt" as they see their strength waning. But, he declared, "I don't think they represent the mood of the country although they may very well reflect the philosophy of President Reagan." Seidman appeared on the network radio interview Labor News Conference.

SEIDMAN SAID that although the chances for "staving off cuts right now" are improving—at least "the drastic cuts that the Administration proposed"—there is no guarantee that the White House and congressional conservatives won't be right back once the November elections are over.

He also weighed the "political risks in the behavior" of congressional candidates—whether incumbents or challengers—who campaign for "tremendous, unmerciful cuts in basic social programs." Hometown sentiment expressed at the recent series of AFL-CIO conferences confirms that "the American people aren't so dumb—they know what's going on—and that will be reflected in the way they vote in November," Seidman pointed out.

By Press Associates, Inc.

UNEMPLOYMENT is going to be a grim almost common experience in America this year.

Labor Statistics Commissioner Janet Norwood recently urged fellow economists to look behind the jobless figures for a fuller understanding of what they mean.

Typically, she pointed out, the number experiencing unemployment sometime during the year is 2½ to 3½ times larger than the jobless total in a given month. That means that, with 10.5 million unemployed in May, more than 30 million people will suffer some unemployment this year.

WHILE THE FAMILY serves as an important support system for the unemployed, the loss of income weighs heavily on those in poverty. About 17 percent of the unemployed were in families below the poverty line. Of those out of work six months or longer, 30 percent were in families below the poverty line.

Most married-couple families have two or more earners, but an unemployed husband causes family income to drop by one-third and a jobless wife brings an income loss of one-fourth.

A disturbing phenomenon, according to Norwood, is that unemployment tends to "run in families." Because the education and general skills of people in the same family tend to be at comparable levels, when one parent has trouble in the labor market, so does the other. In 1981, the jobless rate for women whose husbands also were unemployed was 17.6 percent, triple the rate of jobless wives with employed husbands. There are an estimated 200,000 families where both husband and wife are jobless.

NORWOOD SAID the most serious financial distress caused by unemployment is in families maintained by women with no husband present. A much greater proportion of such families suffers unemployment—15 percent in 1981 compared with 9 percent of married-couple families.

She said one of every six families is maintained by a woman, and 18 percent of all children live in such a family. The number of female-headed families has soared from less than 5 million in 1960 to nearly 10 million today. More than half of these families are below the poverty line.

A Labor Dept. report on worker earnings in the first quarter of 1982 showed 7.6 million families with an unemployed member, up 16 percent over the year. Of this total, 2.3 million families lacked current earnings of any kind.

The May unemployment report showed the long-term unemployed—those jobless 15 weeks or longer—soaring to 3,286,000.

Norwood pointed out that no statistics can adequately portray the emotional and psychological impact of unemployment.

RESEARCHERS AT Johns Hopkins University have done enough work to show a relationship between periods of high unemployment and certain social problems. As common sense and personal experience can tell us, there are increases in family breakdowns, mental illness, crime and delinquency, alcohol and drug abuse and other social ills.

The working poor have suffered the most harm from federal budget cuts, according to a new study at Princeton University which corroborated earlier research. The middle class also has not been immune to a Reagan Recession which has brought record bankruptcies as well as mass unemployment.

There is much work to be done in America. There are constructive programs pending in Congress which would help revive the economy and put people back to work. It is a time for action because society will pay—one way or another.

REJECTION OF conservative demands that sent the House back to ground zero in shaping a 1983 budget plan didn't put social security and Medicare "home free" in the fight to stave off the unmerciful slashes proposed by the Administration, AFL-CIO Social Security Director Bert Seidman said on Labor News Conference. He was questioned by Peggy Simpson, right, of the Boston Herald-American and Judith Randal of the New York Daily News. The AFL-CIO-produced public affairs program is aired weekly on the Mutual radio network.

Talented hands of union workers are behind quality products and services.

Union Label Attracts Thousands in Pittsburgh

Prizes, souvenirs and drawings for groceries lure crowds to the Food & Commercial Workers exhibit arena.

The AFL-CIO Union-Industries Show, held this year in Pittsburgh, is a unique showcase for the skills of union workers as well as the products they make and the services they provide.

Thousands of visitors attended the six-day free exhibition in the Pittsburgh Convention Center, the 37th in a series produced and managed in a different city each year by the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept.

The show featured more than 300 exhibits prepared by unions and employers, many providing live craft and skill demonstrations and others inviting visitors to try their own hands at a task for fun.

A major purpose of each show is to highlight the benefits to both workers and their employers of good, stable labor-management relations which are the rule in the American collective bargaining system.

Visitors line up to be captured in a caricature at the Painters "art gallery."

Union presidents, from left, William Wynn, UFCW; James Hatfield, Glass Bottle Blowers, and Lloyd McBride, Steelworkers, join UL&STD Sec.-Treas. John Mara on tour of show, meeting glass-blower Val Hamer.

Scale models provide a close-up look at Operating Engineers' daily jobs.

The magic of chemistry and the benefits of unions share the bill at the Chemical Workers area.

Sheet Metal Workers show that union apprenticeship programs are vital to professional skills and quality construction.

Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union Sec.-Treas. Lenore Miller tests her vision at an RWDSU employer's exhibit.

National competition for top hair stylists was a major show attraction.

New Factory Orders, Home Sales Plunge

The continuing deterioration of the economy was reflected in government reports of a sharp decline in new factory orders and a drop in sales of new single-family houses.

Factory orders plunged 2.3 percent in April to a seasonally adjusted $155.26 billion after rising by 1.3 percent in February and by three-tenths of 1 percent in March, the Commerce Dept. reported.

SEPARATELY, the Commerce Dept. said that new home sales in April fell 15.3 percent to a new low of 315,000 units on a seasonally adjusted annual basis. The previous low of 335,000 house sales was set last September. Sales activity was down in every region of the country, particularly in the South and the north-central area. Housing sales have borne the brunt of high interest rates and have been depressed since last summer.

Robert Ortner, the Commerce Dept.'s chief economist, said that the two reports gave no sign that the recession ended in April, "and there's no reason to believe things turned around in May." Commerce Sec. Malcolm Baldridge said the factory-order figures reflected the ongoing pressure of high interest rates.

Meanwhile, a survey of purchasing agents for the country's leading industrial companies reported a sharp decline in new orders, production, and employment in May, the worst downward turn since last December. The National Association of Purchasing Management said its index measuring these and other factors fell to 35 percent last month. Anything below 50 percent indicates that the economy is in decline.

ALSO, THE level of help-wanted advertising fell in April, the second month of steep decline, the business-oriented Conference Board reported. Kenneth Goldstein, an economist with the board, called the two-month slide one of the sharpest on record.

Goldstein said durable goods manufacturers are being hit the hardest by the recession and generally are not hiring. Service industries are also feeling the effects of the recession, but are still advertising some jobs, he said. Except for the east south-central region, job advertising in the nation's major newspapers has been cut by 10 to 20 percent, he observed.

ORGANIZING DRIVE is launched by the Coalition of Labor Union Women and the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. in a coordinated effort to bring more women in the Washington-Baltimore area into unions. CLUW President Joyce Miller explains the program at a Washington press conference. Seated are Lillian Moss, a former Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers local president who will coordinate the campaign; IUD Sec.-Treas. Elmer Chatak, and William Boarman, vice president of the Metropolitan Washington AFL-CIO.

Gompers Historical Project Completes Microfilm Edition

The monumental task of assembling and reproducing a mass of records pertaining to Samuel Gompers, the founding president of the American Federation of Labor, reached a milestone June 4 with the presentation of a microfilm edition of some 300,000 pages of documents on the Gompers era to AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland.

The edition contains 144 reels of microfilm of documents relating to Gompers' tenure in office from the founding of the AFL in 1886 to his death in 1924. All of the original records are held at AFL-CIO headquarters in Washington or by the Wisconsin State Historical Society.

THE MAIN OBJECTIVE of the Gompers project, launched eight years ago under the direction of historian Stuart B. Kaufman, is to make the Gompers records widely available and freely accessible to scholars and researchers. The project will also publish a 12-volume edition of selected Gompers papers. Finishing touches are being given the first volume, to be published by the University of Illinois Press within 12 to 18 months.

The idea of the printed edition of Gompers' papers is to produce a record "that anyone interested in labor's heritage can pick up and see a mosaic picture of its key formative years," said Kaufman, an associate professor of history at the University of Maryland.

The Gompers papers include a wide range of documents dating to the first AFL president's era. Among these are records pertaining to issues considered at AFL conventions, correspondence between the federation and national and international unions, documents relating to jurisdictional disputes, and Gompers' own files.

WHILE THE AFL-CIO and the Wisconsin State Historical Society were the primary sources of the documents, other papers came to the project's editors in a circuitous manner. One group, which Kaufman has dubbed the "shoebox letters," was "just a stroke of luck to us," he said.

The 150 handwritten letters from Gompers to Gabriel Edmonston and P. J. McGuire, elected treasurer and secretary, respectively, of the AFL at its founding convention in 1886, were in a shoebox in a shopping bag found by a woman in the basement of her Salt Lake City home six years ago. She turned over the find to the business agent of her local union, who in turn passed it on to the AFL-CIO, which turned them over to Kaufman.

The Gompers project is sponsored by the National Historical Publications & Records Commission, the National Endowment for the Humanities, and the University of Maryland. The AFL-CIO also has given it support.

Twenty-seven major libraries in the country have already purchased the microfilm edition.

Labor Scores Move to Scrap Safety Rules

(Continued from Page 1)

tory with the substitution of the word "shall" for the word "should."

Taylor also suggested that Auchter's intention to revoke standards could be in conflict with a provision of the 1970 federal job safety law.

That provision requires an explanation from the Secretary of Labor as to how the adoption of a new OSHA regulation that differs from an existing consensus standard "will better effectuate the purposes of this Act."

THE STANDARDS targeted for elimination cover a wide range of workplace hazards such as explosives, flammable materials, gases, noise control, non-ionizing radiation, personal and machinery protective devices, and certain industries, including sawmills, paper mills and textile facilities.

OSHA adopted the consensus standards under directions from Congress when the federal job safety agency became operational in 1971. They were mostly derived from standard developed by the American National Standards Institute and the National Fire Protection Association.

Auchter said the standards have not stood up to challenges by employers in federal appellate court or before the Occupational Safety & Health Review Commission.

HE ALSO said the proposal to eliminate record-keeping requirements for some 475,000 employers "is in keeping with President Reagan's promise to lift unnecessary federal burdens off the backs of the American people."

More than 18 million workers in retail trade, finance, insurance, real estate and service industries would be affected by the blanket exemption.

Although the rate of occupational injury and illness is generally lower in these industries, Taylor observed, "people die in those workplaces just as in any place else."

He said an arbitrary decision to eliminate OSHA coverage for millions of workers should not be allowed.

Taylor pointed out that union representatives on the Labor Advisory Committee of the Bureau of Labor Statistics unanimously rejected the OSHA proposal last month.

IN CALLING for the elimination of record-keeping, Auchter cited OSHA statistics showing that 94 percent of the employers in the lower-risk industries report fewer than two injuries per year. Nearly 80 percent of the industries in the retail-finance-service category were relieved of record-keeping requirements in 1977 when OSHA established a cutoff for workplaces with 10 or fewer workers.

The exempted industries would still be subject to OSHA inspections in response to worker complaints or in the investigation of work-related fatalities, multiple hospitalizations and imminent danger situ-

The proposed exemptions would take effect next Jan. 1, OSHA said.

Catholic Interracial Award Presented to Fred O'Neal

New York—AFL-CIO Vice President Frederick O'Neal was given the John LaFarge Award for Interracial Justice by the Catholic Interracial Council of New York.

O'Neal, who is president of the Actors & Artistes, is chairman of the AFL-CIO Executive Council's civil rights committee.

THE AWARD is named for Father John LaFarge, who for many years edited the Jesuit magazine, America. In 1934, Father LaFarge and other Catholic social activists founded the interracial council for the purpose of combating racial and religious bias.

New York attorney William Shea also received the award at the council dinner.

O'Neal told the gathering he had served as Father LaFarge's altar boy in the late 1930s, and he recalled the priest's monthly hour-long forums on social issues.

"I learned from Father LaFarge," O'Neal said, "that we are all debtors to generations past. We cannot repay our debt to those who served before our time, but we must try and make our own contribution to generations present and generations future."

AFL-CIO SEC.-TREAS. Thomas R. Donahue, a keynote speaker at the ceremony, emphasized that the history of the civil rights struggle for dignity and equality is impressive, "but it is also a story of unfinished work."

Strides toward racial justice and social unity have come to a standstill "for the moment," Donahue said, adding that the nation is facing "an undoing of progress."

He stressed that progress toward civil rights goals is "ultimately irreversible" and that "the country will move ahead again, but meanwhile we have to fight with all our energy to retake ground that is being lost."

In a reference to the social and economic policies of the Reagan Administration, Donahue said, "They have no wish to talk about public health, public education, public welfare as human values or even as public capital investment that enriches and enlarges the society of which we are a part.

"They think of these things only as consumer expenditures that increase public spending and reduce the return on private capital," he stressed.

THE NATION'S real capital is its human capital, Donahue said. He emphasized that churches and the trade union movement must keep pressing for "dignity and equality" against all limits wrongly imposed by others "who try to retard our progress."

Earlier, O'Neal was awarded a doctorate in humanities from the college his father had attended in the late 1800s, Tougaloo College in Tougaloo, Miss.

Six Unions Ratify Amtrak Contracts

Six unions representing nonoperating personnel employed by Amtrak—the National Railroad Passenger Corp.—ratified new 39-month contracts improving wages, fringe benefits, and work rules.

The agreements covering some 11,000 of the railroad's 18,000 unionized workers were approved by members of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Maintenance of Way Employes, Machinists, Boilermakers & Blacksmiths, Railway & Airline Clerks, and the Joint Council of Carmen.

Talks with nine other unions representing Amtrak employees are continuing. Workers who actually operate the trains are not employed by Amtrak directly.

Each of the new contracts contains identical provisions on wages, fringe benefits, and establishment of a joint labor-management productivity council, but the work rule revisions are tailored separately in each agreement to meet the specific conditions.

The Amtrak contracts provide wage increases of up to 18.7 percent for the average worker over the life of the contract. The increases are retroactive to July 1, 1981, and will run through June 30, 1984.

The joint labor-management productivity council is designed to resolve minor disputes and as a device for encouraging worker input on productivity improvements. Amtrak President Alan S. Boyd said the council provides labor "a clearly defined involvement in the management of the nation's rail passenger system."

ILO Attacks Polish Junta On Union Ban

(Continued from Page 1)

sion on Poland, A. M. Issifu, secretary general of the Ghana Trade Union Congress, deplored the absence of "any visible signs of progress" in the Polish situation since the last session in March.

THERE HAS been "no reciprocity" from the government to the interned trade unionists' call for a "constructive dialogue," he said.

African, Latin America and Asian worker delegates all joined in condemning the attempts by Kolesnik and other Soviet bloc spokesmen to brand the ILO's concern over the fate of free trade unionism in Poland as unwarranted "interference in Poland's internal affairs."

Glyn Lloyd of Britain's Trades Union Congress apologized to the Governing Body for having to sum up the communist argument in one word: "bullshit."

FOR THE AFL-CIO's Irving Brown, the U.S. worker delegate, communist efforts to picture the situation as being "normalized" made "a travesty of justice." Not until the trade unionists are released, or at least accorded the due process of law, will it be possible to describe the situation as normal, Brown said.

Because Poland ratified the ILO convention guaranteeing trade union rights it cannot use the argument that the ILO is interfering in its internal affairs as a "screen to hide behind," he said.

Brown urged the ILO to insist that Poland accept a visit by a full scale fact-finding mission comprising worker, government and employer members in accordance with normal ILO procedures for investigations into compliance with its conventions.

IN ADOPTING the committee report on Poland, the Governing Body repeated its earlier calls on Warsaw to "liberate rapidly the trade unionists who are still interned."

It also pressed the demand that new labor legislation be adopted soon so that "trade unions that are independent of the public authorities can function freely."

EQUAL RIGHTS AMENDMENT ratification drives in four key states were backed by massive rallies in Tallahassee, Fla., Springfield, Ill., Raleigh, N.C., and Oklahoma City. Union members swelled the ranks at each rally including the more than 8,000 demonstrators at this march to the Florida Capitol. The rallies were staged June 7 to dramatize the need for three more states to approve ERA before the June 30 deadline.

Extension of Free Trade Unionism A Major Theme at ILO Conference

Geneva—Eloquent appeals for the recognition of free trade unionism as essential to the exercise of human rights marked the opening of the International Labor Organization's annual assembly of member states.

On taking the chair as president of the three-week conference Alfonso Grados Bertorini, Peru's Minister of Labor, called on the 1,800 worker, employer and government delegates and their advisers to assure that their efforts marked an "advance toward a world of fairer labor relations."

THE GOAL, he continued, is a world "in which the exercise of trade union rights does not involve a threat to freedom."

Also on the opening day, French President Francois Mitterand declared in an address to the conference that "wherever the courageous efforts of workers to organize are thwarted by repression, the human heritage is impoverished."

Because the exercise of freedom of association is inseparable from the other human freedoms, "whenever civil liberties are infringed—and this happens all too frequently in the world today—trade union rights are threatened," he said.

AS IF TO underscore the absence of trade unionists from Poland's bench, Mitterand ridiculed attempts to "claim to defend democracy while putting trade union leaders on trial and to pose as the builders of some kind of social order while denying workers the right to organize."

Grados had bluntly deplored the absence of Lech Walesa, the interned leader of Poland's suppressed Solidarity trade union, after his attendance at last year's ILO session as his country's worker delegate.

